Sheriff Says He Knows One Member of Mob Which Killed Assault Suspect

2-3-37

HEADLAND, Ala., Feb. 2 (AP) — A strapping, 18-year-old Negro farm hand accused of assaulting a white woman, was lynched near here today, the nation's first lynching victim of 1937.

A sheriff's deputy found the bullet-marked body of the six-foot-tall Negro, Wes Johnson, swinging from a tree in a thicket. Several hours earlier 50 men stormed the Henry county jail at nearby Abbeville and seized the prisoner.

Sheriff Louis Corbett, who said he recognized some of the mob, indicated a special grand jury would be called to investigate. At Montgomery Governor Bibb Graves directed Attorney General A. A. Carmichael to conduct an inquiry.

"The attorney general is directed to file impeachment proceedings against any officer if he finds such proceedings warranted," said the governor.

No Arrests Are Made

No arrests had been made tonight. Johnson was taken from Abbeville jail by the mob in about 25 automobiles.

Sheriff Corbett said he and his father, Jailor J. N. Corbett, were held prisoners until the mob forced the Negro's cell and drove away.

The sheriff said the Negro apparently was shot before he was hanged, not far from the place where the alleged attack occurred.

Johnson was arrested Sunday night, the day after a young matron reported she was attacked while entering her rural home alone.

State Highway Patrol Makes Investigation

The body of Wess Johnson, large eighteen year old negro farm hand of the Tumbleton community, was found in a wooded area between the Tumbleton and Newville communities his body riddled by bullets on last Tuesday morning. He was arrested last Sunday on a charge of having attacked a white matron in the Tumbleton community. Johnson was placed in jail at Abbeville after the arrest. A posse of men who arrived in twenty five automobiles, accoding to reports betwen midnight and two o'clock Monday night forced their way into the jail holding the sheriff, Louie Corbitt and the Jailor J. N. Corbitt, prisoners until the negro was placed in an automobile and hurried away. It is not known whether he was executed by hanging or whether he was killed as the result of gun shot.

Governor Graves ordered Attorney General A. A. Carmichel to make a special and thorough investigation and directed the State Highway Patrol to assist the attorney general in every way possible. It is reported that the Highway Patrol Chief, W. K. McAdory would investigate the case in person, aided by his assistants. So far no arrests have been made. According to information received this is the first lynching in the nation during the year of 1937, and the first in the State for four years.

NEGRO LYNCHED BY MOB AT HEADLAND

Confessed Attacker Shot And Hanged From Tree After Jail Raid

HEADLAND, Ala., Feb. 2—(AP)—The body of Wes Johnson, huge 18-year-old negro farm hand of the Tumbleton community, was found hanging in a wooded section near here today after a posse of armed men took him from an Abbeville Ala., jail last night.

Authorities said Johnson was charged with attacking a young white matron.

Judge J. P. Mitchell of Henry County said at Abbeville reports he received were that about 25 cars, with an undetermined number of men, drove up to the jail last night and took the negro from the jailer.

The negro's body was riddled with bullets when found in the woods.

The girl victim, Judge Mitchell said, was the daughter of a farmer, living in the Tumbleton community where Wes Johnson worked on another farm.

Reports to him, he said, was that the girl was attacked while alone in her home. Johnson was arrested shortly after the alleged attack.

No arrests had been made in connection with the lynching, Judge Mitchell said.

Sheriff Louie Corbett of Headland said that the mob, of about 59 men held him and his Father Jailor J. N. Corbett prisoners until the negro's cell was forced and he was placed in automobile and driven away.

The alleged assault on the young matron took place Saturday. He eluded pursuit but was captured Sunday night and placed in jail where he reputedly confessed the outrage.

RACES

No. 1

Just after one midnight last week Sheriff Louis Corbitt of Henry County, Ala. and Jailer J. N. Corbitt, his father, asleep in their first-floor bedrooms below the rooms at Abbeville that serve as county jail, were awakened by a great racket outside. Before they could get up to investigate, a mob of 50 armed farmers burst in, ordered them to stay where they were. As sheriff and jailer sat abed looking sleepy-eyed into grim Henry County faces, part of the mob marched upstairs, broke into the jail. Going straight to the bull-pen occupied by six cowering blackamoors, they broke into it with a crowbar. From it they dragged strapping 18-year-old Wes Johnson, itinerant Henry County farm laborer, who had been arrested day before for raping the young wife of a farmer at Tumbleton, 22 mi. away. With Negro Johnson in tow the mob stomped out, drove off toward Tumbleton in 25 automobiles.

After day broke City Editor Joseph David ("Red") Brown of the Dothan Eagle received a telephone tip that Negro Johnson's body could be found near the Tumbleton farm home of Rupert Bond in which the alleged attack had taken place. Editor Brown grabbed his camera and dashed off for Tumbleton. There on the brink of a sparsely wooded ravine, 50 yd. from Farmer Bond's house, he found the bullet-riddled body of Negro Johnson. Tight-lipped farmers, who seemed to be awaiting his arrival, obligingly took hold of a rope that was tightly looped around the neck, hoisted the body high over the limb of a tree so that Editor Brown could make a more vivid camera record of 1937's No. 1 lynching.*

At last week's end Henry County was buzzing with excitement. A special grand jury, on orders of Governor Bibb Graves began taking testimony. Sheriff Corbitt threatened with impeachment by Governor Graves, was quoted as saying he could and would name the owners of no less than 15 of the faces his sleepy eyes recognized in his bedroom. Nevertheless, the grand jury did not indict after hearing Sheriff Corbitt's testimony.

"FOUND ALIVE"

MISSING SHARECROPPER FOUND ALIVE IN NORTH

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 18.—(AP) Controversy over the disappearance of Frank Weems, 46-year-old Arkansas negro sharecropper, last June 9, was reawakened today with announcement by J. R. Butler, president of the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union, that Weems had been "found alive" in Chicago. Cmunder

"We are glad that our fears as to Weems' death proved untrue," he said. "We have never ceased trying to find out what really happeend to him." 5-19-37

When Weems disappeared, H. L. Mitchell, secretary of the tenant farmer union, charged he had been beaten by planters near Early, Ark. He announced plans for a "funeral," after he said he heard Weems was dead.

Sharecropper Asks $25,000 for Beating

CHICAGO, May 19. — (AP) — Counsel for Frank Weems, 56-year-old negro, prepared a $25,000 damage suit today against six men whom the Arkansas sharecropper accused of beating him for his activity with the Southern Tenant Farmers' Union.

Weems, whose reported death at the hands of floggers nearly a year ago, roused a storm of protest from union sympathizers, appeared in the office of Attorney Francis Heisler yesterday with a member of the Workers' Defense League.

Weems described the beating in an affidavit which Heisler said would be sent to the La Follette civil liberties committee in Washington. The damage suit, the attorney said, will be filed in federal court here.

The affidavit said the attack took place June 8, 1936, shortly after Weems had warned union members against meeting for a demonstration march through Earle, Ark.

WEEMS FOUND, SAYS HE WAS DRIVEN FROM ARKANSAS

Crusader news agency 5-24-37

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May-- (CNA)- The Southern Tenant Farmers' Union announced this week that Frank Weems, Negro member who disappeared June 9, 1936, has been found alive in Chicago. The union charged that Weems was driven from Arkansas under threat of death. New York, May

Willie Sue Blagden, a white Memphis social worker, and the Rev. Claude Williams, white, of Little Rock, Ark., were flogged by a band of white planters when they went to Earle, Ark., seeking proof of Weem's death. Miss Blagden susequently filed a damage suit against several Arkansas planters.

Weems disappeared while carrying out union activities and it was assumed that the planters had added another victim to their long list.

Missing Arkansas Sharecropper Found

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Frank Weems, Arkansas sharecropper whose reported death a year ago caused the flogging of a white woman and a preacher of the same race as well as a federal investigation, is in Chicago. And if he has his way about it, he will never return to Arkansas.

Weems' "reincarnation" was under auspices of the Workers' Defense League last Tuesday. Two weeks previously he appeared at headquarters of the Illinois Workers' alliance which took him to the league and to Attorney Francis Heisler, white, who produced him for the press last week.

The former cropper said he was beaten on June 8, 1936, by cotton planters for his activities in the Southern Tenant Farmers Union which was staging a cotton choppers' strike at that time. Immediately after warning union members near Earle, Ark., not to meet for a demonstration march because of threats he had heard, he was halted on the street by five carloads of men who stopped him and asked a lot of questions.

"They said they were going to kill me," he declared. "One of the men knocked me down twice. Then the others started beating me and I lost consciousness."

He hid in the woods near Earle for a week, then began traveling North stopping at Memphis, Cape Girardeau, Mo., and Alton, Ill.

During the months Weems was missing, the union and its sympathizers charged he had been flogged to death while the sheriff of that area declared he was in the custody of officials and will be produced at the proper time." The union accused planters and officials of terrorism to keep workers at low wages and discourage union activities.

PREACHER ATTACKED

Miss Willie Sue Blagden, white, former Memphis social worker, and the Rev. Claude Williams, white, an Arkansas minister, were beaten when they went to Earle to investigate reports of Weems' death. Since then damage suits have been filed against the county by the whipping victims.

It was at this time that Paul Peacher, city marshal of Earle, made wholesale arrests and forced his prisoners to work for him without pay which resulted in his conviction and a $3,000 fine for slavery last November.

Weems has signed an affidavit setting forth his charges of maltreatment. Atty. Heisler asserted a copy had been sent to the La Follette civil liberties committee in Washington and added he would file suit for $25,000 against the floggers in federal court in Chicago.

Said Weems, who is 56 and has a wife and eight children in Arkansas, "I'll never go back to Arkansas 'cause they'll kill me if I do."

MOB LYNCHES TWO NEGROES AT STATE CAPITAL TUESDAY

Small Band of Men Take Prisoners From Jail—Riddled with Bullets

GOVERNOR ANGRY

"This Was Not a Lynching, It Was Murder," Said Cone

Four men with paper sacks over their heads entered the city police headquarters at Tallahassee about 3 o'clock Tuesday morning and forced the night sergeant to open the door of a cell in the city-county jail and deliver to them two negroes, Richard Hawkins and Ernest Ponder, each about 18 years old, and who were charged with stabbing Policeman Kelly of that city and who is in a hospital seriously wounded.

About daylight the bodies were found about 3 miles east of Tallahassee riddled with bullets.

When Governor Cone was informed of the killings he said: "I'm going to do everything I can to get whoever did this. It looks like a lot of carelessness here by somebody. This was not a lynching. It was murder. I'm going to prosecute anybody we get to the limit of the law."

Officer Fairbanks said the four men came into police headquarters, poked a gun to his back and said:

"We want the jail keys and we don't want any foolishness".

"I got up and gave them to them", said Fairbanks.

The officers searched several hours for the negroes and the captors. Later a negro woman telephoned them and said she found the negro youths' bodies under oak trees just off the Jacksonville-Tallahassee highway. Officers said the bodies were lying about 20 feet apart. Signs left near the bodies read, "His last crime". "This is the beginning, who is next", "This is your warning"; "Negroes, remember you may be next"; "Warning, this is what will happen to all negroes that harm white people."

Governor Cone will have a special investigation made.

The sheriff said Fairbanks was gagged and bound and left in a cell block.

State Attorney Parker and Sheriff Stoutamire said they had started an investigation of the double killing.

"We're going to investigate this thing as far as we can. We're trying to get the parties who are responsible for it", said Attorney Parker.

Two Negr[illegible]hed For Stabb[illegible]oliceman

The bodies of two Negroes were found on a highway outside the city of Tallahassee, Florida this week. The pair was arrested Sunday on the charge of stabbing Policeman V. F. Kelly when he attempted to question them about breaking into a restaurant. Kelly was stabbed seven times and is in a serious condition. Assistane Chief of Police W. L. Prater said the only information he had was that the Negroes were missing from the jail and later their bodies were found in a ditch along the highway.

This is the first lynching in Florida this year and the first double lynching in several years.

5 HOODED MEN SEIZE, LYNCH NEGRO PRISONER

MILTON, Fla., Oct. 4.—(AP)—Five hooded men, halting Sheriff Joe Allen, of Santa Rosa County on a midnight drive, seized a negro prisoner and shot him to death on a highway.

The negro, 30-year-old J. C. Evans, was charged with a "crime against nature" involving an attack on a 12-year-old white boy, and with robbing a filling station. He was being brought here for trial today. It was Florida's third lynching and the south's eighth this year.

Body Cast in Ditch

Prisoner Was on Way to Trial on Robbery Charge

MILTON, Fla.—Five masked men snatched J. C. Evans, 30, from a sheriff at midnight, Sunday, as the prisoner was en route to trial, riddled him with buckshot and pistol bullets.

The body of Evans, accused of armed robbery and assaulting a white boy, was found sprawled in a ditch near Crestview on Monday morning.

The lynching was Florida's third for the year and the South's eighth.

Usual Verdict Given

After an investigation, a coroner's jury returned a verdict that Evans came to his death at the hands of "parties unknown." Sheriff Joe Allen of Santa Rosa County told the jury that neither he nor his deputy, Aubrey Martin, recognized any members of the mob.

The sheriff said that he and the deputy had driven to Panama City, Fla., to get Evans, who had been held there in safeguard him against "high feeling."

He was on the way back with Evans on the front seat of his machine, the sheriff testified when near Fort Walton, a car passed his auto and then forced him to stop.

Five men wearing black hoods covered him and the deputy with pistols, he said.

"We want that n——r," the sheriff said the men told him.

The hooded men took Evans and Sheriff Allen in their machine down the road about a mile. They put out the sheriff. About three miles from where the men took Evans, officers found his body.

In Tallahassee, Gov. F. P. Cone ordered an investigation. Two youths were taken from a jail in the shadow of the State Capitol at Tallahassee and lynched in September. Governor Cone ordered an investigation in that case, but nothing has ever come of it.

Sheriff Allen told the jury he and Deputy Sheriff Aubrey Martin drove to Panama City, Fla., last night to get the Negro, who had been held in jail there to safeguard him against "high feeling."

Near midnight, Allen testified, a car forced his automobile to stop and five men wearing black hoods covered him and Deputy Martin with guns.

"We want that nigger,' the sheriff said the men told him.

The hooded men took Allen and the Negro into their automobile and drove down the road about a mile. Then they put Allen out of the car and handed him the keys to his own automobile. The Sheriff walked back to his car and drove to Milton.

About three miles from the spot where the men took the Negro, the Sheriff said, he and Martin found the prisoner's body sprawled on the edge of the road. The Negro had been riddled with buckshot and hit several times with pistol bullets.

Sheriff Allen said neither he nor Martin recognized any of the five hooded men.

ANOTHER LYNCHING IN FLORIDA

Again this year the good name of Florida and of the South is dragged into the dirt because four men have taken it upon themselves to act as judge, prosecutor, jury and executioner. A Negro was taken Sunday night from a sheriff of Santa Rosa County and riddled with buckshot.

Another grim story of men contemptuous of the law and unaware of the rights of every individual, however lowly or detestful that individual might be. The Negro who was murdered had not been proved guilty of any crime. Who knows but that he was innocent?

The authorities in Florida owe it to themselves and to law and order to bring to justice the four men who violated the law Sunday night. Men who commit lynchings must be shown that their acts will not be tolerated.

FLORIDA MOB RIDDLES MAN WITH BULLETS

Victim Handed Over By Sheriff While On Way To County Jail

MILTON, Fla., Oct. 8—Florida took the lead in lynchings this week when J. C. Evans, 30 years old, was handed over to a mob while being taken to the county jail by Sheriff Joe Allen.

Evans' body, riddled with bullets was found in ditch near Crestview Monday morning. The lynching was the third within ten months in this state.

Evans, charged with having robbed the owner of a filling station and attacking a white boy, told police he was guilty. Despite his pleas he was arrested and being taken to the jail when the mob took him from the sheriff.

As is the usual custom, a coroner's jury returned a verdict stating that Evans met his death at the hands of unknown parties.

5 HOODED MEN LYNCH NEGRO IN NORTH FLORIDA

Take Prisoner From Santa Rosa Sheriff

MILTON, Oct. 4—(Associated Press) Five hooded men took a negro prisoner from Sheriff Joe Allen of Santa Rosa county during the night and shot the negro to death on a highway near Fort Walton in neighboring Okaloosa county.

The negro, 30-year-old J. C. Evans, was to have been tried here today on a charge of criminally attacking a 12-year-old white boy and robbing a filling station.

It was Florida's third lynching of the year and the eighth in the south during 1937.

"We want that nigger," the sheriff said the men told him.

Leaving the deputy in the sheriff's car, the hooded men took Allen and the negro into their automobile and drove down the road about a mile. Then they put Allen out of the car and handed him the keys to his own automobile. The sheriff walked back to his car.

Find Negro's Body

Allen said he and Martin drove here immediately. About three miles from the spot where the men took the negro. The sheriff said, he and Martin found the prisoner's body sprawled on the edge of the road. The negro had been riddled with buckshot and hit several times with pistol bullets.

Allen testified he telephoned Sheriff John P. Steele of Crestview who, with County Judge Wilbur Osborne summoned a coroner's jury and went to the scene.

Sheriff Allen said neither he nor Deputy Martin recognized any of the five hooded men. He insisted he believed no one in Milton knew of his plan to transfer the prisoner here last night.

The Tuskegee, Ala., institute said in addition to Florida's three lynchings this year there have been two in Mississippi and one each in Alabama Georgia and Tennessee.

LYNCHING ENQUIRY STARTED

Negro Is Taken From Santa Rosa Sheriff, Filled With Shot

Identity of five hooded men who Sheriff Joe Allen of Santa Rosa county said took a negro prisoner from him and later lynched the negro on a highway near the Okaloosa-Santa Rosa county line, near midnight Sunday, has not been learned.

The negro, J C Evans, 30, was being taken from the Panama City jail to Milton to stand trial on a charge of criminally assaulting a 12-year-old white boy and robbing a filling station.

Sentenced to Life Term

Evans, who had been convicted of armed robbery by a circuit court jury in Panama City last Saturday and sentenced to life imprisonment, was scheduled to have gone on trial early this week.

It was Florida's third lynching of the year and the eighth in the South during 1937.

Sheriff Allen was the only witness before the Crestview coroner's jury Monday. He declared that he and Deputy Aubrey Martin drove to Panama City Sunday night to get the negro.

They left the Bay county jail with Evans at 10:45 o'clock that night. On the highway from Fort Walton to Milton around midnight Sheriff Allen said a car forced his automobile to stop and five men wearing black hoods covered him and Deputy Martin with guns.

"We want that nigger," the sheriff said the men told him. Two of the men had shotguns and two had revolvers, Allen said.

The Santa Rosa sheriff said the group took him and the negro into their car and drove about a mile down the road. Then they put Allen out of the car, and handed him his keys to his car, he said. The sheriff said he walked back to his car and that he and Martin drove in the direction taken by the hooded men.

About three miles from the spot where the men took the negro, the sheriff said, he and Martin found the prisoner's body sprawled on the edge of the road. The negro had been riddled with buckshot, Allen said.

Jury Goes to Scene

Allen said he and Martin immediately went to Milton and that he phoned Sheriff John P Steele of Crestview, who with County Judge Wilbur Osburn summoned a coroner's jury and went to the scene.

Sheriff Steele stated that the coroner's jury held an autopsy and found buckshot but no pistol bullets in the negro's body. He said Sheriff Allen declared he could not identify any of the men in the group that took the negro.

Sheriff Allen insisted that no one in Milton knew of his plans to transfer Evans to Milton Sunday night.

From his office in Tallahassee Governor Fred P Cone ordered a complete investigation with full punishment for the guilty parties. State Atterney E Dixie Beggs, Jr, of Pensacola, went to Crestview to investigate and later declared "we are doing all we can to solve this thing."

Boys, Each About 18 Years Old, Are Taken From Jail At State Capital By Four Unidentified Men And Slain

ACCUSED OF POLICE STABBING

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—(SNS)—Charged with stabbing a local policeman, two colored youths, Richard Hawkins and Ernest Ponder, each about 18 years old, were taken from jail here early Tuesday, July 20, and riddled with bullets by four unidentified white men. Just after daylight, their bodies were found on the edge of the Tallahassee-Jacksonville highway, fully three and one-half miles east of the Floridit state capitol.

Immediately upon learning of the gruesome double lynching, Governor Fred P. Cone said, "I'm going to do everything I can to get whoever did this. It looks like a lot of carelessness here by somebody This was not a lynching. It was murder. I'm going to prosecute anybody we get to the limit of the law."

Sheriff Stoutamire received prompt instructions from Governor Cone and State Attorney Orion C. Parker, Jr., to make a thorough probe and report to him.

The sheriff said he was told that four men with paper sacks over their heads entered the city police headquarters around three o'clock in the morning and forced Harry Fairbanks, night sergeant, to accompany them to the combination city-county jail and deliver the two youths. The boys had been arrested as suspects in a Sunday, July 18, bugiary attempt on a store, who had stabbed and seriously wounded Policeman V. F. Kelley when he attempted to take them unto custody. Officer Kelly is in a critical condition in a hospital here at the present time.

After Sheriff Stoutamire mentioned what had been told of what took place, the observation was made that the city police department had access to the keys to the jail without calling up the county at night.

Fairbanks, according to Stoutamire, was bound and gagged and left in the building. Robert Maige, the county jailer, who says he was sleeping in the jail building, said he was awakened by Fairbanks' calls for help after the band of unidentified men had left with the colored boys. He said he found him locked in the cell block.

According to Stoutamire, Fairbanks told him he had been "stuck up" by one of the four men, none of whom he recognized, and ordered to deliver the prisoners. Fairbanks had been under a physician's care because of high blood pressure, the sheriff stated, and, as a result of the episode, was in such bad shape that a doctor had ordered him to bed with instructions that no one disturb him.

It was pointed out that, after the arrest of the two boys, little had happened or seemed to indicate that a mob violence was likely. However, it was stated that special orders had been given to keep strict vigilance over any and all persons visiting the premises.

It was not until shortly after 3 o'clock Tuesday morning, Sheriff Stoutamire reported, that notification of the seizure was received. He said he and his deputy meandered various parts of the city but found nothing. But, upon their return to the jail, he said, a call came from a colored woman who said she had found the youths' bodies sprawled near a clump of trees on a seldom-used side road less than a hundred feet off the main highway.

Judge W. May Walker, county Judge, said the bodies were about twenty feet apart on the ground and that each had been shot fifteen or twenty times with bullets. It looked like somebody stood about fifteen feet away and shot them. Judging from the position of the bodies, it appeared that somebody may have held one man and made him watch while they shot the other one."

Painted cards were found, which read: "His last crime"; "This is the beginning, who is next?"; "This is your Warning"; "Negroes, remember, you may be next"; and "Warning, this is what will happen to all Negroes that harm white people.'

A coroner's jury was called to review the bodies by Judge Walker, but it was recessed until further notice.

The twin tragedy was the initial lynching of 1937 for this state and its first double lynching since some years.

FLORIDA NEGROES, TAKEN FROM JAIL, FOUND LYNCHED

Mystery Surrounds Abduction Of Two Youths From Tallahassee Cell

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.— (AP) —Assistant Chief of Police W. L. Prater said two young Negroes charged with the stabbing of a Tallahassee policeman were lynched by unidentified persons early today.

Prater said the only information he had was that the Negroes were missing from the jail and that their bodies had been found on a highway outside the city.

The two Negroes were arrested Sunday on a charge of stabbing Policeman V. F. Kelly when he attempted to question them about breaking into a restaurant. Kelly, stabbed seven times, is in a serious condition in a hospital here.

The bodies were found after daylight, close by a clump of oak trees a short distance off the Jacksonville Highway about 3½ miles from the state capitol. The bodies still were beside the road an hour after they were found.

This was first lynching in Florida this year and the first double lynching in several years.

Eugene Ward, a city policeman, said he heard the Negroes were shot to death.

Ward said he didn't know any particulars about how the two were taken from the city-county jail.

Sheriff Frank Stoutamire was out of his office and could not be reached.

Ward said he understood the two men were taken from the jail about 3 a.m.

The victims were listed at police headquarters as Richard Gawkins and Ernest Ponder, each about 18.

Warrants charging them with assault to murder Policeman Kelly were issued yesterday after police said they confessed stabbing the officer.

Police officials who were on duty last night were away from headquarters this morning.

City police place their prisoners in the county-city jail and have access to it at all times to lock up prisoners they arrest.

There were reports that a band of men entered police headquarters early today and forced an officer to accompany them at gun point to the county jail and get the two Negroes out of their cells.

The men were reported to have bound the policeman and left him in the jail building, departing without arousing the jail custodian.

The officer was quoted by some as saying the men wore masks and that he did not recognize any of them.

State Atty. Orion C. Parker, Jr., said "we're going to investigate this thing as far as we can. We're trying to get the parties who are responsible for it."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 20.—(INS)—Two youthful negroes, held for the stabbing of a Tallahassee policeman, were taken from the jail here today by four masked men, escorted from the city and shot to death about three and one-half miles east of here.

The victims were Richard Hawkins and Ernest Ponder, both about 19 years old. They were arrested Sunday in connection with the stabbing of Officer V. F. Kelley, who was critically wounded by two negroes whom he had arrested for breaking into a building. Both admitted being at the scene, but each blamed the other for the crime, officers said.

The four men who seized the negroes at the jail forced Policeman Harry Fairbanks to unlock the outside door of the jail and then open the cell block where the negroes were kept.

After dragging the two negroes from their cells, the men tied Fairbanks in the cell. As the men left the jail, Fairbanks set up a cry that brought aid from other officers.

The bullet-riddled bodies of the two negroes were found some time later as officers searched the countryside for the prisoners and their abductors.

Police Sergeant Forced to Open the Cells of Prisoners Held in Stabbing of Officer

jail, four blocks from the Capitol, and shot them to death early today.

The Negroes, Richard Hawkins and Ernest Ponder, each about 18, had been held on a charge of stabbing Policeman V. F. Kelly Sunday when he attempted to question them about breaking into a store. Kelly is in serious condition at a hospital.

"This was not a lynching—it was murder," said Governor Fred P. Cone when he learned of the case. "I'm going to prosecute anybody we get to the limit of the law."

Sheriff Frank Stoutamire said four men, wearing paper sacks over their heads, forced Night Police Sergeant Harry Fairbanks to accompany them to the county jail.

Sergeant Fairbanks declared that the four—"two stout men and two short men"—entered police headquarters about 3 A. M., poked a gun to his back and said:

"We want the jail keys and we don't want any foolishness."

"I got up and gave them to them," Sergeant Fairbanks added.

Unlocked Six Doors

He said that the men forced him to accompany them to the jail and open the six doors necessary to get from the outside to the cells. Then they tied his arms and gagged him, he asserted, and left him locked in a cell block.

County Jailer Robert Maige slept through all this, Sheriff Stoutamire reported, but was awakened by Fairbanks' calls for help. The Police Department uses the county jail and has its own keys, the Sheriff explained.

The Sheriff asserted that he and his deputies searched for hours for the Negroes and their captors, but found nothing of their whereabouts until a Negro woman telephoned that she had found the bodies under oak trees about 100 feet off the main Jacksonville-Tallahassee highway, three and a half miles out of town.

The bodies were about 20 feet apart. The officers there were fifteen to twenty bullet holes in each body. Five crudely printed placards, with some of the letters "S" backward, marked the scene of the double slaying. The signs read:

"His last crime." "This is the beginning, who is next." This is your warning." "Negros, remember you may be next." "Warning, this is what will happen to all Negroes that harm white people."

Tuskegee Institute records showed four persons previously slain by mobs in the United States this year. There were eight lynchings in 1936.

Wagner to Press Bill

WASHINGTON, July 20 (AP).—Senator Wagner said today that he planned to seek Senate action on his Anti-Lynching Bill when the court reform fight was settled.

The measure, similar to one passed by the House, has been on the Senate calendar since it was approved June 21 by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Wagner declared that he and Senator Van Nuys, co-author of the Senate proposal to impose Federal penalties on officials who fail to protect their prisoners from mobs, were confident it will be enacted this year.

"We have the votes to pass it," he said.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., July 23—(Special)—Florida added its name to the lynch column Monday when two members of the Race, accused of having stabbed a policeman, were lynched just a mile away from the state capitol. The victims were Richard Gawkins and Ernest Ponder, both 18 years of age.

Their nude bodies bearing burns and scars were found in a ditch right on the highway leading to the capital. This marked Florida's first lynching of the year and the first double lynching in several years.

News of the brutal murder of the two men caused police citizens here to start letters and telegrams to northern Senators asking their aid in the passage of the anti-lynch bill which now seems to be periled following the death of Senator Joseph Robinson, Senate majority leader of Arkansas.

The announcemenet of the lynching was made by Assistant Chief of Police W. L. Prater, who said that the crime was committed by parties "unknown" to police.

Negroes Lynched In Leon County

Two Who Confessed Stabbing Police Officer Taken From Jail and Riddled With Bullets Tuesday Morning.

Investigation is being made by state, county and city authorities of Tallahassee into the lynching early Tuesday morning of two 18-year-old negroes, who were taken from the Leon county jail and whose bodies were later found on a side road leading off State Road No. 1 three miles east of the capital. The negroes had confessed to the stabbing of City Patrolman V. F. Kelly when he surprised them in a store robbery early Sunday morning.

Patrolman Kelly, well known here where he formerly played second base on the Faceville, Ga., baseball team, is in a Tallahassee hospital in a serious condition.

The negroes were taken from the new Leon county jail after four masked men forced Police Officer Harry Fairbanks at the police station to deliver to them keys to a strong box in the jail where the keys to the cell block were locked. At the point of a pistol he was made to accompany them to the jail and give up the keys, after which he was bound, gagged and locked in a cell while the unidentified men left with the negroes.

Apparently Hawkins and Ponder, the negro youths, were hurried to the site of the lynching, released and shot while running. Their bodies, riddled with bullets, were found the following morning lying about 20 feet apart in the middle of a side road. On the bank of the side of the road were found placards lettered in green ink which read:

"His last crime."

"This is the beginning, who is next."

"This is your warning."

"Negroes remember you may be next."

"Warning, this is what will happen to all negroes that harm white people."

When advised of the lynching Tuesday Governor Cone said:

"I'm going to do everything I can to get whoever did this. It looks like a lot of carelessness here by somebody. This was not a lynching. It was murder. I'm going to prosecute everybody we get to the limit of the law."

State Attorney Orien C. Parker and Sheriff Frank Stoutamire were instructed by the governor to have a special investigation made at once and report to him. A coroner's jury was impaneled, but after a three-hour session Tuesday afternoon adjourned upon call of the county judge.

Mississippi Mob Lynches Innocent Men

Defender 4-24-37

By J. WINSTON HARRINGTON
(Staff Correspondent)

DUCK HILL, Miss., April 23—(Special)—His eyes gouged out with an ice pick and his body seared with the intense flame of a blow torch, Roosevelt Townes, 25 years of age whose home is in Memphis, Tenn., became the victim of a new kind of lynching here Tuesday when a mob of Mississippi savages sought to satisfy their desire for vengance against the murder of George Windham, a white merchant of this town.

But Townes was just one of the three men "our leading white folks" of Mississippi tortured. Robert McDaniel, 26 named as one of the accessories of the crime which was committed last December, was chained to a tree, horse whipped and then riddled with buckshot from at least a hundred shotguns. As both men went slowly to their death, the howling mob composed of men, women and children from adjoining towns, saturated their bodies with gasoline, quickly gathered brush and within a few minutes the victims were burned to a crisp.

Everett Dorroh, a farmer, who happened to be passing along the route of the mob, barely escaped with his life. Looking on wild eyed as he saw the two men tortured, Dorroh pleaded for his life, declaring he had no part in the murder. He was saved only after he too had been horsewhipped and shot several times in the leg.

The double lynching brought to an end the fifteen month 'clear slate' Mississippi had enjoyed and which Governor Hugh White was proudly boasting of before a convention of farmers at almost the identical minute the mob was conducting its lynching bee.

None of the three had been formally charged with the crime. They had not been identified by any competent witnesses. They were merely arrested as suspects in a murder case, therefore for all intents and purposes they were lynched not for murdering the white merchant, but for being suspected of having committed the crime.

The victims were being taken out of Grenada county court house following their arraignment. They were passing through the jail yard when from all appearances Sheriff E. E. Wright and his two deputies made it convenient to pass their victims on to the mob. "It was not a case of being overpowered' declared an eyewitness.

"Sheriff Wright acted as if though the whole affair had been pre-arranged. When the victims took the men the sheriff laughed and said, 'You have overpowered me boys.'

Both Townes and McDaniel were thrown into a waiting automobile while the mob howled with glee and headed for highway 51. The lynch procession resembled that of a cricus parade. More than 150 automobiles, bearing women, men, and children formed the escort for the lynch caravan.

Enroute they met Dorroh who was named as one of the murderers.

Upon reaching the scene where Windham had met his death in December, the mob ordered the trio out of the car. Townes was the first victim. He was stripped of his clothing ad soaked in gasoline.

This was the preliminary act of applying the blow torches, which plumbers use in soldering steel. White women held their babies high in their arms so that the infants, the future lynchers, could see the torture of the victims.

Five men in the party, wore ministerial garb but it could not be verified as to what churches they represented. They took no part, yet they offered no protest.

McDaniels, who was accused of being a partner in the crime with Townes, was also stripped of his clothing and after being severely flogged was told to run for his life. As he did so his body was punctured with buckshot from at least the shot guns of fifty men.

The third victim, Dorroh, who explained at the outset, that he knew nothing of the crime and that he had just arrived in the town from Winona was forced to plead for his life to the amusement of the mob.

There was much merriment as Dorroh, tied to a tree, was taunted by the twenty-five or more children who were a part of the mob.

It was reported on good authority that Sheriff Wright and some of his deputies drove behind the mob where the prisoners [illegible] lynched.

2 NEGROES LYNCHED BY MISSISSIPPI MOB

Contribution

One Who Confessed Slaying Is Tethered to Tree and Burned.

WINONA, Miss., April 13.—(AP)—Two negroes were lynched by a mob of more than 100 white men near Duck Hill, Miss., this afternoon within two hours after they had pleaded innocence in Montgomery county circuit court to a charge of murdering a white man.

A third negro suspected by the mob of complicity in the slaying of George Windham, a country storekeeper, was severely whipped and run out of the county after narrowly escaping the mob's more vicious vengeance.

Burned at Tree.

Roosevelt Townes, who had confessed, Sheriff E. E. Wright said, that he shot Windham, was tied to a tree and burned to death.

A negro identified only as "Bootjack" McDaniels, indicted with Townes in the Windham slaying, was shot by members of the mob, and his body burned.

Townes and McDaniels were taken from Sheriff Wright and two deputies early this afternoon as they were being led from the courthouse to be returned to the jail to await trial Thursday.

The negroes were handcuffed, and placed in a waiting school bus. Members of the mob piled into the bus, and others into automobiles. The caravan sped northward toward Duck Hill as the negroes screamed for mercy. The bus stopped near the small country store where Windham was fatally shot through a window one night last December, and the negroes were tied to a stake. Townes was burned to death with a blow torch.

Inquiry Planned.

"This terrible thing will be immediately investigated by the grand jury," said Circuit Judge John F. Allen, of Kosciusko, who was presiding at the regular criminal term of circuit court here when the negroes were arraigned.

Judge Allen said he would hold a conference with the district attorney, and that plans for investigating the double lynchings would be made immediately.

Governor Hugh White, who had just declared to a farm chemurgic conference in Jackson that Mississippi had not had a lynching in 15 months, was outraged at reports of the mob action.

He issued an immediate order for the national guard to mobilize a company of troops at Grenada and proceed to Winona, but after conferring with authorities here and learning that the lynching had been completed and the mob had dispersed, the Governor countermanded the order.

White Voices His Regret As Texan In Congress Calls For Quick Action

JACKSON, MISS., April 14.—(AP)—Lynch law was condemned today as cowardly, brutal and lawless by officials and citizens who demanded punishment for white mob leaders who yesterday tortured and killed two negroes, Roosevelt Townes and "Bootjack" McDaniels, accused of killing George S. Windham, a white storekeeper, at Duck Hill, on Dec. 30, 1936.

The negroes were seized from Sheriff E. E. Wright and deputies of Montgomery County at the Winona courthouse just after they had been arraigned and pleaded innocent to murder charges.

The officers were overpowered in the courthouse yard by a hundred members of the mob and the two negro prisoners were chained about their necks by mob members and taken into the woods near Duck Hill and tied to trees.

Screamed Confession

There they screamed a confession of the killing under torture of blow torch fire as a crowd of an estimated 500 men, women and children looked on.

Townes was burned to death and McDaniels was killed by a pistol shot in the head. Another negro named "Shorty" was beaten severely by mob members and ordered to leave the county.

Gov. Hugh White expressed official regrets over the double lynching and said he was taken by complete surprise by the violence.

At the time the first report of the lynching was conveyed to him the Governor had just finished addressing the chemurgic conference here and boasting that Mississippi had not experienced a lynching for 15 months.

The Governor requested Dist. Atty. Clarence Morgan at Winona to investigate the lynching fully and report to him.

In the meantime Chairman Sumners (D), Texas, of the House judiciary committee, who is leading Southern Democrats in opposing the proposed Federal anti-lynching bill in Washington, wired Gov. White that if the State of Mississippi did not bring "these lynchers and officers to speedy and adequate punishment" the State could not in effect escape becoming an accessory after a fact to the crime.

The Duck Hill lynching, Sumners said, "is the sort of thing which makes it hard for us who are here trying to protect the governmental sovereignty of the states."

Gov. White declared that the lynching was unjustified and said he deeply deplored the mob action.

"It was my understanding that the Townes negro had already confessed," the Governor said. "I had absolutely no prior knowledge that any violence of any sort was threatened."

Similar statement were made by Judge John Allen, trial judge at Winona, who had just set Townes's trial for Thursday, and by Sheriff Wright.

These officials said that every step had been taken to insure a regular and fair trial for the negroes and that counsel had been appointed to defend them. The sheriff said he was helpless before the mob.

The executive committee of the Mississippi Council, Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching issued a statement declaring that all Christian citizens of Mississippi were humiliated by the action of the mob.

TWO NEGROES LYNCHED BY MOB AT DUCK HILL

Victims Admit Murder of Merchant Before Deaths

PAIR TAKEN FROM GUARDS

Prisoners Were Being Returned To Jail When Seized By Crowd of 150—Investigation Is Promised

Special to The Commercial Appeal

DUCK HILL, Miss., April 13.—Two negroes were the victims of mob vengeance near here today, meeting death after torture with blow torches.

They were accused of the murder of George S. Windham, country merchant, last Dec. 30.

The mob, estimated at 150 or more citizens, forced Sheriff E. E. Wright and Deputies Winston Blakely and Hugh Curtis to surrender the negroes as they were being returned to jail from Montgomery County courthouse at Winona at noon.

Confess Crime

Returning to the scene of the murder, seven miles east of Duck Hill, the mob lashed Roosevelt Townes, 26, of Grenada, to a tree with chains. "Bootjack" McDaniels, 26, of near Duck Hill, was the first to feel the searing blow torch. He quickly confessed his part in the slaying, saying that he stood guard while Townes fired through the window and killed Mr. Windham.

McDaniels was then riddled with bullets.

The torch was next applied to Townes and he repeated the confession he gave when arrested in Memphis last week. After mutilating him with the blow torch for an hour, the lynchers piled brush high about him, saturated it with gasoline and touched a match to the pyre.

Implicate Another

Before dying, the negroes implicated "Shorty" Dorroh, another negro of near Duck Hill, and he was speedily brought to the scene. But Dorroh said that while he had been in the conspiracy at first, he later withdrew and was not at the murder scene. He admitted, however, receiving some of the money stolen from the store.

The mobsters released him after a severe horse-whipping and warned him to leave the state. Dorroh never had been arrested in connection with the murder.

Townes and McDaniels were arraigned before Circuit Judge John F. Allen of Kosciusko at Winona and pleaded not guilty to the murder charge. They were to be tried Thursday.

As Sheriff Wright and his deputies were leading the prisoners from the rear door the mob rushed forward. The officers attempted to retreat to the courthouse, but the mob members blocked their way, seized the handcuffed prisoners and placed them in a school bus. A truck was backed into the courtyard gate blocking it, and the caravan of cars and trucks sped out of town.

Investigation Promised

"This terrible thing will be immediately investigated by the grand jury," Judge Allen said.

Deputy Sheriff Curtis said the prisoners were being led from the courthouse to the jail and that as the negroes and the officer-guards reached the door of the courthouse leading into the jail yard, men milling about the courtyard closed in.

"Two men pinned me from behind, and they grabbed the other officers in the same way," he said.

"It was all done very quickly, quietly and orderly."

Members Not Masked

Curtis was asked if the men were masked.

"No, they weren't masked."

"Did you recognize any of them?"

"No, they were behind me, and I couldn't tell who they were."

Townes had been held in jail at Jackson since his arrest in Memphis April 3 at the home of his mother, 841 North Claybrook. Memphis police said he made the following confession when arrested:

Shot Through Window

"I got a 12-gauge shotgun from by brother-in-law (stole it) and some shells from another man. I went to Windham's store. He was opening a box of sardines. I shot him through the window. I went into his pockets. From his left-hand pocket I took a pocketbook and got $60 from the pocketbook and cash register. I also took a leather lumber jacket."

White Hears of Lynching After Boast On Record

JACKSON, Miss., April 13.—(AP)—"We are justly proud of the fact that Mississippi has not had a lynching in 15 months," Governor Hugh White boasted in an address before the Farm Chemurgic Conference here this afternoon.

A minute later, he was called from the conference to be informed by his secretary that two negroes had just been lynched at Duck Hill.

He issued an immediate order for the National Guard to mobolize a company of troops at Grenada and proceed to Winona, but after conferring with authorities here and learning that the lynching had been completed and the mob had dispersed, the governor countermanded the order.

Seven negroes were lynched in Mississippi in 1935.

Debate Spurred On Anti-Lynching Bill

WASHINGTON, April 13.—(AP)—The House received reports of the lynching of two negroes near Duck Hill, Miss., today in the midst of debate over a federal anti-lynching bill.

Proponents immediately seized upon the mob action as an argument in behalf of a proposal by tional invasion of the rights of the Representative Cavagan, Democrat, states, made no immediate reply on New York, to impose heavy fines the floor, but in statements later and prison terms on persons figuring in lynchings.

Reports of the Tragedy Enliven House Debate on Federal Anti-Lynching Bill

WINONA, Miss., April 13 (AP).—Two Negroes were tortured and lynched by a mob of more than 100 white men near Duck Hill this afternoon within two hours after they had pleaded innocent in Montgomery County Circuit Court to a charge of murdering a white man.

A third Negro suspected by the mob of complicity in the slaying of George Windham, a country storekeeper, was severely whipped and run out of the county after narrowly escaping the fate of the other two Negroes.

Roosevelt Townes, who had confessed, Sheriff E. E. Wright said, that he shot Windham, was tied to a tree near his victim's store and tortured slowly to death with flames from a blow-torch.

A Negro identified only as "Bootjack" McDaniels, indicted with Townes in the Windham slaying, was shot by members of the mob and his body burned.

Townes and McDaniels were taken from Sheriff Wright and two deputies early this afternoon as they were being led from the court house to be returned to the jail to await trial Thursday.

The Negroes were handcuffed and placed in a waiting school bus. Members of the mob piled into the bus and others into automobiles. The caravan sped northward toward Duck Hill as the Negroes screamed for mercy. The bus stopped near the small country store where Windham was fatally shot through a window one night last December. The Negroes were tied to a tree and tortured.

"This terrible thing will be immediately investigated by the grand jury," said Circuit Judge John F. Allen of Kosciusko, who was presiding at the regular criminal term of Circuit Court here when the Negroes were arraigned.

Judge Allen said he would hold a conference with the District Attorney and plans for investigating the double lynchings would be made immediately.

"Not a Lynching in Fifteen Months"

JACKSON, Miss., April 13 (AP).—"We are justly proud of the fact that Mississippi has not had a lynching in fifteen months," Governor Hugh White boasted in an address before the Farm Chemurgic Conference here this afternoon.

A minutes later he was called from the conference to learn from his secretary that two Negroes had just been lynched at Duck Hill.

Negro Charged With Murder of Police Officer Taken From Sheriff and Shot

COVINGTON, Tenn., Aug. 17 (AP)—Six masked men, who laughed and shouted, "To hell with the law," seized a terror-stricken Negro from Sheriff W. J. Vaughan early today, riddled him with bullets, and left his body dangling at the end of a frayed plow line.

It was the first lynching in Tipton county since the War Between the States. Circuit Judge R. B. Baptist, ordering the county grand jury to make a "real investigation" of the "disgraceful, horrible crime," demanded first degree murder indictments against the "night riders," if their identities can be established.

Albert Gooden's body lay on the edge of Beaver creek 12 miles from here when officers came upon it, the head submerged. The rope had given way under the weight of his swaying form. The legs were bound together at the ankles. The hands, still in handcuffs placed by officers, also were bound by heavy wire. More than 30 bullets had pierced the body.

The mobsmen crowded Sheriff Vaughan's car off the highway last night, disarmed him and seized the Negro. The sheriff was bringing him to Covington to face a charge of slaying City Marshal Chester Doyle of Mason, Tenn., a month ago.

The Negro had been incarcerated at Memphis in view of a previous attempt at violence.

Sheriff Describes Capture

Gooden's death was recorded as the seventh lynching of 1937, Tennessee's first since 1935.

"Every one participating," Judge Baptist told the grand jury, or even "aiding or abetting" in the lynching "is guilty of murder in the first degree.'

Warning against a "perfunctory" inquiry, he said he wanted the investigation "full, complete and searching."

Sheriff Vaughan said he kept secret the purpose of his trip to Memphis yesterday. He was about 300 yards from Brighton on his return when "a car crowded me off the pavement."

"Five men with handkerchiefs over their faces jumped out and covered us with pistols," the sheriff said, adding they dragged the Negro from the car. When the Negro jerked loose, he was hit with a gun, and dumped into the second car.

COVINGTON, Tenn., Aug. 17.—The bullet-riddled body of a Negro farmer, who had been charged with killing the white marshal of Mason, Tenn., today was found below a highway bridge near here.

Six masked men last night took the Negro, Albert Gooden, 35, from Sheriff W. J. Vaughan. The sheriff was bringing the Negro from the Shelby County Jail in Memphis where he had been held for safekeeping since July 19. The Negro was to have been taken before the Tipton County Grand Jury today for indictment.

The sheriff said a sedan forced his automobile to the side of the highway six miles from here. Five masked men jumped from the car, covered the sheriff with guns and took his revolver.

"All right, let's have him," growled one of the abductors.

Body Is Found

Two of the masked men grabbed the handcuffed Negro when he jumped from the car and started to run. One of them banged him over the head with the butt of a revolver and threw him into their automobile.

"Please lemme go with Mister Vaughan," was the Negro's last plea heard by the sheriff.

After a six-hour search, Chief Deputy J. W. Pickens and Traffic Officer J. T. Scott found the Negro's body at 3 a. m. under the bridge on a dirt road, nine miles from the point on the main highway where the prisoner was taken from the sheriff.

The body of the handcuffed Negro was riddled with pistol shots. The sheriff's revolver lay beside the body. There was a rope plow line noosed about Gooden's neck. The plow line had broken and one end dangled from the railing of the bridge. The Negro apparently had been shot off the railing after he had been tied to it with the rope. It appeared that the Negro's lunge from the railing or pistol shots had severed the rope.

Escaped Mob Once

It was the first lynching in Tipton County since the Civil War.

"I am going to make a full investigation," Vaughan said, "but I haven't much to go on as the men were masked, and of course, I didn't recognize any of them."

The most recent previous lynching in this section of the Mid-South was near Duck Hill, Miss., when two Negroes—accused of killing a white man—were tortured with a blow torch and killed five months ago.

Gooden was charged with killing Marshal Chester Doyle when he and other officers raided a Negro dice game at Mason July 17.

Vaughan took Gooden to Memphis the following night after he heard rumors of lynching plans.

TENNESSEE LYNCHING STARTS STIR

Mother Refuses To View Body Of Her Son

8-27-37

By NAT. D. WILLIAMS

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(SNS)—There was no large attendance at Albert Gooden's funeral the other day. In fact, he did not even have a funeral...they just carried him to the graveyard and buried him. No sermon—no mourning—no obituary—just a crowd of curious on-lookers hanging away back, not daring to be seen too close to the grave—and the sound of dirt clods falling on a box.

Albert Gooden had been lynched—lynched just a few steps from Memphis, the Hub of the Mid-South—just the morning before his burial. A mob of [illegible] died his body and hung him late Monday night, August 16 close to the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church near the Brighton community, between Mason and Covington, two small towns in Tipton county in rural, West Tennessee.

His mother wouldn't even look at his remains. She coudn't stand it. Southern tradition was asking too much—even of a mother.

His father, built of a little sterner stuff, and retaining a bit more composure, made the arrangements. His brother, operator of a burial association, looked after the materials and things. He even took one of his hearses and went to Covington early Tuesday morning, after three 'laws' (the colored folk call officers that in Tipton county), had awakened him and his wife about six o'clock in the morning and told them that they could 'go over and get Albert now, or leave him with H. H. Porter,' the colored undertaker in Covington who first picked up the lynch victim's body off the bridge.

Porter and other leading colored folk in Covington and nearby communities won't have much to say about the lynching pro or con. They take the attitude of letting the white folk do all the worrying.

The common folk just stand around and listen for what they can hear. Tobacco-chewing and suspendered white deputies took on a new look of importance as they went in and out of the court-house in Covington, while I was there....everybody seemed to think they knew something. Maybe they did.

But, no doubt, the details of a gruesome business will shed more light.

The first lynching in Tipton County, Tennessee in more than seventy years is now a matter for the more or less heated discussions which follows such happenings in these parts. Most decent citizens are aghast.

Albert Gooden, 22 year-old-coca-colored Negro youth, was found last Tuesday morning, his bullet-riddled body sprawled in the rank weeds growing on the banks of a sluggish creek that crawled beneath the bridge of a well-traveled highway. A broken rope was found knotted around his neck.

Albert had been taken from the Tipton County Sheriff, W. J. Vaughn, as he was being transferred from a Memphis jail to Covington, the Tipton County seat, for trial in the slaying of a county deputy, Chester Doyle.

Circumstances surrounding the lynching have led to a demand from Tipton County Judge R. B. Baptist, for a Grand Jury investigation, and a deal of questioning as to the degree of Sheriff Vaughn's responsibility in the matter.

Representing the sentiment of the better element of the Tipton county citizenry, Judge Baptist, an aged and well-known jurist, is apparently sincere in his demands for a complete investigation of the crime and its perpetrators.

So strong was his insistence on this point that he charged the members of the grand jury that "if any member of the group feels incapable of making a thorough effort to find and punish the lynchers, he should get off the jury at once."

Last Wednesday, the Grand Jury was recessed until September 1. In many quarters this action was decried as delaying the lynch investigation.

An Out Side Crime

Citizens of Covington, Tennessee are quick to point out

Chattanooga, Tenn. News
August 18, 1937

Negro Murder Suspect Lynched

that the lynching was nct committed by citizens of that locality. They emphasize the fine relations between the races which have existed in the county seat for scores of years, and point out the fact that original Gooden trouble started in Mason, Tennessee, a little town about 12 miles from there.

In recounting the history of conditions in that locality in the past few years one learns from long-time residents of Tipton County that there have been repeated outbreaks of trouble between white and colored individuals in the Mason community. The Gooden trouble, according to them, was just another instance in point.

The lynching, of course, was a climax to a long brewing stew of hard feeling and misunderstanding.

Albert Gooden, member of a large family, consisting of three sisters, five brothers and his mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Gooden, had a reputation for making trouble in the Mason community. He had had several 'brushes' with the law. On the night of July 17, Saturday, the town marshall, Mr. Delaney, summoned his deputy, Chester Doyle and several officers from Covington to assist them in raiding an alleged Negro 'dive,' a restaurant, operated by Ed Gooden, Albert's brother.

In the course of the raid, Doyle slapped a colored woman and otherwise beat her brutally, allegedly. This woman was known as Jennie Lou Pressman. She was said to be Albert's sweetheart. It is alleged that witnessing the slapping, Gooden poked a shotgun through a window and shot Doyle in the back, killing him.

A conflicting version to this is given later on in this article by the statement of other persons involved.

Later reports have it that the woman known as Jennie Lou Pressman, was notorious, familiar with white and colored men, and known to have associated with Doyle. She had been in Mason only a few days. She was held in jail as a material witness along with Allison Plummer, a school teacher, alleged to have aided Gooden in avoiding a mob and law officers. They were released when Gooden was lynched.

The sheriff was out of his office late Wednesday evening. Reports had it that he had returned to the scene of the lynching with some of his deputies to look for clues.

Public sentiment in Covington is posing three questions relative to the sheriff's responsibility in the matter. The first question is "Why did the sheriff stop for a cold drink on his way back to Covington, when he knew the feeling against his prisoner?" The second is, "Didn't the sheriff have time to draw his gun from the time he first noticed the other car's crowding him from the road, to the time the four men came back and took Gooden?" And the third query is, "Why would the sheriff go down a night ahead to get a prisoner in Gooden's circumstances when his trial wasn't set until the next day—couldn't he just as easily have gone the next day, since it's only a forty minute drive?"

Despite the undertone of such sentiments, however, Sheriff W. J. Vaughn maintains steadfastly that he is unable to identify the men who took his prisoner—his original story.

John Winford, white merchant of Covington who accompanied the sheriff to Memphis to get Gooden, stated that he "was a victim of circumstances, that he had no idea that the sheriff was going to Memphis to get Gooden, or he would not have gone, that the officer told him he was going to Memphis to buy some supplies for his farm, that they (he and the sheriff) were completely in the power of the gun-men, and that he believes the sheriff knew nothing of any approaching or intended mob violence.

Allison Plummer, recently liberated school teacher connected with the case, made something bordering on a startling new development relative to Gooden's innocence of the slaying of Deputy Doyle, when he stated that he did not ride Gooden around during the night, but took him to his (Gooden's) father's home, as requested along with the bleeding Jennie Lou, who was with Gooden at the time. Plummer says he made no affidavit saying Gooden confessed slaying Doyle to him.

And so, the case rests in the first lynching in Tipton County, Tennessee since the Civil War.

AND HE MADE A SPEECH

The Daily News was kind and considerate with Congressman Sumners, of Texas, chairman of the House judiciary committee, when he came to Jackson a few days ago to do some raving and rearing and tearing of what he has left in the way of hair concerning the subject of lynching.

Congressman Sumners, chief speaker before the Mississippi Association for Prevention of Lynching, was our guest and therefore it would not have been polite to say anything against the carefully prepared and shipped-in-advance speech he had written for the occasion. No newspaper printed it in full. In fact, he got only a few lines in the papers. More important things going on. His crowd was meagre. "Slimly attended," said one reporter.

That was in strict accord with the eternal fitness of things.

Congressman Sumners is not a good speaker.

Congressman Sumners had a poor subject.

Congressman Sumners happens to be a chairman of the House judiciary committee because of the rule of seniority and not because of any particular fitness he has for the place.

So much by way of prelude for a thumping good editorial.

Down at Biloxi dwells George P. Money who devotes his leisure time to writing darned good editorials for the Gulfport-Biloxi Daily Herald.

If you happen to know anything about Mississippi history you certainly know the prominent part that has been played in our state affairs by the Money family—beginning with that illustrious blind Senator Hernando DeSoto Money. George Money is his blood kin. He is a scholar and a gentleman, gracefully growing old but still capable of good thinking.

All right. That's the introduction. Now listen to what George P. Money has to say in the Gulfport-Biloxi Daily Herald concerning Congressman Sumners and the subject of lynching. Here it is:

Congressman Sumners of Texas is chairman of the House judiciary committee, we believe. As such he feels responsible—in addition to being a Southerner—for the anti-lynching bill which has passed the House after introduction by a New York Congressman who has a well-shaded district, but perhaps has never been where one has to carry a lantern to see his way in a crowd down here. He has given interviews and written Southern Governors about it, and cries, even as of old: "Help me, Cassius, or we sink!"

He warns all, that if "they" do not stop lynching—which generally is done unexpectedly and suddenly by a small number, some of them quite irresponsible—a Federal lynching law will be passed, and the Federal grand juries, once in a great while, first in the Northern and then in the Southern District, they will indict somebody or other if they can learn who they are, or even find John Doe and Richard Roe indictments—and there will be great times at the trials.

Under the President's court bill, even some of the new Northern judges may be assigned to try such cases.

Suppose that somebody introduced a bill up there to indict the sheriffs, the constables, the governor and district attorneys who have failed to put down the mobs in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, New York, California, where thousands, innumerable times, have gathered and broken many laws; have defied the police and the courts and all constituted authority; have denied the right to others not affiliated with them to work; have stoned and beaten non-affiliated employes; have stopped business; have taken possession of plants and places of business; have stopped transportation and business. Why not such a Federal law? These things take place, have taken place, will continue to take plaace, and "conciliation" and "arbitration" and "conference" are the resort by the states where these things have occurred. Let the Federal government take charge of it. More than 70,000 are going out now—and they know what it means.

Then, again, why not introduce a bill to give the Federal government authority to indict all those scoundrels who have kidnaped, abused and killed poor little children, grown men, women? Gangs of the large "cultivated" and "literate" cities who have taken men for rides and crossed state boundaries? And why not have the government take charge of the unconscionable and criminal rackets in the large cities?

We do not condone lynching at all, and wish that all citizens of this and other states would abide by the law—resort to it for punishment of crimes. But we have to bear with it—the people of the East and West do not. But nevertheless the people of New York, by their Congressman's bill, would administer our police laws. They always are telling us what to do in the South. We are always wrong, deficient, omissive and commissive in some way—we always measure short when their yardstick is laid to us mentally, physically, sentimentally, economically, educationally, artistically, productively, and otherwise.

We ask them to clean their own stables. We know very well whence comes the motive of these bills and anti-lynch bills. We are not one whit deceived.

At San Pedro, California, last week, a policeman shot a longshoreman. There was a mass meeting of 4000 marine workers who "took over" San Pedro for the day in protest, and defied the police. They paralyzed the lawful control of the city. Work on the waterfront was halted and business places closed. Yet we are unlawful in the South!

And so, we ask that we give them a Roland for their Oliver. We want some Federal bills giving the government power to straighten out some conditions in other places if we are to have a Federal anti-lynch law. And we would like to read some of our Southern Congressmen telling them that. What happened in California until Southern Representatives helped the Western Congressmen pass the anti-alien law? Plenty of assaults upon Orientals! But their Congressmen now recall the help we gave them. Introduce a bill to repeal the Chinese and Asiatic exclusion laws and watch them squirm!

That absurd anti-lynching bill is pending in the Senate. It will die on calendar.

George P. Money's editorial will appear in the Congressional Record, which isn't a very interesting publication but more people read it than were assembled to hear Congressman-Chairman Sumners' diatribe in Jackson on the general subject of lynching.

The best explanation of passage in the lower house of Congress of that Federal anti-lynching bill is that members of the body stumbled into the chamber one day and felt that they were in duty bound to pass a bill of some sort that might make constituents believe they were doing something.

Concluding the subject:

Pass out some pity to the secretaries, clerks, and stenographers in the office of Congressman Sumners. They have so many angry letters to answer, most of them from the constituency of Congressman Sumners.

Committee in Every County Women's Aim

Efforts Planned to Expand Southern Drive Against Lynching.

Efforts will be made during the ensuing year by the Florida Council, Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, to establish executive committees in each of the 67 county seats in the State, according to a decision arrived at here yesterday, prior to the adjournment of a two-day convention of that organization in the St. John's Episcopal Community House.

Such was the program arrived at by a committee headed by Mrs. C. M. White and Mrs. H. Willis McFadden, and submitted to the executive session of the Florida council, which heard as its principal speaker during the day William A. Hallowes III, State attorney-elect of the Fourth Judicial Circuit. Mr. Hallowes spoke on the "Law of Florida and the Control of Lynching."

The committees which the Florida council, Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, will try to organize, will seek to associate with them one or more outstanding men of the community, "who will agree to aid in securing the support of the men of the county in time of need."

The executive session opened yesterday morning with prayer by Mrs. E. L. Vordermark, followed by a brief statement of the association's accomplishments and the situation with regard to the lynching record of 1936 and the five months of the current year by Mrs. William P. Cornell, chairman.

Objectives Discussed.

Discussions on the objectives of the Florida council were led by Mrs. M. A. Salvo, Mrs. I. L. Kaplan, Mrs. O. O. McCollum, Mrs Edward P. Pfaff.

Mrs. Salvo and Mrs. Pfaff submitted a young people's program which was adopted, requesting that program chairman of Summer conferences submit the association's objectives and request signatures; that business girls' clubs of the Y. W. C. A. be asked to devote one meeting to the work of the lynching body; and that co-operation of study classes in religious groups be sought.

A recommendation on a college extension program, submitted by Mrs. Kaplan and Mrs. T. Frederick Davis, which also was adopted, read in part as follows:

"We recommend that great effort be made to reach the college men and women of the State as a fertile soil for education against lynching. We suggest that the presidents of the various colleges in the State of Florida be urged to incorporate this study as a part of the courses in psychology and sociology."

Upon the recommendation of Mrs. McCollum, Mrs. Vordermark and Mrs. Woodley, the Florida council voted to secure endorsements from:

The Synodical of the Presbyterian Church, the women of the Roman Catholic, Lutheran and Congregational Churches, the Tri-State and local Temple Sisterhoods, the Business and Professional Woman's Club, the United Daughters of the Confederacy and the Daughters of the American Revolution, the American Legion Auxiliary, the Home Demonstration Agents, young people's groups and others.

Recommendations Approved.

The committee on new signatures, which was composed of Mrs. Pfaff, Mrs. Henry W. Haven and Miss Ray Halle, submitted the following recommendations, which were approved:

"That we seek to secure signatures in each of the 67 counties of the State of Florida during 1937-1938. (15 counties at present are not contacted.)

"That we make a special effort to promote a sub-membership of young people for the signature roll of the Florida council, having as our aim 500 names.

"That our total goal for new signatures for 1937-1938 be set at 2000."

Closing resolutions were adopted offering the appreciation of the council to Dr. P. M. Boyd and the board of the First Methodist Church for their hospitality in housing Tuesday night's meeting and play of the association; to Director H. Alfred Farrel and members of the negro cast of "Lawd Does Yo' Undahstan'," as well as to Arthur Platt, Daniel Morris and Alan Hovey for participating in the production of the play; to the Rev. Newton Middleton and the vestry of St. John's Church for use of the Community House, to Mr. Hallowes, and to Miss Margaret G. Weed, directress of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's Church, and her committee for the luncheon.

Approximately 25 women were in attendance.

"I think that you will all agree with me that all Americans are proud of their democratic form of government. They are proud of the deeds of their forefathers, and they realize perhaps that some of their forefathers gave up all that was dear to them. They are proud of the right of law and order, and they like to feel a part in preserving law and order," said Mr. Hallowes during his address.

"In the Bill of Rights of the Constitution, it is found that no man shall be deprived of his life without due process of law, that the right of a trial by jury shall be secured by law and made violate.

"No man can be law, jury and court himself. No man's life should be taken summarily without a fair and impartial trial before a court—the right to be heard before he is condemned."

"We do not have any statute or crime known as lynching," he stated. "Lynching is murder in the first degree.

"Principals and accessories, anyone who is in the assembly, which is bent on taking a man's life unlawfully, the man who fires the shot or pulls the rope is the principal in the first degree. If he hires, abets, counsels the principals, he is guilty of the first degree, as the guilt is the same as the one who actually accomplishes the crime. No plea of self-defense, no extenuating circumstances, no plea of insanity shall avail. With malice aforethought and malicious intention, you have a clear case of murder in the first degree."

The speaker defined an accessory before and after the fact, and spoke of his equal guilt in the eyes of the law. "One of the big factors in the prevention of crime," said Mr. Hallowes, "is the conviction of those who commit crimes, so as to set an example to others. If two or three received capital punishment, it would go a long ways to deter others, but it is very rarely or ever that conviction can be gotten in such cases.

"If you are faced with a lynching that appears to be imminent, advise your sheriff He has more power as an individual than any officer in the county. He takes an oath to perform the duties of his office faithfully and well. It is his duty to suppress all riots, or if necessary he may raise a militia of the county.

"With the wheels of justice acting quickly, and the authorities using caution, diplomacy and tact in handling, and if the prosecuting attorneys and judges will give the suspected person a fair trial, confidence will be maintained in the supremacy of the law."

ANTI-LYNCHING GROUP TO MEET

Georgia Program to Be Studied as National Body of Women Gathers in Atlanta

ATLANTA, Jan. 11 (AP)—The Georgia program of the association of southern women for the prevention of lynching is expected to be given special consideration at the convention of the organization here Wednesday and Thursday.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, executive director of the association, said Georgia would be given special consideration because "Georgia had six of the nine lynchings in the United States last year."

The opening day of the convention will be devoted to business with principal discussion expected to center around whether a lynching can be considered as such when the body of the suspected victim is never discovered.

Mrs. Ames will report progress of the association's work during the past year, and further plans for the anti-lynching campaign will be formulated.

The dramatic department of Payne College, Augusta, Ga., and the community playhouse, of Nashville, Tenn., will present two one-act plays dealing with lynching Wednesday night.

Dr. S. M. Bristol, of the University of Florida, and Dr. Arthur Raper, of Agnes Scott college, Decatur, Ga., will be the principal speakers at a luncheon Thursday.

Dr. Bristol will discuss Changing Social Attitude, while Dr. Raper will speak on Methods of Perpetuating Racial Attitude.

Anti-Lynchers End Session Today

The Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching continues its sixth annual conference in Atlanta today, according to Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, executive director of the Association, which has its headquarters here. More than thirty representative women are present from all parts of the South, including state chairmen from each of thirteen Southern states who are reporting on the activities of the several state councils.

Presiding over the conference is the director of the Association, Mrs. Ames, of Atlanta. Other speakers and leaders are Mrs. Arch Trawick, of Nashville, representing the National Council of Women; Mrs. R. H. Agate, of Lafayette, La., president of the Louisiana Federation of Women's Clubs; Dr. L. M. Bristol, of the University of Florida; Dr. Arthur Raper, of Agnes Scott College; Mrs. W. A. Newell, of Salisbury, N. C., secretary of Christian Social Relations of the Methodist Womans' Missionary Council.

The Association was organized in Atlanta in 1930 and now has a constituency of 35,000 Southern women, each of whom has personally signed a repudiation of lynching for any cause whatever and a pledge to do everything possible to put an end to it.

ANTI-LYNCH GROUP HITS PUBLIC DEATH

Association Opposes Execution of Criminals in View of All Comers.

The Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching went on record yesterday in opposition to public executions.

Members said a resolution they indorsed was aimed principally at a Kentucky law which provides public execution of persons sentenced to death for criminal assault, and statutes which make possible public hangings in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, director, told the association at its convention here more than 6,000 members were added in the past year, bringing the total membership to 35,000.

She said 77 organizations, representing a membership of 4,000,000, were co-operating in its program against lynching.

TWO PLAYS OFFERED BY ANTI-LYNCH GROUP

Two prize-winning plays, "Country Sunday" and "Lawd, Does Yo' Undahstan?" will be presented at 7:45 o'clock tonight at the Peachtree Christian church. The productions will be presented under the auspices of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

The public has been invited to attend and there will be no charge for admission, it was announced.

Women of South Are Tired of 'Chivalry' As Excuse for Lynching, Says Mrs. Ames

By the Associated Press.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames yesterday said white women of the south are rapidly forming opposition to "the use of their skirts as blinds for negro lynchings."

She said substantiation of her statement was gathered here last week at the first biennial session of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. Mrs. Ames is director of the association.

"Economic creed is the cause of more lynchings than the protection of white women's honor," Mrs. Ames declared.

She said 35,000 women in 13 southern states have signed pledges to fight lynching.

"For years crimes have been committed in the south in the name of women without cause," Mrs. Ames said. "White women of the south now are realizing this is a travesty on justice and a slur on their honor."

She said the days when "southern chivalry" can be used as the legal excuse for "summarily putting to death a negro that some person or group does not like" are numbered.

Representatives of women's organizations from the southern states mapped a vigorous campaign to prevent lynching in the south this year.

Their method is to expose the facts. "The hush-hush system is outmoded," said Mrs. Ames. "We are letting white women know the truth about so-called attacks by negroes, since most of them are fictional."

The association does not favor anti-lynching legislation, Mrs. Ames said, because the organization is non-political. The association seeks merely to destroy "the fiction about the necessity for lynching."

Mrs. Ames came to Georgia seven years ago from her native Texas. She began the Association for the Prevention of Lynching the following year.

Small of stature, with greyish hair, she is a widow and the mother of three children.

She says her inspiration to fight the "hysterical ignorance" connected with lynching sprang from an incident of childhood.

"There was a notorious lynching case in east Texas," she said, "about which the cook and the yard man were talking. I overheard that the man was burned to death with hot irons, but when I asked for more details I was hushed. For years I imagined a man laid out on an ironing board and slowly pressed."

ANTI-LYNCHING GROUP TO MEET

Thirty representatives from 13 Southern States will attend the sixth annual conference of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, convening Wednesday and Thursday at the Piedmont Hotel.

Mrs. Attwood Martin, well-known author of Louisville, Ky., and chairman of the association, will preside at the conference.

Speakers and leaders to be present include Mrs. Arch Trawick, of Nashville, representing the National Council of Women; Mrs. R. H. Agate, of Lafayette, La., president of the Louisiana Federation of Women's Clubs; Dr. L. M. Bristol, of the University of Florida; Dr. Arthur Raper, of Agnes Scott College; Mrs. Geline McDonald Bowman, of Richmond, past national president of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

Mrs. W. A. Newell, of Salisbury, N. C., secretary of Christian Social Relations of the Methodist Woman's Missionary Council; Mrs. H. J. MacMillan, of Wilmington, N. C., president of the Episcopal Woman's Auxiliary of the Fourth Province, and Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, executive director of the association.

The Association for the Prevention of Lynching was organized in Atlanta in 1930. The body now includes a constitutency of 35,000 women, who have personally pledged to repudiate all lynchings.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 14. (U.P.)—Southern women today pointed to the federal government's program of rural resettlement as a means to end the crime of lynching, described as the "disgrace of the South."

Meeting in biennial convention here, leaders of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, declared the stamping out of farm tenancy and sharecropping would go far to remove the underlying cause of mob rule.

"Lynching has been the method by which white people have maintained what they considered control over the Negro," Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, executive director of the association, told the United Press.

"This mob rule largely has been exercised by the poorer classes—especially tenants and sharecroppers—who have had no other means to show their superiority. With more even distribution of land and greater land ownership among these poorer classes, the need for lynchings will largely disappear."

Lynch law has caused the death of 92 persons in the United States in the past six years—all but a dozen occurred in the South. The peak year was 1933, when 28 persons were taken from officers and slain by mobs.

Last year the number dropped to nine—six in Georgia and one each in Mississippi, Arkansas and Florida.

ATLANTA, Jan. 14.—(AP)— The Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching went on record today in opposition to public executions.

Members said a resolution they endorsed was aimed principally at a Kentucky law which provides public execution of persons entenced to death for criminal assault, and statutes which make possible public hangings in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, director, told the association at its convention here more than 6,000 members were added in the past ... bringing the total membership to 35,000.

MEANS TO END CRIME

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 15.—(U.P.)—Southern women today pointed to the federal government's program of rural resettlement as a means to end the crime of lynching, described as the "disgrace of the South."

Another Task for Civilization.

The president of Tuskegee Institute attributes a decline of 90 per cent in the number of lynchings in the United States over the last half century to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people." It is conceded that the work of alert sheriffs and other officers of the law has been a factor in the gradual approach to a more civilized order. Through the operation of these combined forces, then, it may be hoped that the activities of certain primitive religious sects in conducting "prayer floggings" of people who are disapproved in communities of Eastern North Carolina will be halted in less than another half century.

STATE LAWS TO CURB LYNCHING ADVOCATED

Mississippi Women To Sponsor Legislation

OUSTER STATUE URGED

Executive Branch Would Be Given Power To Remove Officials of County Where Mob Violence Occurs

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson Mississippi Bureau

BY KENNETH TOLER

JACKSON, Miss., May 28.—Sponsorship of a bill giving state officialsa uthority to remove county authorities who fail to suppress mob violence and lynchings was announced today by the Mississippi division, Society of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

Decision to urge enactment of this type of legislation followed last night's meeting at which Representative Hatton W. Sumners of Texas, chairman of the House judiciary committee, said unless states assume this responsibility, "the federal government is going to step in and take a hand, whether we wish it or not."

Authority Circumscribed

The state group of women, headed by Mrs. L. W. Alford, of McComb, opposes lynching, but is not on record as favoring federal legislation to curb this sort of lawlessness.

Under existing laws in Mississippi, the governor and other law enforcement officers are without authority to take any action other than to urge county officials to apprehend mobsters and bring them to trial. In all lynchings, officials state failure to identify members of such groups and no action follows. Representative Sumners suggested that Mississippians study the Virginia anti-lynching statute as a guide.

Plan Recommendations

Representative Sumners favors state suppression of lynching rather than federal intervention, which he said would result in states losing their sovereignty.

The most effective remedy prescribed by the House chairman as a curb to mob violence is state legislation permitting the central state government, possibly the gover, to remove officers who permit lynchings to occur.

"We plan to study the various laws and recommend to our Legislature in January some measure to curb lynching," Mrs. Alford said.

Bishop Makes Talk

Bishop Theodor DuBose Brataton, of the Mississippi Episcopal diocese and president of Sewanee, told the meeting that 't'he white race is literally on trial on the question of lynching."

"Mob violence is the destruction and lynching of law itself," he said.

The Episcopal bishop warned that "no nation can survive whose people contravene with their own laws."

"The only way to minister to people is through people," Bishop Bratton said in urging a Christianlike attitude toward members of the negro race. He called an opening of the door of "sympathetic understanding.

"When dealing with any race we are dealing with God's life itself," Bishop Bratton said.

Anti-Lynching Aims Told By Mrs. Cornell

Chairman of Florida Unit Makes Talk at Women's Opening Session.

Figures reported last night by Mrs. William P. Cornell, chairman Florida Council, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, revealed that 37,267 men and women have signed the association pledge against lynching. She was speaking at the opening session of the Florida Council's convention in the First Methodist Church.

In addition to Mrs. Cornell's talk last night on the subject "Southern Women Look at Lynching," the one-act play "Lord Does Yo' Undahstan'?" by Ann Seymour was staged for the delegates who will reconvene for their executive session at 10 o'clock this morning in St. John's Community House.

The following program has been announced for today's meeting:

Prayer, Mrs. Ernest L. Vordermark; statement, Mrs. Cornell; round table discussion on objectives; "The Importance of Reaching the Young People of the State," by Mrs. M. M. Salvo, "A College Program," Mrs. Israel L. Kaplan; "Securing Endorsements from Co-operating State-wide and Local Groups," Mrs. O. O. McCollum; "1,000 New Signatures to the Declaration in 1937," Mrs. Edward P. Pfaff; "Committees in 69 County Seats," Mrs. Cornell; "The Law and the Control of Lynching," William A. Hallowes III, State's attorney-elect, Fourth Judicial Circuit; 1 P. M. luncheon; 2 P. M. adjournment.

Mrs. Cornell introduced her talk last night with a short history of the founding of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, leading up to a recitation of the following declaration which is the platform of the association:

"We declare lynching is an indefensible crime, destructive of all principles of government, hateful and hostile to every ideal of religion and humanity, debasing and degrading to every person involved. Though lynchings are not confined to any one section of the United States, we are aroused by the record which discloses our heavy responsibility for the presence of this crime in our country. We believe that this record has been achieved because public opinion has accepted too easily the claim of lynchers and mobsters that they were acting solely in the defense of womanhood. In the light of facts, this claim can no longer be used as a protection to those who lynch. We pledge ourselves to create a new public opinion in the South which will not condone for any reason whatever acts of mobs or lynchers."

Speaking of the work of the organization since its inception in 1930, when lynchings had reached a new high level, Mrs. Cornell said:

"Local conditions and attitudes have been studied; the co-operation of the press has been sought and in many cases generously given. Governors and other State officials have been interviewed, as have sheriffs and local peace officers; in each case the local constituencies being used to make the necessary contacts thereby proving beyond doubt the interest, the convictions and the support of the home constituencies in this and other law observances.

"In this year of our Lord, 1937, the Association reports 37,267 men and women who are signers of the association's pledge: Eighty-one state, sectional and national groups with an estimated membership of more than four million women have endorsed the aims of the (Southern) association and are extending its program."

"Lynching challenges Christianity," she said in conclusion, "at home and hinders and discredits Christian missionary enterprise throughout the world. They occur nowhere but in the United States of America, not even among the savages we seek to Christianize.

"God help each one of us to do his bit through influence and service to cleanse this black spot from our beloved homeland."

'Use of Skirts as Blind' In Killings Hit by Women

Southern Chivalry' of That Type No Longer Wanted, Anti-Lynch Head Says

ATLANTA, Jan. 16 (AP)—Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames said today white women of the South are rapidly forming opposition to "use of their skirts as blinds for Negro lynchings."

She said substantiation of her statement was gathered here this week at the first biennial session of the Association of Southern Women for the prevention of lynching. Mrs. Ames is director of the association.

"Economic creed is the cause of more lynchings than the protection of white women's honor," Mrs. Ames declared.

She said 35,000 women in 13 southern states have signed pledges to fight lynching.

"For years crimes have been committed in the South in the name of women without cause," Mrs. Ames said. "White women of the South now are realizing this is a travesty on justice and a slur on their honor."

She said the days when "Southern chivalry" can be used as the legal excuse for "summarily putting to death a Negro that some person or group does not like" are numbered.

Map Vigorous Campaign

Representatives of women's organizations from the Southern states mapped a vigorous campaign to prevent lynching in the South this year.

Their method is to expose the facts.

"The hush-hush system is outmoded," said Mrs. Ames. "We are letting white women know the truth about so-called attacks by Negroes, since most of them are fictional."

The association does not favor anti-lynching legislation, Mrs. Ames said, because the organization is non-political. The ssociation seeks merely to destroy "the fiction about the necessity for lynching."

Mrs. Ames came to Georgia seven years ago from her native Texas. She began the association for the prevention of lynching the following year.

Small of stature with greyish hair, she is a widow and the mother of three children.

She says her inspiration to fight the "mystical ignorance" connected with lynching sprang from an incident of childhood.

See Program as Ending Lynching

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 14. (U.P.)—Southern women today pointed to the federal government's program of rural resettlement as a means to end the crime of lynching, described as the "disgrace of the south."

Number Drops

Last year the number dropped to nine—six in Georgia and one each in Mississippi, Arkansas and Florida.

Mrs. Ames attributed the large number in 1933 to the effect in the south of the NRA.

"The NRA, in spite of its high motives, increased antagonisms of the employers, as well as the poorer classes, because of the higher wages which they were forced to pay negroes," she said. "The RA and its work will have just the opposite effect."

The association organized in 1930, outlined a four-point program for the next two years. It includes holding of institutes in various southern cities, propaganda to be fostered in one-act plays in colleges and little theaters, efforts to secure cooperation of sheriffs and other officers, and a campaign among youth.

"In many cases, officers have surrendered victims of lynchings to mobs which they could have avoided by greater precautions and transfers of prisoners to other jails," Mrs. Ames said. "We are carrying on a campaign now to secure active cooperation of officers for greater efforts to avoid mobs."

The director said the association would continue efforts to pass a federal law against lynchings, although the primary fight must be made to change the southern white man's attitude by appeal to reason rather than by law.

Only 2 Lynchless Years In History Of Mississippi

The only recorded "lynchless" years in Mississippi were 1932 and 1936, according to a statement just released by Mrs. L. W. Alford, chairman of the Mississippi Council of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching. Mrs. Alford says:

"Lynching, like slavery, will be relegated to the past. The Association for the prevention of Lynching grew out of the recognition by church women of the need for a continuous educational program against lynching.

"The Mississippi Council has carried its message into ten of our outstanding state colleges and universities in the past year. More than half of the sheriffs of the state have endorsed the program and are actively co-operating to the end that mob violence may be eliminated and lynching eradicated.

Every state in the South has an active council and the Association has grown from 12 women and no organization committed to a specific program of activity in November 1930, to 32,331 women and hundreds of men, including officials, ministers, teachers, and 58 National and state organizations in 1936.

"The Association believes a continuous program of education against lynching carried on day by day in the home, in the school, in the press and in the church will end lynching by public demand."

STOP MOBS, ELSE UNCLE SAM WILL

Congress Member Tells Mississippi Woman, Considering Lynchers

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., May 28.—Mississippians pondered today a stern warning from Rep. Hatton W. Sumners, Democrat, Texas, that unless southern states suppress lynching "the federal government is going to step in and take a hand, whether we wish it or not."

The Texas representative chairmans the House judiciary committee and fought the Gavagan anti-lynching measure before it passed the House. The bill is pending in the Senate.

Addressing a lightly attended state-wide meeting of the Mississippi Council of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, Representative Sumners said:

"If we are so incapable of governing that we must, by community action, turn our negro criminals over to the mob to punish rather than by orderly process of law, then how can we expect to be sovereign?

Plenty Agitation

"There was never more agitation for federal intervention in preventing lynchings," he said. "At the present session of Congress, there were 59 or 60 anti-lynching bills introduced.

"It's time southern states took some action. I don't want the federal government to enter this field because our government is not from Washington down, but from the people up, but we of the South are not going to retain our power unless we use it.

"In this time when the federal government is doing everything, and looking for more things to do, when even we want to build a pig pen we have to go off and get some government fellow to inspect it and look at it, and maybe pay for it—in a time like this, the people must demonstrate their ability to govern themselves."

Study Virginia Law

Sumners suggested Mississippians study Virginia's anti-lynching law in view of enacting similar legislation.

The council meeting was called by Mrs. L. W. Alford of McComb, state chairman, who explained that the Society for the Prevention of Lynching was organized in Atlanta seven years ago by a dozen southern women.

She said its aim is to "seek through education in the schools, churches and homes to eradicate lynchings as a social monstrosity that will not be tolerated in civilized society."

Anti-Lynching Council Plans Two Sessions

Association of Southern Women to Hold Open Meeting Tonight.

Meetings will be held tonight and tomorrow by the Florida Council of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. William P. Cornell, council chairman.

An open meeting will be held at 8 o'clock tonight in the First Methdist Church, and an executive meeting of the council will be held in the Community House of St. John's Episcopal Church at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

A prize play, "Lord, Does Yo' Undahstan?," will be presented by the dramatic department of Edward Waters College, as a feature of the meeting tonight. The one-act play, it was said, portrays a phase of the lynching problem.

Mrs. Cornell will make a talk on the aims and activities of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching at the open meeting. Anyone interested in the work of the association is invited to attend the meeting.

The executive session tomorrow morning will be devoted to a statement of the work of the association and to a round table discussion of the objectives to be adopted in Florida during 1937, it was stated. Those who will attend the executive meeting are Mrs. Cornell, Mrs. Ernest L. Vordermark, Mrs. M. M. Salvo, Mrs. Israel L. Kaplan, Mrs. O. O. McCullum and Mrs. Edward P. Pfaff.

William A. Hallowes III, State's attorney-elect of the Fourth Judicial Circuit, is scheduled to speak on "The Law and Control of Lynching," at the noon luncheon of the council.

Public "Hangings Rapped By Women in Parley Here

Public hangings and "circus showings" of capital punishment were condemned by the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, convening Wednesday in Atlanta.

Association members, including outstanding women from Southern States, said the resolution they adopted was directed principally at a Kentucky statute which provides public hangings for persons guilty of criminal attack and Mississippi and Louisiana laws which prescribe public executions for violations of specific laws.

Reporting 6,000 new members have been enrolled in 1936, Mrs. Jesse Daniel Ames, association director, said 77 organizations with a membership totaling more than four million were co-operating in the group's program against lynching.

ATLANTA, Jan. 16.—(AP)—Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames said today white women of the South are rapidly forming opposition to "the use of their skirts as blinds for Negro lynchings."

She said substantiation of her statement was gathered here this week at the first biennial session of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. Mrs. Ames is director of the association.

"Economic greed is the cause of more lynchings than the protection of white women's honor," Mrs. Ames declared.

She said 35,000 women in 13 southern states have signed pledges to fight lynching.

"For years crimes have been committed in the South in the name of

...(without cause," Mrs. Ames said. "White women of the South are realizing this is a travesty on justice and a slur on their honor."

She said the days when "southern chivalry" can be used as the legal excuse for "summarily putting to death a Negro that some person or group does not like" are numbered.

Representatives of women's organizations from the southern states mapped a vigorous campaign to prevent lynching in the South this year.

Their method is to expose the facts.

"The hush-hush system is outmoded," said Mrs. Ames. "We are letting white women know the truth about so-called attacks by Negroes, since most of them are fictional."

The association does not favor anti-lynching legislation, Mrs. Ames said, because the organization is non-political. The association seeks merely to destroy "the fiction about the necessity for lynching."

Mrs. Ames came to Georgia seven years ago from her native Texas. She began the association for the prevention of lynching the following year.

Small of stature with greyish hair, she is a widow and the mother of three children.

She says her inspiration to fight the "hysterical ignorance" connected with lynching sprang from an incident of childhood.

"There was a notorious lynching case in east Texas," she said, "about which the cook and the yard man were talking. I overheard that the man was burned to death with hot irons, but when I asked for more details I was hushed. For years I imagined a man laid out on an ironing board and slowly pressed."

Greed Called Cause Of Most Lynchings In Southern States

ANTI-LYNCHING SOCIETY TO MEET

The Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching will hold a one-day meeting at the University of Southern Carolina January 16.

The meeting is being sponsored by the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., and the University's Department of Sociology. The association has 32,331 members in 58 chapters. The organization's chief contention is that lynchings are not necessary for the protection of southern womanhood.

During the past year an excellent record in regard to the prevention of lynching was established. An editorial in the Vicksburg Post has this to say on the subject:

"One of the excellent records hung up in the year 1936 is the fact that the lynching evil declined substantially. The year saw nine lynchings—and while it may be remarked that that was just nine too many, it should be noticed that it was 11 fewer than 1935's total.

"Furthermore, there were 35 cases in which courageous officers of the law prevented attempted lynchings, and 30 of these cases were recorded in the deep south. Altogether, 69 people—all but seven of them colored—were saved from violence at the hands of mobs.

"It is cause for congratulation, that record. And it emphasizes a fact which northern critics too often overlook—that the average southern official, supported by the sentiment of his own locality, is aware of his duty and brave enough to carry it out."

ANTI-LYNCH GROUP HEARS SOCIOLOGIST

South Can Work Out Race Relations Problem, Says Floridan.

Dr. L. M. Bristol, head of the department of sociology at the University of Florida, told the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching here yesterday: "The south is capable of working out its own salvation with reference to race relations."

Commenting on "a strong federal anti-lynching law" he said was proposed by the National Conference on Problems of the Negro and Negro Youth in Washington, Dr. Bristol said:

"I am not in favor of such a law unless approved by such organizations as this (the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching) which are representative of the best thought in the south."

A resolution expressing opposition to public executions was approved by the association Wednesday.

FLORIDA GOVERNOR PUTS OKEY ON LYNCHING

Governor Cone, in New York Interview, Also Admits Florida Helpless to Curb Mobs and Welcomes Federal Action

10-22-37 New York, N.Y.

New York, Oct. 22.- In an amazing statement here October 21, Governor Fred P. Cone, of Florida put his personal approval upon lynching.

A delegation of representatives of liberal and church organizations went to the Waldorf Astoria to question Governor Cone about the failure of Florida to prosecute the six Tampa policemen who flogged Joseph Shoemaker to death in December, 1935.

Governor Cone astounded his visitors by saying:

"Anybody comes down to Florida and tries to overthrow the Government of the United States, they ought to be rode out of Florida on a rail.

"I'm in favor of the laborin' man. I've always been a friend of the workin' man. But if anybody comes down there and tries to upset the Government, they ought to be rode on a rail. They ought to be hung to the nearest lamp post.

"David Clendennin, of the Workers' Defense League, looked at Governor Cone in amazement.

"Mr. Governor, you as an executive of the State of Florida approve of people taking the law into their own hands?" he asked.

"Any people like that ought to be hung to the nearest lamp post," the Governor repeated.

"Would you take part in such a thing," Mr. Clendennin asked.

"Anybody came down to my house and I didn't want 'em, I wouldn't go to the law," said the Governor. "I'd take the law into my own hands."

After explaining that Florida had done everything it could do in the Shoemaker case, Governor Cone, in answer to an inquiry, said he would welcome federal agents into Florida to look into the case.

When informed of Governor Cone's statement, the N.A.A.C.P. pounced upon it as proving the necessity for a federal anti-lynching bill, since Governor Cone in one breath had admitted both that the state was unable to do anything about lynching and that he would welcome federal action.

There have been three lynchings in Florida in 1937 and two of them occurred four blocks from the state capitol where Governor Cone has his office.

Nothing whatsoever has been done by the state or local authorities to apprehend and punish the lynchers.

In addition to the Shoemaker case in 1935 and the three lynchings of 1937, the police of Miami, Fla., last July shot and killed Stafford Dames, Jr., on the porch of his mother's home, without excuse. The city of Miami has refused to anything about the Dames killing and a coroner's jury held that the boy had been killed by the police "in the performance of duty". Young Dames was at the altar boy in a church and the police claim they saw him trying to break into the church.

Because the father of the slain boy has employed counsel to take the case to court and has enlisted the aid of the N.A.A.C.P. and the American Civil Liberties Union, the police have been hounding Mr. Dames and trying to get him discharged as Miami manager for Afro-American Life Insurance company.

In a statement following the interview with Governor Cone here, Walter White, N.A.A.C.P. secretary, said:

"The record of certain states in failure to punish lynchings has been great enough before now and those of us studying the lynching problem have always known that lynchings have been permitted by the minor officials of some states and counties. We know, also, that some governors and attorneys general of states could have acted if they had chosen to do so, for N.A.A.C.P. records show that in a number of cases, we have furnished the names of lynchers to attorneys general and governors and nothing has happened.

"However, this is the first time that a governor, even of a southern state, within the last ten or fifteen years, has openly approved lynching. The late Governor Rolph of California in 1933 promissd to pardon lynchers, but Gov. Cone has advocated hanging by mobs. In the old days before lynching had been so widely condemned, Governor Cole Blease of South Carolina, approved lynching and Governor Theodore Bilbo, now Senator Bilbo, of Mississippi approved lynching. In recent years, no governor has made a statement as bold and vicious as that of Governor Cone's.

"This statement by the governor of a state demonstrates conclusively that if lynching is to be checked, we must have a federal anti-lynching law so that the government of the United States can safeguard the lives and constitutional rights of citizens in the states."

Governor Has No Report On 'Duck Hill' Lynchings

Promise of Investigation Six Months Ago by Gov. White Not Kept Because 'Officials Have Not Sent Him Report' of the Crime.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14—A report on the double blow torch lynching which occurred April 13 at Duck Hill, Miss. has not been received as yet by Governor Hugh White of Mississippi, the N. A. A. C. P. was advised last week.

Two colored men were lynched at Duck Hill April 13 on suspicion that they had murdered a white grocery store owner. Before being killed both men were tied to trees, stripped and their flesh seared with blow torch flames. The double lynching occurred on the very afternoon that Governor White was speaking to a farm conference meeting in another part of the state and boasting to an audience that Mississippi had been free from lynching for many months. It was such a shocking and barbaric exhibition that Governor White immediately issued orders for a complete investigation.

Since that order was issued nothing has been heard from the lynching and on September 30 Walter White, secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., wrote Governor White inquiring whether or not a report had been received. Buck Hancock, private secretary to Governor White wrote the N. A. A. C. P.: "Governor White directs me to advise you that he has not yet received any official report from the officials of Duck Hill concerning the affair of last April."

TENNESSEE SORRY ABOUT COVINGTON'S 'CRIME'

COVINGTON, Tenn., Oct. 14 — (Special) — Concluding its investigation of the first lynching in Tipton county since the Civil War, that of Albert Gooden, 35-year-old, which occurred on the night of August 16, the grand jury reported to Judge R. B. Baptist "with sincere regret" that it had been unable to establish the identity of any of the six masked men who took Gooden from the custody of Sheriff W. J. Vaughan and after hanging him from a creek bridge, riddled his body with bullets.

In its report to Judge Baptist, the grand jury said: "We are convinced from the proof that it is the most atrocious crime that has ever been committed in our county and a blot upon a history of which we have been justly proud, and it is with sincere regret that we are compelled to report to the court that we have been unable to establish the identity of any of those engaged in the commission of this crime."

Gooden, charged with the fatal shooting of Night Marshal Chester Doyle, of Mason, in a raid on a crap game, was being brought here from Memphis for arraignment when he was taken from the sheriff, who had the prisoner with him in his car, by a band of six masked men in another car which the sheriff said crowded his machine to the roadside, forcing him to stop. The men, he said, compelled him at the points of guns to surrender Gooden, who put up a fight, but was thrown in the other automobile and driven away.

The next morning Gooden's body was found beneath a highway bridge near here, lying half in, half out, of the muddy waters of a creek. His manacled wrists and ankles had been tightly bound and a piece of plow-line was knotted about his neck. Scores of bullet wounds marked his body. Investigators reached the conclusion the lynchers had first hanged him to the bridge and then opened fire. A bullet or bullets from one or more of the weapons eventually severing the plow-line, a frayed section of which was found tied about one of the bridge beams.

Sen. Bailey Blames War For Mob Law

North Carolinian Says North and South Conflict Started Lynch Wave

Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, blamed the Civil War for lynchings in the South during a statement on the floor of the Senate Monday while the upper house of Congress was discussing an anti-lynching amendment to a freight car bill.

Senator Bailey in defending his and other southern Senators' opposition to the measure said:

"We have taken the view about this lynching bill that in the first place it would tend to arrest the progress in suppressing the crime of lynching. We think a very great deal of progress has been made. Forty years ago there were perhaps four or five hundred lynchings a year in the South. That was very distressing very disgraceful; but we have reduced that number, my fellow Senators, to about eight or nine a year. I bring that fact to your attention by way of showing that we have acted in good faith about the matter, and made great progress.

Blames War

"How did all this lynching business begin? Nobody thought of lynching Negroes prior to the Civil War. You never heard of a lynching in the South prior to 1861. You did not hear of any lynchings in the South of Negroes or of anybody else during the Civil War. It may have been difficult for us to maintain order down there under the circumstances, but we maintained order. There were no lynchings in the war period. How did this matter of lynching come? I will tell you it came, and I think it ought to be made a record of history.

"When the Federal forces struck down the institutions of law and order in the South, and sent the carpetbaggers and the scalawags down there to take charge of our society, and protect them with the bayonets of Federal soldiers after the surrender, the white people of the South had to take the law in their hands. I am sorry it was so. It was a distressful period; but those misguided men—I will speak in that way about them; I will not say anything bad, but will just say that they were misguided men—took charge of our civilization, struck down the accepted and ancient standards of law and order and fired the Negro's mind with all sorts of unworthy ambitions.

Policed South

"They told him that he was to take charge of the white man's land. He was to have 40 acres and a mule. They told him that he was to take charge of the Government. He was to be the policeman, he was to be the postmaster; and Negroes did get to be policemen and postmasters. They told him that he was to rule his former masters.

"I do not blame the Negro about that. Poor fellow! He was an ex-slave. He was ignorant. He had the spark of humanity in him. He was ambitious. I would not quarrel with him. He was misled by people who said they had been his friends, and they had been party to the great war which had brought him his freedom. They talked to him in the name of the great Lincoln, the Emancipator, and they even got into his mind the idea that he could marry with the white people. The sense of law and order which had existed in the slave was dissipated by the agitator and the scoundrel.

Lynching Resulted

"What could we do? We did not have charge of the police. They had charge. We did not have the legislatures. The carpetbaggers had the legislatures. We could not enforce the law, because we did not have the weapons of the law, ad so the southern white men and the southern white women rose up to protect themselves and their society, their homes and their children and their civilization. That was outside the law and whenever action of that sort goes outside of the law, it goes beyond bounds. Whenever the forms of law are abandoned, the extremists get charge. We have a current instance of that in the United States today. Whenever the strikers and the picketers have broken down the law, the vigilante has appeared, and he always will.

He is Sorry

"Out of that movement in the South in what we call the reconstruction days there naturally developed unrestrained men who were acting under great emotions. They abandoned the forms of law because the forms of law were controlled by scalawags and carpetbaggers and Negroes, and the forms of law were worthless.

"Very well. When they did that they went to extremes, and they did develop this idea of lynching. I regret it. I deplore it. I abhor it. I hate it. I am humiliated by it; but I am saying to you it was not in the southern people."

Editorial of the Week

(From the Bristol, Va. Herald Courier, Aug. 2, 1937)

Lynching And State Rights

Some two months ago a mob took two Negroes from jail in a Mississippi town, carried them into the country, tied them to trees and seared their flesh with a blow-torch. One of the Negroes died under the torture and the other was shot to death. As we recall, neither of these victims of mob brutality was accused of a capital crime.

From Secretary of the N.A.A.C.P.

The State's Attorney-General of Mississippi, acting under instructions from the Governor, instituted impeachment proceedings against the Sheriff of the county in which this outrage was committed, charging him with neglect of duty, cowardly conduct, and perhaps connivance with the mobsters. The officer was acquitted but, although he stated that he recognized some of the members of the mob, nothing further has been done.

Some two weeks since a mob took two Negroes from jail in Florida, carried them into the country and shot them to death. Neither of them had committed a crime for which death is or should be the penalty. The Sheriff seemed not to know much about the incident or to be seriously disturbed by it. The Governor of Florida said the killing of these Negroes was not a lynching, but murder, but so far as known no effort has been made to find the lynchers or murderers.

A dispatch from Statesville, N.C., says a crowd of about 125 white men rode into that town in thirty automobiles early yesterday, surrounded the county jail, and demanded that Sheriff John White Moore turn over a Negro prisoner accused of assaulting a white woman. The crowd disbanded after the Sheriff took three of the men inside the jail and convinced them that the prisoner they wanted was not there. He had been spirited away to an undisclosed jail.

A lynching was averted at Statesville because precautionary measures had been taken for the protection of the prisoner sought by the mob. Probably most mob murders could be averted in the same way. Despite the fact that any Negro arrested for almost any offense in some sections of the South is in danger of the mob, the responsible police authorities do not take steps to safeguard the lives of such prisoners and give them their day in court. Yet that is a part of their sworn duty. New York, N.Y.

The Senate has before it an anti-lynching bill which has already passed the House. Opposition to this measure comes mostly from Senators and Representatives from the South, the section of country in which nearly all of the mob murders occur and which should welcome Federal aid in the suppression of mob lawlessness. Prospects now are that legislative action on this bill will not be completed by a Congress confronted with other important measures and impatient to adjourn, but there also are prospects that if it fails of passage at this session it will be passed at the next session.

Protests that a Federal anti-lynching law would infringe the rights of the States have ceased to be impressive in the face of continued mob outrages and the failure of the States to uphold their laws and punish those crimes.

That point is the Lynch ing mobs are composed of ama urs in crime, not professionals lot of them would not hanker after an investigation by G-Men."

Effective Technique

So said an editorial last week in the New Orleans Tribune, a leading daily in the Southern metropolis, which at the same time condemned the Mississippi lynching and advocated passage of a federal anti-lynching law. The Tribune further pointed out, "If the 150 or more Mississippians who burned to death two Negro prisoners, Will Williams and Henry Shields, Tuesday had plotted to these gentlemen could be tried under anti-lynch law through Cob and abet the lyncher now? Would they could hardly have the frightful agonies of yesterday's adopted a more effective technique than the ghastly procedure they chose."

Although daily papers all over the South condemned the atrocity of them being debated in Congress or any other bit of federal anti-lynching legislation.

Gangland Killers, Too

Said the New Orleans Times-Picayune, "So shocking were all the circumstances attending Tuesday's lynching in Mississippi that appeal which asserted, 'Coming at the crime will do the State and time when anti-lynching bills the entire South much harm. Were up in Congress, the Mississippi will suffer additionally harm. Wejmobbing may try the balance and prefer to pass federal legislation to the enactment of an anti-lynching law, despite the fact that the circumstances of the Duck Hill lynching prove the impotence of such laws to prevent lynching as the rural mob."

Although the Jackson, Miss., Daily News, biggest paper in the state where the atrocity occurred, deplored the mob murders, it made a partial excuse for the lynchers by asserting, "Take into consideration the law's delay as a provocation. The atrocious crime for which these two Montgomery county Negroes were lynched occurred last December. Proof of guilt was conclusive, even though the defendants entered pleas of innocence."

Gulded By Humanity

On the edge of the Jim crow belt, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch editorialized, "If every state had an anti-lynching law such as that which Virginia has had for some 10 years, lynching could be, as the Richmond Times-Dispatch said recently, 'almost, if not wholly, obliterated.' Since enactment of the Virginia statute, which makes lynching a crime against the state and participants chargeable with murder, not a lynching has occurred with the state. But Southern Legislatures generally will not enact such laws and lynchings continue to occur.

Congress Must Act

Any Southern Congressman who opposes Federal anti-lynching legislation after Tuesday's sadistic orgy at Duck Hill, Miss. should hang his head in shame. Greensboro N.A.A.C.P.

Local and State authorities can not always cope with the lynchers. Often as not local authorities are afraid to resist the mob. Mobs vote. New York, N.Y.

The Alabama sheriff and two deputies who released two young Negroes to that Mississippi mob in broad daylight Tuesday assert that they did not recognize any member of the mob, "because they were back to them and didn't see them". Obviously the confession of weaklings and liars.

That Mississippi mob of white hellians brought a new instrument of torture into play Tuesday. After chaining their victims to trees they turned flaming blow torches on them, inflicting them with horrible pain before riddling their bodies with bullets.

Wild Indians of the western plains in the 19th century would not have practiced more barbaric or diabolical cruelty.

And we call ourselves a Christian people,

If Lynch Law is to be put down in America, the strong arm of the Federal government, unafraid of cringing, cowardly, acquiescent local officials and their lousy constituents, must see to it. The fair name of America is besmirched on the front page of every newspaper in Europe and Asia today. The Federal government must take steps to protect its name abroad.

Still Alabama

The Call

An Alabama sheriff who allowed his Negro prisoner to be lynched was acquitted recently when tried for neglect of duty. That is old stuff. Officers who connive with or yield to mobs are typical. The oddity of this case is that the state tried to secure a conviction by offering to prove that the wrong man was lynched.

The "wrong" man is lynched whenever a lynching occurs. But this is the first time Alabama has tried to get that fact written into a court record. The right man suffers the penalty of the law only when he is convicted after fair trial. Any other conditions preceding his punishment are prima facie evidence that he is the "wrong" man.

Kansas City, Missouri 6-11-37

In the gory annals of lynching are written the summary killing of Negroes admitted to be only relatives of the allegedly guilty. Several have been put to death on numerous occasions when it was known that only one was guilty, the mob acting on the theory that it was better that many innocent should suffer rather than one guilty should escape.

Lynching is pure barbarism, not to be defended on any grounds. It occurs in states where official as well as private conscience is dead. After it is an accomplished fact, the community that permitted it will never convict either the slayers or the officials who should have guarded life. Alabama by acquitting a negligent sheriff proves it is still Alabama.

Protest Over Assault On Child Leads To Duck Hill Episode

CLARKSDALE, Miss., July 16—The vicinity of Duck Hill, scene of the brutal blow-torch double lynching which stirred the nation a short while back, was in broke public display the last week when it went on another rampage to satisfy its barbaric lust for blood.

In this instance it is believed the entire family of James Lewis, tenant farmer on the Charles Anderson plantation, two miles southeast of here, was either burned alive in their home or fell into the hands of a mob which formed for the purpose of lynching Lewis who was charged with "speaking impertinently" to two white men who had, the day previously, beaten and raped his 13-year-old daughter.

As it was almost impossible to obtain first-hand testimony from the fear-stricken inhabitants of this God-forsaken area, the only source of information open to the press was the persistent rumors which continue to leak out of this community charging that a mass murder was actually perpetrated on the Anderson plantation at 2 a.m., Friday, July 2.

Tuesday just before deadline, into a newspaper office walked a thick-set bedraggled looking individual wearing a battered black hat pulled low over his face. It was James Lewis, 46, principal figure about whom Mississippi's latest lynching carnage is alleged to center.

His story of the harrowing incidents fell from lips grown bitter against inhuman Southern persecutions and the apparent indifference of the U. S. government. His version of the grim tragedy was given as follows:

Thursday morning, July 1, he sent his young daughter, Elizabeth, to the Anderson plantation store to purchase kerosene while he remained in the field to till as he has done for the past 19 years. Two hours later he looked up from his plow to see the battered and bleeding figure of the child dragging herself toward him where a moment later she collapsed in his arms.

Regaining consciousness the girl whispered through puffed and lacerated lips, that upon reaching the Anderson store she had been accosted by John, one of the four Anderson brothers, and one of the family's white employees, both of whom made indecent advances

Duck Hill Vicinity Again Writes History In Savagery

When she refused to submit the men dragged her to one of the barns where after beating her unmercifully, each attacked her while the other held the helpless on the barn floor.

The mother, Harriet, collapsed upon hearing the story and Lewis, knowing the delicacy of the situation, waited until the following morning before going to the Anderson home to protest the ravashing of his child.

After lodging his complaint with the Anderson family he returned to the field—and an hour later as he sat brooding on the handle of his plow was approached by John Anderson who violently voiced his objection to being called to account by a "black s....." proceeded to beat Lewis with a heavy stick he had brought along but Lewis seized the stick and knocked him down.

The following morning, Friday, July 2, before daybreak, John returned to the Lewis home accompanied by a mob of 200 white hoodlums, who set fire to his barns, killing 4 mules, 50 hogs and over 100 chickens. They then set about battering in the door of the Lewis residence, but were greted by volleys of shot-gun slugs fired from windows of the home. Lewis, seeking to center the mob's attention upon himself and thus permit his family to escape, dashed from the house and fled toward a nearby woods in which the mob lost track of him.

Today Lewis is roaming the streets of a northern city, awaiting word that will tell him the fate of his family consisting of two daughters, a wife and four sons, who will probably not survive if the blood-lust of the savage south is to be satisfied once more.

Mr. Lewis asked that the press withhold names of his sons as a modicum of protection for them in the event his family did succeed in escaping.

GEORGIA IN THE LEAD

Georgia leads again. Not in education, of course. Certainly not in culture, except among a few colored people. Nor is Georgia leading in per capita wealth, in public libraries, in health, in [illegible]ology, in child welfare, or any of the other evidences of civilization.

What Georgia leads in for 1936 is lynching. Out of the 13 mob murders, five occurred in what is perhaps appropriately called "The Empire State of the South." Of course none of the murderers were sought or apprehended.

Either the mob spirit was dormant or prospective mob victims were elusive in 1934 and 1935 in Georgia, for she only lynched a total of three during those two years. Mississippi clinched the pennant both years with six victims in 1934 and eight in 1935.

But last year Georgia took her rightful position at the head of lynchdom, proudly waving the skull and crossbones as her state ensign. Arkansas and Michigan came next with two each, but the former favorites, Florida, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Texas trailed with one each. Singularly enough South Carolina, Alabama and Louisiana, former sweepstakes winners, failed to place.

It is not improbable that fear of hostile legislation caused the devotees of this American folkway to lie low for a little while until Congress got out of the mood. But Georgia with her irrepressible exuberance (or cussedness) wouldn't let even fear of an anti-lynching law stop her fun.

There is one thing of which we may be sure: if an anti-lynching law is passed making counties pay several thousand dollars for staging each lynching, the barbarous pastime will soon vanish, even along Tobacco Road.

U. S. DODGES ISSUE IN NEAL LYNCHING CASE

Attorney - General Cummings Refuses to Apply Kidnaping Law

NEW YORK.— In response to an inquiry from the N. A. A. C. P. on why the G-Men were used in the Harry Brunette case and not used in the Claude Neal lynching in October, 1934, Attorney General Homer S. Cummings continues to dodge the issue.

In a letter to the N. A. A. C. P. this week he cites the case of Gooch vs the United States as the reason why the G-men could not in the Gooch case (and by inference in the Brunette case) and could not act in the Claude Neal case.

In the Gooch case, Gooch kidnaped two officers of the law at Paris, Texas, for the purpose of preventing Gooch's arrest by the officers, and carried them to Oklahoma. Gooch was run down by the G-men and sentenced to death under the federal kidnaping law.

Renders Decision

In rendering a decision on this case Mr. Justice McReynolds of the United States supreme court held:

> Holding an officer to prevent the captor's arrest is something done with the expectation of benefit to the transgressor. So also is kidnaping with purpose to secure money. These benefits, while not the same, are similar in their general nature and the desire to secure either of them may lead to kidnaping. If the word "reward," as commonly understood, is not itself broad enough to include benefits expected to follow the preventon of an arrest, they fall within the broad term "otherwise."

In the Brunette case a New Jersey state trooper was kidnaped and taken to Pennsylvania, not to prevent the arrest of Brunette, but for murder. Brunette was dissuaded from killing the officer by his woman companion.

Although this case is not a parallel to the Gooch case in that Brunette was not seeking any reward (either in the form of money or of benefit to himself) yet the G-men again went in and Brunette was captured and sent to prison for life.

Finds Memorandum

In its continued efforts to get the Department of Justice to act in the Neal lynching, the N. A. A. C. P. has found a memorandum submitted to the judiciary committee of the senate by the Department of Justice at the time the department was seeking an amendment to the kidnaping law. The amendment was to be the addition of the word "otherwise", making the law read: "held for ransom or reward or otherwise." In its memorandum to the senate committee the department of justice said:

> The object of the addition of the word "otherwise" is to extend the jurisdiction of this act to persons who have been kidnaped and held, not only for reward, but for any other reason.

The N. A. A. C. P. letter declares that ifthe Lindbergh act is to be interpreted in the narrow manner of the Gooch case, then the department had no authority for acting in the Brunette case; and that if the interpretation of the kidnaping law has been broadened by the department since the Gooch case so as to include the Brunette case then it must of necessity include the Neal lynching. The N. A. A. C. P. letter concludes:

> The action of the bureau of investigation in the Brunette case confirms the interpretation of the Lindbergh act as amended by the department of justice set out in your memorandum and carried out in the Gooch case and other similar cases. However, when a Negro is involved the department holds that the law does not apply and insists on a narrow interpretation contrary to its own memorandum to the United States senate as well as being directly inconsistent with actual administartion of the Lindbegh law by the department of justice.

Official Defends U.S. Failure to Act in Neal Lynching

Pulse Snatchers Get Long Pen Sentences

1-30-37

WASHINGTON

Criticism of the Department of Justice for failure to prosecute the lynchers of Claude Neal under the Lindbergh Kidnapping Law is unfair, Brien McMahon, an Assistant Attorney General, told the Washington Bar Association, Thursday night.

Mr. McMahon, who is in charge of the criminal division of the Justice Department, went to Jonesboro, Ark., in November and secured a Federal conviction of Paul D. Peacher, white planter-peace officer, for violating an 1866 anti-slavery statute.

Cites Technicality

He justified avoidance of the Neal case by the wording of the Lindbergh law, which makes it federal offense to transport across State lines persons unlawfully seized and "held for ransom or reward or otherwise"—some material advantage.

Distinguishing between the Neal case and the Arthur Gooch case, he cited the U.S. Supreme Court ruling, in the latter case that holding an officer to prevent arrest was a benefit.

Neal, was taken from an Alabama jail, October 27, 1934, into Florida and lynched. Gooch assisted in kidnapping two Texas police officers and took them into Oklahoma, fatally wounding one of them. He was hanged last June 19.

Lynchings Drop 90 Per Cent in 59 Yrs.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Breaking down isolation in the South by increased facilities such as telephones, radios, paved roads, and telegraphs was given by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, Saturday, as one of the three major factors causing a drop of 90 per cent in lynchings since 1887.

The other factors, he said, were disappearance of the frontier characteristics in the South and the increasing agitation in Dixie against lynchings.

The institute's department of records and research lists 1583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 151 in the 1927-1936 period. Each decade since the first reveals a decline in mob action.

Lynchings totaled 1030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 468 for the 1917-1926 period.

LYNCHING—PLAIN TALK

Memphis, Tenn. (Commercial Appeal) Thursday, April 15, 1937

The torture lynching of two Negroes at Duck Hill, Miss., is an unspeakable crime. Lynching at law is murder. But mob murder is often more than murder, it represents a relapse into a psychic state that it is an insult to primitive man to call savagery.

Every responsible official of Mississippi is put on the spot by this crime. It must be investigated and followed by the indictment and prosecution of the offenders, or the state will suffer a terrific loss of face. Coming on the heels of steady decline in the number of lynchings, the crime at Duck Hill is a crime against the whole South.

The tendency of mobs to revert to torture and sadistic orgy is age-old and world-wide. In "The Crowd," Gustave Le Bon more than a generation ago explained that in a mob the individual intellect and individuality is dormant, superseded for the time being by the collective mob mind, which represents the lowest common denominator of human mentality.

Such a relapse evidently occurred at Duck Hill, where the use of a blow torch in torture rivaled the barbaric mutilations in the massacre of nonunion miners at Herrin, Ill., a few years ago. The blow torch as an instrument of torture has not yet been adopted by the degenerate gangsters of New York, who still prefer slowly to hack their victims with cold steel. Burning with cigar butts used to be a routine incident of being "taken for a ride" in the environs of Chicago, but the blow torch seems to be something new in sadistic technology.

Coming at a time when anti-lynching bills are up in Congress, the Duck Hill lynching may tip the balance and lead to the enactment of an anti-lynching law, despite the fact that the circumstances of the Duck Hill lynching prove the impotence of such laws to prevent lynching. The theory of anti-lynching laws is twofold. Pecuniary penalties imposed on communities for lynchings are supposed to restrain the lynching urge. But what would a consideration like that have amounted to in the case of the infuriated mob at Duck Hill. The other part of the theory of anti-lynching laws is that by transferring the investigation of lynchings and the trial of offenders to outside tribunals such as federal courts, punishment can be had regardless of local public opinion or political pull. History is emphatic as to the fallacy of that. So far as the South is concerned, lynching got its greatest impetus at a time when military rule and federal force laws were in full flower, and in the nineties of the last century when the Lodge force bill was being pressed in Congress, lynching was rampant. In northern states where there are laws providing for the recovery of damages from counties and local communities by relatives of mob victims, there have been most atrocious mob murders.

Sincere purpose to abate lynchings is almost entirely absent from the present propaganda for a federal anti-lynching law. Back of that movement—as every literate adult knows—are four elements.

(1) The remnant of the old Republican party machine seeking desperately to recover the Negro vote in the northern states through which it ruled the nation from the election of 1868, in which that vote first swung the balance.

(2) The Democratic political machines in big cities bidding against the G. O. P. for the same bloc vote.

(3) The Communist groups who have sought for more than 15 years to stir up racial strife North and South.

(4) The strangely assorted groups of psychopaths who take a morbid interest in lynchings and in characteristic crimes that lead to lynchings. These groups include many queer fish and epicene neurotics who swim in the stagnant social pools which have collected back of some of the great foundations and other endowments set up by doddering old men and women who had more money than sense.

The latter elements are not motivated at all by any desire to abate lynchings. The heavily financed propaganda against the social order of the South which was manifested in the Scottsboro case in Alabama and in the Herndon case in Atlanta are a dead giveaway as to that. An orderly court trial in the South stirs up the degenerate martyr complexes of these people as much as a lynching.

In view of the South baiting that accompanies all the agitation for federal anti-lynching laws, it is incumbent upon southern senators and representatives to make these facts clear upon the floors of the Houses of Congress, and to demand that any extension of federal police powers be made to cover the gang mobster of the city as well as the rural mob.

Declare Nothing Will Be Done About Blow-Torch Lynching Of 2

Mississippi Dailies Applaud Mob Rule; Flay Southern Editors For Joining With Critics Of South

NEW YORK CITY, May 14—Nothing will be done about the blow-torch double lynching at Duck Hill, Miss., on April 13, it was declared last week by the Indianola, Miss., Sunflower Tocsin.

"Nothing will ever come of any investigation the governor or anybody else will make and not one member of the mob will ever be arrested," the paper says in an editorial. "We do not condone lynchings, but if two persons ever deserved lynching, the two brutes at Duck Hill richly deserved what they got. We have no sympathy to waste on them. None whatever."

This editorial was cited by the NAACP as further proof, if any were still needed, that the Southern states—particularly in the deep South—will not ever do anything to stop lynching and punish lynchers and that, therefore, a federal anti-lynching law is necessary.

Applaud Mob Rule

The Jackson, Miss., Daily News of which the veteran Negro-hater, Colonel Frederick Sullens is editor, declared editorially that the outburst over the Duck Hill lynchings was "a lot of tommyrot."

The Columbus, Miss., Dispatch declared editorially that it was "sick and tired" of the South being blamed for lynchings and also that it was "sick and tired" of some Southern editors joining with the critics of the South.

These editorial expresions from Mississippi represent the opposite extreme from the editorials in more enlightened sections of the South. As a matter of fact, the Mississippi editorials and one or two from Alabama papers are the worst editorials in the whole country in favor of lynching.

Kidnaping And Lynching

IN its stride of democracy the western hemisphere has laid down many fine examples for the old world, in the principles of government. The United States might well be cited as the capital empire of the New World. The early settlers, while not favorable to kings, in many ways incorporated in their basic laws the customs and rules of the mother country.

While the New World presented new endeavors and opened up the barren wilderness, it did not get far down the road before it stood out conspicuously to the rest of the world as being the most lawless nation on earth. While the search for religious freedom was the paramount emphasis of the majority of the colonists, it was also to be seen that so far as real religious principles were concerned, it was to stand out as a very irreligious group.

As to the common ethics of the nation and its respect for its basic laws let us take a look.

It is not uncommon to read in the press reports accounts of kidnaping and wanton lynchings. In fact it has gotten to the place where we expect in a periodic cycle the occurence of lynching and kidnaping. So accustomed are we to these evils, our statisticians have set ups for the keeping of facts, figures and circumstances leading up to these our major crimes and pastimes.

Kidnaping menaces the rich. Lynching tortures the poor. Both are crimes and against our organic law. Kidnapers carry on in the dark, demanding ransom for their victim and through their airtight organization carry on a contact with the outside world. Lynchers operate in broad day if they choose, unhooded and unmolested for the most. They send no flag of truce and receive none. They ask no quarter and give none.

Kidnaping goes on principally in rich sections where people are able to hand out heavy ransoms. Lynching is confined nearly totally to the old slave states where race prejudice is kept aflame and the color of a human's skin is the determining factor in whichever pursuit he shall engage—whether he shall survive or perish.

The federal government has made a death stroke to end kidnaping. In spite of state's rights, that precious heritage of the South, it has passed national laws making it a federal offense to kidnap. Since the incorporation of the anti-kidnaping law, kidnaping has been made almost unprofitable. With the marked money and the hounding of G-men kidnaping has reached a new low in this country.

Under the same premise dominating the anti-kidnap law, many friends of law and order have striven for many years to get over an anti-lynching bill. They have contended all along that lynchers get off too easily and that even if some one is apprehended, hardly any conviction has been recorded in the trials of lynchers.

Unless kidnaping can be termed as interstate commerce, or come under some such sub-head, a federal bill to curb lynching would be just as constitutional. Kidnaping and lynching are alike in principle. One seeks to cheat an individual while the other seeks to cheat the law. If one is prohibited nationally, the other should not be left out.

In spite of the drastic federal laws and their rigid investigators we have before us today a new kidnaping case. We also have a lynching case. As long as one is given preference and pronounced against the law, the twin brother is going to lurk around.

It will prove in the end, despite the geographical difference in the operations, that it is a waste of money and plain folly in any effort aimed at breaking up kidnaping for the rich while lynching, for the poor is allowed to go on unbridled and unhindered.

GOV. WHITE FINDS MISSISSIPPI HAD NO LYNCHINGS IN 1936

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 11 (ANP)—Mississippi has decided to whitewash itself and after an investigation by Gov. White, declared last week that there was not a single lynching within its borders during 1936.

The annual report released by Tuskegee, the most conservative of the yearly compilations, showed nine mob victims of which one was in this state. The governor, however, launched a probe and said that the killing in question was not a lynching but "a murder of a Negro by a bunch of drunken Negroes following a neighborhood quarrel."

Pleased at his findings, Gov. White addressed a letter to all the sheriffs in the state complimenting them and asking that they keep 1937 free from "lynch law." He said it was the first time this century that none had occurred in Mississippi.

A Sequence to Mob Law

THE States and Federal Governments have ignored—in spite of eloquent warnings from experts in mob psychosis—the grave consequences in giving the participants official impression that mob rule is beyond their jurisdiction.

Time and again it has been pointed out to the United States Attorney General, Congress, and the President, and to State judicial authorities, that the policy of giving preference in enforcement to those laws which ostensibly favor privileged classes, while being indifferent to those which safeguard the life, liberty, and happiness of minority groups, is inimical to the security of democracy.

They sowed the wind, now they are reaping the whirlwind of their obstinacy and class prejudice in the series of disgraceful, lawless "sit-down" strikes which menace our basic industries, particularly in the automobile field.

Any way you look at it such strikes, with forcible seizure of employer's properties, refusal to obey mandates from the courts, denial of use to employers of their own properties, are application of mob rule to intimidate and terrorize employers and the courts, and to serve the cause of revolution.

MISSISSIPPI POINTS THE WAY

The brutal and horrifying lynching of McDaniels and Townes near Granada, Mississippi on Tuesday, April 13 is a solemn warning to the people of the United States that this government had better get its house in order, and that right early.

Does the United States wish to continue as a noble experiment in the democratic form of government? Is there a real desire in this country to maintain a united nation with every element of the population fired with a determination to defend its institutions and its flag? Is there genuineness in our profession of Christianity and zeal for carrying Christianity to "benighted" men in other parts of the world?

If these be our purposes and professions, the mob in Mississippi, including the sworn officers of the law, are laughing them to scorn. This mob has shown that it has no respect for law and order and despises courts of justice, if such there be in Mississippi. If ever these mobbists have heard of a Constitution of the United States which says that no citizen shall be deprived of life without due process of law, they are satisfied that they have an inherent right to repudiate it when it interferes with anything that their moronic inclinations suggest would be a delightful form of entertainment for their women and children.

If they have ever heard of Communism and its drive to destroy the american form of government, it seems that they are delighted to be faithful allies of the Communists and proud to furnish proof positive that Communism for the United States could not possibly be as bad as Mississippi democracy. If these mobbists have heard of the imminence of a world war, with the probability that the United States will be drown into it, they care little or nothing for the feelings of millions of their countrymen, who would answer the call to arms with aching hearts and a feeling of utter futility in being anxious to fight for the preservation of a democracy which persistently neglects to deal out stern justice to enemies within its borders who are worse than any foreign foe.

McDaniels and Townes will not have died in vain, if the action of the mob which burned them to death, and the plain connivance with the mob as exemplified by Mississippi minions of the law, causes the members of Congress to cease dilly-dallying and to proceed at once to put Mississippi and every other lawless commonwealth under federal jurisdiction in the matter of dealing with their lynching orgies. No quarter whatever should be given the crowd which protests against such a law, calling it a "Force Bill."

In God's name let the Congress of the United States go into action at once!

We who believe in the American form of government, as outlined in its ritualistic teachings, demand that the nation begin to practice what it preaches. Such forms of oppression as the horrible example of lynching in Mississippi can be the beginning of the end of our present form of government. Any one who can be at ease in the presence of such a flouting of law and decency is living in a fool's paradise.

First Blow Torch Lynching

In our middle teens in 1889 at Barnwell, South Carolina, we stood upon the ground and looked down on the red blood mingle with sand of eight colored men lynched at one time in one night. In 1898 the first Sunday in May in Cowetta County, Georgia, we remember that an excurison was run from Atlanta loaded down with women and children to witness the public burning of poor Sam Hoes, when a mad scramble was made among the curious for bits of his cracklings to take back home for a keep-sake. In 1904 and for three weeks, in a hot tilt with lynchers at Church Hill, Ga., we sat in our schoolhouse door to see men with guns on their shoulders go by to get together to lynch us; being guarded morning and evening to and from our work at that time we often said softly to ourselves, "Well, Lord, I wouldn't give 25 cents for my life today." But in the fcae of these and many other like experiences, we now exclaim: Nothing in our life to date has shocked us as the recent lynching of Roosevelt Towns and B. J. McDaniels, at Duck Hill, Mississippi on April the 14th. A "Blow Torch" lynching surely must be the last word in the parliament of the Devil's invention! A blow torch is a fire-liquid many times hotter than ordinary fire, a chemuric element with which adamant steel is presently burned thru, applied to those young men it burned thru flesh and bone instantly. That's what was gleefully used by the Duck Hill lynchers. Wonder how many Methodist stewards and Baptist deacons were present? If so, suppose they open next time with prayer by a Methodist pastor, and the benediction by a Baptist minister! Yes, Sunday school children were there, and where children are, teachers must be present also, plus loving mothers. My! My! What a company! We colored people living in the south are not unmindful that we have thousands of white sympathizers, but we haven't enough true friends who are willing to make the necessary sacrifice to put a stop to these "unmoral atrocities that have been poured upon our race since emancipation in 1865 to that eventful day at Duck Hill, Miss. Lynching of any man in any race of people before he's been given a fair trial has always been inhuman and unmoral no matter as to how far back in the annals of man. For mob of enlightened people—white people—who boast of their racial superiority, to come under the eyes of their judge in the court house-yard and take from court officials, two prisoners who protests their innocence, take them a mean distance therefrom and torture to death with "Blow Torches," then riddle with bullets in the middle of the day under the burning sun of high heaven in 1937, is to our mind going one step beyond the limit! Let's try to wonder how that mob felt after that? Did they feel like human beings, or devils—which? Wonder will any of them go to church, The date may be treacherous but the fact remains. A take Communion, or teach Sunday school any more this element in the south and in every community has year? What will their conscience say to them? Well, been allowed, aided and abetted whenever they feel like it, that "Blow Torch" has about killed their consciences. Here to make playthings of their sheriffs, judges, and courts of and there we may find as in the case of the Scottsboro boys, justice.

a Judge Horton willing to sacrifice his office rather than his conscience to uphold the dignity of justice, to his class the south needs to add many others until the integrity of justice in the south for colored people be restored and maintained.

In any state in the deep south what are colored people to hope for living under these unmoral conditions? What colored man and his family is safe, if and when a mob-spirit among sufficient numbers of whites wish to satisfy its spleen upon our sons and daughters. We can never forget the unspeakable sight one morning in Moticello, Georgia of a father, his three sons and only daughter (five of them) hanging by their necks on nearby trees on the side of the streets in that town, their bodies riddled with bullets in 1916.

Cotton vs. Lynching

An astonished Senate listened last Friday while Senator Claud Pepper, of Florida, informed that august body that the price of cotton had something to do with lynching. Hitherto the world has been advised that there was a correlation between mob murder and white women's virtue, so that it came as a distinct surprise to many proponents of the Wagner-Vay Nuys proposal to stop lynching, hearing a Southern representative in Congress announce a different doctrine.

Here is what Senator Pepper actually said:

"Let me pause there, Mr. President, to remind the Senators that in 1938 we probably reached the pit of the depression, and to remind Senators that statistics show that there is an actual correlation between the number of lynchings and the price of cotton. I repeat that astonishing statement—that statistics show that there is a necessary relation, that history has shown that there is a correlation, between the price of cotton and the number of lynchings. If the Senator from New York (Mr. Wagner) and the other proponents of this bill will take my word for that statement, is the best way to stop lynching the passage of this bill, which will inflame a great section of the country which feels that righteous indignation should justly be turned toward its resistance? Instead of encroaching by the Federal power upon local governmental functions, would we not better try to raise the price of cotton, and not only prevent lynchings but help the farmers of America to give their children better food, their families more medical care, and to reduce the number of mortalities in American life?

"It is very obvious to anyone that when the price of cotton is low the Negro, who is generally the victim of the lynching passion, is more idle than he would be if he were occupied, has less money to spend, and less means with which to gratify his legitimate aspirations; and in a time of severe impoverishment the pinch of hunger and the sufferings of nakedness and of little shelter perhaps may drive him to an attitude of mind that will make him commit crimes which do arouse the passions of communities to such an extent that they will take the law in their own hands. But give the Negro a fair wage, give him a fair price for the commodity he produces, send him to school, put decent clothes on him, put him in a decent home, and give him sanitary conditions for his residence, and you will find that Negroes will not commit crimes which result directly in the aroused passion that brings about lynching."

We have always argued that the lynching evil had its roots in economics, and fundamentally had no relation to the protection of women's virtue. It therefore meets with our approval for Senator Pepper to stand up in Congress and inadventently tell the truth. Lynching is a species of terrorism practiced below the Mason and Dixon Line having for its purpose the economic exploitation of black citizens.

We, however, find fault with the conclusions reached by Senator Pepper. He seems to assume that when cotton is low in price, Negroes are idle and vice versa. This is an entirely erroneous idea and one that Senator Pepper knows is false. The South never permits the black man as a class to be idle and whether cotton is high or low in price, under a system of hireling bonds and vagrancy laws, Negroes remain in enforced labor the year round down in Dixie.

What actually happens is this: When cotton is a fair price planters grudgingly pay a pittance to their black wage slaves. They eat a little more out of the commissary and perhaps are enabled to purchase a little cheap finery in wearing apparel; but when cotton is low, the Negro must work without pay. It is at this point that rebellion develops among a few irrepressible black souls and a lynching accurs.

Take, for example, the lynching of George Hughes at Sherman, Texas, a few years ago. The world was falsely regailed with the lie that a Negro had raped a white woman. This writer personally investigated that lynching. We went on the ground and dug for the truth. George Hughes engaged in a fight with a white man who owed him and would not pay him. George Hughes bested the white man in the struggle. You know the rest of the story.

If cotton had been a good price down in that vast uncivilized domain known as East Texas, in 1930, George Hughes' white employer, John Atnip, would probably have not owed him three weeks wages. It follows then that there would have been no fight and therefore another lynching would have been averted.

It is the common knowledge of all that the social, economic and political structure of the South is built upon the idea that the black citizen must be subdued and crushed. That is the reason why statistics compiled by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other agencies show that most of the victims of the mob died for reasons like this: being a witness against a white man; writing insulting notes; threatening a white man; sassing a white man; being a strike breaker; discussing a lynching; making boastful remarks; vagrancy, slapping a boy; jumping a labor contract, insisting on voting, gambling, throwing stones, enticing servants away.

Even the statistics compiled on lynching by Tuskegee Institute which are so conservative that southern white dailies will publish them and Southern Senators in Congress rely upon them as reliable data on that subject, show that since 1882 there have been 1,9921 persons lynched in the United States for the frivolous causes designated above, and which bear no relationship whatsoever to rape.

In Detroit, Chicago, New York, Boston, Negroes intermingle, associate with and marry white women. They have almost absolute freedom to practice that type of equality and develop social contacts denied in the South. Why under such conditions are there no wholesale ravishments of white women in the sections and cities just named? Strange, is it not, that Negroes who live in the cotton states of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas, Texas and Tennessee, completely change in their moral complex when they go north?

We want to agree with Senator Claud Pepper in his premise but not in his conclusions. We think that cotton and lynching have close relation. The bulk of the lynchings have been in the cotton-growing states. Here are the figures covering the lynching of Negroes in the cotton area since 1882:

Alabama, 296; Arkansas, 226; Florida, 248; Georgia, 478; Kentucky, 141; Louisiana, 388; Mississippi, 522; South Carolina, 154; Tennessee, 200; Texas, 345; Virginia, 83; Oklahoma, 41; Missouri, 70.

These figures show that in thirteen cotton-growing states, since 1882, there have been 3,137 Negroes lynched out of a total of 3,384 for all America. In other words, the thirteen cotton-growing states have since 1882 lynched 3,137 Negroes while the other 35 American states were mobbing 247. Looks rather sectional, does it not?

Another thought and then we are through. If, as Senator Pepper assumes, cotton has something to do with lynching, perhaps the high price received for that staple under the AAA had something to do with the decline of lynching during the past few years. If we are going to think in straight lines, there is no other conclusion. The decline in lynching can therefore be credited up and not to advanced ethical and moral structures forming down in Dixie.

Colored Woman In The Case

By WILLIAM PICKENS

Often you are not told what is really behind or at bottom of the lynching. You are simply told that the "Negro was lynched for murder," but you are not told that the so-called murder was really justifiable homicide in an effort to protect his wife or to defend his life after daring to ask for his wages.

Well, in Florida a little while ago, they lynched two Negro boys right under the governor's nose—and I never learned the truth back of the motive for the lynching until I came south, and perhaps never would have learned it through any word written from Florida. But I met a man who knows me, and whom I have known for over thirty years, and who was right there where the lynching took place, and he told me what he would not dare write even to me,—lest in some accidental way he should be betrayed. I know you marvel at such a fear, but when you consider what happened to those two boys, you will not wonder that no other person of that barbarous community would dare tell what the boys were really lynched for. Really I cannot tell even the southern interracial commission the name of this man: for he would have no protection whatever and he occupies a position which would render him immediately vulnerable. Those who know me, will just have to take my word for it, for whatever they think my word is worth.—And this man finally spoke what he dare not write nor even publicly tell, is no ignoramus. He is one of the best educated men of the south.

You read in the papers that two youths, 18 and 19 years old, the papers said, were lynched in northern Florida because one of them cut a policeman who was joning them about a rob-

Well, in the first place, the report that they were 18 19 years old, was made by the its press just to cover up the orrible truth that the two boys were only 14 and 16 years old,—mere kids. And instead of having cut a policeman for questioning them, which must have seemed strange to you in the first place, they had simply found the policeman with a colored woman in whom the older boy was interested in the woman's room,—and the two boys gave the cop a devil of a beating and one of them struck back at the fighting officer with his knife, cutting him slightly. The policeman was off duty, as you can see, at the time.

And why did they lynch the boys? Why did the other policeman and their pals make up a small mob and take the boys out of police lockup and kill them? Just to keep the case from coming into court where these boys could tell what it was really all about. In other words, they decided to destroy the evidence, so that no court case would be necessary. And then because one of the boys' fathers, knowing the truth, was acting as if he wanted to do something about it, they were going to put him out of the way and he had to flee the state. The last heard of him, the colored people of an Alabama town were contacting him in a freight yard and giving him food in his box car, to help him on his way to oblivion in the wast.

And that gives me occasion to tell you something else which you do not now, if you do not live in the south: that colored women in the south are being accosted, insulted and annoyed by white men of the common class now more than ever before in their common history of three hundred years in this country. Really something ought to be done about it by the better-class whites, or by the white women. In Mobile these prowling animals drive around through the colored sections, as soon as it's dark enough, accosting any colored woman, she will have no redress and only gnaw her vitals with anger, sometimes not even risking telling her menfolk for fear of getting them into trouble.—When in Birmingham I mentioned this Mobile barbarity, a colored woman wife of one of the leading educators of Birmingham, said quickly: "You don't have to go to Mobile for that. This street (one of the principal Negro residence streets) is infested after dark with the hunters. There is one white lawyer, well known to most colored people who makes this section his regular prowling place."

If those who talk much about "race integrity" and the preservation of race distinctions, were really sincere, they would move heaven and earth to protect the colored woman of the south, instead of leaving her as the almost defenseless prey to that large percentage of male whites, who are cultures of that sort. Frankly, I never have thought that "race integrity" is worth the ink that it takes to spell it out, but I question the sincerity of those who pretend to think it so important because they make no measures for protection at the real danger point: the disregard of loose white males for Negro womanhood, calling the women by their first names (Mary, Lillian, Sue) and frequently insulting them with impunity except when some Negro man who is concerned, strikes at them and dies for it.

One who has opportunity to get behind the reports and learn the truth, will be shocked terribly, if he has had no previous experience with these mob lies and this traditional scoundrelism,—connived at by the officers of law and winked at or impotently ignored by the "better classes."

The only FINAL REMEDY thinkable is that colored people should have their full political rights, their full quota of votes, so as to help determine who the officers of law should be. One race will not protect another; no race can protect another in its most vital needs. Those southern senators are right who assert that the anti-lynching bill would not have all the votes it now has in Congress if the Negro of the north was as voteless as the Negro in the south. That is true, but that is no an argument for democratic gov- argument against the bill. That is an argument for democratic government. A people who cannot share in political and governmental power, cannot protect themselves,—and the unprotected will be preyed upon the lower elements of the dominant group or race or class.—Meanwhile some of the oppressed will keep on striking back and dyng for it,—until organized decency can make a better society.

AN EXAMPLE FOR LYNCHERS

About two weeks ago, it was reported that an elderly white woman was assaulted near Blythe, in Burke County. A colored man was accused of the crime and an immediate hunt was made for him. As in cases of that kind, a large number of men generally congregate, mostly as a matter of past time, the result, in but a few cases, is always fatal to the person apprehended. If he was caught by a certain element of the ones who were seeking him, no doubt he would have been instantly lynched. Fortunately in that section, there are some law abiding men, two of them, came across the accused. They adroitly carried him to the sheriff. This sheriff also acted in accordance with his oath in his endeavor to protect his prisoner at any odds. He could have easily had him locked up in one of the ordinary jails in that locality, thus inviting mob action. He thwarted those who were inclined to have a lynching party, by bringing the prisoner to the Savannah jail where he is being safely held awaiting the day of trial. The two gentlemen who effected the capture of the accused, and the sheriff are to be commended for their action. The having of such wide-awake citizens, and especially, that calibre of sheriff, in every county, would mean that lynching in Georgia would be a thing of the past and there will be no need whatever for a national anti-lynching bill. The colored man should be given a fair trial and a speedy one. Should he be found guilty, the law's penalty must be immediately inflicted. We abhor such crimes.

White Miss. Women In Shanghai Faced Humiliation

JACKSON, Miss.— (ANP) — One of the few times Mississippi has ever been in the headlines in Chinese newspapers was April 14, after the double blow torch lynching at Duck Hill, according to word received here this week from Mrs. Juanita Byrd, white Mississippian who is professor of English at the University of Shanghai.

She said the North China Daily News, an English language newspaper, carried complete deails of the atrocity on the front page. It is one of the few papers placed in the Shanghai University library and is eagerly read by students. Their reactions were that "missionaries ought to go to Mississippi instead of coming to China."

Mrs. Byrd said she went next day to a tea attended by whites from many states and many countries. When she greeted another white woman also a native of the lynch state, with "hello, fellow Mississippian," her friend replied, "not today" and ducked her head in shame.

"After reading of the lynching, my first feeling was one of humility and indignation," Mrs. Byrd asserted, "but I realize that many Mississippians are doing their best to make lynching impossible even once in a thousand years. I believe in the necessity of a program of Christian education in race relations which will forever do away with attitudes which make lynching a possibility."

A BARBAROUS ACT

The act of a Bainbridge mob Monday night which took the body of a Negro from an undertaking establishment, dragged it through the Negro section of the city and then burned it in the baseball park was one of the most gruesome displays of mob violence in the annals of this state and places Georgia once more in the front ranks of mob crimes. The victim is said to have confessed to have killed two white women in a most brutal murder and, if the confession is genuine, he deserved to pay for his heinous crime with his life. He had been apprehended by officers of the law and was being carried to the Bainbridge jail for incarceration when he is said to have attempted to escape and was killed by the officers. The body was carried to a colored undertaking parlor where later it was taken by the mob and consigned to a pyre in a nearby ball park. The man had paid for his horrible crime when he was killed by the officers but this did not satisfy the blood thirsty mob and so they gave vent to their spleen by consuming his body in flames and taking away as souvenirs whatever they could find after the smoldering ashes had cooled. The crime of this man was a most revolting one. He ought to pay for it with his life, which price was exacted when he was killed by the arresting officers of the law, but for the mob to try to further avenge the crime by burning his lifeless body has marred the escrutcheon not only of the city where the heinous crime was committed but the entire state in a way that will long resound throughout the country. In discussing the act of the mob The Savannah Press says editorially:

Bainbridge has very little to its credit in having taken away from a Negro undertaker the body of a Negro who had committed crimes against two women and had been shot and killed by the arresting officers. The law had been avenged in the killing of the Negro by officers of the law. The body had been turned over to an undertaker for interment. While the remains were in the undertaker's room a mob of 100 men entered and took the body away. It was dragged around the public square at Bainbridge, says an Associated Press report, and later carried to a Negro baseball park and burned.

All of this was a performance which we are sure the better people of Bainbridge will regret. It is not to the credit of Bainbridge or Decatur county that such an event should take place within their borders.

The Negro deserved death for the crimes he had committed. He feared a trial and made an effort to escape. The sheriff's force killed him in order to capture him and to prevent his getting away. After he was dead the law had been thoroughly avenged.

The further mutilation of the body and its disposition on a funeral pyre is

Corpse Lynched

GEORGIA scored a lynching this week. The victim of the mob had been shot to death by the peace officers who had him in custody, and his body deposited with an undertaker. The lynchers raided the undertaker's rooms and carried away the object of their wrath. They dragged the corpse around the town, then took it to the colored baseball park where it was burned with boards ripped off the fence.

Thus goes the story of the latest sadistic revel in the name of a southern institution defended by their votes recently by every southern member of the House with one exception—Congressman Maury Maverick, of Texas.

The man was accused of murdering two women and the officers said he confessed. To those who are familiar with how these confessions are obtained that means nothing. The man may have been guilty. Does anyone doubt that he would have had a speedy trial and execution in Georgia?

But that is not enough. He must be murdered by the law officers who had him handcuffed in a speeding automobile, en route to jail. Then his body must be mangled and burned as a public exhibition of the manner in which the savage instincts of the populace are permitted to operate in lieu of the orderly processes of the law.

Tennessee Lynching is A Warning

Washington, Aug. 20.—Citing the lynching of Albert Gooden at Covington, Tenn., on August 17, as a warning to the Senate that action on a federal anti-lynching bill must be taken speedily in the new session, Senators Robert F. Wagner, of New York and Frederick Van Nuys of Indiana, placed descriptions of the Tennessee lynching in the Congressional Record.

The action of the sponsors of the anti-lynching bill in the Senate was taken at the suggestion of the NAACP. In the last desparate efforts to secure action on a federal anti-lynching bill at this session of Congress, Walter White, NAACP secretary, repeatedly recalled to friends of the bill in the Senate that if action were postponed, the Senate would be in a measure responsible for lynchings which take place in the interim.

The NAACP also has sent a letter to Governor Gordon H. Brownnig of Tennessee, urging him to use every weapon of the state to assist local authorities in speeding up the apprehension and punishment of the lynchers of Gooden. The NAACP letter cited the fact that nothing had been done by the states of Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida following lynchings in those states this year. In Alabama, the state attorney general asserted before the state supreme court that Wesley Johnson, lynched on February 2, was innocent of any crime and had been arrested by the sheriff just to satisfy local clamor. It was admitted that the sheriff knew that Johnson was innocent at the time of the arrest. Despite the fact that an innocent man was lynched, Alabama has done nothing.

As it was to have been expected, Mississippi has made no move whatsoever even to investigate the brutal blow-torch double lynching at Duck Hill, April 13. Despite pronouncements of Governor Fred P. Cone of Florida, the authorities of that state have done nothing to apprehend the lynchers of two boys in Tallahassee on July 20.

The NAACP asserted that the record of the local and state authorities in the six lynchings of 1937 demonstrate that a federal law is necessary if any progress is to be made in wiping out mob violence.

PUSILLANIMOUS INCONSISTENCY

Wednesday's Dailies carried a story of a mob killing a negro who had murdered an officer in Tennessee. It required a part of two pages to carry the story. The same papers had a six inch space telling the story of a murdered man having been shipped into New York in a trunk. A Judge in Tennessee speaking of the negro killing denounced the lynching as "one of the most horrible and disgraceful crimes of Tippah county." Several small girls have been murdered and ravished in the north and east recently, and nary a word been heard from a Judge in denunciation of them. Consistency, thou art certainly a beautiful jewel in some sections of this country.

Gratuitous Suggestion To Southern Lynchers

This lynching of a prisoner taken from the custody of a Tennessee sheriff prompts the suggestion that if the South really desires to have a federal lynching law that would assess fines against a county where a lynching occurred, the thing to do is to have a lynching every few weeks. A few well-staged mob murders just before Congress meets again will cinch passage of the bill now assured of consideration at the next session.

Lynchings in 1936.

Tuskegee Normal and Industrial institute in Alabama reports 9 lynchings in 1936, compared to 20 in 1935 and 15 in 1934 and 28 in 1933. All 9 were negroes, 2 in Arkansas, 1 in Florida, 1 in Mississippi, and 5 in Georgia.

Six of the persons lynched were in the hands of the law, 2 in jails and 4 taken from officers outside of jails.

There were 35 instances in which officers prevented lynchings; 5 in northern states and 30 in southern states. A total of 62 negroes and 7 white persons thus were saved from death at the hands of mobs.

Whether reduction in the number of lynchings has resulted from eyes of the public being fixed more upon such crimes or whether it is a mere incident of time can be only a speculation. The fact that as late as 1933 there were 28 lynchings in one year seems to indicate that it is only an incident of time and that the larger figure is likely to recur at any time.

To Do

Sirs:

About the Duck Hill double-lynching report and picture [TIME, April 26]:

We of the South might possibly handle our own personal problems with, what shall we say, a heavy hand. And you of the East? Black Legion? Of the West? California Kidnap Lynchings? Far and Feather parties? Of the North and Midwest? Milk Strikings and Strike Riots? Sho you-all don't mention those.

Didn't see a picture of the dead white man, shot in the back, cause of all the to-do. Whyn't you print that? . . .

A Madman Stalks the Nation Inciting Murder, Race Hatred in His Press

HEARST'S WALL STREET EDITION DINS LYNCH CALL AGAINST NEGRO PEOPLE

By Joseph North

If a lunatic walked the streets of New York shouting obscenities he would be apprehended at once and sent to Bellevue for a psychopathic examination.

A man is walking through the nation crying obscenities and more than that, inciting to murder, and he goes scot free.

That man is William Randolph Hearst.

His headlines din the maniac's call in the ears of millions yet he walks scot-free.

Yesterday his Procurer's Press had a good day. His New York Journal, for example, had a field day of murder, sex-violence, lynch incitement.

Two women were murdered in New Jersey. It was an atrocious crime. A suspect was taken in custody. As so often happens the police, influenced by the Southern Bourbon psychology of race hatred, picked up a Negro worker.

The Wall Street edition of the Journal had the mob screaming "LYNCH HIM." By late afternoon he had "confessed." Whenever they referred to the suspect they referred to his color. It was the NEGRO porter; it was the burly NEGRO; it was NEGRO, NEGRO, NEGRO.

SEIZE ANY NEGRO

Now in the name of common sense does this differ from the bloodthirsty ravings of a Dixie lynch gang?

We are not discussing at this moment the actual details of this particular case. We are not trying to determine here whether this particular man is guilty or not.

What we do refer to is the insinuation by the Hearst press that the Negro people is responsible. That these are "NEGRO crimes." That is the unspoken indictment of the goose-stepping Hitler-loving Hearst press.

The constant description of the suspect as a Negro can do nothing else than inflame the minds of more backward individuals, those influenced by the Southern Bourbon attitude of race hatred. Hearst is a criminal master of the art of suggestion.

This happens every time one of these crimes is committed. The police are paid to round up suspects. More than often they grab a Negro any Negro near the scene will do. They extort confessions and, as anybody who had any experience in a labor struggle, they know what the third degree means. They know how valid these confessions, extorted under torture, are.

Then the press does its maniac job of inciting to lynch violence. But this it accomplishes in a subtle fashion. Criminologists know this as the art of suggestion.

To date the Negro people are the greatest sufferers. When individuals of other national groups are arrested they are not referred to as the Irish porter, let us say, or the Jewish or the Italian porter. But invariably, if a man is black, he is a Negro porter in the headlines.

The greatest offenders are the Hearst papers. But the other press is by no means innocent of this crime. For it is a crime—a great, brutal social crime—this subtle incitation to lynch law, to the spread of race hatred.

The World-Telegram yesterday said: "A Negro handyman, 27, had confessed. . . ." The Post also termed him "Negro." In fact every commercial paper in town, reactionary or liberal, did the same.

The tabloid News, on page three, had a veritable Hearstian holiday. Three stories of sex crimes and murders throughout the land were attributed to Negroes. All this on one page—Page three. The cumulative effect of this must constitute a terrible indictment in the minds of the backward elements of the population.

All progressive minded people must take a firm stand on this issue. They must ask the press: Do you want race rioting? They must ask if the newspapers subscribe to Hitler's lunatic theories of superior and inferior races—the white versus the colored, and the colored capable of all imaginable crimes.

The headlines give this impression. They do it daily. They don't say so editorially but their news stories have that effect.

And consider the terrible toll this takes among America's growing generations. They are daily fed their dose of race hatred. In addition they get their ration of crime and sex violence.

Hearst will probably reply that such headlines tend to ward off these crimes. Nonsense, criminal nonsense! On the contrary, they tend to inflame the mentally unbalanced. The story of Lindbergh kidnapping, for example, provoked scores of kidnappings. The story of a sex crime stimulates the sexually insane to go and do likewise.

This pandering to the horrors of life under capitalism goes by the name of journalism. This is the vaunted journalism of the Hearst press. And not only they, but the liberal papers commit the same crime.

Only the labor press differs. Only the Daily Worker crusades against the handling of "news" in such a fashion.

Those who poison wells are no less criminal than those who poison minds.

Mr. Hearst, you are guilty of the great crime of poisoning the minds of the young of this country.

Mr. Hearst, you belong in a lunatic asylum!

RACES

Lynch & Anti-Lynch

In Washington, before a gallery crowded with Negroes, the U. S. House of Representatives was beginning to debate a drastic anti-lynching bill introduced by Congressman Gavagan from New York's Black Harlem. In Jackson, Miss., before delegates to a farm conference, Governor Hugh Lawson White was boasting that Mississippi had not had a lynching in 15 months. In Winona, Miss., in a jampacked courtroom in Montgomery County's white brick courthouse, Roosevelt Townes and Bootjack McDaniels, 26-year-old Negroes, were pleading not guilty to a charge of murdering a crossroads country grocer during a robbery last December at nearby Duck Hill. One day last week these simultaneous events were the prolog of a bloody melodrama, peculiarly Southern.

As the debate at Washington droned on, furnishing a strange far-off accompaniment, Negroes Townes and McDaniels were led handcuffed from the courtroom. If their minds registered anything as the sheriff and two deputies escorted them down the back stairs to return them to jail, it was relief. The Court had assigned counsel to defend them, set a date for trial by jury. Everything was according to law. But when they stepped out of a side door of the courthouse, they found themselves face to face with what so often handles cases like theirs in the South. An angry mob surged forward, took them from the custody of their guardians without a struggle, threw them into a school bus.

Followed by 40 automobiles, the bus sped down the highway toward Duck Hill. Two miles from the scene of last December's murder, 500 country folk, including women and children, waited expectantly in a patch of pinewood. When the motorcade from Winona arrived, the mob closed in to watch as the terrified Negroes were dragged from the bus. People in the back rows could hear heavy chains clink as the two blackamoors were made fast to trees.

Bootjack McDaniels, a lanky Negro with powerful shoulders, was asked to confess first. He gibbered that he was innocent. A mobster stepped forward with a plumber's blow torch, lighted it. Another ripped McDaniels' shirt off. Again he refused to confess. Then the blue-white flame of the torch stabbed into his black chest. He screamed with agony. The torch was withdrawn. He reiterated his innocence. Again the torch was turned on him and the smell of burned flesh floated through the woods. Again he screamed, and when it was withdrawn this time he was ready to confess. He was with Townes, he sobbed, when Townes poked a shotgun through the grocery window, fired into the grocer's back. When his confession was delivered in sufficient detail, the lynchers fell back and a volley of bullets crashed into Bootjack McDaniels, 1937's lynching victim No. 2.

Despite what he had just witnessed, Negro Townes was not yet ready to repeat the confession which county officers had said he signed with his X after he was arrested last fortnight. But the blow torch soon burned the story out of him. As he hung limp in his chains, some of the mob went off to get another Negro he named as an accomplice. Back they came with one Shorty Dorroh. After he satisfied them that he had had nothing to do with the murder, they horsewhipped him, ordered him to get out of the State. Then they piled brush high about sobbing Negro Townes, drenched it with gasoline, touched him off—1937's lynching victim No. 3.

Back in Winona, the judge who had heard the Negroes' pleas of not guilty promised a Grand Jury investigation, but the sheriff and his men said they had not recognized any of the mobsters who seized their prisoners. Said Deputy Sheriff Hugh Curtis: "It was all done very quickly, quietly and orderly."

In Washington the House debate rose to a furious crescendo after Michigan's Michener read a press report of what had just happened at Duck Hill. Negroes in the gallery, who had cheered and applauded intermittently throughout the day when one of their champions made a good point on the floor, were shocked into silence. Two days later, with all but 17 Southern Representatives out of 123 voting against it, the Gavagan anti-lynching bill, which would make mobsters and law officers who yield up their prisoners liable to stiff Federal prosecution, was passed by the House.

Few proposals have caused more excited debate in the halls of Congress than Federal anti-lynching bills. At least one is offered every session. This session there were 59. The first anti-lynching bill, introduced in the house in 1902, was inspired not by lynchings of Southern Negroes but by the large number of lynchings in the 1880s and 1890s in which white aliens were the victims. These crimes caused the Government no end of embarrassment, resulted in payments of $475,500 in indemnities to foreign governments. When the South continued to lynch Negroes after alien lynchings ceased, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was organized to do something about it and anti-lynching legislation became a permanent sectional issue. The first bill to get through the House did so in 1922. Southern Senators killed it with a 21-day filibuster. In 1935 the Southern bloc in the Senate filibustered six days to smother a similar bill.

Few Washington observers would concede last week's bill an outside chance in the Senate. Many doubted that it would ever get out of committee. The fact that the Administration needs the support of Southern Senators to get the President's Court Plan passed, caused considerable speculation when the anti-lynching bill got through the House. A filibuster, which seemed almost certain, could jam up the legislative mill and thus delay or prevent passage of the Court legislation. Administration leaders feared that Southern Senators who oppose the Court Plan might welcome a filibuster on this other issue of such powerful interest to the folks back home as a disguise for their opposition to the White House.

BOOTJACK MCDANIELS & ROOSEVELT TOWNES

17 Southern Representatives voted for the anti-lynching bill.

AT Duck Hill, Mississippi, there occurred last week one of the worst lynchings of recent years—if, indeed, one lynching can be said to be worse than another. Two Negroes, accused of robbing and murdering a country storekeeper three and a half months ago, were tied to trees, and blow-torches applied to their flesh. Not unnaturally, they thereupon "confessed" and their bodies were riddled with bullets. Two days later, the national House of Representatives passed the Gavagan anti-lynching bill. The affair at Duck Hill may have had something to do with the vote, but this is far from certain; the Representatives divided on geographical lines, the entire Southern delegation being opposed, except Representative Maury Maverick. Washington correspondents expect the bill to be defeated in the Senate, in which the South is heavily overrepresented in terms of the national population. The Gavagan bill would make it a federal offense for peace officers to yield their prisoners to a mob. The family of a victim could bring suit for damages against the county. Local prosecuting officials who failed to act after a lynching could be tried for a federal offense. If these local officers failed to act within thirty days, federal prosecution would be possible against the actual members of the mob. There is, of course, no automatic guarantee that lynching would come to an end if the bill becomes law. Nevertheless, there is substantial evidence that a federal statute would have a beneficial effect; this is shown by experience under similar statewide laws and by the reduced number of lynchings during the time when a federal measure has, in the past, received even serious consideration.

LYNCHING

THE crime of lynching being what it is, it seems much more useful to approach it by means of state legislation than by avenues that lead through Washington. The sentiment of the nation as a whole is against lynching and is desirous of stamping out at the earliest possible moment such orgies of cruelty as disgraced the state of Mississippi x x x. But the fact is that national sentiment and national legislation have an uphill job in those communities which still labor under mediaeval ideas of racial justice. The task is to awaken the enlightened citizens of the localities to the enormity of the crime which they are tolerating. Once they are awakened, local action of a most effective character will follow and the statistics of lynching which it is now the doleful duty of research workers at Tuskegee to compile will become matters of history.—Baltimore Sun.

Lynchings Decrease

For a number of years Tuskegee Institute has been tabulating the returns of lynching and it is pleasing to observe that President F. D. Patterson reports that there has been a decline in mob action every decade since 1887.

Dr. Patterson gives three reasons for the decline and they are, we believe, sound observations. The first is the disappearance of frontier characteristics in the South; the breaking down of isolation in the South through the development of rural free delivery, increased communication facilities; paved roads and radio; the third, "increased agitation within the South against lynching."

While the Tuskegee figures have always reflected a view that lynching was peculiarly a Southern phenomena it is surprising that the Negro does not give any credit to activity of people in other sections who are usually quick to condemn something happening away from home. He even goes so far as to term lynching a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Lynching, and The Power of Publicity.

THE power of publicity to cure public evil has perhaps never been better illustrated than by the plan which the late Booker T. Washington launched some years ago at the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute in Alabama.

This great Negro leader was concerned by the number of Negroes who were being deprived of trial and being lynched by mobs.

His plan was the simple, effective one of shining the light of fact on the situation. Each year-end he compiled a list of lynchings, and mailed them out to the newspapers of the country. He attached no comment. But there stood the facts, showing how many persons were lynched, how many were white, how many were Negroes, what state the lynchings occurred in, and how many lynchings were prevented by peace officers.

Thus his simple recital of facts became a dishonor roll of states. Newspapers supplied the comment, if any.

But the facts alone were a terrible indictment of some states; a type of national publicity which hurts; and the press of the lynch states began to wake up under the lash of accusing public facts, and peace officers became active in preventing lynchings.

Booker Washington's plan worked.

Lynchings have steadily decreased under this type of report of facts.

THE latest report, issued by F. D. Patterson, the president of the Tuskegee Institute, is the current evidence of the power of publicity when the public is given the facts.

There were only 9 persons lynched in the United States in 1936, and 35 persons were saved from mobs by the action of peace officers. This is 11 less than for 1935 and 28 less than for 1933.

All of the 9 persons lynched were Negroes, and all were taken away from peace officers—2 taken from jails.

The offenses charged, as quoted from Doctor Patterson's letter, were: "rape, 3; attempted rape, 3; murder, 1; activity in share cropper strike, 1; charge not reported, 1."

And here is the final paragraph of the letter—the roll of lynchings by states: "Arkansas, 2 Florida, 1; Georgia, 5; Mississippi, 1."

No comment there. No condemnation, except the lash of facts.

And that lash has been increasingly effective

NEW TREND SEEN IN BAN ON LYNCHING

Head of Tuskegee Institute Credits Drop to Growth of Merciful Attitude.

By the Associated Press.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., February 20.—Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, today credited a 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-96 period, and 151 in the 1927-36 period.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings totaled 1,030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors as contributing to the decline. The first, he said, is the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear; second, the breaking down of isolation in the South by increased communciation facilities, and third, "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings."

ANOTHER TASK

The president of Tuskegee Institute attributes a decline of 90 per cent in the number of lynchings in the United States over the last half century to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people." It is conceded that the work of alert sheriffs and other officers of the law has been a factor in the gradual approach to a more civilized order.

Through the operation of these combined forces, then, it may be hoped that the activities of certain primitive religious sects in conducting "prayer floggings" of people who are disapproved in communities of eastern North Carolina will be halted in less than another half century.—From the Kansas City Star.

Georgia Answers Congress With Another Lynching

The lynch mob down in Georgia yesterday was disappointed.

When it got to the jail, their victim, the 22-year-old Willie Reid, had already been lynched by the police who shot him down "while attempting to escape."

So the mob lynched Willie Reid again, burning his bullet-riddled body in a local ball-park.

This is the fourth gruesome murder of a Negro seized on the filthy false frame-up of "alleged rape" within the past month.

The Southern lynchers are, no doubt of it at all, carrying out a deliberate act of defiance against the anti-lynch forces which passed the Gavagan anti-lynch bill in the House, and against the proposed Wagner-Van Nuys bill in the Senate.

The Mississippi torch-burner lynching a few weeks ago galvanized the House into acting on the Gavagan measure. The latest horrible act must have the same effect on the Senate.

This lynch savagery is the work of a small clique of diehard, brutish interests who profit from the oppression of the Negro people. Determined and united action of the American people, Negro and white alike, could stamp this cowardly beastliness out.

Punish the lynchers! Make lynching a Federal crime! Congress must act!

Churches Stop a Lynching

Christian Century

THAT the church, aroused to its social responsibilities in local communities, can put an end to lynching is indicated by recent incidents in the town of Dalton in northern Georgia. In August the lynching of a Negro there stirred such determined protest on the part of local ministers and an organization of Georgia church women that the threatened lynching last week of two men under arrest for assault upon a Dalton grocer was promptly prevented by the police of town and county, whose laxity in the previous case had been the object of the ministers' outspoken condemnation. Last week also President Patterson of Tuskegee in commenting upon the decline in the number of lynchings in 1936 (there were nine as compared with twenty in 1935 and fifteen in 1934), is reported to have given large credit to the "new position" of the white ministers of the South. One remembers Dalton as the town where five years ago Miss Juliette Derricotte, noted Y.W.C.A. leader and at that time dean of women at Fisk University, suffered a fatal automobile accident—fatal probably because the Dalton hospital had no facilities to offer colored people. Miss Derricotte had to be moved thirty miles to Chattanooga, where she died. Perhaps her death had some part in arousing Dalton's white churches to their responsibility for interracial justice. If so, it was not the utterly tragic waste it seemed at first. That incident of five years ago, however, should serve as a solemn reminder that lynching is part and parcel of the segregation system. Dalton did not lynch Miss Derricotte; it just let her die. Lynching is only the occasional manifestation of a continuing persecution, no less cruel and costly because it is covert and often unintended. To put an end to lynching will involve destroying the whole system of racial segregation and discrimination, north and south, of which lynching is only a symptom and a symbol.

Lynch Incitement Must Stop

• On Saturday the Daily Worker warned that the capitalist press was converting the arrest of Major Green, Negro porter, charged with the murder of Mrs. Mary Harriet Case, into an anti-Negro case.

That very day brought additional confirmation of this fact. A group of Brooklyn Negroes charged that the lynch-hysteria whipped up against Green has already resulted in the firing of between 300 and 400 Negroes from jobs throughout the city.

One of the members of the Negro group, George E. Wibecan, president of the Crispus Attucks Community Council, described the situation when he declared:

"When an Italian or a Hebrew is arrested, there is no cry against his race. But when a Negro is arrested, there is a prejudice raised against the entire race. Whenever a woman is involved, there is a cry that a Negro must be guilty. So it was in the Titterton case when a white man was found to be responsible."

New York City has already been disgraced by the shameful cry of "Lynch him!" that was hurled at Green the other day.

The anti-Negro sentiment whipped up in this case is not an isolated phenomenon. Congressman Dickstein has just announced that his investigators have discovered that there are 200,000 members of the Ku Klux Klan in New York State and numerous members of the Black Legion.

It is such sinister forces that are undoubtedly now seeking to exploit the arrest of Green. Let there be an end to this trial by press and vicious race incitement which is resulting in the victimization of other Negroes.

The efforts of the Brooklyn Negro group to secure a fair trial for Green and to prevent the case from being used against the entire Negro people should receive the fullest support.

CUT IN LYNCHING LAID TO RENEWED FIGHT BY PASTORS

Tuskegee Head Says Drive Reduced Number of U. S. Victims to Nine

By BENSON Y. LANDIS

Mr. Landis is associate secretary of the department of research and education of the Federal Council of Churches and executive secretary of the American Country Life Association. He has won recognition as a student of sociology.

The "new position" of the ministers of the South, vigorously denouncing lynching and working for its early eradication was credited this week with being an important factor in a decline in the number of persons lynched in 1936, as compared with the previous three years, by President Patterson of Tuskegee Institute, which makes an annual report on this situation.

Nine persons were lynched in 1936. All were Negroes. All lynchings took place in the South in 1936, although most States of the Union have had lynchings in their history. In 1935 there were twenty lynchings; in 1934, fifteen; in 1933, twenty-eight. Five of the nine high crimes of 1936 took place in Georgia. Arkansas had two, Florida one, Mississippi one.

Dr. Patterson stated that not so many years ago ministers in small Southern towns kept quiet on the subject of lynching and considered it "impolitic" to discuss the matter from their pulpits. Today, however, white ministers are speaking out and getting results.

A Striking Example

A striking recent illustration was an event in Dalton, Ga., where A. L. McCamy, a Negro, was lynched last summer, but where officers of the law promptly prevented the lynching of two Negroes this week. The ministers and white churchwomen of Dalton and vicinity made such an appeal to public opinion that the public officials were able to conduct themselves differently than during the summer.

Peace officers prevented thirty-five attempted lynchings in 1936, and thirty of these instances were in the South, according to the Tuskegee records. Six of the nine person lynched, however, were in the hands of public authorities, who allowed prisoners to be taken away from them, in some cases without a show of resistance.

Some authorities say that lynching is now generally confined to the smaller, more isolated communities, and urge that interracial co-operation be hastened in those places. Probably economic recovery and a lessening of stress and strain in many places during 1936 account to a great degree for the recent favorable trend.

The year 1937 will be marked by industrial conflict, the Rev. Dr. John Howard Melish of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity in Brooklyn predicted this week in a New Year's message. He urged that the churches stand by and be ready to act as mediators, leaving arbitration for those with technical skill.

Churchmen as Mediators

The difficulties that churchmen encounter as industrial mediators were revealed this week when Kelly Loe, a labor leader of Portland, Ore., broke with the committee on social and industrial betterment of the Portland Council of Churches.

Said Loe: "The ministry is still in the dark ages where property rights are concerned." He contended that Rev. William G. Everson, minister of the First Baptist Church of Portland, also chairman of the Oregon State Board of Conciliation, had fallen into an "employer's trap" when he initiated the return to work of strikers in a textile mill, pending an adjustment of differences.

The labor leader went on to say: "It seems the ministers are very poorly informed on industrial matters. I have no idea that any conferences or relations will be able to change the attitude of the clergymen who are the spokesmen of the church."

Loe took this step after having been one of three fraternal delegates from the Portland Central Labor Council to the Portland Council of Churches which, in turn, had sent fraternal delegates to the labor body. This dispute between a labor leader and churchmen dashed hopes once entertained that the religious forces might mediate in the maritime strike in Portland.

Asks Tax on Churches

Churches, commonly exempt from taxation, and usually seeking to avoid public levies, should pay taxes for the services rendered to their property, the Rev. David Rhys Williams, minister of the First Unitarian Church of Rochester, N. Y., declared this week. Dr. Williams recommends that the taxation be begun in small doses, say 5 per cent of the total amount of the first year, increasing five per cent annually over a period of twenty years.

The minister recommended that his own church set the example. In support of his position he said: "It is neither democratic nor chivalrous to tax any portion of the community to support what is essentially a volunteer enterprise in which a large part of the community may not believe. There is already too much tax exempt property today. This condition seems to be increasing. Is it not time that a protest was made? The best protest is an example."

Other Events of Week

Thousands of New Hampshire residents thronged churches in all sections last Sunday marking the State's first Everybody-Go-to-Church Sunday. At the same time Governor H. Styles Bridges appointed the third Sunday in January for people to contemplate the importance of religion. Pastors reported large attendances in churches of many denominations.

Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, foreign secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, was awarded the Pi Lambda Pi Tolerance Medal issued by this Jewish fraternity for having "most convincingly achieved world-wide recognition as a true exponent of tolerance."

In Tulsa, Okla., Jews joined with Christians in donating funds to purchase 300 New Testaments for inmates of the Paul's Valley (Okla.) Reformatory.

The year just ended had the lowest number of lynchings in half a century, with one exception, according to figures released from Tuskegee Institute, says the Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch. Only nine persons were put to death in this fiendish fashion during 1936, one more than for 1932, when the best record of all was made. The United States is the only supposedly civilized country in the world where such things occur, and yet the toll of lynchings continues year year by year, with the number lynched varying between 8 and 33 since 1923. Prior to that year, the totals were much higher, and there has been a clearly discernible

"Lynched by a Mob Of 100 Men"

"Wesley Johnson, 22-year old Negro youth, was today dragged from the county jail and lynched by a mob of approximately 100 men."

Such was the wretched news yesterday from Abbeyville, Ala.

What a world of horrors is condensed in that one dispatch! What a picture of the tortures of this youth, merely because he was a Negro! What a bitter recollection of the crucifixion that goes on and on in allegedly democratic America against the Negro people!

The degenerate sadism of the mob was shown by their gross and cowardly act in riddling the body of the victim with bullets, as he hung dying from strangulation.

While this and other like crimes go on against the Negroes of the South, the Congress solemnly blocks Federal anti-lynching legislation. Senator William Borah, the sham-liberal Senator from Idaho, talks at great length about the "sacredness of the Constitution." He and others like him hide behind those words, to cover up their disregard for the sacredness of human life. Behind it, they oppose the sole way by which the lynching crime can be halted—through Federal legislation.

The blood of this Negro youth, so cruelly murdered, cries out to the progressive forces in America to move with speed and determination for the passage of this legislation.

Lynchings totaled 1030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907 and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors as contributing to the decline, the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear, the breaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephones in small towns and rural areas, the radio, and paved roads, and, third, increasing agitation within the South against lynchings.

FOR THE WHITE MAN

Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of the Tuskegee Institute, announced recently that a bust of Dr. George W. Carver would be done by the distinguished sculptor, Steffen Thomas.

The bust is to be presented to the school by friends of Dr. Carver. The cost is not great, and only small contributions are asked.

Dr. Carver is one of the best friends the white man or black man has in Alabama. He has served both races, faithfully and intelligently. They both now are contributing so that this honor may be paid him while he still lives and works.

But is not this an opportunity primarily for the white man of Alabama to express his appreciation of the work done by this son of slaves? It would be particularly appropriate if the white people of Alabama should bear the cost of this bust of George Washington Carver. — Birmingham Age-Herald.

Making Mockery Of Justice

THE Civil Liberties League, the League for the Advancement of the Colored Race, and similar organizations have for six years cooperated to defeat justice and prevent disposition of the Scottsboro case, with the end still invisible.

The Scottsboro case appeared simple enough in the beginning. A group of negroes were charged with criminally assaulting two white women, some of the negroes confessed, and the disposition of the cases appeared to be merely a matter of routine. But it was not so, as is made clear by the fact that the case has dragged along for six years and now is going into another trial.

This situation should serve to give the people of the South a fairly accurate idea of what could happen in the South were the Congress to adopt and the Supreme Court sustain any of the vicious anti-lynch bills now pending.

Should one of these occasional lynchings occur under the anti-lynch laws as proposed, the federal government would step into the situation and every citizen of the county in which the lynching occurred would become a virtual defendant, with the possibility of being fined as much as ten thousand dollars, the money to go to the family of the victim. States' rights in the trial of such cases would vanish and one may easily imagine the sort of prosecutions that would take place with federal agents from out of the state pushing prosecutions, aided and abetted by various national organizations that are embittered toward the South.

Such gross invasions of states' rights are held unconstitutional as matters stand, but advocates of these anti-lynch bills look to an enlarged Supreme Court to declare them legal. They contain a grave menace toward the South, which is doing much more to prevent the lynching of persons than the North is doing to prevent the lynching of the law, and their enactment and approval should be resisted in every way possible.

Proper Channels

A survey published a short time ago revealed that lynchings had declined remarkably during the last year.

Several months ago, night-riding members of the Midwestern Black Legion were brought to book by the law.

In Pennsylvania, a state trooper has been found guilty of the "third degree" murder of a hotel man.

These facts are all totally unrelated and yet taken together perhaps they are indicative of one thing.

Perhaps they reveal that people in general are coming more and more to realize that infractions against law and order must be handled only through the proper channels of justice; that citizens cannot take the law into their own hands no matter how well such a course seems justified.

Mobster Rule

Over 40 anti-lynching bills have been introduced in the present Congress. Despite cynical criticism, we think the flood of anti-lynching bills is most significant. Mob rule has virtually superseded constituted authority in many places. In Chicago and Cook County, Illinois, for many years the number of executions by mobsters has vastly exceeded the number of electrocutions in the Cook County jail. The portly sheriffs of Cook County have been reduced to the status of civilian officials serving garnishments and eviction notices, while the job of executing criminals has been left to the official executioners of the Capone, Tuohy Moran and other mobs.

And it must be admitted that these extra legal executions are done with admirable dispatch. Many evildoers are removed from society. Many puzzling problems of business competition and control of labor unions are settled by the unofficial tribunals and executions of racketeer super government, which enforces its racket codes despite the Supreme Court's decision in the sick chicken case. In New York the super government of rackets executes many more offenders than march through the little green door at Sing Sing. As in Chicago, many lines of business are regulated by this system of lynch law. Restaurants, laundries, the cleaning and dyeing trades, the marketing of fish, not to speak of the distribution of beer and liquor to mobster saloons and the control of race track news and betting is regulated by racket law in many barbaric urban belts. Vulgarians often speak of these unofficial protagonists of social order as "gangsters," but from the historical standpoint the "gangster" of today is not intrinsically different from the vigilantes or members of the anti-horse thief associations which reduced the wild and woolly frontier to order.

Doubtless some will raise the old cry of "states' rights" against efforts by Congress to give the federal government control of local police matters, but if the authority of the constitutional local governments is to be restored, the strong arm of Washington must intervene. There is no doubt that mob rule can be destroyed. After the Mafia dominated Sicily for centuries, Mussolini broke it up. He even cleaned up the Camorra of Naples, which was every bit as strong as the Racketeria of Chicago.

However, restoration of old-fashioned courthouse law in the backward barbarian parts of America will be no easy task. In the first place, the highly organized urban mob operating continuously, well financed and well armed, presents a more difficult problem than the old-fashioned frontier mob that used to hang a horse thief or the spontaneous mob that once in a great while rises in wrath over some atrocious crime perpetrated against a woman or other helpless victim. That kind of mob was sporadic and is becoming so rare as to be a fading anachronism. But lynch law of the modern scientific variety is not declining. If anything it is becoming more powerful and pervasive. If there is an occasional lull in the number of urban lynchings it does not indicate that the properly constituted legal authorities have regained power, but on the contrary that resistance to the edicts and decrees of mobster government has about disappeared.

Any attempt to restore law and order in such places as Chicago, New York, Minneapolis or St. Paul will encounter much public sentiment that not only is inclined to condone, but to defend the summary execution of offenders against mob and racket rule. In Chicago most of these killings elicited a public response to the effect that the victim got what was coming to him. That sentiment was well summed up in the observation of Hon. Ted Newberry, himself a shining light in the realm of Racketeria before his light was put out with a submachine gun. Said Ted, in commenting on the demise of a once famous fellow mobster: "He must have done something; they don't kill you for nothing."

AN ANTI-LYNCHING LAW

Certain Congressional leaders are again agitating for a federal anti-lynching law. The latest measure designed to place a heavy penalty upon counties in which mob violence occurs has been introduced by Senators Wagner of New York and Van Nuys of Indiana. Under the provisions of the proposed legislation, communities in which lynchings take place would be fined from $2,000 to $20,000 and officers who, by neglect of duty, allow prisoners to be taken from their hands, would also be fined and imprisoned. Commenting on the bill the Baltimore Evening Sun says:

"If this bill offered any reasonable prospect of the abolition of lynching, a great many persons would waive their objections to its plain invasion of States' rights and support it.

"But why should anyone think that it will abolish lynching? A guilty sheriff must be tried and convicted before he can be punished. He may be tried in a federal court under this bill, but he is, nevertheless, entitled to a trial by jury; and if the jury is drawn from a community that tolerates lynching, can it be expected to convict?

"The cure for lynching does not lie in the enactment of statutes—federal, state or municipal—but in civilizing the forlorn and semi-barbarous communities in which lynchings occur. This may be a long and difficult process, to be sure, but it is the only process that will effect a cure."

It seems to us that considerable progress in civilizing "forlorn and semi-barbarous communities" has been made in the last several decades. Last year less than ten lynchings occurred as compared with hundreds in some years prior to the turn of the century. As a matter of fact, lynching has for some years become less and less of a problem. The measure introduced in the Senate is, of course, aimed at the South, it being assumed that Southern States have not adopted any plans whereby lawless murder can be dealt with, if not ended. However, at least several of the Southern States have devised legislation in the interest of lynching prevention. Virginia is among them. The Old Dominion does not tolerate the crime and over a long period of time lynching has become virtually extinct in this State. The passage of a punitive federal act will in our opinion serve no useful purpose in reducing mob violence.

Lynchings Decrease

FOR a number of years Tuskegee Institute has been tabulating the returns of lynching and it is pleasing to observe that President F. D. Patterson reports that there has been a decline in mob action every decade since 1887.

Dr. Patterson gives three reasons for the decline and they are, we believe, sound observations. The first is the disappearance of frontier characteristics in the South; the breaking down of isolation in the South through the development of rural free delivery, increased communications facilities; paved roads and radio; the third "increased agitation within the South against lynching."

While the Tuskegee figures have always reflected a view that lynching was peculiarly a Southern phenomena it is surprising that the Negro does not give any credit to activity of people in other sections who are usually quick to condemn something happening away from home. He even goes so far as to term lynching a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Seeking Responsibility For A Crime Against Order

This paper is pleased that the authorities have not ceased to try to fix the responsibility in Henry County for the recent lynching of a Negro prisoner there. It greets with satisfaction the institution of impeachment proceedings against the sheriff whose duty it was to protect his prisoner from unlawful seizure.

Following the lynching, Gov. Graves is quoted as saying that "mob rule shall not prevail in Alabama." Evidently he intends to push this Henry County investigation, since it was at his direction, so the public is told, that the impeachment proceedings have been started. It is this paper's hope that the governor means what he said, although it cannot help recalling that he made a similar statement after Joseph S. Gelders was abducted, flogged and robbed last September.

It is only fair to Sheriff Corbitt of Henry County to keep in mind that this is his first hearing on any charges growing out of the lynching. The Henry County Grand Jury that investigated the death of the prisoner reported that it had not considered the sheriff's part in the matter since Gov. Graves had already ordered his impeachment.

The sheriff's side of the case ought now to be made public. He is quoted as saying he could identify several members of the mob that broke into his rather flimsy jail and took away the prisoner he was sworn to protect. The public would like to know now why the sheriff's ability to recognize the gangsters was not utilized by the Grand Jury which was also sworn to protect law and order.

There are a number of questions about this case that ought to be cleared up, both for the sake of justice to the sheriff who alone of all those involved now stands accused, and for the sake of that ideal of justice and respect for law which must remain supreme in this land if the nation is not to fail.

Is Lynching Now Lawful?

When a governor of South Carolina publicly approved of lynching for a single crime and in certain circumstances, saying, "To hell with the constitution," he was condemned by the press of the country. We joined in the condemnation. The day has dawned when the lynching of the law can be and is approved tacitly or in spoken words by the highest authorities. If fifty men, without violation of law, may stop work in a shop, close the doors and windows, forbid the owner of the shop to enter it, may they not kill him if he break the lock and cross the threshold? If it be lawful to take and hold another man's property, why is it not lawful to lynch him if he do not submit to it?

THIS MORNING

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES II.

* * * *

"No man ere felt the halter draw
With good opinion of the law."

Even though some of them, in our opinion, are prolonging unwisely a legal fight against social controls sure to be assumed if the machine age is to justify itself, we hold ourself second to none in appreciation of what lawyers mean—and have meant and will continue meaning—to this country. Lawyers as a group are our ablest men, and when the reach of their activity is considered, their ethics are extraordinarily high. When Newton D. Baker told a university board of trustees the other day that the best choice they could make for the vacant presidency of their university was some young lawyer of recognized talent and local background, he was not being fatuous about his own profession. He was simply giving expression to the fact that in nearly every community the best education, the soundest judgment, the finest balance, the longest background and the most generous compound of philosophy with executive ability belong to certain leading lawyers.

* * * *

In this writer's own life the friends he has respected most and loved best have been lawyers, and through the eyes of friendship he has been able to know the integrity, the dignity of soul and depth of heart, which can distinguish members of the great profession.

* * * *

To leave everything to our lawyers, though, is to do them a disservice. There is no group of men, no matter how able and fine, which is sufficiently free of some special point of view or color of interest or influence of association to be entrusted with the whole destiny of this nation. Lawyers are not to be trusted, and neither are government officials, or college professors, or labor leaders, or businessmen, or even (mirabile dictu!) newspapermen. These are days when all of us are under necessity of thinking for ourselves as we have never thought before. Only from such thinking, from the interplay of many intellectual forces can we hope to arrive anywhere.

* * * *

Hamilton Basso, who disagrees with us on the number of people in the south who believe in the need of occasional extra-legal action (polite for lynchings and floggings), writes that this "is one of the most amiable controversies I have ever engaged in." His own statistical estimate is that "there is a rather large pro-lynching fringe on one side and a smaller anti-lynching fringe on the other. In between these margins lie most of the southern people—more or less neutral in attitude, apt to be influenced one way or the other. These are the people we have to get on the liberal side because the fixed attitudes of the margins are not likely to change. And the way to get them on the anti-lynching side, it seems to me, is to begin with the presumption that they are as honorable and decent as the people of any other section, and, therefore, hate flogging and lynchings as much as anybody else. . . ."

* * * *

Mr. Basso agrees with us that there is a social and emotional difference between floggers and lynchers. "Floggings," he thinks, "are cold-blooded, done by a a few people who are either angry or afraid."

* * * *

We must stick to it that there are many honest and literate men in the south who believe in the need of vigilantes, that nothing much can be accomplished towards stopping lynchings and floggings until these men are given a new point of view, and that you can never change their point of view by calling them names.

Would it Have Happened?

Of course merely enacting a Federal law would not end lynchings. Once a mob gets in motion it cares little for laws, regardless of what statute books they are written in.

But it is interesting, we think, to speculate as to whether that mob which tortured and lynched two Negroes over in Mississippi Tuesday would ever have got in motion if the Gavagan anti-lynch bill had been in effect, instead of merely in the process of debate.

When news of the outrage reached the floors of Congress, one Mississippi lawmaker arose and said that his state did not "condone" such lawlessness, and that "the good citizens of the state will resent it."—Birmingham Post.

Reason Abdicated In Mob Rule

FATHER and mother and children in their teens joined the motorcade to the mortuary in Bainbridge, Ga., where the dead body of an alleged Negro rapist lay on a slab. Some of the cars carried women alone. Ordinarily, these girls and women fear the sight of death; they even fear insects and might faint at the thought of picking up a caterpillar.

On Sundays they go to church, and pray and sing, and they give of their tenderness to make homes for their fathers and husbands.

But all these ties were broken down by thought of the crime with which the Negro was charged. It was said he had murdered two white women and had attacked the younger of his victims.

The Negro had been killed by officers of the law who claimed he was attempting to escape.

His body had been taken to the undertaker's mortuary.

He represented the cause of the dread which the Georgia whites inherited from reconstruction days—the dread of the crime of rape which has struck apprehension to the minds of fathers and husbands from the very dawn of family life in the world, and which is even more terrifying to those who fear the crime of rape from a person of another race. This double hatred — hatred of another race and hatred of a fearful crime against womanhood, fired the souls of all those Georgia men and women and children as they drove their cars to the mortuary.

They seized the dead body of the Negro, dragged it to the baseball park and burned it. They may have imagined that they were using the body as an example, and that it might prevent rape in the future.

But horror feeds upon horror, and the next lynching will be perhaps a little more ghastly than this, if that is possible, and the next rape will be a little more terrible since the rapist will have the added motive of striking back at a race which burns a dead body.

Nothing was solved by the lynching of the Negro.

Nothing was proved, except that ordinarily gentle Southern women and children can be converted into ghouls and that the fire of hate sears the conscience and turns people into brutish beasts. Mobile, Ala., Register

ABOUT LYNCHING

Last week this paper published a speech by Hon. John Rankin, of the First district, on what is called the anti-lynching bill. In connection a little comment was published by the publisher. No doubt the impression prevails largely that the supposed intent of this bill is to protect negroes from mobs. Its evident intent is to protect any person of any race or color, but, as Mr. Rankin said, it would fail in its purpose because it provides heavy punishment of an officer from whom a prisoner is taken by a mob and lynched.

There is another thing to be considered. In case this bill becomes a law and a fine of $10,000 was assessed against the county for the benefit of the family of the illegally executed person, who would pay this fine? It would come out of the pockets of the taxpayers, colored, as well as white. No distinction could be made—our colored citizens would have to pay their part. Would they care to go to this additional expense just because some utterly worthless and depraved criminal, guilty of a most heinous crime, was put out of the way by a mob? We think not.

Lynching is not confined to the south, and here it is growing less frequent. All the time sentiment against it is spreading. The best citizens wish for a fair trial of the accused, even in the most revolting cases of criminalty.

More Dixie Editors on Federal Lynching Law

U. S. Lynch Law Insured

[Columbia, S. C., State]

THE Mississippi mob that tortured and then burned to death two young Negro men accused of murdering a white storekeeper during the last week in December, probably insured the passage by Congress of a law giving the Federal Government wide powers in cases of lynching.

The mob refused to permit the white government of Mississippi to function. With contempt for the law and for law officers, they went to town, 200 strong, and took charge of the prisoners whom the officers of the law having them in their keeping were sworn to protect.

The Governor of the State heard of the menace to the dignity of the State too late to call out the National Guard. A circuit judge says the lynching will be "investigated," but adds that the officers who surrendered the prisoners recognized nobody. Naturally. It is almost certain that officers of the law who are too cowardly to attempt to protect a prisoner are too cowardly to recognize any members of a mob.

All over Europe and South America today people are talking about the civilization of the Southern States of America, where human beings are burned to death by people who enjoy practical immunity from punishment!

Well, the Mississippi mob has made it exceedingly difficult even for Southern congressmen to put heart or eloquence into their pleas for States' rights.

Certainly it is the right of States to enforce their own laws; it is their right to maintain their sovereignty. But the mob long since nullified the one and treated with utmost contempt the other.

Another Foul Lynching

[Kinston, N. C., Free Press]

LYNCHING of two Negroes by a Mississippi mob was another outbreak of lawlessness and disregard for the majesty of the law. Irrespective of the crime for which the victims were held, to wit the murder of a white man, the action of the mob but added to the outlawry and brings shame and disgrace upon a good State and community.

The sheriff and his deputies who were in charge of the prisoners when they were taken by the mob, say they recognized none of the lynchers. That's an old story. It was broad daylight and no doubt every man in the mob was a resident of the near-by scene of the murder. If that be so it is perhaps true that the only reason the officers failed to identify members of the mob, was because they shut their eyes and made no attempt to do so.

Details of the mob's violence indicate that the method pursued in doing death to the Negroes was particularly bestial and barbarous. Blow torches were used to slowly "simmer" the victims to death.

Such outrages most certainly inspire Federal legislation.

Chester, S. C., Reporter

The double lynching in Mississippi a few days ago may be the deciding factor in the adoption of the Federal anti-lynching bill. The blow-pipe feature marked this particular affair as one of the most brutal in the entire history of lynching, and pictures have been carried in publications of many kinds in all parts of the land. While many of the country's ablest legislators are opposed to the measure on the ground that it is a flagrant and unwarranted invasion of State's rights, the size of the negro vote in Northern and Western States makes it a foregone conclusion that Representatives and Senators from those States, regardless of political persuasion, will fairly fall over themselves to vote for the Gavagan bill. In fact, the House has already done so by a one-sided vote, and the best Southern antagonists of the bill can hope to do in the Senate will be a long-drawn-out filibuster.

BILBO ON TOUCHOUS GROUND

Senator Bilbo is demanding an investigation of certain Mississippi college student organizations. He says they are honeycombed with communistic influences.

He is treading on touchous ground.

His investigation might reveal some amazing conditions.

Its a fact that a group of Millsaps College students sent telegrams to Senators and Congressmen urging their support of the vicious Gavagan anti-lynching bill.

Of course, these students are misguided, fooled, and mislead by certain communistic influences that are operating in this country.

Immature minds of college students are not capable of grappling with intricate race and international political and social problems.

They don't know where federal anti-lynching laws will lead to.

The Gavagan bill will never pass the Senate—not as long as there is breath in the bodies of Senator Harrison and other stalwart Southern senators.

If Senator Bilbo's proposal is carried out it might reveal some astounding conditions and influences.

Ladder A-Flame

Members of a mob who broke and burned the body of a Negro in Bainbridge Monday discredited their state, but personally they hurt nobody but themselves.

The Negro was dead already—shot, the sheriff said, when he jumped still handcuffed from an automobile going at 35 miles per hour and ran into the woods. It was bad enough that the Negro, who already had confessed killing two white women, could not have been taken to jail and been given orderly, legal trial. There is no reasonable doubt that he would have been convicted, that he would have been executed, and that the respect for law would have been preserved. His shooting was bad enough.

But far worse was the savagery of a mob who stole his body from a mortuary, dragged it through the streets of an orderly, pleasant town, and burned it on a pile of fence boards in a Negro baseball park.

This was an example of men allowing passion and revengeful hate to overpower reason. There is no right in excoriating passion and hate with more passion and hate. Members of the mob must understand the reason why theirs was a disgraceful and needless lapse from law, from order and from self-respect.

Fundamentally, motivation of such a mob is primitive revenge—nothing more. But when reason once has fallen and mob emotion rules instead, the motivation becomes one of sadistic hysteria, and that alone. Later the men who make such mobs may argue to themselves and believe sincerely that what they did was a lesson and a warning against such future crimes as that of which their victim was accused.

That argument is wrong. In democracy law must be supreme. The Telegraph does not contend that in this country law always is supreme. In many instances it has not been. But every deviation from this supremacy is a deviation toward anarchy, toward public terror, toward rule of hate and lust. Law, not lynch, must be the lesson and deterrent against crime, and unless law is backed by the will of those who make it, it cannot be.

Such grisly spectacles as the fiery cadaver at Bainbridge, instead of solving the South's hard problem of racial readjustment, can only light the spark of hate anew. They can only set progress and memory back into those awful days of reconstruction, violence and death. And who would have them back again?

ALABAMA'S TWO VIEWS OF THE LYNCH EVIL

There are two "schools of thought" in Alabama regarding lynch mobs. One believes in the summary execution of offenders against certain laws, particularly the law against assault. This school often controls the grand juries that are summoned to investigate the faithlessness of peace officers in the face of revolting crimes. It is a shallow and irresponsible school.

It is a school that is scorned by Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael—to the glory of Alabama.

Regarding the white-washing of an Alabama sheriff who is charged with negligence in the face of a mob that lynched a Negro accused of attacking a white woman, Mr. Carmichael published a statement in The Advertiser Friday morning in which he, on behalf of the Governor as well as himself, took high ground for that "school of thought" that scorns mob violence. Announcing that the State of Alabama would ignore the recent action of a grand jury in white-washing the accused sheriff, he said he would proceed to bring the sheriff before the Supreme Court for impeachment.

The Governor and the Attorney-General investigated the facts in this case carefully and are convinced that impeachment proceedings are justified.

In the course of his statement Mr. Carmichael wisely and forcefully says:

The recent report of the Grand Jury will not have the slightest effect on the impeachment proceedings now pending in the Supreme Court of Alabama. The impeachment proceedings will proceed and will be prosecuted with as much vigor as the office of the Attorney General is capable of putting forth.

The framers of our Constitution did not accidentally provide that a sheriff should be impeached by the Supreme Court.

I want to take this occasion to say that the Governor of Alabama and the Attorney General of Alabama feel very keenly about this matter; that we are most anxious that the outside world know that the Alabama State officials who are responsible in law for prosecuting cases of this character are doing their duty and will continue to do it.

To say that lynching has anything to do with protecting womanhood in Alabama is pure poppycock. The answer to this is that a petit jury would require about 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict for the perpetrator of such a crime as this. Those unlawful hoodlums who imagine themselves heroes when taking part in lynchings have a distorted idea of patriotism. Only lawless hoodlums and the enemies of government take part in mob law. As the chief law enforcement officer of this State I condemn it and make known that as long as I am the Attorney General of this State, those persons who think they are more important and powerful than the law and who take the law in their own hands, will be prosecuted promptly and most vigorously, and in this I want to say that I will have the entire resources of this great State at my command.

Without prejudice to the sheriff now under fire The Advertiser nevertheless commends the foregoing statement as representative of the best thought in Alabama, the only thought on the subject that in the long run can be trusted.

Let us stop lynching human beings in this otherwise civilized State! The only way to stop it is to strike at the officials who permit it.

Lynchings, Here and In Russia

THE Soviet government executes 20 "anti-government plotters" with a great deal of relish, and looks forward to an early trial "even bigger" very much as we look forward to a new circus "even bigger."

Those who executed the 20 in Russia are the same people whose black protegé in America, Angelo Herndon, recently won a stunning "free speech" victory before the United States Supreme Court.

These are the same people whose proteges in America hold up their hands in holy horror over an occasional lynching. They are dumb-founded when, every year or so, we lynch an occasional rapist, murderer or sexual maniac—but the lynching of those who indulge in free speech in Russia is an honorable thing.

They are the same people whose proteges in this country, outside of the Tammany Democrats, are the chief advocates of federal anti-lynching legislation. To all except themselves, they cry woe unto them who do not keep the scales of justice in perfect balance.

WHY ARE LYNCHINGS?

From the Lanier County News.

One of the answers is that fellow Rozier, who attacked several young girls, almost babies, and was sentenced to be electrocuted last Friday, but who gets a new trial on the grounds that he is crazy.

Even if he is crazy, he should have been electrocuted as his trial at Waycross directed. He is more dangerous than a mad dog or rattlesnake running at large and should not be allowed to live.

When people are convinced that rapists and cold-blooded murderers will be dealt with promptly by the law as they deserve to be, lynchings will doubtless be a thing of the past, but certainly not before.

Lynching

One evidence that mob rule is subsiding and proper recourse to law is beginning to prevail throughout the land appears in the reduction of lynchings during the past year.

Only nine persons, all Negroes, were victims of mass violence in 1936. A leafing-back through the statistics of previous years shows that this compares favorably with 1933, 1934, and 1935 when twenty-eight, fifteen, and twenty alleged criminals respectively met death at the end of a lynchman's rope.

One vital factor is to be associated with the downward trend in illegal homicides. The increasing vigilance of officers during custody of their prisoners, which included the prompt removal of the accused to safe prisons remote from the scene of the crime, has been effective in preventing execution by certain aroused citizenry.

Regardless of circumstances, the resort to lynching is indefensible. Many respectable citizens, enraged over the sluggish law machinery, filled like a soup-strainer with loopholes, have been led to take the law into their own hands with a feeling of justification. But the law has been the "goat" too much of late and deserves more respect. While often slow it is thorough and when a life is at stake orderly process is imperative.

Orchids For The South

One of the excellent records hung up in the year 1936 is the fact that the lynching evil declined substantially. The year saw nine lynchings—and while it may be remarked that that was just nine too many, it should be noticed that it was 11 fewer than 1935's total.

Furthermore, there were 35 cases in which courageous officers of the law prevented attempted lynchings; and 30 of these cases were recorded in the deep south. Altogether, 69 people—all but seven of them negroes—were saved from violence at the hands of mobs.

It is cause for congratulation, that record. And it emphasizes a fact which northern critics too often overlook—that the average southern official, supported by the sentiment of his own locality, is aware of his duty and brave enough to carry it out.

CUTTING DOWN OUR LYNCHING RECORD.

The United States is improving a little in one respect — the number of lynchings has decreased during 1936 as compared with the past several years. Nine persons met their deaths violently through these "outside-the-law" depredations of persons who thereby belied their Americanism and became lawbreakers of the most criminal type. Not one of the nine persons lynched but could have been dealt with effectively through due process of law, as was the case with Hauptmann and the negro Moore, murderer of Helen Clevenger, and any number of others who went to the electric chair or the gallows in expiation of their crimes against society. Possibly some day people will learn to control their animalistic emotions and stop long enough to realize that the ones they harm most by yielding to lawless practices of this nature are their law-abiding neighbors who have to suffer the stigma which falls on their communities because of the passion and lust for revenge on the part of a few. We are sorry to note that Florida got into the lynching list again this year with one crime chalked against her fair name. We trust by another year her name will be clear of the stigma of lynching and will always remain so. Only a few states in the Union have escaped the blight of this form of lawlessness throughout their history, indicating that the North and West have no reason to look askance at Dixie when it comes to being a sinner in this respect. It is heartening to note that the most fearless editorials against lynching and the most courageous stand by organizations against this crime come from the South, where the law-abiding citizens condemn it more strongly possibly than those in any other part of the country. We confidently expect to see a "Lynchless America" in the near future.

Dixie—Citadel of Lynchers

Georgia has been getting some unfavorable publicity recently as a result of the announcement that five of the country's nine lynchings in 1936 took place in this state, but the Richmond Times-Dispatch cites past statistics which show that Georgia hasn't the worst record over a 45-year period. According to figures published in the University of North Carolina News Letter covering this matter, Mississippi gets first place, with 462 lynchings since 1889 or 22.98 per 100,000 population. Georgia had 458 during that period, but with its larger population, this is only 15.75 per 100,000 population. Florida and Louisiana surpass George in lynchings per capita. The honor roll in states, in which not one single lynching has taken place in forty-five years follows: Connecticut, District of Columbia, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Vermont. The Richmond paper makes this comment:

> Obviously, New England is a section where lynchings are unknown. The South, on the other hand, is the citadel of lynching. It is true that New England has no race problem of consequence, whereas the South has such a problem, but that is no answer. Lynchings are always wrong, for they are in defiance of law and order, they permit human beings to give way to instincts of savagery, and they frequently make innocent persons their victims.
> It may be taken for granted that another federal anti-lynching bill will be introduced at this session of Congress. What will be its fate? The Costigan-Wagner bill probably would have passed in 1935, except for a filibuster by Southern senators.

"Instead of arranging filibusters," the Times-Dispatch concluded, "members of the national Legislature from the South would do well to remedy the evil which leads to periodic introduction of corrective measures at Washington. It is good news that only nine persons were put to death by lynchers during 1936, but how long will it be before there are none at all?"

When the roll of lynchings for 1936 is compiled, it is found that Georgia led all the rest, with a total of five, while not one occurred in the surrounding states of Alabama, Tennessee and the Carolinas.

Why this breakdown is law and order in the state of Georgia? That is a question that should interest churches, the educational leaders and all the thoughtful citizens in all the walks of life.

A state that takes pronounced leadership in lynching is not the state which is going to appeal most strongly to those seeking new homes or new fields of investment, and Georgians should take steps to end the existing condition.

When outbreaks of mob violence increase it shows a significant lack of enforcement as well as a lack of support for the law, and that is always bad. Georgians are too rich in religious, moral and spiritual qualities to permit a condition of this nature to continue but it will continue unless these influences are put to work more aggressively.—Gadsden, Ala., Times.

THE LAW IN THEIR HANDS

In the year just ended there was no instance of mob violence in the state of Alabama, and for a number of years this state has been an example to its less thoughtful and law-abiding neighbors on all sides. However, early Tuesday morning a group of self-righteous citizens entered the jail at Abbeville, removed a lawful prisoner of the law and committed a crime which has been condemned by Christian society since Stephen was stoned.

According to Henry County officers, the mob was orderly and quiet. It was not a group of drunks who pulled the unfortunate accused from his cell; it was a crowd of forty or fifty men who undoubtedly consider themselves pillars of Henry County society, and they were probably well satisfied with themselves when they left the haltered and bullet-heavy body at the side of the country road to go home and have out their sleep. And most likely they slept well.

Every man, whether black or white, inside or out, regardless of his crime, has a right to a trial and, if the verdict warrants, to a decent death. As old as the South is the saying that examples must be made of Negroes. It seems never to occur to lynchers that their actions set a far worse example than the crime of the lynched.

We have law in Alabama. We have laws against rape and against attempt to rape, and except for a few regrettable instances the law has not failed to carry out its proper function. A group which attempts to make a stupid and horrible joke of the laws of this state does more to break down the government than any criminal.

If the men who instigated the lynching in Abbeville are proud of what they have done, if they think that they have accomplished something to tell their children about, if they gather old-woman-fashion around the hot stoves of the country stores to describe again and again how the Negro kicked and twitched as he died in the cool night and how his body rolled from the car into the ditch on the lonely road, then law and decency mean little in Henry County.

Where there was one crime, there is now a total of more than forty crimes. And no figures in the world can be made to balance the one against the forty.—Eufaula Tribune.

Barbarians!

Sometimes civilized men are turned into barbarians when they see an act of barbarism. Stupidity breeds stupidity and barbarism breeds barbarism. Sane men often go mad when they see a heinous act committed, and in their haste to avenge a crime they commit crime themselves.

That is the story of the brutal murders reported at Bainbridge, Ga., this week. A Negro is said to have killed two white women after attacking one of them. His crime was the crime of a beast, and people everywhere are sickened by the thought of it. The Negro deserved at the hands of the law the severest punishment, and no sympathy.

The Negro was arrested at Dothan, and was being taken to the jail in Albany, Ga., when, according to officers, he leaped from the car and ran. The handcuffed Negro was shot dead, instead of being retaken as it would seem he might easily have been in his shackled condition. A thorough investigation is in order.

And then an act, deliberate and planned, was committed that was repulsive like the crimes. The Negro's body was in a morgue, and a mob estimated at more than 100 members took the body, tied a rope around it and dragged it through the public square at Bainbridge. A procession of shrieking automobiles followed the body to a baseball park where a pyre was made and the body burned to ashes. More than 100 usually sane men were turned barbarians by the outrageous act of a single person!

What a nauseating spectacle!

It is revolting, first, to think of the horrible acts attributed to the Negro. It is distressing to think that officers were unable to bring their prisoner safely to jail. And then to cap it all, a mob deliberately committed acts of ghastly horror upon a lifeless body.

LYNCHING AND POLITICS

The vote-getting boys on Capitol Hill had a fine morsel for propaganda purposes last week. Two negroes were lynched in Mississippi, and howl went up from the boys in Congress, resulting in the passing of the time-worn Anti-Lynching Law.

The law will be sent to the Senate where it will pro-baby meet defeat. But there's no telling.

This is a wrinkle in the political horn that in a way puts several Senators from Southern states on the spot.

Those versed in the law say that the proposal made against Southern states by Congress is not constitutional, and that the Supreme Court with its present personnel would stamp it as such. But should the attempt to pack the High Court succeed, there is no telling just how the new members would react toward the Anti-Lynching Law.

By voting to change the Supreme Court a Southern Senator may at the same time be voting to uphold this obnoxious legislation which is revolting to all those who believe in States' Rights.

The Northern Representatives and Senators are of course playing politics, but at the same time they are playing with fire. There is entirely too much authority vested in Washington. And this infringement upon the rights of the Southern States—and the purpose of the proposed law is simply that—is just a step nearer dictator rule from Washington, whether we want to admit it or not.

This Terrible Thing

The second and third lynchings of 1937 took place simultaneously yesterday in Mississippi. Two Negroes were put to death, one mercifully by comparison, with a shot through his brain, the other fiendishly by degrees with a blowtorch.

"This terrible thing will be investigated immediately by the grand jury," declared the judge of the circuit. These terrible things always are investigated. "I did not recognize any members of the mob," said the Sheriff from whom the Negroes were taken in broad daylight by men not masked. Sheriffs never do recognize any of the mobsters. That is where the investigations hang up and that is why lynchings go unavenged.

If there is one Southern State which has given every sign of a hatred of lynching and a determination to bring mobsters to justice, that State is Alabama. Yet it was in Alabama that 1937's first lynching took place, and though the Governor and other authorities moved immediately to find the guilty parties and to punish them, nothing has come of it in the two and a half months since the lynching took place. Where Alabama has failed, Mississippi, a State less jealous of her good name, is unlikely to succeed.

Are we not warranted, then, in assuming that if lynchings are to be punished like other crimes, some other agency than the state governments must do it? Could not the G-men unearth in a jiffy damning evidence that sheriffs and county officials are unwilling or afraid to disclose? Would not the fear of punishment suppress the lynching lust?

We put these questions in leading form not to answer them, for we don't know the answers. If we did it would be easy to know how to take the Gavagan bill.

Geography and Lynchings

There is not a true Southerner who does not rejoice that lynchings are reaching the vanishing point. Not a few Southern officers have risked their lives to save men threatened by lynchers. Their bravery and the fight to end that disgrace has helped to reduce lynching. Without national laws it has been nearly eradicated and will be fully eradicated.

The Philadelphia Record calls on the country to "Stop the Northern Lynchers, Too." In a recent editorial it calls on Northern liberals, who have been vocal against Southern lynching, not to shut their eyes to the bullying and beating of prisoners and the "legal lynchings" that take place regularly in the supposedly enlightened section of the country. It adds:

New York City has recently been acquiring an unenviable notoriety in the systematic beating up of prisoners by police. Pennsylvania has been shocked and disgraced by the killing of Frank C. Monaghan while he was being "questioned" by State troopers. The conduct of Justice George W. Maxey, presiding at the trial of one of the troopers, did nothing to reassure the public that violators of the law would be punished even if they happened to wear a State uniform.

Under the circumstances, passage of a bill outlawing the "third degree" sponsored by State Senator Law at Harrisburg, would be a wholesome gesture. This measure would specifically class third-degree police methods as felonies and provide stern penalties for police who injure suspects in attempts to extract confessions.

The third degree is nothing less than the covert survival of torture as an instrument of the law—a practice supposedly discarded by all civilized States some centuries ago.

The third degree is less spectacular, less revolting, than outright lynching. But it is quite as dangerous as lynching in undermining real respect for law and the decent administration of justice.

There are no borders in human brutality nor any geographical limits on ruthless distortion of the law.

Harlan And Anti-Lynching

The Senate civil liberties subcommittee has continued its subpoenas for witnesses who testified concerning lawlessness in Harlan County, Kentucky. Hence any reprisals taken against such witnesses would constitute federal offenses. In the meantime, the Gavagan anti-lynching bill, aimed at another form of lawlessness, is being held up in the Senate judiciary committee until that body submits its report on the President's supreme court proposal.

When revelations were made recently as to acts of violence, occasionally mounting to murder, against trade unionists and union organizers in Harlan County, some Southern members of Congress were quick to point out the analogy to lynching. Representative Robsion of Kentucky was twitted in the House on April 23 with having voted for the Gavagan anti-lynching bill, for his district contains Harlan County.

UNCALLED FOR LYNCHING

From the heading of this article, one might draw conclusions that there are "called for" lynchings. Well, whether there are or not, there are some lynchings not so bad as others. And to our mind the Montgomery county lynching last week when two negroes in the hands of the Court under trial were taken out and burned was one of the worst and most uncalled for lynchings from more than one viewpoint. Not only was there a spirit of brutality shown that does no credit to humanity, but a gross lack of knowledge of self-preservation was displayed on the part of those who committed the unlawful act, regardless of how brutal the crime of the one lynched. If there is ever a "called for" lynching, it is not one that occurs so long as there is a possibility of the Courts administering the punishment, for no kind of a lynching does the lynchers any permanent good, but too frequently much personal harm, and we venture to say that the ones who administered the blow torch and the match in this case will bear us out already in our statement. We have never attended a lynching bee, but we have known men who have, and unless those engaged in the one last week possess hearts of stone, their neighbors will soon note a change in their lives. So the man or men who engage in such brutal lynchings as the one in question, exposes a great ignorance and lack of self-preservation. They won, and they lost, regardless of whether they ever have to answer to the human Courts or not.

LYNCHING

LAST week in Winona, Miss., two negroes were seized by a mob, forced with the aid of a blow torch to admit murdering a white grocer and then lynched. That same week by vote of 277 to 119 the House of Representatives passed a bill making lynching a federal offense and sent it to the Senate.

Washington observers say the measure will not pass the Senate due to opposition on the part of Southern Senators. It is believed that these Senators will resort to a filibuster before voting on the bill and thus impede other legislation, more especially the President's Supreme Court proposal. The surface objection to the measure is that control of lynching is a state's right, but the real underlying opposition is the fact that a federal investigation and trial would go hard on lynchers, while state courts seldom try such cases because state grand juries seldom indict.

Lynching is a crime that has no justification. There may be some argument in favor of the family, incensed beyond reason and cool thinking because of the injury, taking the law in its hands. But for a mob oftentimes comprised of emotional characters that are swept off their feet by the prevailing excitement and frenzied oratory of the ringleaders, to take a human life without due process of law is a flagrant violation of the American principle of justice and fairness.

It is to be hoped that the Southern Senators will rise above sectional prejudices and political ambitions. The bill should be passed. The South has too long suffered frequent black eyes because of mobs and their lawlessness, to say nothing of the travesty on justice.

Those who believe in law and order, in a fair trial by an impartial jury—two tenets of American and Democratic government—should notify Senators George and Russell to support the bill.

HOUSE LEADER WARNS STATES ON LYNCHINGS

Sumners Addresses Society Meeting at Jackson

SAYS RIGHTS AT STAKE

Government to Take Over Responsibility for Control if Violence is Continued — Improved Condition Noted

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Mississippi, Bureau

BY KENNETH TOLER

JACKSON, Miss., May 27.—States must extend their governmental responsibility to the suppression of lynching if they are to remain sovereign, Representative Hatton W. Sumners of Texas, chairman of the House judiciary committee, said here today.

"Unless this is done, the federal government will step in and usurp this power and the states will no longer retain their sovereignty," he told a mass meeting of the Mississippi division, Society of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

Violence Reduced

Citing the improved condition in respect to law enforcement, Mr. Sumners said since 1892 the number of lynchings has been reduced 98 per cent.

"Yet," he said, "at this session of Congress over 60 bills to prevent lynching by giving the federal government the right to prosecute states were introduced.

"The people backing these bills are those residing in big gang-ridden cities where combinations of crooked politicians and gangsters murder and terrorize and rob. They are looking with a spyglass into the southern states for something to bestir righteous indignation.

"They do not give us any encouragement for the improved condition, which last year revealed less than nine lynchings. We are working out this condition, and if let alone will have it under complete control.

Two Negroes Lynched

"We did not have any hope of defeating the Gavagan bill in the House recently, but we had expected to send it to the Senate with a bigger negative vote than followed the Dyer anti-lynching bill in 1922.

"But, in the middle of our fight, and on the eve of a vote, a mob in a southern state (Mississippi—the double lynching at Duck Hill) took two prisoners from officers and lynched them."

Mr. Sumners said during his more than 24 years in the House, it had fallen to his lot to defend the sovereign right and duty of the states to govern within the scope of their governmental capacity.

He said he favored state suppression of lynching instead of federal intervention.

Understand People

"We have reduced lynching 98 per cent and we can finish the job," he said. "Why not leave us alone and see what we can do about it further? We know how to do the job better than the federal government, because we understand our people.

"You cannot make a government of a free people, our sort of government, functions from the top downward. A great governmental overlord cannot be established in Washington to place the hand of superior authority above the voice of the elected representatives of the people, and perpetuate this system of government.

"If there ever was a time when we needed to turn in the other direction, it is now," Mr. Sumners said.

MIRACLE NEEDED.

Those sadistic Mississippians who informally executed two murder suspects with blow torches Tuesday did more than lynch two negroes—they probably lynched the hopes of the Southern States of blocking passage of the Gavagan anti-lynching bill, which under the guise of reducing lynching, would put the hands of the Federal Government into the enforcement of the local law in every community in the United States.

Anti-lynching legislation is like child labor legislation: best left to the individual States.

There was some hope of the Gavagan bill being blocked in Congress until the disgusting exhibition in Mississippi where a mob seized two negroes suspected of murder and tortured them to death with blow torches.

As we see it there is only one thing which can happen now to nullify the effect on Congress of the Duck Hill lynching, and that thing is for the law enforcement agencies of Mississippi to capture, convict and mete appropriate punishment upon the lynchers.

That would be a miracle!

Bradenton, Fla., Herald

Why Lynching Alone?

Mississippi has added another lynching to the country's record in the field of lawlessness—to her everlasting shame. Two negroes were burned at the stake by mobsmen after they had been tortured with blow torches for the murder robbery of a white storekeeper last December.

Of course the outrage should be condemned, the men participating in it punished if their identity can be established and this should be possible if effort is made. Yet it is permissible to inquire the cause of delay in trial of the mob's victims. The murder was committed last year and they had only been arraigned to plead—not guilty. The presumption is that they had counsel, furnished them if they were unable to employ legal help. We've no fault to find with this. It was proper. Still the fact persists that the murderers—they confessed as the flames leaped about them—had no idea of admitting their guilt as long as they believed they had an opportunity to escape the penalty prescribed for their crime. That is human, however, and perhaps they shouldn't be censured for it. Most of us would have done the same thing, sworn falsely on the Bible. Life is that sweet. And the lynching was wrong, as wrong as a thing can be. Still the mob gave them as much chance as they gave their victim and at least felt it was justified no matter how unsound the opinion was. Their act which they confessed was without the suggestion of justification.

And, of course, it was to have been expected that northern proponents of an anti-lynching law would have seized on the transpiring as an argument in favor of their proposal. In their mind it clinched the argument for such legislation. Possibly this is so but what is to be gained by providing punishment for a secondary offense so long as laxity is permitted to govern disposition of matters that bring on these second violations.

Also it is difficult for we of the south to understand the difference of construction that is put on lawlessness. If an individual is lynched below the Mason and Dixon line the soundness of our civilization is questioned even though the offense that stirred the avengers may have been unspeakable in nature. Yet the north, east and middle west can have their gang wars with attendant slaughter, often of innocents, without attracting more than passing interest or comment. The Herald is without inclination to justify the violence that lynch law is but in fairness things that are not permissible should be seen as a common evil, not a sectional shortcoming.

PETITIONS NOT NEEDED

Petitions will be circulated asking Governor Hugh L. White to make a full investigation of the lynching of two negroes in Montgomery.

The spirit that inspires the petitions is to be applauded, but as a matter of fact there is no need of petitions to urge Governor White to do all that is within the power of the governor to make a full and complete probe of the unfortunate incident.

It should be recognized that the Governor under Mississippi law has comparatively little authority in what the law holds to be purely local affairs, and thus far in Mississippi, law enforcement is a matter of locality.

The Governor, had he had all the knowledge in the world, of a threatened mob in Montgomery county, would have been powerless to send guard troops to Winona without a request from the sheriff of the county or from the circuit judge. Apparently the plans of the mob were so well concealed that there was no warning of the mob, and there was nothing in advance to indicate that violence was threatened.

The Mississippi legislature has not yet seen fit to give to its chief executive either the means or authority to make investigations, but it is a power that the executive should have.

The Duck Hill negroes have been lynched. If the sentiment now aroused would be maintained and turned in the direction of granting authority to the Governor to move for the protection of criminals preceding and after trial, the petitioners can well rest assured that Governor White would spare no effort nor expense in preventing mob action anywhere within the state, or in bringing members of a mob to justice afterward.

Dothan, Ala. Eagle

ASKING FOR IT

The Mississippi gang of brutes that burned one Negro alive and shot another after torturing him with a blow torch not only succeeded in disgracing their State but intensified the determination of certain members of Congress to enact an anti-lynching bill.

Governor White says he will conduct an "investigation," which in all likelihood will fizzle out after the fashion of all such investigations.

If public opinion didn't condone lynchings "under certain conditions"—which means practically all lynchings — the mobsters would be promptly arrested and punished. And that very state of affairs is inspiring Congressmen to pass an anti-lynching law which would levy a fine of $10,000 against the county in which a lynching is staged.

It is an unfair, unjust law. But the mob spirit has invited it.

And if it is enacted, we will have nobody to blame but the public opinion which says:

"There's times when a man ought to be lynched."

Miami, Fla. Herald
April 15, 1937

AS PREDICTED by this column yesterday, the brutal lynching of two negroes in Mississippi spurred efforts to pass federal anti-lynching bill. Lynchers lynch themselves; they lynch law and order and government and humanity.

CRIME is a poor business. Edgar Sanderson, 65, confessed to New York police that he had robbed a thousand homes in six years. His profits were less than $4,000. He could have done better than that by going on relief.

OF THE 23 aspirants for city commission a dozen candidates remained yesterday after checking petitions. That is enough to stir up Miami, make the welkin ring.

Commissioner Sewell, a leading candidate for re-election, reported on his recent trip to Washington, noted the favorable attention given plans for improved harbor and Pan-American Exposition building, two excellent projects. These fitted into Pan-American day observance. Uniting two continents through Miami.

LYNCHING IS CONDEMNED

Meridian District Methodists Flay Action at Duck Hill

MERIDIAN, Miss., April 17.—Vigorously attacking the lynching of two negroes at Duck Hill, the Meridian district of the Methodist Church in a conference at Rose Hill adopted a resolution condemning the action as a "cowardly and fiendish act."

The resolution committee was composed of Dr. Joseph A. Smith, the Rev. O. S. Lewis, the Rev. J. L. Carter of Meridian and the Rev. C. C. Clark of Philadelphia.

A DESIRABLE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Frank H. Hallion, a negro who was born and reared in Lynchburg, Va., but who now lives in Jamaica, N. Y., has prepared and is the sponsor of an anti-lynching bill which has none of the objectionable features of the pending Gavagan measure, recently passed in the lower house of congress and now awaiting action of the senate.

Hallion is seeking some member of congress who understands the attitude of the south towards lynching to introduce his bill as a substitute for the Gavagan bill.

His measure should receive the approval of white southerners as well as of the thoughtful and intelligent leaders of his own race.

The proposed law, briefly, provides that the federal authorities, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the federal courts may assist in the investigation of lynchings, the apprehension of mob members and their prosecution, when their aid is requested by the Governor or legislature of the state where the mob outrage has occurred.

There can be no reasonable objection to a statute such as this, directed at the stamping out of a distressing evil, when that measure seeks only to aid in the apprehension and prosecution of those responsible.

The provision that federal aid be extended only upon the request of the public officials of the state affected thoroughly protects the states in their inalienable rights to the police power over their citizens. At the same time it strengthens the arm of justice and makes it possible for the state itself to subject perpetrators of mob crimes to arrest and prosecution free from local influence. In mob outbreaks, when law enforcement is left in the hands of local authorities only, it is inevitable that local sentiment influences justice.

The states, in recent years, have made marked progress in their efforts to stamp out mob crimes. Education, that necessarily slow but only real cure for evil, is having its effect. The record of lynching through the years tells its own story of the gradual stamping out of this frightful evil.

Such a measure as that advocated by Hallion is the only proper means of federal approach to the problem. It is an intelligent, reasonable, acceptable aid to the states in their fight against one of the darkest blots on the escutcheon of modern civilization.

What is more, it is probably constitutional, while the obnoxious Gavagan bill, in all probability, is not.

Hoodlumism in Mississippi

The latest story of lynching outrage coming out of the Deep South will add no points to the argument of those who contend that the federal government should be given no authority to assume jurisdiction in the warfare against mobsters and hoodlums.

At Duck Hill, Mississippi, two young Negroes, believed to be the slayers of a white storekeeper, were chained to trees and tortured with blow torches before being killed. After suffering this torture and partially "confessing" under the persuasive influence of the acetylene fire, one of the Negroes was then riddled with bullets from several barking revolvers. The other victim was made the center of a pyre which, together with his body, was drenched with gasoline. A match set off the pyre and he was burned to death.

Instances of such barbarity is enough to make the flesh crawl. But it is not in the fact of lynching, of mob violence alone, that the need of a better method of eradicating the evil becomes apparent. It is in the peculiar political aspects of law enforcement in the agricultural counties of the South.

In our rural areas law enforcement is in the hands of elective officials. In many of these sections the Negro seldom, if ever, votes. Consequently, in all too many cases, the sheriffs and other officers deal very discreetly, to say the least, with white voters, "free, white and 21," who have participated in lynching bees. Strange though it may seem, officers who know hundreds of citizens in every section of a county are more often than not unable to identify any members of mobs who take colored prisoners away from them and are unable to find anyone who can make such identification.

This is what encourages the continued practicing of lynching in the South. Those who go on record as being against such barbarous hoodlumism, but who oppose a federal anti-lynching law insist with much show of logic that federal court jurors in the South are Southerners and that they would turn a mobster loose as quickly as a state court juror would. Probably so. But the trouble is that under the present set-up not even a state court juror is ever called upon to hear a case against Mr. Lyncher, simply because no lynching bee cases ever get into the state courts. Of course, there may be a few isolated exceptions, but can you recall any lynching cases in this or any other Southern state occurring within recent years, in which the matter got farther than the grand jury room, if it got that far?

With a federal law in force, the G-men, who are not bound up with political red tape, would step into each lynching case and investigate it thoroughly. The odds are that these cases would reach a petit jury. And the average petit juror in the South is reasonably intelligent and fairly decent. He could be trusted to assist, we believe, in wiping out the blot which stains the civilization of the South.

Another Livid Scar

Add to a long list of atrocities the Bainbridge, Ga., orgy of hysteria and mob madness.

The ugly scar left on the memory of that Georgia community by the fiendish murder of two women is made more livid and lasting by the unwarranted slaying of the Negro, claimed to have been the murderer and attacker, and the nauseating public demonstration which centered about the burning of his bullet-riddled body.

Humanity and civilization both are degraded by such barbarism.

There can be no doubt as to the outcome of the trial of a person found guilty of so heinous a crime, so why undermine the very foundation of society by violating the law so vital to its preservation?

Every man, be he murderer, rapist or thief is entitled to trial before a fair and impartial jury. And let us not forget that to countenance denial of such trial to one means the weakening of the most important safeguard of the lives and liberty of us all.

We cannot afford to revert to jungle law nor can we leave unchallenged actions of officers sworn not only to apprehend but to protect and deliver criminals before the bar of justice.

Student Union And the Lynching Bill

They are having a little fun over in Mississippi where the American Student union at Millsaps college has endorsed the "anti-lynching" bill. Senator Bilbo has charged the students with being communists and the students have charged that Senator Bilbo is "an echo of W R Hearst." Evidently believing that this is about as harsh a thing as they could have said about Senator Bilbo, the students almost apologize in these terms, "We are sorry to say it, but that is his tone."

A few days ago we defended American college students from such slurs as have been cast by Senator Bilbo. We still doubt that these students are communists or very well settled in any political faith. But we do wish they would read the objections to the "anti-lynching bill."

"Does Senator Bilbo advocate mob violence? . . . Is he indifferent to it? . . . If not, why does he oppose laws to hinder it?" asks the union bulletin. We do not know what Senator Bilbo thinks about mob violence or why he opposes the suggested law. But we can fairly assume that Senator Bilbo opposes mob violence and also a law that would not hinder it but aggravate it.

The bill in question would penalize a sheriff who permitted a prisoner to be taken away from him. At present most sheriffs make strenuous efforts to protect their prisoners and to shift them to other jails when mob violence threatens. If the sheriff fears that a mob might seize his prisoner he will be encouraged not to make an arrest. And if arrests are not made for serious crimes such as those which generally lead to mob action, lynching will not only be encouraged—it will be made necessary.

When we were without law we relied upon vigilante committees. When our laws were interpreted by invaders so as to protect malefactors of the worst sort and to deny protection to law abiding citizens we relied upon the original klan. If bestial criminals are not arrested by the regular officers, they will have to be dealt with by extra-legal tribunals.

Is the American Student union in favor of mob violence? If not, why do they advocate a law that will encourage it?

POLITICAL LYNCHING

Recently we announced to the World in general that we were very much opposed to lynching in any form, and thereby caused a mild sensation. Our ideas have not changed on the subject in the least.

It is our contention that every man or woman charged with any offense should be given an umbiased trial, and an opportunity to prepare a defense. We also believe that every fair-minded, impartial person thinks the same. We are also of the opinion that the average man is good enough sport to desire fair play at any cost.

Now what we really started out to say is "What is Lamar Murdaugh trying to remedy at the State Sanitarium?" We would like to know, the citizens of Georgia would like to know. Are conditions so terrible, so horrible that Mr. Murdaugh fears to offend the sensitive ears of Georgia Crackers with a true and unbiased account of affairs at the Sanitarium?

If so, why not make an outright accusation, and call upon the accused individuals for an accounting of their shortcomings. Is there anything out of place in such a suggestion?

It has been whispered that 'politics' was the basic reason for the discharge of HOMER BIVINS, SID JONES, MRS. JONES and MRS. BIVINS. If this is true, why not say so and be done with the many insinuations that have been reflected against the characters of public servants whose long and efficient records spoke more plainly for themselves than all the information that can be obtained by undercover, secret investigators who can only REPORT SUCH FACTS as they have been ORDERED to bring back with them.

If these people who have given of the best years of their life to the administration of an important state institution are guilty of a heinous crime, then let their friends and the state at large in on the secret.

Those little words 'no official reason given' will certainly become monstrous nightmares to the Rivers administraton unless the already faltering SHIP of STATE is piloted to safer waters.

STOP THESE LYNCHINGS.

That Lynching Bill

William Mitchell, Yalobusha County, was convicted of slaying two negroes

Near Winona two negroes were accused of slaying a white man.

The white man's case has been fumbled from one court to another. The negroes' case was dispensed by a mob.

Both cases were cases of brutal, ruthless murder, yet the white man's case lingers and the negroes' case was dispatched.

People don't like for you to write about such things but truth neglected invariably results harmfully.

This situation has prompted Congress to pass an anti-lynching bill. There is one specific danger in the bill recently passed by the lower house in Washington. There is a strong possibility that such a law would give some negroes a false sense of security which might prompt crimes which, would otherwise not occur. This, as we see it, is the primary danger in the bill. Furthermore, if a mob should dispense with an individual and then the county paid the victim's wife and children from $2,000 to $10,000 it would precipitate a situation which would not be wholesome to the morale of the community.

However, there has been more nonsense written in opposition to this bill than on any other recent question. To say that it is a direct reflection upon the southland is no contrary argument for the South has so conducted itself as to invite criticism. Therefore the argument of sectionalism does not hold up in the light of logic.

To say that it is a criticism of our state courts is not sound argument because all state courts in so far as lynchings are concerned have been absolutely functionless and inefficient—in fact totally inadequate—so this is no argument against the bill.

To say that the bill is based on prejudice and malice is another divergent from logic for assuredly brutality and cruelty has been evinced on occasions in the South sufficient to justify the emotional reactions which have been stimulated, therefore this is no argument against the bill.

To say that it reflects upon the officers of the law is assuredly a weak argument for the officers of the law are entitled to no consideration in so far as their coping with this problem is concerned. In many, many cases they have been friendly to the mob spirit. And yet some officers have done their duty in the face of vigorous opposition.

To say that it is a violation of state rights is just so much chatter. There has never been any law of any consequence which has given the federal government authority but that has been attacked on the basis of state rights.

You don't hear our people raising their voices in opposition to the federal government taking care of relief. On the other hand the states are consistently looking to the federal government to take care of relief problems and education and old age pensions, etc. We cry state rights when it is a convenient alibi.

The lynching problem is one which is seldom faced squarely and the reason is that few of us care to admit the ugly things about our weaker personalities or our community dispositions. Sections have vanity just as individuals And it takes a mighty big man to see his vanity punctured and yet face it without resentment.

But in the face of this weak argument which has been advanced against the lynching bill we face it with fear and foreboding for there is grave danger of it creating a racial attitude which would not be conducive to the best interests of our people.

And furthermore all of the things who is it that has cleaned up these gangsters? Is it not the federal government that has stepped in with its sentimental froth and force ourselves which we have said regarding the Southgangsters in general? No one has ad- are equally true of the North and the East and the West. All of us live in glass houses and none of us is without vigorous and efficient attack shame. It so happens that in that in stance that the nation is pointing anvanced the argument of states rights accusing finger at the southland. in this instance.

Incidentally much is said about And yet despite all of this argument gangsters of the North and East. But ment pro and con we do not think the lynching bill will pass the Senate.

WHITE WANTS REPORT OF LYNCHINGS.

Governor Hugh White said here the other day that he had instructed District Attorney Morgan of Winona to make a thorough investigation into the lynchings of two negroes accused in the murder of a Duck Hill merchant and to report back to him.

"I'm afraid nothing will come of it," the district attorney was quoted as saying.

"It was the most orderly mob I ever saw," the sheriff of that county declared.

Officers who were overpowered by the mob said that they "did not recognize any of the men."

That's the situation as it stands.

As far back as we can remember no member of a mob, engaged in a lynching in the state of Mississippi, has been brought to the courts of justice and convicted.

We've got a sneaking idea though that if a thorough investigation is conducted by "outside" officials that the state can get to the bottom of this ghastly case.

After all it was murder in the highest degree.

WITH THE EDITORS

A CHECK through our exchange reveals a deep concern among Mississippi editors over the pending anti-lynching bill and the effect the recent North Mississippi lynching may have on its possible passage:

The Columbus Commercial Dispatch, confident that the Senate will block it, says:

> It is a vicious piece of legislation . . . inspired by prejudice and politics. Northern Democrats are conniving to have the measure passed in the hope of corraling the Northern negro vote. Sectional prejudices are also elements behind the bill. Cheap politics and vicious prejudice.

The McComb Enterprise finds a scapegoat:

> So here's to Winona, Duck Hill and Montgomery county. To you . . . goes the credit of presenting the nation with what is destined to be the Gavagan anti-lynching law. Your hotheadedness caused a reaction in Washington.

The Port Gibson Reveille also places responsibility on the lynchers' doorstep:

> Duck Hill's beastly lynching might hasten the passage of the federal anti-lynching bill. There are always people ready for almost any criminal act, and they require only a shadow of an excuse to perpetrate such blood-thirsty acts as that staged in North Mississippi Tuesday.

The Bay Springs News concludes a subtle rebuke with a caustic emphasis on the futility of mob violence:

> The mob . . . might not know it, but it played right into the hands of a strong bloc at Washington which has for years been advocating an anti-lynching law . . . Torture does not cure evils . . . it only makes fiends of those who engage in it and sears across the participants' minds ghosts that rise to plague until death.

It is The Guide's opinion, however, that the Woodvile Republican goes to the heart of the problem and offers the only solution:

> This horrible deed comes at just the time when it will receive national publicity because of the fight now going on in Congress over the proposed anti-lynching law, and comes as a blow to those who have been proud of Mississippi's record of no lynching in the past year. It is this writer's opinion. . . that this scourge cannot be stopped by federal legislation, but can only be controlled through education.

The Blythe Incident

Lynching is a practice abhorred and detested, for the most part, when considered dispassionately and in the light of clear thinking, but one nonetheless indulged in on occasions when the passions have become so aroused that the means appear to justify the end.

We do not intend to discuss lynchings in general, or do we feel disposed to either condemn or sanction the practice, because we feel that each case must be considered separate and apart from the others. Furthermore, men's consciences must be searched; their innermost thoughts ferreted out and examined before a true answer can be found. We would not presume to set up a bar of judgment in an editorial room and attempt to weigh the conscious thoughts of our fellow man.

But The Chronicle does want to commend the motives which prompted the two citizens to turn over the Blythe Negro to the sheriff Thursday and avert a loathesome spectacle. These men, we are sure, acted with only one thought in mind: that the culprit would be brought to speedy trial; that there would be a minimum in the law's delay, and that punishment would be swift and adequate to repay the defendant for the heinous crime which he is said to have committed.

If the Negro is guilty as charged, no punishment for him is too severe. Fortunately, the law provides the supreme penalty for a rapist. The crime with which he is charged is more horrible than murder; the punishment, death.

The citizens of the Blythe section had every reason to become inflamed and bitter, and their long, patient and arduous search for the culprit is most praiseworthy. But we do not feel they should censure their neighbors whose consciences directed them to give up their prisoner to the sheriff and let sure punishment come in an orderly, lawful manner.

The Negro undoubtedly will be brought to trial speedily in Burke county, and the friends of the offended woman and her family will sit on the jury as his peers and pass judgment on him, and justice, by man-made laws, will prevail.

Listen to the Hitlerites howl about the Duck Hill lynching! It certainly was an awful tirade Germany shot at us last week. Those German minds must be weakening. It hasn't been three years since Hitler ordered his mob to proceed to Munich and Bradenburg and there lynched sixteen eminent Germans, without indictment or trial. The negroes had at least been indicted.

CONTEMPORARY COMMENTARY

(FAYETTEVILLE OBSERVER)

Whether or not one agrees with the business of putting a man in jail because he has Communistic literature in his pocket, one can hardly suppress a cheer at the action of the United States Supreme Court in reversing what appeared the judicial lynching in Georgia of one Angelo Herndon, a negro Communist.

Herndon found himself facing an 18-year sentence in the jails or road gangs of Georgia not because he violated any sedition law but because he got off his beat, dabbled in something best left to local justice, and in general ran counter to Georgia customs.

The strange thing was that Georgia undertook to lynch Herndon with a law instead of a rope.

And it is also strange that the law invoked by the Georgians in the attempted judicial lynching of Herndon was a law which had been manufactured by the bummers, carpetbaggers and adventurers who followed General Sherman's torch-bearers into Georgia and attempted to establish a state in which the former slave would have his foot forever on his former master's neck while white freebooters from without the State bled it white of what little wealth Sherman's flames had spared.

The sedition law was passed not to oppress the Georgia negroes but to prevent the Georgia white people from assembling in righteous indignation and taking their own government back into their own hands.

In Reconstruction Days the sedition law proved of little value on account of the shadowy method in which the ancient Ku Klux-dealing rather permanently with those who attempt to upset them with a show of legal authority.

It failed to accomplish the overthrow of authority. Georgia customs in Reconstruction Days, and when Georgians used it to protect their customs in more modern times it also failed.

However, even if the United States Supreme Court has held the Georgia sedition law unconstitutional we think yet it would be very unhealthy for Communists, whatever the color of their skin, to invade Georgia with singing and rejoicing.

The law might not be able to put a finger on them, but by the time they got out of Georgia they might wish the law had.

Local customs frequently are more dear to people even than the law, not only in Georgia but all over the country. And all over the country people have a way sometimes of

From B. G. Fairley, of [illegible], Ala., come hot words. "You are always harping about 'let the law take its course' when we have a lynching," he reports. "But how long does it take the law to have its course? The Scottsboro case and a dozen or more I could recall—aren't they the real cause of lynchings. The Scottsboro case is six years old and no one acquitted or convicted and confirmed by the higher courts. The court costs are mounting into thousands. I, too, believe in the law taking its course, but does it? Or will it ever?"

We refuse to think of Mr. Fairley as one of those who, when they complain of legal delays in the Scottsboro case, mean merely that the negroes should have been hanged long before now. We believe he realizes, as so many are coming to realize, that prejudices which have been injected into this case have made almost impossible an accurate estimate of the facts or a fair verdict on the basis of facts estimated. No one can read the testimony in the case (nauseating, unprintable testimony, some of it) without grave doubt of the guilt of the negroes. This column's personal conviction is that the testimony proves them not guilty at all.

• • • •

Mr. Fairley is right in general, we think, that delay in the settlement of legal cases as a result of technicalities and legal ruses is giving American law a bad name and inspiring disregard of it. We agree with him that justice should not be so long delayed. But early or late, it must be justice.

ONE LAW

Some weeks ago a critic of our editorial policies complained, "Mr. Editor, you have said so much about racial prejudice, one would almost believe you had prejudice toward your own race." At the time we did not consider it necessary to point out that we harp so constantly on the injustices dealt the Negro because the Negro gets ever so much more than a fair share of injustice. But now that strikers at Covington are being tried for violating what is known as the Virginia "lynch law," we would reply that we try as scrupulously as we can to avoid prejudice against any race, creed, or class.

The objections to trying strikers under Virginia's "lynch law" seem, to us, unfounded. White men who wish to continue their accustomed work in a mill, we think, are entitled to the same protection of the law as that given Negroes charged with grave crimes against the State and with the heinous offense of trying to get their rights. And if the law says "Any and every person composing a mob which shall commit an assault and/or battery or any persons without authority of law shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction, shall be confined in the penitentiary for not less than one year nor more than 10 years," we can see no reason why white men who gang up to do violence to other white men should not be punished just as are white men who gang up to do violence to Negroes.

That is not to say that we consider the offense committed by the strikers at Covington as serious as that committed by a mob which undertakes to lynch a Negro. We have constantly refused to pass judgment on the convictions of the Covington strikers and on the prison terms imposed on the two men who have been convicted by juries of mob violence. We believe that judgment in these cases can only be passed by the courts which hear the evidence and the courts which review the evidence. And if, as has been charged, the sentences imposed on the convicted men were made unduly severe because the jurors were prejudiced against organized labor, we hope and believe that the Supreme Court of Appeals will set aside these sentences as contrary to the law and the evidence. Or if the Supreme Court does not do so and if the defenders of the strikers make a public issue of the cases at the proper time—after they have been duly considered by the courts—and offer convincing evidence that these sentences are unjust, The Register will do its part in arousing public sentiment to urge the Governor to use his final power to deal out justice.

But to argue that a law passed to protect Negroes from mob violence should not be used to protect white men from mob violence is repugnant to our conception of justice, which holds that there should be one law for black and white, rich and poor, strong and weak.

WILL THE LAW PROTECT?

Some mighty good speeches are being made around Tipton, Tenn., and other places just now about apprehending the lynchers and let the law take its course. They are talking about the men who formed a mob and murdered a Negro about to go on trial for murder.

We hope the Tennessee investigation won't prove a failure as miserable as that in Montgomery county six months ago when two negroes were brutally murdered at Duck Hill.

Shouting "To Hell with Law" the mobsters in Covington county, Tenn., tore the accused prisoner from the sheriff and disappeared in the dark of the night. A few hours later the body of the accused was found. He was the victim of a lawless mob, who acted as sheriff, judge, jury and executioner, all without authority and with every contempt for the law they, no doubt, profess to believe in when the law is needed on their side.

Whether these murdereds are to be apprehended and punished remains to be seen. Certainly it is time for a good start in this direction. Leading and law-abiding citizens of the South must exhibit a greate rcourage in enforcing the law—but the greatest weight must be with the courts so that such disgraceful cases as he Scottsboro case are not allowed to prejudice the rank and file against laws because of unnecessary delays.

"It's Up to Us."

Winston-Salem Journal: Many Southerners are opposed to federal anti-lynching legislation. It would constitute an unwarranted interference with law enforcement processes within the states, they declare.

But let us look to the record. Since 1882 a total of 5,100 lynchings have been placed in the big black book to the discredit and the shame of the South. And in 99.2 per cent. of these cases, according to usually reliable authority, the lynchers have escaped punishment!

This being the case, is it any wonder that lynching is so common in the South? And is it any wonder, in view of this record, known to the entire nation, that legislators from other sections are insisting upon a federal anti-lynching law? What to do? The South insists that it doesn't want a federal law against lynching. It wants to handle its own interracial problems. But the trouble is that it has not been handling the lynching problem at all effectively. It has not dealt with the question in conformity with the higher aims of justice.

In recent years, it is true, the South has improved its record with regard to lynchings. But just about the time we are ready to pat ourselves on the back, along comes a mob story that makes us ashamed of ourselves. Such an instance is that which occurred at Covington, Tenn., the other day. A mob lynched a Negro and when the sheriff interfered, shouted "To hell with law!"

It is this "To hell with law" attitude which may force a federal lynch law upon the South.

From the, Bainbridge Post-Searchlight.

Now that the heat of emotionalism has subsided, and our people are going about their daily vocations, it would appear that this is the proper time to administer an anodyne to the editor of The Macon Telegraph, the editor of the Birmingham Age-Herald and others who saw fit to ignorantly criticize the good people of Bainbridge and Decatur county for the overt action several weeks ago when some of our people and many from other states dragged and burned a Negro who had been killed by officers of the law trying to escape. The incident, in fact the whole affair was one which was regretted by all of us, but it was something which could have happened to any municipality and to any county and state. The affair brought criticism to our people from people in every state in the union, but lack of knowledge of the facts in the case caused many of our normally level-headed gentlemen of the press to go off half cocked. The editor of The Macon Telegraph has always appealed to us as being decidedly fair about all matters, but when he unjustly accused the people of Bainbridge and Decatur county of fostering and sponsoring such things, and intimated that we were barbarians, he gave us what is commonly known as a "belly-full." The gentleman is a stickler for law and order, and so are we, but having no knowledge of the affair caused him to make some rather prejudicial statements. Alexander H. Stephens had this to say about people having zeal: "Those people who possess zeal above knowledge we justly dominate fanatics. All fanaticism springs from an aberration of the mind. It is a species of insanity." Now we do not accuse or intimate that our fellow sufferer is a fanatic because he stands for law and order or that he possesses a form of insanity, but in the above matter he possessed a zeal above knowledge which made him jump the gun on the "take-off." If he knew the circumstances, he would, in his forceful and fair manner offer his apologies and continue to utilize his pen for what he believed to be right.

AGAINST LYNCHING

Tennessean Reverses Attitude Of His Early Youth

To The Commercial Appeal:

It was not taught me by my parents, but I grew up like most Southern boys, with a feeling that lynching a negro was not much of a crime, but, under certain circumstances, in order to maintain the standing of true blue southerners, very necessary. Times have changed. I have changed. And today I believe you will find as much revulsion at the thought of lynching a negro among the people of Tipton County as you will find in any other county in the South, or in any other part of the United States. We do not believe in it. The thought is very, very repulsive. But it seems that the old feeling has cropped out among us. It has shown itself for the first time in the memory of the oldest of its citizens.

What shall we do about it? That is the question. Who is able to give the answer? I am not. Most of us say something should be done. Who says what? In talking to the citizens of our county, everyone will agree that something should be done. No one believes anything will be done. I do not. The investigation will be useless. I am not willing, personally, to try to make it anything else. No one else is. A deplorable condition, you say. You are right, but what are you going to do about it? Nothing.

It seems to me that the only answer is a Federal law against lynching. It seems that among all the peoples of the earth, our southern senators and congressmen should support the passage of such a law. When lynchers are probably some of your friends, or might be some of your own household, what can you do about it? Occasionally, but very, very rarely, has it ever happened that justice has come to one of our best friends or a close relative, if the meting out of that justice depended on us. Most of that kind of work is in the story books. Then, for the sake of justice, law and order and everything else that makes our country a good place in which to live, let us have a Federal law against lynching.

EARL HILL.

Brighton, Tenn.

LYNCHING

Ben Cothran hits a mighty nail on the head in the October issue of The Forum with his article "Ousting Judge Lynch." More and more of us in this part of the country if not elsewhere are coming to see that the social and racial problems of the South have an economic base and can effectively be attacked only at that base. Mr. Cothran believes, and this column agrees with him, that lynching is a result of the competitive poverty in which the mass of Southern whites and Southern blacks still lives. What he fails to make clear, however, is that the great decline in the annual number of lynchings in the South parallels an improvement in the economic and social position of both whites and blacks and a promise of far greater improvement as a result of educational, financial and social aids now given or planned.

In other words, we do not agree with Mr. Cothran's notion that it will need 50 years to remedy the economic situation which produces lynchings in the South. We believe the situation is already being improved and is promised a continual more of improvement, and that the declining number of lynchings each year is an indication of the improvement. Federal laws can't stop lynchings, it is true, but Federal aids and cooperation in the task of improving the educational and economic status of impoverished whites and blacks can—and are.—John Temple Graves in The Birmingham Age-Herald.

Florida Has Lynching

THE state of Florida and the South are humiliated by the outrageous display of the mob spirit in the Flower State Monday when a Negro desperado was taken by a comparatively small mob and murdered. He was charged with robbing and slaying of white youth.

There is nothing to be said in defense of the Negro's crime. It was diabolical, no doubt, and should have been punished with the law's supreme penalty. There is nothing to be said in mitigation of the additional crime of lynching. When a group of law breakers takes the law into their hands and tramples it under foot, they bring shame and disgrace upon their community and their neighbors.

In this enlightened age there is no excuse for mob violence. Better that good citizens refrain from dodging jury service and do their duty in behalf of law and order.

The sheriff of Santa Rosa County and a deputy were en route to jail with the Negro accused of the murder, when a comparatively small mob met them and took the Negro from them. Apparently the mob proceeded with little resistance from the sheriff and his deputy. Both seem to have violated the solemn oath that they took when assuming their responsible duties. If the laws of Florida would hold the officers personally responsible and punish them accordingly, it might prove to be a wholesome object lesson. No sheriff or other responsible officer who permits a mob to take a prisoner from them without any show of resistance, is worthy to hold office and should be forthwith and immediately discharged.

Military observers find that Japan has been greatly overrated as a military power and is no longer entitled to rating as first class power. The Free Press has already commented on an article appearing in an issue of the Readers Digest several months ago in which the point was made that Japan had never been called upon to meet face to face a first class power on the field of battle and that when she was the impression that she had acquired super power in the realm of arms would be exploded. The failure of her arms to dislodge the Chinese defenders at Shanghai after weeks of the bitterest fighting, would seem to sustain the views that Japan is not so much to be dreaded as the common impression has had it.

Wilmington, N. C. News

The Latest Lynching and a Warning

The latest lynching, Florida variety brings the usual notation by the coroner of "death at the hands of parties unknown." That was expected. The nature of the victim's alleged crime would be sufficient to convince any one familiar with the south that such would be his fate unless the law stretched out to protect him until courts could exact justice in its orderly form.

Seemingly, though, there was one man who missed that quite obvious reaction, and he unfortunately was the one man upon whom the negro's life depended. He was the sheriff.

So alone and unguarded the sheriff started to a jail some miles away with his prisoner, was overpowered and recognized no member of the tiny mob of four.

The News abhors lynching, regardless of the victim. It looks upon lynching as an insult and challenge to the constituted authority of the state. It looks with disfavor too upon the repeated efforts of the national congress to bring such offenses under the federal, instead of the estate governments, but concedes that passage of this law is inevitable unless sheriffs as a whole bring themselves to a far greater degree of alertness.

Lynching can be prevented. There is no argument on that point whatever. The News has seen lynchings prevented, and the sole requisite was quick thinking on the part of officers.

North Carolina, we believe, has perhaps the most enviable record of any state of the south in this respect, and the work of officers in this state convinces us that it can be matched by other southern states, if it is genuinely desired that lynching be eliminated.

It is the sole way to avoid the obnoxious law that congress will very probably soon pass on the subject.

The Hooded Lynchers

Many observers see in the tumultuous controversy over the appointment of Hugo L. Black to the Supreme Court bench the most beneficial piece of unsolicited publicity ever to fall into the lap of the Ku Klux Klan.

The Klan's business is booming now. A keener interest is being taken in secret doing of the hooded order, and its leaders expect a bumper crop of neophytes to swell the organization's ranks. Never since the days when the night riders chased down carpet-baggers and scalawags has the light of publicity been focused so brightly on the Klan's activities.

But the darker, more unpleasant side of the picture is to be found in Florida. Here violent men traded on the recent notoriety given the Ku Klux Klan, donned black hoods and forcibly took a Negro prisoner away from a sheriff and his deputy. The Negro, charged with criminally attacking a twelve-year-old white boy and robbing a filling station, was riddled with bullets from the lynchers' guns.

Governor Fred P. Cone ordered an immediate investigation. State Attorney E. Dixie Beggs Jr., said "we are doing all we can to solve this thing." The investigation will amount to nought; the state attorney will not "solve" the lynching. Incidents of this kind, we all know, are never solved. The investigations are too cursory to bear results.

Klan members wear white hoods. These men adorned themselves with black hoods, so it would seem that the Black-Klan dispute gave them an idea when they hatched their violent plans for the lynching. The power of suggestion is indeed remarkable.

SOUTHERN CATECHISM

Lest the public forget the customary procedure in a lynching, the Daily News offers a catechism in brief on the mobbery this week in Milton, Fla. From a long history of such events one should know the answers long before they happen.

Was the victim charged with a serious crime?

Yes. This is considered almost always essential to a bona fide lynching.

Did the sheriff (Joe Allen, on this occasion) have any warning of high feeling in the community against his prisoner?

Yes. He had previously transported him to a safer jail.

Did he follow this up with a sufficient guard to guarantee the prisoner's safety while being transported to place of trial?

A sheriff and one deputy were considered sufficient.

What steps were necessary to get the victim away from his official escort?

Nothing but the demand, "We want that nigger," as was told in the dispatches.

Did the officers show any resistance?

None was recorded.

Did they recognize any members of the mob?

This is never done.

Did the coroner's jury make an investigation?

Certainly.

Did it uncover any evidence pertaining to identity of the mobsters or recommend any indictments?

Don't be silly.

Did the governor of the state promise an investigation?

Of course, that is considered the usual thing to do.

Does anyone expect anything to come of this?

Ha, ha, ha!

Mob Violence

All law abiding citizens regret the dual lynching which took place in Montgomery County six miles northeast of Duck Hill Tuesday afternoon. Whether the negroes deserved the brutal death which was dealt out to them is not a question which we want to enter an argument for or against. Although the mob was quiet, well organized and got the negroes with the quickest action that can be imagined without any demonstration, taking the Sheriff and his deputies completely by surprise, it would have been better from many angles could the mob have been prevailed to let the law take its course.

The crime with which the two negroes were charged was one of the most horrible in the history of the county. Townes in his written confession stated the crime was planned several months before it was executed. He stated that they shot Windham in the back and robbed him. They deserved the full penalty of the law for such a cowardly crime and would have been given it had the law been allowed to take its course.

The lynching here Tuesday is having a very far reaching effect upon the nation. When the lynching was taking place here, a debate upon the anti-lynching law was in progress at the National capitol in Washington. Many feel that the dual lynching of the two negroes Tuesday will have direct affect upon the passage of this bill. Governor White had just proudly proclaimed in an address Tuesday afternoon that it had been fifteen months since Mississippi had had a lynching, when the message concerning the lynching here was brought to him.

The Times wants to congratulate Sheriff Wright and his corps of officers in their unrelenting search for this negro, Roosevelt Townes. It is not infrequently the case, when a person commits a crime and is apparently out of the way, officers get so busy with the many demands made upon them, by people at hand, that they fail to keep after criminals who have moved on. Such was not the case in this instance. There was not a week that Mr. Wright did not make a trip some where on a lead or tip regarding this negro. The Sheriff was anxious to see justice done. He and his deputies had left no stone unturned in their effort to catch the perpetrators of this crime, even to the extent of spending some of their personal funds for the purpose. We could not ask a greater expenditure of effort and time nor a higher regard for duty that has been shown in this case by our peace officers.

UNSAFE LEADERSHIP

The statement of Mitchell, the Negro Congressman, that 14,000,000 Negroes in the United States live in fear of their lives, should prove to the Southern Negro that he nor any other so-called Negro leader in the North is capable of wise leadership.

No law-abiding Negro in the South is in danger of losing his life at the hands of a mob, nor has he anything to fear from his white neighbors. It is only the lawless individuals of this race who need fear mob violence, and these are few, compared with the large number of white law-breakers.

Southern Negroes have suffered much at the hands of their Northern friends. They are acquiring intelligence and wisdom, and many of them know what is for the best interests of their race. They realize that extravagant statements by Mitchell and other politicians of both races in the North have a very bad effect on their relations with their neighbors.

No federal anti-lynching bill will ever improve these relations, but will be an added handicap. The better class of Negro is seldom the victim of a mob; nor is the better class of white man ever a member of a mob. They are both from the least intelligent classes.

The Editor:

I frequently come to Albany, Macon and Atlanta. I have heard you spoken of as a "liberal," tolerant, etc.

Then, where does your editorial comment come in, on that dastardly double-lynching in Mississippi, recently? Did you lift your little finger in protest? O, no! You might offend some Confederate pride, smug and satisfied. Nor are you different from the rest of the South's papers, EXCEPT Virginius Dabney's paper in Richmond. Thank God, there is one man in the South Christian and brave enough to acknowledge that Negroes have lives to live. The sheriff and his 2 aides in broad daylight, grabbed by the mob, didn't see a single face. Now, who is stupid enough to believe that? If the governor of Mississippi does ANYTHING about it except talk and "investigate" I'll be glad to buy you and him a new suit.

This is just one more reason why REAL Christians hope the Gavagan bill goes thru. Except for the Oklahoma delegation, the Southern "congressmen" voted nay. Nay for what? Nay to punish fiends for acts they'd be hung for, in more civilized spots.

I am on my way back North, thank God. Having been in Georgia and Florida since that awful medieval torture, not one single reference have I heard to it; you people just don't care. If you did, you'd bombard that governor until he acted.

I am mighty anxious to buy you that suit. I have instructed Albany friends to let me know. And when you protest to the Mississippi governor, tell him to select a nice one—not under $60.

JACK AMES.

P. S. It'd be all the same if it happened in Georgia.

The flopping of the long ears of the writer of the foregoing is distinctly audible. The name signed to his letter may or may not be his real name. We suspect that it is not, but we do not know.

What we do know is that his kind add tremendously to the difficulty which Northern and Southern people encounter wherever and whenever they seek to destroy the residue of sectionalism which hangs over from Civil War and Reconstruction days.

Intelligent Northern and Southern people who are sincerely patriotic—who seek the advancement of "a nation not divided"—deplore the fetid mouthings of unintelligent tom-tom beaters North and South "who know not, and know not that they know not," yet are perfectly willing to tell the nation how to save itself.

This newspaper has condemned lynch law and the mob spirit consistently. It commented on the very editorial in the Richmond Times-Dispatch to which the writer of the above letter refers, and reproduced the comment of the New York Herald-Tribune on the significance of the Richmond paper's stand. In commenting on the recent double lynching in Mississippi, we stated that it was the work of men too ignorant to realize the heinousness of their crime, or to realize that another anti-lynching bill which Congress is considering had its chances of passage materially boosted by publication of the gruesome story from Mississippi.

Public Enemy No. 1 in this republic is ignorance. Some of the ignoramuses take the law into their own hands. Others write letters of which the above is a shining example—an example of what survives of sectional bigotry. Our excuse for printing it is its value as incentive to those who realize that honest citizenship cannot ignore its own responsibility to law and order—to government "of the people, by the people, for the people." For when honest citizenship fails, the cranks and the nitwits get their chance.

Mississippi's Blow-Torches.

Beasts, in man's image, with blow-torches executed a double lynching in Mississippi; two negroes being dispatched by mobsters with torture methods that make the expert torturers of Spain's inquisition and red Russia's more recent revolution appear pikers.

It remains to be seen what the state of Mississippi will do toward apprehension and punishment of the mobmen; especially in the way of supplying proof that a federal anti-lynching law is not needed. It now appears that Mississippi's blow-torches, figuratively, will blow the Gavagan (anti-lynching) bill speedily to enactment in Congress.

The Gavagan bill (H. R. 1507), adopted in the house Thursday over opposition of 100 southern Democrats, was introduced by Representative Joseph A. Gavagan, of New York, a lawyer first elected to the house in 1928. His district includes Harlem, largest center of negro population in the United States. In his campaign this gentleman found it necessary to advocate action and promise to do all he could toward securing passage of an anti-lynching law.

Some other Democrats standing for re-election to Congress, found the issue pressing and had to declare themselves—for political reasons. The swing away from the Republican party of negro voters was a potent influence. The only negro congressman, Arthur Mitchell, of Chicago, who defeated the other negro representative, Oscar DePriest, put in a bill at the beginning of this session, as did many other members in fulfillment of campaign promises. Such legislation is urged by many organizations devoted to negro welfare, and for the promotion of law and order.

The Gavagan bill may find more determined opposition in the senate than it did in the house. Senator Borah, for instance, denounces it as unconstitutional, unjust and unmoral. The bill promises to punish local officers and counties whenever mob rule interferes with the orderly processes of law. There are, of course, laws already in all of the states making lynching a crime. As pointed out in debate, the Gavagan bill would apply only in case the victim of a lynching has been taken by a mob from the custody of an officer of the law. It would not operate to prevent or to penalize lynchings in cases in which mobs got ahead of the law, as it were. Some of the representatives, arguing that the problem should be left to the states to solve, point to Virginia as an example of a southern state in which enactment of a drastic anti-lynching law has led to extinction of lynching over a period of years.

Proponents of the bill say it would not encroach upon state rights; since the states would be left free to maintain law and order and the penalties of the proposed measure would be applied only when the states were derelict. On the other hand there are many who contend that the Gavagan law would constitute another long step toward vesting in the central government powers formerly supposed, and without challenge, to rest in the states.

It appears now that state sovereignty stands to lose in this instance. The Mississippi torture lynchings made votes for the Gavagan bill in the house; and it appears that they will do likewise in the senate.

The trend seems to be toward more power in Washington; less in the state capitals.

One day, perhaps, the sovereign states will be reduced to the status of provinces, with virtually all power resting in the central government. The signs point that way.

Avoiding Mob Law

Two Burke county farmers who were quick-witted enough to save a Negro from lynch law last week are entitled to the commendation of the whole state of Georgia.

It is true that the Negro was charged with an attack upon a white woman sometime ago, and this is the crime which has been so often regarded in the past as justification for mob violence. But even the women of Georgia deplore mob violence for any reason and are glad that the state has escaped this possible stigma.

The Negro at first made his escape after committing the crime. Later he was recognized as working on a road gang in Burke county.

When the news of his identification got abroad it was feared, with some reason perhaps, that he would be lynched. Rumors that a mob was forming were heard by the two level-headed farmers in question.

They took the Negro in an automobile and rode around the county until they could get in touch with the sheriff of Burke county who appointed a meeting place and took over the prisoner, who was rushed to the Chatham county jail for safe keeping. His case will go before the grand jury of Burke county on May 10.

There is no reason to apprehend that the trial will be long-drawn out, if the facts clearly establish his guilt and May 10 is not far away. Surely it is far better to have waited for the law to take its course than to add another blot of barbarism to the state, where the record as to lynching is far better than it used to be.

Let us hope the time is not far distant when mob violence will end for ever.

Lynch Bill Fight In Senate

THE expected and predicted came to pass last Thursday when the House, by a majority of more than two to one, passed the vicious and drastic anti-lynching bill making lynching a federal offense, providing heavy fines and penitentiary sentences for sheriffs losing prisoners and for mob members, and fining the counties in which lynchings occur up to $5,000 for the benefit of the victim's family.

The Montgomery county double lynching and torture is given "credit" the nation over for piling up this heavy majority for this bill,—even as Mississippi papers predicted it would the day after the lynching.

The South's hope of defeating this vicious bill, which is aimed at the South exclusively, now lies in the Senate, with the Supreme Court a last resort if the bill passes the Senate.

The fight in the Senate will be close, but perhaps our Southern senators will be aided by then by some abatement of the passions stirred by the Montgomery county crime. Our Senators, however, face a hard job, one that will require all their parliamentary skill, perseverance, and determination.

They can be depended on to do their utmost. Meantime, all of us can but hope for the best. Perhaps Senator Harrison will be able to duplicate his past feats in killing this bill. And it is one matter in which both Mississippi senators should co-operate closely without thought of past or personal differences.

Just Saving The Cos.s of Court

Mississippi had a lynching last week when two negroes were lynched by a mob of infuriated citizens over at Duck Hill. The two negroes brutally murdered a store keeper last December and were caught only a few weeks ago.

As usual when there is a lynching there is a lot of sympathy wasted on the victims of the mob, and none at all on the one or ones who who were murdered. Petitions have gone forth to Governor White, along with numerous resolutions condemning the action of the mob and sympathizing with the mob victims.

We do not condone lynchings, but if two persons ever deserved lynching the two brutes at Duck Hill richly deserve what they got. We have no sympathy to waste on them None whatever.

Nothing will ever come of any investigation the Governor or anybody else will make, and not one member of the mob will ever be arrested. Even should some arrests be made there is not a jury in Mississippi that would ever convict any mob member. That is a fact and everyone knows it.

If our different societies in Mississippi really want to do a real service they can best do it by stopping all this sentimental gushing over the mob execution of two brutes, and have some real sympathy for the man they so cruelly murdered. They can render a help by trying to get our courts speeded up and cutting out so many loopholes through which criminals escape proper punishment for their crimes. It is those things that are responsible for lynchings, and until a cure is found lynchings will continue to occur.

The Lynching of Two Negroes

The lynching of two negroes in this county Tuesday of last week, has brought about the usual condemnation from some out-of-state newspapers, statesmen (?) and cranks.

Of course no law abiding Mississippian condones, or endorses, lynching.

We much prefer that the negroes had been hung according to law.

However, those who live in glass houses should not throw stones—occasionally Mississippians will hang a negro for committing some atrocious crime—this was the first lynching in Mississippi in fifteen months. But, when a lynching occurs in this state the guilty is punished and that ends the matter—the white people do not kill every negro they can find as was done a few years ago in the St. Louis negro massacre.

Yes, occasionally Mississippi has a lynching—but Mississippi does not have organized gangs of law violators—the kind that not only kill, but blow a man's place of business up if he does not accede to their unlawful demands. Is lynching any worse than that kind of crime? No. The organized crime gangsters kill hundreds and destroy millions in wealth to every lynching that occurs in Mississippi.

When a negro runs amuck and shoots down a white man in cold blood in order to rob him, feeling will run high and in some instances a lynching will follow.

As we stated in the beginning we do not condone lynching, and prefer that such criminals be dealt with orderly and lawfully hung, but we are unable to distinguish any particular difference between the Chicago gangland murderer and a Mississippi lynching party.

The Chicago Tribune might turn this over in its mind before it turns loose a broadside on Mississippi.

At the time this article is written an anti-lynching bill has passed the House of Representative of Congress. The occurrence in this county, some claim, assisted the passage of the bill—we doubt it. We do not believe the Senate will pass the bill, but properly kill it as they have defeated other similar bills of this nature, in the past. However, if the law is passed this is not going to stop lynchings—laws have not stopped murder—laws have not stopped kidnapping—laws have not stopped bootlegging of whiskey. We do not need more laws—we need quick enforcement of the laws we have. We need more confidence in our laws being administered speedily to the law violator of major crimes. When the laws are administered without fear or favor and respect of law taught in our schools a new day will dawn throughout the Nation for respect of the law.

The laws of the land have been violated in so many ways that there remains very little consideration for the laws.

Doubtless, if those who composed the lynching party had felt confident that these two negroes would have been speedily hung for this cold-blooded murder, and that no detours of justice would occur as has happened in many cases throughout the Nation, then the lynching would not have occurred. What we are trying to get over is that a condition exists that must be considered and corrected to bring about more confidence in the law, instead of needing more laws to correct the condition.

There has been much said and written about the lynching here last week, but a very faint picture has been presented of the horrible, cold-blooded murder the negroes committed that led up to the lynching. Such crimes cause men to lose their better judgment as they did in this instance.

What could be a more gruesome, cruel, cold-blooded, unwarranted, premeditated crime than to shoot a man through a window in the back without warning, and then rob him while laying on a floor breathing his last breaths. This is the kind of a crime that Roosevelt Townes and Boot Jack McDaniels, negroes, committeed. The man they killed was a high type citizen, and had befriended the negroes that killed him.

Governor White made the statement a few hours before the lynching in this county last Tuesday that there had not been a lynching in Mississippi in fifteen months. When negroes do not commit atrocious crime and obey the laws no lynchings occur. The reason for negro lynchings in Mississippi is due to the negroes committing some outrageous crime.

At the time the lynching of the two negroes occurred in this county there was an audience assembled in the High School auditorium in Jackson, Mississippi, composed of white and black to listen to an address by Dr. George Washington Carver, negro, director of chemical research and experiments stations, Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Alabama. He was one of the speakers on the program of the Mississippi Farm Chemurgy Conference held in Jackson last week.

We mention this to show that there is no general feeling between the whites and blacks in Mississippi. The law abiding negro has the same protection under the laws—he enjoys the same peace and happiness the white man has if he obeys the laws of the land and conducts himself as a good citizen should.

The relationship between the leading and law abiding negroes of Mississippi, and the leading and law abiding white citizenry of Mississippi is, in our opinion more amicable and more satisfactory today than in years past. Negroes of Mississippi understand the white citizens and the white people understand the negroes, and they can settle their differences and solve their problems a great deal better and quicker if left to them. They are able to handle their own problems and do not need interference or advice of any outside ignorant, uninformed trouble-maker, who probably intends well and plays hell.—W. W.

On Fighting Lynching

The recent lynching at Dack Hill, whhich must be admitted by all thinking people to have been revolting in every detail and thoroughly deplorable, seems to have precipated the passage by the House of Representatives of another anti-lynching bill, similar to other bills which have been brought up in the national Congress from time to time. Just what the fate of this bill will be in the Senate is problematical, but in that body there is still available the right to stage a filibuster, a weapon which has been resorted to more than once by Southern Senators.

However that may be, it is clearly recognized that the South can not always rely upon the filibuster to prevent the passage of such laws, and it is just as clear that we can not sit idly by and assume that nothing can be done about lynching.

We do not mean by that statement to be understood as favoring the recent bill, known as the Gavagan bill. We see in it many injustices, and little

Another provision of the bill levies a heavy fine on a county in which a lynching occurs. This is done evidently on the assumption that the whole county is to blame. Ignoring the fact that it may be doubtful whether it is constitutional for one branch of our national government to levy a fine on another branch, there is certainly little justice in it. This writer has never participated in a lynching or approved of one, but several times he has lived in counties where they occurred—and there was never anything he could do about it. He does not feel that he should be taxed to pay a penalty for a crime some one else committed. Then, too, if it is the fault of a county if a lynching occurs within its boundaries, why is it not as much the fault of the state or the federal government? And why should the county be fined and the other branches go free?

* * * * *

Further than that, the punishment of a mob is a very difficult matter. It is practically never done quietly that it was not generally known until some time later. How could Mr. Smith be blamed for that? He protected the prisoner he had in our own county a lynching occurs, fine or imprisonment or both. As we have had no opportunity to study the bill, we can not refer with accuracy to the details of its provisions, but we know that the sheriff of a county is not always to blame nor means to protect the one who was lynched.

And the South has no monopoly on mobs. Their work

A case in point, let us cite a happening some years ago, during the first administration of the present sheriff, Mr. J. L. Smith. A negro was on trial for his life in Cleveland, the charge being murder. There had been some talk of a lynching, and Mr. Smith took every precaution possible to prevent it. He concentrated here every deputy and appointed others. He permitted no congregating on the court house grounds, and guarded carefully the passage way from the jail to the court house during the trial. While that was happening here, however—and the precautions were very effective—another negro committed some crime in the First Judicial District, was caught and lynched very quietly that it was not generally may be a little different in this part of the country, but they are essentially the same as other mobs in other parts of the country. Sit-down strikes, mine wars, union shootings, gangster activities and the like are mob actions, pure and simple, and the result of these is often fatal to one or more people. And wherever these occur, few if any people are punished.

The only effective way, in our opinion, to handle mob violence is to attempt to prevent it long in advance of the provocation. Publicity and education can help, and we need both. Lawyers and the courts can help, for the delay of orderly justice is often a provocation to the mob. And the encouragement to sobriety is an important factor: for many crimes causing lynchings are committed by drunks or dopers, and many mobs (most, in fact) are made up of men who first pass the bottle around to bolster up their "courage."

The matter of publicity and education should not be confined solely to those who might at some time participate in mob action, although it is important to convince the public that such action is both unnecessary and unwise. But it is also imperative that the negroes themselves, through their same leaders, recognize the fact that there are trouble makers among them who are actively and openly inciting them to crimes which bring on lynching. The negro crime rate is high, not so much against white people as against members of their own race, and if the negroes of America will make an active effort to reduce crime between negroes, crime between the races will automatically be reduced.

We do not know to-day of a single white publication which is seeking to prejudice whites against negroes, but there are quite a few, some run by whites and some by negros, which are constantly attempting to make the negro hate the white man. This is bad, and is a condition which ought to be frowned on by the thinking negroes over the land.

The law's delay frequently incites the mob. The law is simply the orderly, passionless action of the people, and if it is flouted and justice miscarries on account of the rascality of some lawyer or official who is more anxious to win a fight than to see justice done, there is at least more excuse for mob action than there should have been. We note that Clarence Darrow, who has probably set as many guilty criminals free as any other American lawyer, condemns lynching. But if he had set a better legal example, there would not be so much encouragement for crime in the country. The people sometimes assume powers which they have previously delegated to others who have since abused those powers.

And, finally, we note that it has become a habit for those who have been most active in providing alcoholic liquor for the masses to decry the loudest the crimes which are the natural consequence of its consumption. Nobody is harder on the drunken driver than the men who dispense or sell liquor. They raise a loud clamor, primarily as a smoke screen to hide their contributory guilt. The same is true of the violent foes of lynching. They have put the bottle to their neighbor's lips, but they wish to divert from themselves at least part of the woe that is laid up for them in the Scriptural warning.

Crimes don't "just happen"—they have causes, and the causes must be removed or reduced before the crimes can be curbed.

IT SEEMS TO ME

By HEYWOOD BROUN

THERE must be some immediate answer to the atrocity of Duck Hill. If I were a member of the House I would vote eagerly for the Gavagan anti-lynching bill. And yet I must admit that I have less than full faith in the complete efficiency of this measure and that I also regret that the contest has been channeled into sectional lines.

Lynching is a national problem, and every effort should be made to convince all communities that they share a joint responsibility. It is true that from time to time Northern statesmen and publicists have indicated a certain sympathy with what is sometimes called "the good old American vigilante tradition." That is the beginning of heresy and the road to the most abominable kind of happenings.

I am willing to admit a difference in degree between confessions obtained at the end of a rubber hose or by a gasoline torch. But I must insist that I can hardly respect the intellectual integrity of those who are willing to accept torture in a New York police station and at the same time be completely horrified by mad cruelty in some Southern cornfield.

PROBLEM OF NATIONAL SCOPE

And so I say that both are wrong, horribly and eternally wrong, and that the movement for a decent kind of justice ought to enlist the full support of all Americans.

I have no particular desire to attempt a sneakup on Southern sensibilities. The crime of Duck Hill tosses out of the picture some of the favorite arguments of those who have minimized the crime of lynching when associated with racial conflicts. It used to be said that what was called "mob violence" by Northern publicists was actually an attempt to protect Southern womanhood and that due process of law could not be relied upon when the victim of an attack was forced to face the ordeal of giving testimony in open court.

But Duck Hill has nothing on earth to do with American womanhood. A storekeeper was robbed and murdered. I have no means of knowing whether the mob killed guilty men or not. No issue could be raised as to the speed or certainty of punshment along strictly legal lines. Two accused men were already in custody, the date of their trial had been set, and it is not usual for Southern white juries to lean over backward in acquitting Negro defendants when any reasonable case has been built up against them.

And yet there is some truth in the cry of many Southern Congressmen that the Gavagan bill has the political impetus of a Democratic desire to solidify gains among Negro workers in the industrial cities of the North. Tammany representatives have hardly justified their exploitation of the Negro in the big cities by warmly supporting an anti-lynching bill.

NOT A SECTIONAL FIGHT

And whether there is any merit at all in the clamor that there is carpet-bagger legislation once again, an effort should be made to rid necessary political action of the stigma of sectionalism. If I am asked what practical device could be adopted to bring this condition around I can only say that I think the most effective anti-lynching bill would be one devised, written and passed by Southern Representatives themselves.

If I am told that this is too much to be asked and that no achievement of that sort is possible I can at least point to one man in the House who has risen completely above his local political interests. I refer, of course, to Maury Maverick, of Texas.

THE COURAGE OF MAVERICK

Mr. Maverick is probably taking his political life in his hands by voting for the Gavagan bill. I assume that he does not like its provisions in all respects, but he is strongly actuated by the feeling that in addition to representing his own community he is a spokesman for the nation as a whole. And in that role he has spoken fearlessly.

It is hardly a secret that in spite of the victory of the Gavagan bill in the House it faces a hard road and a possible filibuster in the Senate. My practical suggestion is that Maury Maverick might well call a conference of Southern Congressmen to introduce adequate legislation to end lynching. I even think that they would be justified in asking some of the third degree exponents from New York to sit in with them. When we go out to end lynching let us end it in all its phases and in all quarters of our nation.

THE BETTER WAY

Burke county has demonstrated the best way in which lynching may be stamped out.

On April 26 a negro in Burke county assaulted a white woman. A short time after the crime he was captured by an enraged mob. The stage was set for another lynching. Two Burke county farmers, however, rescued the man from his captors. The negro was lodged in jail. The names of his rescuers should forever be inscribed in the honor rolls of their state and county.

On Monday, only two weeks after the crime, the negro was indicted and tried in Waynesboro. Proper guard was provided, the negro pleaded guilty, the jury found him guilty in five minutes, he was sentenced to die in the electric chair and the entire trial was completed in 40 minutes.

Thus Burke county has avoided a blot upon her own escutcheon and upon the good name of Georgia. She has seen that justice, prompt and inviolable, has been enacted upon the perpetrator of a foul crime and at the same time she has upheld in dignity and integrity the law and the courts of the state.

Gradually the lyncher is being eradicated from America. Each year the record improves. With such people as the good citizens of Burke county setting the example, there is hope that the day is not far distant when the rope of the lyncher will be as strange in modern life as is the stake of the Salem witchburner.

Legal technicality and the law's delays have been, in the past, the stock excuse of the mob. Prompt administration of legal justice, as in Burke county, will take away the last argument from those so benighted as to attempt to defend mass outrage.

MOBS IN NORTH AND SOUTH

The Tuskegee Institute issues a report upon lynching that there were only four during the half year, one each in Georgia and Alabama and two in Mississippi. This is two less than for the previous six months.

This decrease is most gratifying, and it is unfortunate that a similar decrease in lynching in portions of the country outside of the South is not revealed. Instead of lynch law decreasing elsewhere, however, it has increased at an almost unprecedented rate, especially in the industrial regions of the North and central West.

It may clarify understanding upon this subject to give the oficial definition of "lynch," this definition being "to inflict punishment upon or kill without the forms of law, as by mob or any unauthorized persons."

Thus, while there have been but four lynchings recorded in the South during the past six months, there have been literally hundreds in such places as Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, Johnstown, Warren and other industrial centers. Yet in the face of this transparent fact, the pending anti-lynch bill in Congress specifically exempts the lynchers of the North from its provisions and includes only those of the oSuth.

Mob law is deplorable regardless of where it breaks out, but it is even more deplorable when one form of mob law is condoned or regarded lightly while another form is delt with in vigorous and proper manner. The South is alert to the perils of mob violence and it is high time that the North became equally alert, for mob violence in that quarter is even worse than in the South because it constitutes a sinister attack upon the government itself.—Gadsden Times.

Cone Was Correct

Florida's Governor Fred P. Cone was right when he said this week's double lynching at Tallahassee "looks like a lot of carelessness by somebody."

He said the deaths of the two Negro victims were "murder, not lynching." Every lynching ought to be subjected to the same investigation and court procedure as murder. But every one is not.

Lest some of the newspapers and some of the individuals who have criticized The Telegraph in the past for its attitude on lynchings still misunderstand: There is no doubt that many men who are lynched deserve the punishment of death as long as capital punishment stands on the statute books. There is no doubt that delays, uncertainties and the possibilities of legal wrangling in the courts impel some persons to try to take justice into their own hands.

But every lynching weakens authorized law. Many lynchings involve the risk of punishing an innocent man. If the reliability of justice in trial by jury is so doubtful that the public can't depend on it in crucial cases, it's not worth having in ordinary cases and the whole jury trial system might as well be discarded.

Who wants that?

Under strict administration of justice in the courts the guilty and the innocent would be served far better than by mob rule. And if lynchers took as keen an interest in jury service, in seeing that delays and legally technical maneuvers are eliminated, as they do in forming mobs and storming jails, justice would be done in court.

In the Tallahassee case, the fact is that the lynchers probably thought their victims would not get the death sentence in court—if one credits them for thinking of anything beyond the murder thrill of killing. But giving them the benefit of the doubt, they may have believed the two Negroes deserved killing because they stabbed a policeman. The policeman was living when the lynching occurred, and certainly the Negroes would not have been given the death sentence in court had they been tried at that moment.

The Telegraph does not concede that so severe a penalty as death was warranted. But if it was, the law should be amended to cover such cases. Seriously, no majority of voters would favor any such amendment. Then why should a comparatively small group of men in a mob undertake to administer a punishment that the public would not enact into law?

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES II.

Constitution

"One to destroy is murder by the law,
And gibbets keep the lifted hand in awe."

"This is murder, not lynching," Governor Cone, of Florida, said when told last week of the masked four men who had taken two negroes from a Tallahassee jail and shot them to death. It is a distinction without a difference, and we wonder that any seems to exist in the Governor's mind. Lynching is always murder, and it is important to have it recognized and named. The laws and the dictionaries agree that murder is "the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, expressed or implied." Those who participate in lynchings are parties to intentional and unlawful homicide. They are murderers, and they should be called by their right name.

Never having participated in a lynching we do not know how a lyncher feels, but we imagine that being called a murderer would shock him considerably. That is why it is important to call him a murderer, and treat him as a murderer. It is a simpler and an older word.

Atlanta, Ga.

Also it is a word more sound in origin. The word "lynch" gets its name from the Charles Lynch who was a Virginia justice of the peace during the War of the American Revolution and who would occasionally string Tories up by their thumbs until they consented to shout "Liberty Forever!" Charles Lynch went in to this extent for extra-legal practices, but he never murdered anybody in his whole life and he does not really deserve to have his name associated as it is today with this or any other department of murder. It is as unfair to his memory as it is flattering to the murderer.

In the same psychology it would seem a mistake to dignify the self-anointed ones who occasionally take a fellow creature out and beat him up with the name of "floggers." Since they are guilty of felonious assault and that is a crime, they are criminals—no matter how high or low their estate.

Noting recent comment here upon the great burden of patriotism, free-thinking and social-mindedness which "freedom of the press" imposes upon the newspaper publishers to whom it is entrusted, our friend Aubrey Harwell calls our attention to the manner in which one particular publisher is serving the trust. This publisher is Curtis B. Johnson, of The Charlotte Observer, who has dreamed and labored many years for a means of serving the youth of North Carolina in body, mind and heart, and who was able to announce last week the opening of a great fresh air camp near Charlotte, financially underwritten by himself, which promises health, recreation, inspiration and noble development to hundreds of boys each summer.

To Witherspoon Dodge, of Columbus, Ga., a salute for as literate, earnest and appealing a letter as has ever come to this column. The subject matter is whether the church should take sides on economic questions. Mr. Dodge thinks it should and must. We don't, but we wish there were room here to print the whole of his letter. "If the church represents God," he says, "and bears witness to the teachings of Christ, it will seek to voice and create a higher scale of values than that which is represented in the cat and dog fight of modern life for even a living. . . . As an educational institution the church is within its province in voicing constructive ideas and ideals."

But the source of this particular controversy is whether the Southern Baptist Conference should have indorsed a co-operative as against a competitive economic system, and that, to our way of thinking, is not a question of ideals but one of economic science. For the church to take sides on such a question would be comparable to a side-taking on its part in the current dispute over the feasibility of establishing a truly permanent meteorological base at the North Pole. The thing has nothing to do with ideals. Or, rather, we hope it doesn't, because we claim ideals of our own and yet we are convinced that the competitive system, civilized and umpired, is the only one that will really work.

LYNCHING SCENE WARNING CARDS WILL BE TESTED

Officers Find No Clue To Identity of Band Of Masked Men

Warning placards found beside the bodies of two negroes lynched near here Tuesday have been sent to the department of justice in Washington for examination, Sheriff Frank Stoutamire said today.

No clues pointing to suspicion of anyone have been uncovered in the case so far, officers declared.

The placards will be examined for fingerprints, texture of the paint and ink with which they were lettered, and the character of cardboard in them.

May Turn Up Something

Test bullets fired from pistols owned and carried by every city and county law officer also have been sent to Washington for comparison with 10 pistol balls found in the bodies of the slain negroes Richard Hawkins and Ernest Ponder.

"This expert exammation may turn up something," said Sheriff Stoutamire.

"There isn't much we can do, but we are trying to find some clues," Police Chief Gid Powledge declared.

"We have nobody under suspicion," said State Attorney Orion C Parker, jr. 'We are working on some information."

Patrolman V F Kelly, whose stabbing Sunday morning by the negroes led to their lynching, was reported "much better" in the hospital here today.

A coroner's jury, which heard policemen and sheriff's officers detail their whereabouts at the time the negroes were taken from jail and killed, stood in recess until a further call from State Attorney Parker. It has not returned a verdict.

"We may have another session of the jury in a few days," said Parker. "When we get any evidence we will present it to the jury. The report from the department of justice will be given to the jury."

The negroes were removed from jail by four masked men who made Policeman Harry Fairbanks use the police department keys to open county jail doors. Fairbanks said he offered no resistance because a pistol was pointed at him.

Fairbanks was on duty last night as usual. City officials said they did not plan any independent investigation because the coroner's jury investigation had brought testimony from police officers showing they had no part in killing Hawkins and Ponder.

Murder In Tallahassee

We had hoped that Florida might get through 1937 with a clean lynching record. Certain individuals in Tallahassee have rudely smashed that desired end. Four men took two 18-year-old negroes out of the Leon county jail, in the shadow of the Capitol, and probably joined by others, carried them a short distance out of town, riddled them with bullets.

The young negroes were charged with inflicting knife wounds on a policeman. The most serious charge which could have been brought against them was assault with intent to murder. Whatever the charge, they were entitled to fair trial.

We can readily understand the racial feeling which flames into mob action when a negro assaults a white woman, but there was no such justification in this case. It was deliberate murder.

Governor Cone is justly indignant. "This was not a lynching," he said, "it was murder. I'm going to do everything I can to get whoever did this. I'm going to prosecute whoever we get to the limit of the law."

Well said, Governor; follow your words with action.

Florida's Shame

"This was not a lynching—it was murder," declares Governor Cone of Florida in comment on the action of a small group of masked men who visited the county jail at Tallahassee, located within four blocks of the state's capitol, and seizing two negro youths charged with stabbing a policeman, carried them off several miles from the city and riddled their bodies with bullets.

The sheriff's statement was that four men, wearing sacks over their heads, forced a night policeman to accompany them to the county jail, where they demanded the keys upon threat of violence. The keys were forthcoming. The officer was forced to accompany the group to the jail and open six doors necessary to get from the outside to the cells. Then he was tied and gagged and left locked in a cell block. The Tallahassee police department uses the county jail and has its own set of keys, the sheriff explained.

According to the sheriff the county jailer slept through all the proceedings, and was only awakened by cries of help from the bound officer after the invaders had made their getaway with their victims. Had there been more vigilance and determination to resist the invaders this is one instance where a lynching or assassination could have been averted. In the record recently printed of lynchings for the past twelve months the few recorded were in states of the deep South.

Florida and the Mob

Two young Negroes at Tallahassee, Florida, stabbed a policeman when he tried to question them about a breaking and entering crime. They were held in city jail pending the outcome of the officer's injuries. Gravely wounded, the officer, however, was still living at last report.

Not so the young Negroes. A mob broke into the jail, took out the prisoners, escorted them to a lonely place on a highway and promptly lynched them. Dead, they possibly have given up a great deal more than a tooth for a tooth, or a life for a life. That the mob would kill them before the outcome of their victim's injuries was determined, is not astonishing per se. Mobs never think, therefore they are likely to do most anything that the most lawless and most imaginative and cunning member suggests.

The remarkable feature of the whole affair is the complete ignorance of the police chief regarding the delivery from the city-county jail, and the fact that the sheriff of the county "could not be reached" for a statement.

All this may be as the police chief says. Yet we recall similar lynchings in Florida and other Southern states wherein the law enforcement officers very innocently explained that the mob took charge of things while they weren't looking.

It is precisely this negligence which gives to hoodlums and mobsters their greatest encouragement and keeps racial hatreds seething in the South.

STRENGTHENING THE ARGUMENT

A Charlotte Observer editorial commenting on the Tennessee lynching illustrates how these recurring outbreaks savagely tend to discourage even some of those strong in the conviction that the Federal government ought not to invade the field of local law-enforcement. The Observer says, in part:

We have never been able to follow the contentions of those in favor of Federal intervention in this matter on the ground that it would be more potent as a preventative than the governing authorities of the States.

But if Tennessee and other Southern States, along with States entirely outside of those in the South, keep on permitting these outrages, we will at length be compelled to capitulate and even argue for the Federal government to see what it can do in the way of putting an end to these crimes.

This feeling is understandable. It is all the more so when the story of this latest lynching reveals the apparently slipshod inefficiency of a sheriff accompanied by only one aide attempting to convey the prisoner from Memphis to Covington, across country in an automobile.

Possibly it is to be doubted whether local police officers have any constitutional right to be as dumb as that without forfeiting their authority to Washington.

Yet The Observer and all others opposing this proposed encroachment on local government must not forget this point; State and local governments must be made stronger and more diligent in their tasks; but, unless these local governments are to be virtually abolished, their functions must not be surrendered to the Federal government.

BEST CURE FOR LYNCHING APPLIED.

An impressive example of the proper way to deal with the problem of lynching has just been given the country by Sheriff JOHN WHITE MOORE, Iredell county superior court and the State of North Carolina.

If every sheriff in every county in North Carolina and all other States followed the worthy example of Sheriff MOORE and all other States followed the example set by North Carolina in this instance, the Nation would have no lynching problem and there would be no agitation in Congress for enactment of an anti-lynching law.

Within approximately 72 hours after a white farmer's wife in Iredell county was criminally assaulted by a negro living on the same farm, he was on the way to the penitentiary at Raleigh under death sentence to be executed September 10—and a threatened lynching had been averted.

The crime was committed Saturday afternoon. The sheriff arrested the negro shortly thereafter, but instead of placing him in the jail of his own county took precautions to carry him secretly to another jail in an unnamed county.

An hour or two after Sunday midnight a crowd of more than 100 men, said to have been from the neighborhood where the crime was committed, rode to Statesville in 25 or 30 automobiles and demanded of the sheriff that they be admitted to the jail to get the prisoner. The sheriff escorted a delegation of three of their number through the jail to satisfy them the negro was not there. Some of them indicated they would come to Charlotte to get him, but the crowd evidently deemed such a mission futile and did not make the trip.

The sheriff promptly informed Governor HOEY of the situation, and asked that State highway patrolmen be sent to Statesville Tuesday when the case was scheduled to be tried. Fifteen patrolmen were on the scene during the trial, under command of Lieutenant FISHER. Commander CHAS. D. FARMER also was on hand. There was no attempt at disorder.

The defendant was given a fair trial, under circumstances assuring fairness and justice. The evidence was conclusive. The victim swore to the essential facts in the case, that she had been assaulted in the absence of her husband at her home by the negro whom she had known at least two years. The sheriff testified the defendant had admitted after his arrest that he had attacked the woman, but claimed he was under the influence of liquor at the time. Several other witnesses were heard.

The jury consumed but half an hour in its deliberations, before it returned a verdict of guilty; Judge ROUSSEAU sentenced him to death and the prisoner soon was on his way to Raleigh, protected by the sheriff's officers and the State patrol.

No mob ever had a chance to get its hands on the prisoner from first to last, because Sheriff MOORE was determined that neither his county nor the State should be disgraced by a lynching in Iredell. Of course the State authorities backed him up, as they always have done and will do when the sheriff takes proper action.

The story of the case has been detailed here because it is the simple and impressive story of how lynchings can be prevented anywhere in North Carolina, anywhere in the South or the Nation, when the officers of the law really wish to prevent them.

It is the story, too, of the application of the only medicine that is needed to stop the perennial introduction and debate of anti-lynching bills in Congress.

Sheriff MOORE and North Carolina have shown the most effective and most desirable way to end lynchings.

The Crime of Lynching

Mark Etheridge, formerly publisher of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, now general manager of the Louisville Courier-Journal, told a conference on education and race relations at Blue Ridge, North Carolina, that "so long as the white South tolerates the application of extra legal measures toward the Negro, no man, white or black, can be assured of the integrity of the law under which he lives."

Whether lynching is to be stamped out by Federal or State laws, or both, and by what kind of laws, may be matters for debate. But that this form of lawlessness must be brought to an end cannot be challenged. The hoary excuse of "defense of womanhood" has been thoroughly exploded, both because a majority of recent lynchings have been for other causes, and because there is no question of the action of the courts where such crimes are proved.

What is needed more than statutes, State or Federal, is an aroused sense of public opinion. It is generally argued that only white men of the lower order of intelligence take part in lynchings—that decent people have no part in them. That argument also falls flat, when it is remembered that the so-called decent people, who had no actual part in the lynchings, have failed to condemn them, and have not insisted that the members of lynching mobs be brought into court for trial on the charge of mob-murder. So long as the so-called decent element of any community keeps in office a sheriff who fails to defend a prisoner, or a Commonwealth's attorney who fails to prosecute a mob, it cannot be contended that its skirts are clear of a crime that has put a stain on the South for a generation.

"THING" NOT ENDED

Because a coroner's jury adjourned without fixing blame for the Talahassee lynching two weeks ago, the state investigation probably will fold up. Orion C. Parker, state attorney assigned by Governor Cone to investigate the crime, gave an idea of what may be expected when he remarked "that just about ends this thing."

Without all the records in view, and compelled to base an opinion on published accounts of the investigation, it must appear to all lay observers that the state has at best made but a half hearted effort to discover the perpetrators of this crime. The tendency seems to have been to keep it quiet, to hush it up, to let as little as possible about it get abroad. Can there be any surprise, then, that there is a widespread belief that somewhere there is strong sympathy with the slayers and a fixed intention to safeguard them against discovery or punishment?

Despite Mr. Parker's assertion, the adjournment of the coroner's jury without deciding who killed the two negroes, does not "just about end this thing." It leaves a blot upon the state and a sigma upon the state's police agencies that no amount of covering up can ever hope to remove.

Florida's Latest Lynchings.

When Governor Cone, of Florida, was informed of the lynching of two negro youths, who had been imprisoned in the county jail at Tallahassee charged with assaulting an officer, he spoke out boldly and vigorously declaring the mob's crime was "murder," and promising to use every means to apprehend the mobsters and to prosecute them to "the limit of the law." Governor Cone's avowed attitude is in striking contrast to that of certain Florida officials with reference to lynchings in years gone by. In the case of the Greenwood lynching, some three years ago, the authorities had been tipped off that a "neck-tie party" was being planned—but they lifted not a finger to prevent it. Governor Cone is right, of course, in characterizing lynching as "murder," and he is to be commended for his condemnation of such brutality and lawlessness. It is hoped that Florida's officers will now follow up with prompt and efficient action the righteous policy their state's chief executive officer has announced. Brave and strong words are of no avail unless backed by swift and vigorous action.

This latest lynching, as might have been expected, has served to increase the clamor and demand of those who favor national anti-lynching legislation, such as that now pending in the Congress. Such legislation would, of course, serve to take more of what little police power the states have left and transfer it to the central government in Washington. Politicians in sections where negroes vote in large numbers are particularly strong for such legislation.

The demand for a federal anti-lynching law might fall and be crushed under its own weight if the law enforcement officers of the states, counties and cities in which lynchings occur would show a stronger disposition to do their duty in apprehending and punishing the sadists who take the law in their own hands. "Just how Sam knows by painless," Sam Cannon, electrician at the South Carolina penitentiary, is quoted in a news item as saying death in the electric chair, of which he has charge, is "absolutely disposed to take his word for it.

LYNCHING

LYNCHING drops out of the nation's headlines, as congress rejects antilynching legislation and the Tallahassee inquiry is "closed."

Sheriff Frank Stoutamire of Leon county has word from Washington that tests on the markings of bullets taken from the bodies of two negro mob victims were not fired from any of the weapons of the Tallahassee police. Four men with sacks over their heads and displaying familiarity with the jail had entered, taken the two negroes out on the Jacksonville highway and killed them on a side road. There will be no further inquiry.

The incident became national news because a bill pending before congress, if passed, would have assessed up to $10,000 against any county in which a lynching should take place, as damages for the family of the one killed. Southern senators were able to kill an amendment to another bill which would have put this policy into effect.

Lynching in the South or in the North or West is regrettable. But very seldom can it be prevented by the local authorities under the peculiar circumstances in which such mob action usually arises.

To penalize the citizens of a community for something they rarely can foresee and seldom prevent would be wholly unjust.

LYNCHING SCARE SUBSIDES

NORTH CAROLINA's first lynching scare in some time ended peaceably Tuesday when Walter (Preacher) Caldwell 37 year-old negro, was quickly convicted in Iredell superior court of assault upon a Mooresville woman and was sentenced by Judge J. A. Rousseau of North Wilkesboro to death in the gas chamber September 10. Immediately after sentence was passed, the prisoner was taken to Raleigh.

Monday morning, between two and three o'clock, a crowd of 125 men in 30 automobiles converged on the Iredell county jail, apparently with the intention of lynching the negro. Sheriff John White Moore called for a committee from the crowd, took them through the jail, and showed them that the negro was not there. The crowd then dispersed.

Where the negro had been kept was not disclosed, but he was produced for trial Tuesday morning, with 15 State highway patrolmen, commanded by Lieut. L. R. Fisher of the Asheville office, standing guard to prevent possible violence.

The trial was short and to the point. The jury received the charge and returned in 30 minutes with the verdict. The sentence by Judge Rousseau followed with equal dispatch, and the negro was on his way in a few minutes to death row at Raleigh.

WHY LYNCHINGS?

Several years ago, while hanging was the death penalty in Georgia, a man murdered his wife. The writer visited the jail and interviewed the murderer. He readily acknowledged the crime. He stated that he was in love with another woman and wanted to get his wife out of the way so that he could marry this woman. He stated that his wife was sitting on the back porch shelling peas; that he went out to the lot and hitched up his mule to a wagon; got an axe, slipped up behind his wife and knocked her on the head; that he returned to his wagon and got in, but that he heard his wife groaning and went back around where she was and finished killing her with the axe. And the scoundrel told this in a cool, bloodthirsty manner.

Came the trial. The murderer said that a confession was forced from him and that he was not guilty and he got off with ten years.

A woman has just murdered one of her little children and attempted to kill the other. She acknowledged the crime and told about how it was done. She attempted to burn both of them, but only succeeded with one.

She gets off with a few years in the penitentiary.

And now, right at home, a man is tried for the ravishing of several little girls, who identified him. He was sentenced to be electrocuted but gets a new trial on the grounds of lunacy.

So—once again—why lynchings?—Lanier County News.

Lynchings Can Be Stopped

There has been another lynching in the South—this time in Tennessee. It is another proof of the painful fact that no fundamental progress has been made in the long, hard problem of making people apply cold reason in times of heated passion.

It may be that argument and education never will suffice alone to make potential lynch mobs remember that the laws and courts exist to do justice. But The Telegraph is too obstinate to believe that words and reason are wasted on the subject. Concededly, so long as there is nothing but talk about lynching there will be no remedy for it. But enough talk eventually will have an effect on voters and they will have an effect on enforcement officers.

A few determined and perhaps sacrificial efforts to prevent lynchings will yield results. Not so many years ago Bibb county saw two good examples of determined law enforcement officers preventing lynchings—and officers who were instrumental in preventing each of the lynchings still hold office.

In one, a sheriff and his force stood off thousands of mobsmen at the county jail. In another a jailer flatly refused to surrender his prisoner and offered to meet force with force if necessary.

It is such cases as these which teach real respect for law and order.

In this week's lynching in Tennessee, a party of six white men took a Negro slaying suspect from Sheriff W. J. Vaughan and an assistant between Memphis and Covington. The sheriff said he did not recognize the men because they were masked. That may be possible. But less easily explainable was his failure to secure the license tag number of the car in which the lynchers rode. There was no indication of any real resistance to the "mob" of six.

The guilt or innocence of lynch victims or their suspected guilt naturally is the inflammatory element in mob motivation. But in reason it has no bearing on the issue. The reason for lynch law's despicability is simply that it abrogates the law, the courts, and everything that this country has set up for passionless administration of justice. Every lynching is a little contribution toward anarchy.

Credit

Credit belongs to the sheriff who defies a lynching mob and disperses it by the sheer earnestness of his determination to protect his prisoners at any cost.

Credit also belongs to the sheriff who uses the good sense people believed he had when they elected him to office and puts his imperiled prisoners in a safe jail in another county where they will offer no temptation to aroused public indignation.

The alertness and the foresight of Sheriff John Moore of Iredell County, saved the State a lynching or an ugly incident when he confined the Negro charged with Saturday's assault on a white woman in another county. In either case he is entitled to the thanks of the State.

Most appreciative ought to be the would-be lynchers themselves.

Lynchings.

The report of six masked men over in Tipton county, Tennessee, shouting "to hell with the law," and seizing a terror-stricken Negro accused of slaying a white officer, "leaving his body dangling at the end of a frayed rope after riddling it with bullets," shocks all justice-loving people.

At one time in our history, back in the 80's and on up to 1901, lynchings ran over 100 annually, except in 1890 they numbered 96. In 1884 and 1892 the number was 211 and 231, respectively. Since 1902 they have diminished from 92 in that year to 20 in 1935; although in 1932, 1929 and 1928 there were only 8, 10, and 11, respectively.

Totals from 1882 to 1935, inclusive, are 1,311 whites and 3,370 Negroes. According to The New York World statistics for the 41 years from 1885 to 1926, inclusive, the total number of persons lynched in the United States was 4,250, of whom 3,205 were Negroes and 1,045 were whites. According to our census bureau statistics, from 1889-1933, inclusive, there were 469 persons lynched in Mississippi; 480 in Georgia; 351 in Texas; 342 in Louisiana; 303 in Alabama; 241 in Florida; 239 in Arkansas; 207 in Tennessee; 168 in Kentucky; 137 in South Carolina; 92 in Oklahoma; 90 in Missouri; 80 in Virginia; with other states following less and less, and New England states with none.

The foregoing is a record which sadly tarnishes the glory of any Christian, civilized, democratic country. The definition of the word is disputed. Some say it is derived from a Virginia farmer, named "Lynch," who thus took the law in his own hands. But the derivation has little to do with the injustice and shame of it.

An authority says that the East is almost free from lynchings; that in the majority of states in the West, most persons lynched are whites; and of those in the South, the larger number are Negroes. This authority finds that the principal causes for lynchings in the South are murder and rape; in the West, murder and offences against property.

We also have it upon reliable authority that lynching decreases and disappears in a region as the population grows denser and civil institutions grow and "as public sentiment is educated to demand legal rather than illegal and irregular infliction of punishment for even the most horrible of crimes."

Seems to us Mississippi newspapers have been a little too concerned over the recent lynching episode in Montgomery county and its probable effect on the anti-lynching bill now in congress. While not condoning the deed some of the newspapers are endeavoring to formulate an excuse for it and at the same time to find much fault with forms of brutality allegedly practiced in other sections.

Anti-lynching legislation will in the main be considered upon its own merits and there is nothing to be gained in trying to raise a smoke screen or in lending encouragement to sectional prejudice. There is already far too much of the latter.

A GEORGE ORGY

GEORGIA has a new kind of mob violence chalked up to its discredit—the "lynching" of a corpse. But it was none the less a degrading, savage orgy.

Willie Reed, a 20-year-old Negro, was said to have confessed to slaying two white women. The sheriff claimed the Negro youth was shot to death while trying to escape from custody.

The Negro's double crime was bad enough. Having confessed, he would have been put to death in due course. The sheriff was justified in shooting the prisoner if he were attempting to escape. Justice apparently had been satisfied.

The bestial, fiendish act of the mob in taking the body from the undertaking parlor, dragging it around the streets of Brainbridge and burning the corpse in a public pyre was an exhibition of sadism harmful not only to those taking part but to the entire community.

Such a spectacle is degarding to the perpetrators because it is murderous and barbaric. They can never be the same again, for the violence they committed was not against the Negro, then already dead, but against their own better natures, thus outraged in their mouth-frothing orgy—like mad dogs that are victims of their viciousness.

And the community itself has witnessed an act which will infect it with this sadistic rabies.

So long as no federal anti-lynching law is passed, this and similar sorts of orgiastic barbarity will continue to spread splotches of human blood on the map of southern civilization.

THE WOMAN'S SIDE

Mrs. E. S. Cook, of Montgomery, Ala., former Mississippi woman, sends to the Daily News a lengthy article on the subject of lynching.

Mrs. Cook is a bit radical on the subject. She favors lynching for the one crime that provokes a majority of lynchings and has no hesitancy in so saying.

There are some sentences in Mrs. Cook's letter that are worth reading. Here they are:

Why so much maudlin sympathy for the person lynched and so little said about the woman who is the victim of criminal assault?

So few words said against the most terrible crime that can be committed on the face of this earth.

We had a lynching here in Montgomery last month. A young couple, walking home at midnight, were held up by a negro. The boy was forced to lie on the ground while the negro brutally assaulted the girl. It happened only two blocks from a busy street. Thereafter a prominent judge wrote an article condemning lynching. He denounced the sheriff as a coward because a mob overpowered the sheriff. Local papers were full of articles on the subject.

I am not a radical. I do not favor lynching save as speedy punishment for just one crime, but I do contend it should be condoned and not so loudly condemned for that crime.

Why don't they stop and do a little thinking about that poor little girl and the bitter memory of one night that she must carry with her to the grave?

A man who commits rape, whether white or black, does not fear death. He doesn't fear death because he is a brute, and when a brute is running at large the best thing to do is to exterminate that brute.

Here in Montgomery there are women who are afraid to go alone to the cemeteries to put flowers on the graves of their loved ones.

Why is it that so many women are leaving the farms? They are afraid to stay alone.

The law is so nice and just—and so slow!

Why is it that there are lawyers so low-down that they will serve as defendants for rapists?

That, you must admit, is a strong summary of the woman's side of the case.

Yes, lynching is a horrible crime. It is resorted to quite often in cases other than the crime of rape. Too often the mobs are quite too quick.

However, the South has, always has had, and ever will have, an "unwritten law" concerning rape.

It applies to the white rapist as well as the negro rapist.

No use arguing about it. That "unwritten law" will persist, and all the speeches made, all the resolutions written and all the laws enacted will not change it.

Passage of a Federal anti-lynching law would be an act of utter futility. It would provoke lynchings in lieu of preventing them.

It's a fact-facing subject.

What would you do if your wife, daughter, or one of your loved ones, was ravished? You'd probably be right there with the mob!

MOB SPIRIT FLARES

NORTH CAROLINA, generally credited with being among the more liberal and progressive States of the South, has not had a lynching to blacken its record of racial relations with the Negro in several years. Yet that the menace of racial antipathy, ready to flare on the instant into the atavism of mob lynching lust, slumbers ever near the surface, especially among rural populations, was revealed cogently in an episode occurring this week near the Albright township in this county, about five miles south of Graham.

A Negro trusty convict, who had escaped a prison camp, was apprehended hiding near a haystack by a lone woman. The woman, panicky at seeing the shadowy figure of the Negro, who "jumped at her with out-thrust arms", ran screaming for help. Help was mustered almost instantly—the kind of help with which the rural South is only too gruesomely familiar—a mob armed with shotguns, rifles, sticks and stones.

It is safe to assume that had members of the mob which responded to the cries for assistance from the woman caught the fugitive before Sheriff Stockard and his posse did, Alamance county in all probability would have had a lynching—its second in this century, if figures are correct—to blot its record and bring down deserved shame upon it.

Yet what had the black been guilty of? Nothing. He was only hiding, as would any escapee who feared detection. There is no record that he even touched the woman, much less insulted or assaulted her. He says himself that he threw up his hands, believing officers of the law at hand.

While it is easy to see how the woman could have been frightened into a condition of near-hysteria, and perhaps have babbled a semi-incoherent story out of which the inflamed minds of the mobsters might only too glibly have construed a story of attack, the near-tragedy of the whole episode offers a stark lesson in the uselessness, the criminal thoughtlessness of mob action. Had these mobsters acted as to all intents and purposes they appeared determined to act, an innocent man would have gone to horrible death—and Alamance county and North Carolina would have suffered a severe blow to their sociological prestige as a county and a State, which have outgrown such manifestations of lawlessness.

Heavy Must Lie The Mobster's Heart

The great danger that always exists when an impassioned mob assumes to administer what it may think is justice is exemplified in this charge at Montgomery that the Henry County mob which took a prisoner from jail and lynched him had the wrong Negro.

One of the great reasons why lynchings are wrong is that they deny the accused the right of a fair chance to prove his innocence. And always when a mob acts, there is the possibility that the wrong man becomes the victim of the crowd's irrational anger.

Any normal-thinking man after participating in a lynching must have twinges of conscience. He has done an illegal thing. He has joined in an act that strikes at the roots of justice. He has yielded to passion in a case where, because a life was at stake, reason should prevail if it ever prevails anywhere.

But on top of this remorse rests also the ever-present fear that the mob acting in haste and in heat has lynched the wrong person. The mobster can never get away from that fear. He can never get rid of the possibility that he has killed in error. A juror sitting in a capital case may have that feeling, but never in the degree that a mob-killer has.

Of course this charge at Montgomery should be investigated. For if it could be proved that the mob was mistaken, then lynching would have received a worse blow than it could from either the impeachment of Sheriff Corbitt or the conviction of some of the mob members.

PERSONAL TO EDUCATION.

One of the answers invariably made when the cause of a federal anti-lynching law is advanced has to do with what education has done, is doing and can do to reduce these barbaric manifestations in the south.

There is considerable point to the assertion as the total number of lynchings, although vacillating from year to year in a manner which interferes seriously with the drawing of positive conclusions, has decreased. But acts of mob-lawlessness do occur, and with these continuing occurrences education has yet to bring retributive justice. The Daily News' contention is that federal agencies of law and order should be standing by, that there is justification for their intervention so long as a single lynching occurs, that state and local agencies have patently failed in their sworn responsibility and that the dispatching of G-men to ferret out mob members and bring them into federal court offers the most realistic approach to a situation which, for all the decrease in lynchings, remains damnable.

There is a field, however, in which law inforcement agencies, Washington included, can do little. It has just been sickeningly illustrated at Bainbridge, Ga., where atrocity has been committed for mere atrocity's sake. A negro accused, and allegedly having confessed, of the murder of two white women was shot and killed when he attempted to escape from two deputies who were, according to the official version, trying to remove him to a place of safety. The actual death of the negro is thus under a cloud, as instances of official indifference so crudely concealed as to fall little short, if any, of actual connivance, come to mind but let's skip that in the present instance and move along to what subsequently happened.

After the negro had been killed a dozen bullet wounds in his body from the fire of only two officers, the denouement can be attributed only to sadism or fiendishness. A mob, estimated by the United Press at more than 200 men and women, rushed the undertaking establishment to which his body had been removed, seized the remains, dragged them around town and finally wound up at the ball park where a generally good time was had in the cremation of the mangled corpse.

And now, education, what are you going to do about manifestations like unto that? It is indeed terrible how these uncivilized nations such as Russia, Germany, Italy and Spain spill blood and make barbarities an accepted part of their governmental procedure.

TO BAR LYNCHINGS IN FLORIDA

It is reported that women in Florida are organizing for the purpose of creating a sentiment against lynching. The movement arising with the women was little expected as it is the women who are the victims of the brutes committing rape. Of course, the law should be preserved and in most instances, it is observed and when such crimes are committed, the criminal is given a fair trial and punished as the law provides. However, there have been some instances when one of these criminals have been tried under the unwritten law, swung to the limb of a tree and his body riddled with bullets. Such occurrences take place only in isolated cases. Lynchings are being, and have been, condemned in the South for all these years and from the records of the last decade, the number has shown a marked decrease.

The organization of these women in Florida is of the purest purpose, no doubt, and its effect will be helpful in the preservation of the law when it is violated. We do believe, however, that in such cases, the victim should not be required to enter the courts and testify. Depositions should be taken and submitted to the court and members of the juries. In this way much embarrassment and humiliation for these unfortunate women would be saved. Besides, there should be no publicity given to such crimes. In this state there is a law prohibiting the publication of the name of the victim, but it should go farther and require trials, if the victim must be present, to be held in privacy.

Now It Is Tennessee

The lynching of Albert Gooden, 35-year-old Negro suspect, in Tennessee does not afford an argument for a Federal anti-lynching bill. What the State of Tennessee may do—or may not do—about this affair may afford a very powerful argument. The argument against a Federal statute is that the States are able to take care of the situation. When State after State fails to take care of it, the argument becomes a bit threadbare.

Gooden was accused of killing Marshal Chester Doyle of Mason, Tenn., on July 17. After his arrest he was held in a Memphis jail and was being brought by motor car to Covington, for a hearing, by Sheriff Vaughan, when six men took the prisoner away from the sheriff. A little later, his bullet-punctured body was found hanging beneath a highway bridge. Sheriff Vaughan says he did not recognize any of the men, and failed to take the number of their car. He could not explain how the men knew he was moving the Negro, or by which road. Apparently the killers used the sheriff's own gun, for it was found lying on the bridge, having been taken from the officer when they took his prisoner. The sheriff made no attempt to follow the men, since he had been disarmed.

An act of Congress cannot cure race prejudice. It may in some instances accentuate it. A Federal anti-lynching bill may not put an end to lynching. But since there is no evidence that the State of Tennessee intends to make more than a perfunctory investigation, and no suggestion that the sheriff of Tipton county be removed for surrendering his prisoner to a lynching mob, point seems to be given to the suggestion that a Federal District Attorney should have power to investigate, and a Federal court power to deal with those who have committed murder of a handcuffed and defenseless prisoner who had not been convicted of any crime.

The Federal anti-lynching bill has been laid over for this session of Congress, now rushing toward adjournment. It will have preferred status when Congress reconvenes in January. States opposed to Federal interference have an opportunity to demonstrate whether as a matter of fact they are capable of dealing with lynching mobs. If Tennessee can bring these six men into court on a murder charge, it will have demonstrated that so far as that State is concerned, a Federal statute is not needed. Virginia has not had a lynching in many years. But Virginia still rests uneasily under the imputation that no one has been brought to trial for the mob-murder of Raymond Bird.

The Federal bill has passed the House, and is on the Senate Calendar. Whether it will be passed in January, extending Federal authority in a local police matter, may depend on what effort the States make in the interim to deal with those who take the law into their own hands. The lynching States may as well realize that the crime is no longer to be tolerated. If they are impotent to handle their lynching mobs, the Federal government is going to do it for them, whether they like it or not.

THE SOUTH ANSWERS

The South answers the vicious and unfair criticism from many sources that lynching is condoned and the perpetrators go unpunished.

Over in Henry county in Alabama, a sheriff was found to be negligent in his duty in connection with a lynching.

The sheriff will face impeachment on June 3.

The officer said a mob of fifty men forced him to release a negro, held on charges of attacking a white woman.

It was a crime for which lynchings will never be stamped out.

But Alabama is taking commendable steps to punish wilful negligent officers.

Wherever possible the dignity of the law should be upheld, and the courts allowed to take their course.

There is no substitute for law and order, and lynchings are represensible and are condoned by no one, even though they may be justifiable in some instances.

LAWS AGAINST LYNCHING

WE are democrats, and insist upon being so classified and thus described. We believe in the strict preservation of the reserved rights of the state, and strictly limiting the federal government to those specific powers granted to it by the Constitution. But when members of congress from the South, who voted for all the unconstitutional legislation set aside because it invaded the rights of the states, now bellow that the bill to prevent lynching should be voted down because it invades the field of states rights, such bellowing excites our soul's disgust and our mind's abhorrance. Is the doctrine of states rights to be lowered and degraded for the defence of mob murder, and for the defeat of legislation intended to protect the lives of citizens of the states, be they black or white? Look at this bloody record of mob murder: In Alabama · 267 negroes lynched, Arkansas 204, Florida 226, Georgia 434, Louisiana 295, Mississippi 445, South Carolina 134, Tennessee 169, Texas 290. We do not include the number of white persons lynched in those states because the percentage compared to the number of negroes lynched is so small. Mob murder in this country is an exclusive activity of the nine states mentioned, and in those states the victims of the mob murderers have exclusively been defenceless negroes, many of whom were innocent, and many not legally identified. Those are the only states in this country where even the court-trials of negroes, charged with rape or murder, are carried on under circumstances that insure conviction whether the negro is innocent or not. Jurors selected without regard to the constitutional rights of the accused, the court room filled with would-be mob murderers, the grounds around the courthouse filled with a milling, howling mob, during the progress of the trial, mobs shouting under windows while the jury is going through the pantomime of deciding the case, all these are familiar accompaniments of the trial of a negro accused of rape or murder in those nine states. In Mississippi a judge is defeated for re-election because he set aside a verdict convicting a negro of rape, on the ground that there was no evidence to justify conviction.

In the nine states mentioned negroes have been murdered by mobs for such offences as walking on the side of a bridge used by white people, for having a quarrel with a white man, for striking a white man with the fist in self defence, for jostling a white woman in a crowd, for alleged slapping of a white woman when the negro claimed he raised his hand in a crowded street and accidently touched the woman's face. In this case the negro was not arrested at the time, but was taken from his home at night and lynched by relatives of the woman. A man was lynched for telling sharecroppers of their rights, for getting in the way of a mob looking for another person, for interfering with an officer making an arrest, for making a socialist speech, for looking disrespectfully at a white woman. A small colored boy, playing with white girls and boys on the sidewalk, grabbing in fun at a girl, tore her dress. He was lynched in broad daylight, hanged to death on a lamppost with his mother and father and brothers and sisters looking on. In Georgia a negro charged with rape was being burned, his body saturated with gasoline, and tied to a tree. His wife rushed to his side and the mob burned her to death with him. For none of these murders was anyone punished. When arrests are made nobody is convicted. All the lynching is accompanied by barbarity and unspeakable cruelty, and the victims have had their bodies mutilated before they were burned to death. The lynchings occur in public and the lynchers wear no masks. In some instances fingers of the murdered negro have been cut off and exhibited proudly as souvenirs, and clothing of the victim torn and parts distributed to be kept as precious memories of the event. Members of the mob console themselves with the familiar talk that "a negro is not a human being." All the barbaric mob murders are defended in the South by politicians on the ground that they protect the womanhood of the South. But in every state in the South the white women of the highest culture have formed organizations protesting against lynching, and more than a million white women have signed petitions against lynching. Statistics prove that not one negro in five hundred thousand ever commits the crime of rape. Except for petty stealing the negroes of the entire South are among its most law abiding people. You do

"To hell with the law!" is the answer a Tennessee sheriff said he received when he tried to reason with six men who committed the lynching.

We don't doubt that the men were quoted correctly since they also used a good lynching slogan. Perhaps they also used some of those other good old lynching slogans:

"To hell with democracy!"

"To hell with civilization!"

We remember with what fidelity for four years guarded our women and children, whose husbands and fathers were fighting against his freedom, and when at last he raised his black and humble hands that the shackles might be struck off, those hands were innocent of wrong against his helpless charges, and worthy to be taken in loving grasp by every man who honors loyalty and devotion."

We know that in the nine states mentioned the negro does not get justice and we know they could protect him if they wanted to do so. Lynching ended in Virginia ten years ago when Governor Harry Flood Byrd let it be known that lynching would not be tolerated. Up to this time the negro in the South has had no protector but the Supreme Court of the United States. To this court he has never turned his longing eyes in vain. It stands as the palladium and citadel of his liberty, but it is powerless to stop lynching. Any law that will protect the negro in the nine states that do not protect him, should be welcome to all good citizens, although that law is forced by necessity to come from Congress.

To hear men who voted for the National Recovery Act, and Agricultural Adjustment Act, and seven other acts, set aside by the Supreme Court, because they invade the rights of the states, come now and talk of states rights to perpetuate mob murder, is beyond human patience. It is creditable to the republicans in congress, that notwithstanding that the negroes deserted that party in the recent presidential election, the republicans voted solidly for the Federal Anti-lynching Act. No harm will ever come to this country from enforcing laws against mob murderers. When lynching is stopped the federal statute will be no longer required. If "states rights" means the right to murder defenseless citizens then states rights are a menace to society, and all government.

Begs the Question.

"You propose to come into the South with your insulting intrusion to remove the stains of a few drops of blood here and there while you wade through pools of blood from the bodies of murder victims in your own streets and within the confines of your own premises."

So said Representative McClennan of Arkansas in a speech in the House attacking the pending anti-lynching bill. He seems to have been addressing his remarks to his colleagues from other sections of the South who are supporting the measure, and particularly to those from New York, for he continued:

"When you have mopped from the sidewalks of New York the blood of innocent children who, while at play, were shot down like rats by gangsters; when you show us that you can keep crime from thriving and operating practically at will in your own bailiwick; when you have squelched the stench of corruption in which you wallow in the largest and, as you would proclaim, the 'most civilized' city in the world, then, but not until then, are we in the South ready or willing to concede that your standards of morals, of virtue, of citizenship, of society, and respect and obedience to law are superior to ours."

Representative McLennan's speech was punctuated with applause, probably from some of his Southern colleagues. But it was a more or less rhetorical outburst which, upon analysis, is found to be wholly lacking in logic. The sad truth is that the gentleman from Arkansas was beating about the bush, fanning the air, and begging the question. For the question is not whether there is gangsterism in New York, and crimes are committed there, but whether Southern States make an honest effort to suppress the lynching mob. And the answer to the question is in the negative.

New York is a cosmopolitan city with a population three or four times that of Arkansas. It is the largest city in the United States as well as one of the largest in the world, and naturally it has a great many criminals who drift there from all parts of the country, probably including Arkansas. New York has a host of gangsters and racketeers and other criminals, and they commit numerous crimes, some of them dastardly crimes. But New York makes an honest effort to deal properly with these criminals, and not without a fair degree of success. That city hunts down its criminals and sends them to the electric chair or to prison.

Moreover, New York and other cities and the States welcome Federal assistance in bringing gangsters and gunmen and kidnappers to justice. And the Government lends this assistance. The careers of scores of outlaws who still would be defying city and State authorities have been brought to an end by Mr. Hoover and his G-Men. Possibly New York would also welcome Federal assistance in solving its lynching problem, if it had such a problem. Certainly a Federal anti-lynching law would apply to New York and to the North and East as well as to the South.

Representative McClennan delivered a speech in which he virtually admitted that the disgrace of the lynching mob is the South's disgrace. "You propose to come into the South with your insulting intrusion," he said. And he made the admission without offering any excuse for or defense of the failure of the Southern States to suppress or to attempt to suppress mob lawlessness. The people of the South will not congratulate him upon his speech.

A Plea for Decency

That the better element of the population in the South does not countenance lynching atrocities, is evidenced by the indignation shown by good citizens of Mississippi regarding the torture slayings at Duck Hill, that state, which claimed two Negro victims.

It is perhaps more often than not the case that lynching and torture crimes are committed by men having lower character than those whom they proceed to "punish." It is certain that few men of a high order of education and intelligence ever volunteer to lead a mob, in the South or elsewhere.

SENATOR SMITH AGAINST PLAN

The following paragraph is taken from a letter written recently by Senator E. D. Smith to the Chesterfield Advertiser:

"What is the past record of the people of South Carolina? If this thing passes, the packing of the supreme court, then, whatever the President wants will be done. The anti-lynching bill will pass and be declared constitutional. The old civil rights bill, that Thaddeus Stephens had passed and which the supreme court declared unconstitutional, will be revived, and the Negroes will demand the right to attend white schools, seats in the theaters, in a whole, every civil right that the whites enjoy regardless of state lines. It is the most dangerous thing that has ever occurred."

Mobs And Men

Recently near Fort Walton, Fla., a group of armed and hooded men halted a sheriff, seized his 30-year-old Negro prisoner on the eve of his trial and riddled him with buckshot. It was Florida's third, the South's eighth, lynching this year.

From Villa Rica, Ga., comes another kind of story. Three men—one white and two black—were in a railroad water tank 30 feet deep, painting the walls with tar. Suddenly there was a crackle of flame which spread with the rapidity of an explosive. A narrow, one-man ladder led to the top of the tank and safety. F. L. Hill, white foreman for the Southern Railroad, stood back and ordered his Negro assistants up the ladder. They got out without injury. Foreman Hill was overcome by fumes and burned to death.

There is a vast difference between men in mobs and men as individuals. As mobs they are emotional, brutal, cowardly; as individuals they act like F. L. Hill, hero.

That is why this country must have anti-lynching and other laws to punish mob anarchy. If ever this democracy is destroyed it will be by mobs.

FUNNY BUT SAD

One of the funniest jibes we have read in years is the following from the London Era:

"Notice on an office door in an Alabama township:

"'Back in an hour. Gone to lynch.'"

The substitution of the word "lynch" for "lunch" in that brief bit of humor was an inspiration.

At the same time, while admitting the merit of the Era's wisecrack, Americans are bound to feel thoughtful and perhaps a bit humiliated. How plainly the foregoing quotation shows the opinion the English and other "foreigners" generally have of the South! To them it is not a section distinguished by hospitality, steadily advancing industrial achievement and humanitarianism but one especially notorious for its tendency to inflict mass murder upon helpless individuals.

It is a depressing picture. However, thanks to the activities of thousands of good Southern women and other reform agencies, lynching is fast losing its popularity below the Mason-Dixon line and within a few years it may be possible that "Alabama" will not mean the same thing as "lynching" to the average Englishman.

FIGHT BACK

Tuskegee Institute, negro school, comes forth with its usual semi-annual report, giving the lynching record in the South.

This time, it happens to be one in Alabama, one in Georgia and two in Mississippi.

That is a total of four for the first six months of the year, the same number as last year.

Neither Alabama, Georgia nor Mississippi condones these lynchings.

If Tuskegee Institute really wanted to get up records, they would do well to look to other sections as well.

How many negroes are killed each year in Chicago? How many in New York? In St. Louis? In other cities?

Machine guns, pistols, blackjacks and knives are used there.

But the victims are just as dead as if lynched with a rope.

An unlawful killing is a lynching by whatever name it may be called.

We are sick and tired of seeing the South pointed out as the only unlawful section of the country.

Within the past few days, three little girls were choked to death in California by a maniac.

Every state has its dark side.

We give credit to Tuskegee Institute for doing a great educational work, particularly in the light of the work of such men as Dr. Carver.

But Tuskegee should look beyond the South and see what happens to negroes in other states.

They will find there just as many, if not more, killings and crime than in the South.

Let the South—its newspapers and its people—rise up and begin to tell the whole story.

Let the South begin to fight back at the insidious and continued unwarranted slush that is poured out upon our heads year after year.

New York, Chicago, St. Louis, California and other places have just as bad, if not worse, crime records than does the South.

Then let our people begin to stand up on their hind legs and let the facts be known.

In other words, fight back.

Lynching Figures

Representative Hatton W. Sumners gave the House some figures the other day that the Senate will do well to consider if the upper chamber ever runs so short of legislation that it must consider the Wagner-Van Nuys pro-lynching bill.

It was Sumners who fronted the fight against the vicious Gavagan pro-lynching bill which was passed in the lower chamber and supplanted by the equally iniquitous Wagner measure in committee in the upper house.

During House consideration of the former, Representative Sumners cited the splendid record the South has made in curbing lynchings and showed the utter needlessness for federal invasion of local law enforcement fields. Figures of Dr. Monroe N. Work of Tuskeegee Institute were quoted in debate showing nine lynchings for the country in 1936, compared to 231 in 1892.

Now the Texan has advised the House that Dr. Work was in error. In a letter to the representative, he explained that one of the number listed, who disappeared in Arkansas and thus was counted as a "victim," had turned up in Chicago, hale and hearty.

That cut the total to eight.

"Or," as Sumners put it, "one for each 16,054,000 population."

Let Senators Wagner and Van Nuys produce as low a record for strike mob violence and gang killings.

WHERE WAS THE STATE?

The plea of those opposing enactment of a Federal anti-lynching law that the Southern states should be left free to eliminate the evil in their own good time fails to explain what the State of Florida was doing about lynching early yesterday morning when two Negro youths were taken out of the Tallahassee city jail within two blocks of the State Capitol and lynched by a mob of masked men.

Nor does the statement of Governor Fred P. Cone that "This was not a lynching. It was murder" make clear his conception of the difference between lynching and murder. Had he said, "This was a lynching and this was murder," every person who believes that the function of law is to punish the guilty and to protect the innocent would have agreed with him. But when he places murder in one category and lynching in another category, even though he says that this particular lynching was murder, he fails to make his distinction clear to those who believe that lynching is only a particularly cold-blooded, brutal, inhuman form of murder.

Like every other Southern governor who condemns a lynching in his own state, Governor Cone bitterly denounces the lynchers and promises to do everything possible to bring them to justice: "I'm going to do everything I can to get whoever did this. It looks like a lot of carelessness here by somebody. I'm going to prosecute anybody we get to the limit of the law." A few years ago the Governor of North Carolina was saying things like this following lynchings in Franklin and Pender counties. A few months ago the Governor of Mississippi was saying things like this following a brutal double-lynching in his state. But if these governors meant what they said, they proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that they were powerless to prevent lynchings and to punish lynchers; for they never succeeded in bringing the murderers to justice.

So the decent, law-abiding, fair-minded people of the South—who regard brutal slaughter in the name of racial prejudice as a shameful blot on the history of the Southern states and a grievous affront to the Southern people—again call on the Congress of the United States to save the South from its own worst enemies by passing a Federal anti-lynching bill.

Charleston, S. C., Evening Post

MUST ACT VIGOROUSLY

Only vigorous and effective steps on the part of Florida to bring to justice the participants in a double lynching occurring at Tallahassee Monday night will serve to remove the stigma placed on that State by this deed of violence. Apparently the authorities are making a thorough investigation of the deplorable affair, realizing the importance of such action, particularly with an objectionable anti-lynching bill pending in the United States Senate which Southern Senators have up to now succeeded in blocking. Very few lynchings have occurred this year and the Florida slayings served at once to arouse proponents of the federal anti-lynching measure to renewed efforts to jam their bill through. Southern States assert that they can best handle lynching cases within their respective borders without interference from federal sources, holding such interference an invasion of their rights. Now Florida has the opportunity to show the country it will deal sternly with crimes of this sort and is expected to do so.

RIGHTS FOR NEGRO URGED BY ETHRIDGE

Halt to Lynching or U. S. Action Advocated.

BLUE RIDGE, N. C., Aug. 5.—(AP)—Mark Ethridge, general manager of the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal, told the conference on education and race relations here tonight that "America owes the negro the stamping out of lynching and the protection of his person and his property from violence."

"If it requires federal marshals and federal deputies to prevent lynchings and punish lynchers in the south, then I am for federal marshals and deputies doing it," he added.

"To recognize the right of a state to handle the problem when lynchings continue is to recognize the right of a state to tolerate a violation of the fundamental tenet of every civilized people, whether democratic or monarchical: The right of man to live under law and to be deprived of life only by law.

Ethridge asserted that it was a matter of plain, simple justice to give the negro adequate public accommodations and resist legislative measures tending to deprive him of the right of a legitimate occupation.

"For our own protection, if not for the negro's; for the preservation of our own self-respect, for the preservation of our own ideal of democracy and civilization, we can in plain simple justice join with the negroes in their demands for a better distribution of public moneys—a distribution that is in accord with the ideals of a new economic deal in this country—a new deal dedicated to lifting the level of life regardless of race," he said.

Nothing Doing

There were mutterings among an Iredell County mob that found its marked victim, a Negro alleged rapist, removed to another jail, about coming over to Mecklenburg to see if he was held here. Nobody appeared, as far as was heard, and we are glad of it, for we wouldn't like Mecklenburg to be the scene of a lynching or an attempted lynching or even the threat of a lynching. But in a way we wish the mob or some part of it had shown up at either of the jails down East Trade way and demanded the person of the suspect.

For as long as the impulse to lynch persists, there will be lynchings or attempted lynchings; and the only way to eradicate this impulse is for officers of the law to behave as though lynching was as much of a crime as any that had gone before, which it is. Local officers, we believe, are not lacking in that regard for the safety of their prisoners or in the courage to assure it; and, for that matter, the local bastilles, notably that of the County, would not be easy for a mob to storm.

The South is very much on the lookout these days for other than a Federally-sponsored preventive for lynching. Some Southern States appear to have found the formula. Tennessee, for one, since that day in 1934 the national guard lined up in front of the court house at Shelbyville and fired into an oncoming mob, has had no lynchings and precious few attempts at lynching. We should have hated for Charlotte to play Shelbyville to Iredell County's would-be lynchers, but fools learn only by attending Experience's dear school.

BEST CURE FOR LYNCHING APPLIED

The Charlotte Observer

An impressive example of the proper way to deal with the problem of lynching has just been given the country by Sheriff John White Moore, Iredell county superior court and the State of North Carolina.

If every sheriff in every county in North Carolina and all other States followed the worthy example of Sheriff Moore and all other States followed the example set by North Carolina in this instance, the Nation would have no lynching problem and there would be no agitation in Congress for enactment of an anti-lynching law.

Within approximately 72 hours after a white farmer's wife in Iredell county was criminally assaulted by a negro living on the same farm, he was on the way to the penitentiary at Raleigh under death sentence to be executed September 10—and a threatened lynching had been averted.

The crime was committed Saturday afternoon. The sheriff arrested the negro shortly thereafter, but instead of placing him in the jail of his own county took precautions to carry him secretly to another jail in an unnamed county.

An hour or two after Sunday midnight a crowd of more than 100 men, said to have been from the neighborhood where the crime was committed, rode to Statesville in 25 or 30 automobiles and demanded of the sheriff that they be admitted to the jail to get the prisoner. The sheriff escorted a delegation of three of their number through the jail to satisfy them the negro was not there. Some of them indicated they would come to Charlotte to get him, but the crowd evidently deemed such a mission futile and did not make the trip.

The sheriff promptly informed Governor Hoey of the situation, and asked that State highway patrolmen be sent to Statesville Tuesday when the case was scheduled to be tried. Fifteen patrolmen were on the scene during the trial, under command of Lieutenant Fisher. Commander Chas. D. Farmer also was on hand. There was no attempt at disorder.

The defendant was given a fair trial, under circumstances assuring fairness and justice. The evidence was conclusive. The victim swore to the essential facts in the case, that she had been assaulted in the absence of her husband at her home by the negro whom she had known at least two years. The sheriff testified the defendant had admitted after his arrest that he had attacked the woman, but claimed he was under the influence of liquor at the time. Several other witnesses were heard.

The jury consumed but half an hour in its deliberations, before it returned a verdict of guilty; Judge Rousseau sentenced him to death and the prisoner soon was on his way to Raleigh, protected by the sheriff's officers and the State patrol.

No mob ever had a chance to get its hands on the prisoner from first to last, because Sheriff Moore was determined that neither his county nor the State should be disgraced by a lynching in Iredell. Of course the State authorities backed him up, as they always have done and will do when the sheriff takes proper action.

The story of the case has been detailed here because it is the simple and impressive story of how lynchings can be prevented anywhere in North Carolina, anywhere in the South or the Nation, when the officers of the law really wish to prevent them.

It is the story, too, of the application of the only medicine that is needed to stop the perennial introduction and debate of anti-lynching bills in Congress.

Sheriff Moore and North Carolina have shown the most effective and most desirable way to end lynchings.

Punish The Lynchers

A vigorous editorial in the Covington Leader deplores the lynching of a Negro by a mob of six masked men Monday night. The newspaper demands that the mobsters be brought to justice. In the meantime the Tipton County Grand Jury, which made an investigation, recessed until September 1 after announcing that no worthwhile leads had been discovered.

The good people of Tipton County doubtless agree with its newspaper when it said, "Tipton County hangs its head in shame at this rape of law and order under which society operates."

"The grand jury's investigation should be thorough indeed," the editorial concluded, "vindicating the county through conviction of the guilty."

Why shouldn't the law deal sternly and fearlessly with the mob? The spirit of lynchers is in direct opposition to the law and order of which its vicious leaders pose as defenders. The mob is in defiance of civilization, a return to the law of the tooth and the claw, and an insult to a community in which it winds its crimson trail. To wink at and condone lynchers is to admit that law-abiding citizens are incapable of administering the law. By all means punish criminals which incite the mob, but let it be executions (when capital crimes are involved) and not murder. Lynching is murder, deliberate and premeditated, and by the same rule lynchers are murderers who, by their deed, scorn law and disgrace humanity.

MISSISSIPPI INSTANCE AND ANTI LYNCHING BILL

A Mississippi mob seized, tortured and killed two Negro prisoners Tuesday while in Washington members of the House debated the 1937 version of the annually offered federal anti-lynching bill.

Announcement of the Mississippi lynching prompted proponents of a federal law against lynching to up and say "there is proof that our position is sound." Opponents, of course, answered, "the good citizens of Mississippi did not participate in the lynching and do not condone lynchings. The lynching was an invasion of Mississippi law and Mississippi law will be invoked against the lynchers."

Well, the lynching was an invasion of Mississippi law all right and it is the promise of Judge Allen, the jurist holding court in the courthouse from whence the mob pulled their victims, and Governor White that "this terrible thing (the lynching) will be investigated by the grand jury." And there is the usual expression of regret from the sheriff, who did not feel disposed to protect his prisoners, and his vow to run down the mobsters. Maybe something besides official lament and wordy condemnations will come of the affair, but we have serious doubts.

It is anybody's guess as to whether or not federal anti-lynching legislation would restrain the emotions of potential mobsters and incline sheriffs to defend prisoners placed in their custody. No one can tell whether or not federal probes of lynching would succeed where state probes regularly fail. There is no substantial record to base any prediction on and all hands will have to admit that under our scheme federal and state officers of the law are picked from the same group in pretty much the same manner—through political maneuvers.

It can be said, though, that the gentlemen who argue against federal anti-lynching legislation on theory that the Mississippi lynching was not executed or condoned by "the good citizens of Mississippi" ignore one of the basic qualities of the lynch spirit. Lynching obtains largely because those citizens commonly classed as "good citizens," in their minds, consent to lynchings and limit their condemnation of lynchings to perfunctory statements uttered after the deed has been committed. And "the good citizens" find it convenient not to concern themselves about the punishment of those who participate in lynchings.

So long then as it can not be said that federal anti-lynching legislation would not increase the likelihood of running down lynchers, we refuse to cheer the southern senators and representatives who filibuster against federal anti-lynching legislation. And we certainly haven't any patience with their chatter about states' rights in connection with lynchings.

MISSISSIPPI SHOWS THE WAY

AS HIDEOUS in its moron stupidity and lustful fiendishness as the episode was, the lynching of two Negroes in Mississippi yesterday by a mob who seized the victims from the deputies taking them to prison came at a particularly propitious time in view of the fact that even now Congress has an anti-lynching measure before it.

The Negroes were not even accused of the raping of a white woman, the usual "excuse" for lynching in the South. They were accused of slaying a white merchant. And for the allegation of this crime—for no one can say definitely whether they were guilty or not—both men were burned at the stake.

What sort of people inhabit that State of Mississippi? Are they all creatures of the type that William Faulkner and Erskine Caldwell write about—degenerate, depraved, sadistic wretches, capable only of mob emotions, ignorant of all form of decency, society, law and order? It would seem so when a State has a crime as ghastly as this written against its far from clean record.

And yet it cannot be—there must be some citizens of decent impulses, of law and order minds, of right and truth and justice and fairness. Yet such citizens do nothing; by their very apathy they condone, they are in a sense parties to, such atavistic foulness as this dual lynching.

Senators and representatives from East and North and West propose an anti-lynching measure on a Federal scale, a law with teeth in it which will punish the officers from whom a prisoner is taken and lynched, punish all identified members of the mob before Federal courts and Federal juries, punish the counties in which such outrages occur by fining them $10,000 or more, the money to go to survivors of the lynching victim.

And Southern congressmen sit back on their haunches and yowl to high heaven that State's rights are being trampled on. State's rights, indeed! When will the State of Mississippi, and the States of Georgia and Alabama and Texas and the other States of the South which, year in and year out, add to the reputation of Dixie as a vast area of retrogression and degeneracy by their condoning of lynching, take appropriate State action?

Have they ever? . . . Answer that question and then ask yourself—very well, then, will they now? . . . Answer that question truthfully, and one solution—only one solution—is apparent to the sordid problem which too long has crucified decency and law in the South. The solution is, a Federal anti-lynching law.

Lynching is a problem which the Southern States, as separate entities, have proved utterly incapable of solving.

Mississippi's Disgrace

While Congress was debating the Gavagan anti-lynching bill a Mississippi mob burned two negroes to death. Southern Democrats are fighting the Gavagan measure which would imprison peace officers who permit a prisoner to be lynched without making reasonable effort to prevent the crime. Members of mobs would be subjected to the same penalty. The bill also provides for the imposition of heavy fines.

Republicans and northern Democrats are supporting the Gavagan bill and the people of Mississippi, who committed the revolting murder of two criminals, gave them opportunity to declare that there is no way of preventing lynchings in the South except by prosecution of mob members and negligent or inefficient officers in federal courts. Mobs in the South have done nothing to prevent the crimes for which they lynch men. Mobs have done great injury to the South. They put the lawabiding people of the South in an unfair and unjust light.

THE MISSISSIPPI LYNCHING

The torturing and lynching of two young Negroes by a mob of 300 white men in Mississippi came at a time when it will give impetus to the passage of the Federal anti-lynching bill which has created so much discussion. The terms of the bill would make any county liable in which a lynching occurred and would also punish any officer from whom a mob snatched a prisoner. It is generally conceived that the bill is aimed at the south, although, indeed, if the records be searched carefully, states to the north of us have nothing to be proud of in this respect. If you count the gangster killings as lynchings and what else can they be, the count will be on the side of the south. However this may be, we have always held that under no circumstances is lynching to be condoned.

WHAT MAKES A LYNCHING

The Duck Hill, Miss., lynching is now a part of the ignominy in Mississippi history. Nothing probably will ever be done about it. Little ever has been done about any lynching

But the occasional surge of a mob causes many persons to wonder just what causes a lynching.

Condemnation of mob violence has not entirely stopped such actions. Mobbing of prisoners has not stopped crimes which usually are advanced as the reasons for mob violence.

Therefore the situation devolves into a circle as vicious as any which ever confronted American citizens.

Passage of a federal anti-lynching law will not halt lynchings. The only agency that could counteract the law of "Judge Lynch" would be a regiment or so of G-Men. There is something about the name—G-Men—that terrifies men who resort to criminal methods to obtain any objective. American G-Men compare favorably now with the Canadian Mounted Police. They have a big something in common—so far they always have gotten their man.

But it is unlikely that the federal government will assign an G-Men to any lynching investigation.

Nobody argues that most victims of lynchings deserved less than capital punishment. The gravest evil connected with lynchings is the act of a group of persons in taking the law into their own hands Such acts nullify the law and constitute a sudden and savage revolt against the established regulations under which modern civilization functions.

But what makes a lynching? Is it dissatisfaction at the sometimes tedious operation of a court? Is it racial antipathy? Is it distrust of the capabilities of some elected officials to see that speedy justice is handed out to criminals?

Until the underlying cause of lynchings is discovered little permanent progress will be made toward solving this strange throwback to savagery.

It would be far better for citizens to generate mob psychology in demanding uniformly fair and stern enforcement of the law than it is for groups of them to take the law into their own hands.

INVITING ACTION

The Mississippi mob that lynched two negroes last week could not have chosen a worse time, for even then a representative was preparing to put before the U. S. House a far-reaching federal anti-lynching measure.

The Mississippi incident served only to incite the backers of the measure, giving them ample fresh ammunition to hurl against the arguments of the Southern representatives opposing it.

The lynching problem is one that should be handled by the states. The Southern state governments have been making great progress toward curbing mob violence in that respect, and their citizens can not consider it a compliment to their success thus far to have the federal government ram a rights-stealing measure down their throats.

Yet, the more unfortunate lynching instances occur in the South, the stronger will be efforts in congress to pass the anti-lynching measure. The thing for the states to do is to redouble their efforts to blot out these violent happenings.

Motives for Southern Lynchings Held Same as in Witch Burnings

Dr. Raper Says Poorer Classes in South Are Responsible and Program Should Be Geared to Lifting Economic, Social Conditions.

By the Asso

ATLANTA, April 17.—Dr. Arthur Raper, research secretary for the Commission on Interracial Co-Operation, said today the present lynchings in the south "are motivated by the same mental attitude that cause the historical Massachusetts witch burnings."

"Lynchings," he said, "come out of the state of mind of white people much more than out of the crimes committed by Negroes, just as witches were burned in Boston, not because there were witches in Boston, but because of the state of mind of the people in Boston."

He said the use of a blow torch in a lynching this week in Mississippi demonstrated a new development: The impact of the mechanical age on a primitive method of social control."

Dr. Raper personally has investigated more than 100 lynching cases in the last nine years. He is author of the "Tragedy of Lynching," and "A Preface of Peasantry."

The typical southern lynching falls into two classifications, Dr. Raper said. First, by the "orderly" mob directed by community leaders; second, by the wild mob type.

"The first type is Bourbon in leadership and its principal object is to wreak vengeance on a particular individual," Dr. Raper said.

"The second type is proletarian and is distinctly directed against an entire class of people. It is distinguished by sadistic tortures of the victims."

He said the recent Mississippi lynching was a combination of the two types.

Dr. Raper said the typical lynching is "in the rural south, the mob victim is a Negro, the lynchers are native-born whites and the courts punish no one."

He said his studies show that a man in the 200 "most rural counties" of the south is in sixty times more danger of being lynched than is a man in the half-dozen most populous counties.

Dr. Raper declared lynchers seldom are punished because "punishment depends on the same peace officers and court officials whose impotence they demonstrated when they lynched."

He said the leading white people in some communities direct a lynch mob to maintain control of Negro labor.

"But it is the poorer rural whites, who live on about the same plane as the landless Negroes near by, to whom manhunts, mock trials and lynchings prove most attractive. The racial dogma is precious to them because it is proof they are superior.

"They get a chance to escape boredom of restricted lives. For a time they are people of importance—they assume the role of society's protectors; they flourish weapons; they hunt down the accused; they determine his guilt; they destroy him."

Dr. Raper said the most effective answer to the problem of lynching is to give the poorer rural areas of the south a greater share in the economic and cultural wealth of the nation. He declared:

"Any effective program must be geared to the task of lifting above the lynching level the poorest rural areas and the poorest elements in a yet larger region. In this task the county, state and federal governments all have responsibility.

"It is, of course, the part of wisdom that the contributions of each be so correlated that whatever responsibility can be borne locally shall be left there. At the same time, in no instance should the local community be permitted to lynch and then protect its lynchers from punishment, and thus violate the essential nature of the state and nation of which it is a part."

A federal intrusion into this field would tend to arouse local antagonism in a way that might retard rather than hasten the suppression of the lynching evil. It is seriously to be questioned whether it will promote the ends it is intended to serve and it will, in any event, set an unhappy precedent that will plague relations between Washington and the states for many years. Yet, unless the south makes more of a show than it has yet made of trying to fight lynching with its own weapons, this measure may easily be passed and incorporated in federal law.

For this reason as well as because it was a highly disgraceful exhibition, it is extremely desirable that the Tennessee authorities deal effectively with the mob which on Monday lynched a prisoner at Covington and with the sheriff who surrendered his prisoner to the mob without a fight. Tennessee is by no means at the top of the lynching list, but it is one of the states in which lynchings are of more or less regular occurrence. The state now has a chance in dealing with the Covington mobsters to show that it is determined to take itself out of the lynching column and end its long series of contributions to the south's ignominious record. Such a showing would not only serve to promote the ideals of law and order, to the maintenance of which Tennessee officeholders are sworn, but it would also provide a much-needed demonstration of willingness to deal with lynching independently of the federal government.

Tennessee and other lynching states ought to realize that lynching is an intolerable crime and that if they are going to do nothing about it themselves the way will be opened for objectionable intrusions of the federal law into their local affairs.

The States and Lynching.

From the Baltimore Sun.

It would be fortunate if in the period before congress reassembles in January the southern states could initiate a vigorous local drive to put down lynching. The antilynching bill will be a special order in the senate shortly after the next session opens. It has already passed the house. It will, unless all indications fail, command a substantial support in the senate. The one thing that would be most likely to prevent a favorable vote in the senate would be a determined stand by the local authorities in the south against the disgraceful social crime of lynching to curb which the bill now before congress would invoke federal authority.

This bill is admirable in its intentions, but open to grave question on the score of method. It seeks to inject federal authority into a distinctly local police matter.

Leave It To The States

IF THE Congress of the United States could pass a clearly constitutional law that gave genuine assurance of ending lynching, most thoughtful Southerners would be prepared to accept, if not to approve, such an exercise of Federal authority.

For no thoughtful Southerner has any defense for lynching. He recognizes it for what it is—a reversion to barbarism. He readily concedes that such occasional outbreaks of extreme lawlessness are a reproach to this section and that all the appropriate powers of constituted authority should be exercised in preventing them and in punishing persons who may commit such crimes.

There is no assurance, however, that such a law will discourage lynching. There is strong reason for arguing even that it may have the contrary effect.

Lynching is fundamentally a local crime. It is the tragic consequence of a breakdown in local government. It is in no wise interstate in its character or in its manifestations.

Gratifying progress has been made in recent years in decreasing such barbarisms. Such progress has been made possible through improved race relationships and through a growing sense of responsibility on the part of the local officials and of local public sentiment.

Since the problem is essentially local in its character and manifestations, it should be left with the local communities for its solution. The transference of the responsibility or any part of the responsibility to the already overladened Federal government may not better matters. It is altogether possible that it may endanger the progress that is being made slowly but definitely.

A Clear Call For Action

The lynching of two negroes by an unmasked Mississippi mob near Winona yesterday will be answered by renewed pressure to the federal anti-lynching bill, the fate of which has been uncertain. The very nature of the cruelty practiced by one hundred men dealing with two negroes held for murder will bring a revulsion more than likely to be translated into swift passage. No more inhuman treatment was ever revealed at a lynching bee than strapping the victims to a tree and then burning them to death by degrees by spraying a blowtorch flame across their bodies until they were slowly burned to death in such agony that defies description.

The lynching ran true to form. The mob was unmasked, yet the local deputies say that they were "overpowered" and did not "recognize" any of them. The negroes on the advice of counsel had pleaded not guilty to the murder indictment and their case therefore had not been presented to a jury or submitted to the processes of law.

Congress will feel impelled now to force passage of the anti-lynching measure which holds sheriffs and deputies to a greater degree of responsibility than at present. They and those identified as mob members will be dealt with in the federal courts for failure to do their full duty and counties in which lynchings occur will be penalized heavily sums of money being ordered paid to the families of lynched victims.

LYNCHING THE CONSTITUTION

THE deplorable lynchings of two negroes by a mob of stupid illiterates in Mississippi is comparable in its ultimates to the deplorable lynching of the United States constitution by a mob of stupid lawmakers in the house of representatives.

The Mississippi lynchers did violence to the civil law, bringing disgrace upon their state, while the equally excited mob in the house of representatives did gross violence to the fundamental law of the land. In one respect the latter were worse than the Mississippi lynchers because they had taken a most solemn oath to uphold the constitution which they proceeded to lynch upon the floor.

Moreover, these congressional lynchers of the constitution knew what they were about. They knew it not only because they were warned of the illegal nature of what they were doing, but, because they are men of education; they possessed an intellectual knowledge of the nature of the violation they were committing.

As Senator Borah has pointed out, the anti-lynch bill that has been given approval is a flagrant violation of the constitution. It seeks to give to the general government certain privileges that are clearly prohibited and which it has no more right to exercise than it has to tell the individual citizen what time he shall arise in the morning and retire at night.

The men voting for it knew also that the Supreme court as now constituted, would throw it into the scrap-heap but they ignored this and passed the act upon the theory that the court shortly is to be enlarged and that the new court, created to carry out legislative purposes instead of carrying out the provisions of the constitution, would place the stamp of approval upon it because of expediency and not because of its legality.

This makes vivid the warning of Senator Glass that an enlarged Supreme court carries a threat to the very civilization of the South, and lends point to the grave warning of Congressman M. C. Tarver, of the seventh Georgia district, that it threatens not only the election laws of the South but points to the destruction of those laws under which necessary segregation is practiced in the South.

It is a first step in a crusade to destroy those laws under which whites and blacks are separated in schools, in hotels, in restaurants, upon trains and elsewhere, and throw them all together as has been done in the North. In sum, it is a movement to recreate in the South the conditions of a half-century ago. And why? Because to do these things please certain negroes in certain states where the negroes hold the balance of political power.

Southern civilization is to be bartered for negro votes in doubtful states. That is the sum of it, as Senator Glass has seen, as Congressman Tarver has seen, and as has become clear to many other Southerners who are capable of seeing beyond the ends of their noses.

And one of the tragic phases of the situation is that no thought is being taken of the negroes in the South. What they may suffer through the recreation of the intolerable conditions of a half-century ago enters not into the accounting of these white politicians who fawn at the feet of negro politicians and who seek to use both the whites and the blacks in the South as pawns in the survey game of fence-building for individual benefit.

THAT MUCH NEARER

The lynching of two negroes by a Mississippi mob this week, was entirely uncalled for, and every man who participated in the outrage should be arrested, tried and convicted and severely punished. It was just a cold-blooded murder of men already in the hands of the law, and helpless in the hands of a blood thirsty and uncontrollable mob. While we are unable to see how a national anti-lynching law might stop or prevent a single lynching, we do see how such acts as was pulled off in Mississippi this week, will bring a national anti-lynching law just that much nearer.—Yorkville Enquirer.

Mississippi is coming in for all sorts of adverse publicity as result of the lynching of two negroes, accused in the murder of a Duck Hill merchant.

"As dastardly a crime as cowardice could devise," wired Chairman Sumners of the House Judiciary committee.

The Mississippi Women's Society for the Prevention of lynching deplored the lynchings.

We all stand agreed that it was horrible, that the law should have been allowed to take its course.

It was the first lynching in the Magnolia State in 15 months.

A good record has been besmerched.

Governor White has ordered a thorough investigation.

This cannabalistic thing should be probed.

It was ghastly and unbelievable.

THIS MORNING

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES II.

Constitution

"Thou'dst have, great Glamis, that which cries, 'Thus must thou do if thou have it!'"

Is a federal law the only way to have done with the crime of lynching? Is it a way at all? If it is a way, and an only way, then no consideration of so-called "states' rights" should prevent its enactment. Those who truly love the principle of states' rights do not impeach it by invoking it when it won't work, by relying upon it in cases where states alone are incapable of satisfactory action and where a want of action will thwart the progress or limit the protection of the American people. They do not insist upon it, for example, in the matter of certain social controls which modern economics have made necessary and which cannot be exercised by states individually without crippling those states in economic competition with other states.

The control of lynching, of course, is not in this category. One state can act against lynchers without regard to what other states do. It is not an interstate matter in the sense of affecting the relations between states. The only excuse for federal action, therefore, is that state action is inadequate and that lynching can be wiped out in no other way. It is, to our way of thinking, an acceptable excuse—if the facts upon which it is predicated are correct.

But we do not think the facts correct. We do not believe federal law is the only way to stop lynching, and we do not even believe it is a way at all. Not the law proposed, at any rate. If mere law would do the thing, it might have been accomplished already. Lynching is murder, and murder is a crime in every state of the union. There is ample law to punish those responsible in lynching cases, and generally there is ample evidence, too. The failure to punish results from a failure of local public opinion to condemn, to insist upon application of the law. Until this local public opinion is changed, no law—federal or state—is going to be enforced.

Sympathize as we do with the intent and cause of those behind the proposed federal law, and suspicious as we have learned to be of many who cry "states' rights" today, when the only right they really want is their own to get away with something they should not, we are persuaded that the law proposed is childlike in its utter ineffectuality and that, this being the case, it is not an excuse for another encroachment upon the rights of the states.

As Luther Patrick, Alabama's homespun philosopher - congressman, is pointing out, the provision of a penitentiary sentence for any sheriff who allows a prisoner to be taken from him and lynched is impractical, especially in that "any sheriff who considers his own welfare might make it a point not to capture a fugitive threatened with lynching, fearing being overpowered and the prisoner taken." So is the provision for a $10,000 penalty upon the county in which the lynching occurs, since more often than not the lynchers come from some other county. Application of such provisions as these would be unfair as they would be difficult.

Federal law is not the only way, and not a way at all. The way is in state law, in the development of officials and a public opinion that will get existing state laws enforced and provide new laws where existing ones are lacking. There is no doubt of the fact that southern public opinion against lynching has grown mightily in recent years and that it is responsible for the better record of the south. In that opinion is the real and only solution. Develop it only a little more and it will command the respect of sheriffs, governors, and of the blood-lust-being, self-anointed morons who lynch.

A Negro farm hand disappeared last summer from an Arkansas plantation. Radical labor agitators and communists charged that he had been murdered by white plantation owners. They planned a funeral for the missing man, hoping to make the ceremony an occasion for a mass uprising of farm workers. The funeral was prohibited. A man and a woman who had been engaged in organizing a farm tenant union exhibited bruises on their bodies which they said had been inflicted by a mob. Now the missing Negro has been found alive in Chicago. Thus another Southern "tragedy" has been exposed, due to the foresight of Arkansas officers who refused to believe all the wild tales that radical agitators put into circulation.

REFLECTS ON DECATUR COUNTY.

Bainbridge has very little to its credit in having taken away from a negro undertaker the body of a negro who had committed crimes against two women and had been shot and killed by the arresting officers. The law had been avenged in the killing of the negro by officers of the law. The body had been turned over to an undertaker for interment. While the remains were in the undertaker's rooms a mob of 100 men entered and took the body away. It was dragged around the public square at Bainbridge, says an Associated Press report, and later carried to a negro baseball park and burned.

All of this was a performance which we are sure the better people of Bainbridge will regret. It is not to the credit of Bainbridge or Decatur county that such an event should take place within their borders.

The negro deserved death for the crimes he had committed. He feared a trial and made an effort to escape. The sheriff's force killed him in order to capture him and to prevent his getting away. After he was dead the law had been thoroughly avenged.

The further mutilation of the body and its disposition on a funeral pyre is a reflection upon the community that permitted it to take place.

Tennessee's Contribution.

Tennessee's lynching was like all lynchings a useless lynching. It accomplished nothing save to give another fillip to the movement for the enactment of a federal anti-lynching law, now scheduled for passage early next year.

And like most lynchings it was the result of the failure of Tennessee authorities to exercise even ordinary precautions. The "mob," which "overpowered" Sheriff W. J. Vaughan and carried off his 35-year-old negro prisoner to be strung up to a bridge and riddled with bullets, consisted of only six persons, by the sheriff's own estimate. And a few determined officers—one determined to risk his life, if need be, and the lives of the lynchers might have been enough—could easily have protected the prisoner, insured him the trial the constitution "guarantees" him. And trouble—the negro was charged with the murder of the Mason Tenn. city marshal—might even have been anticipated and guarded against.

But elementary precautions were not taken and the sheriff offered no effective resistance; his pistol taken from him by the "mob" was used to kill the negro instead of to protect him. And so Tennessee adds its name to the list of states which this year have done their part to make the enactment of the federal anti-lynching law easier.

STATE PRESS ON LYNCHING

There is complete unanimity among Florida editors as to the proper definitation of the lynching of two young negroes at Tallahassee by four masked men. It was "premeditated murder," says the Lakeland Ledger; "deliberate murder," says the Tampa Tribune. As many dailies as have commented on the crime, with the exception of the Tallahassee Democrat, which considered it a rather more gentlemanly affair than such parties usually are, unite in calling it murder and concede no extenuating circumstance in its perpetration.

On the contrary, all agree, as fair newspapers must, that lynching under any guise, is never justifiable, but places a stigma upon a state and dishonor upon a community. The Clearwater Sun, going into this aspect of the crime, declares the Tallahassee "atrocity" a "hideous disgrace to the state," and adds, "a state's good name and its ability to enforce its laws and provide security are its greatest assets. A state lacking these requisites is its own worst enemy;" the inference being that as long as the men who committed this crime go unpunished Florida will be under a cloud, for the Sun adds: "Governor Cone appreciates this when he declares that the murderers must be found and punished."

The Miami News, academically but nonetheless accurately, comments that "as long as men arrogate to themselves the functions of prosecutors, judges and executioners, there is no law." Even San Francisco, after the reign of the vigilantes, had to concede this fact and return to orderly administration of the law.

MOB SPIRIT NOT ENTIRELY DORMANT

BECAUSE NORTH CAROLINA has distinguished itself, in company with Virginia and Tennessee, in recent years by its record of no lynchings, perhaps the people of the State have been lulled to a sense of false security. All of which must have been dissipated by the rude awakening certain events occurring near Statesville the other day afforded.

A mob gathered quite suddenly upon hearing the news that a Negro suspect in the assault on a white woman in another county had been jailed in Iredell county prison. The members converged on the jail in the accepted fashion of mobs — truculent, demanding, brave in their numbers and their supposed anonymity.

And they got just exactly nowhere. The sheriff, with a foresight worthy of the highest praise, had either got wind of the mob's activity, or knew his Iredell county's latest mob spirit better than he did North Carolina's supposed inviolable record of no lynchings. Anyway, he did the practical thing that almost undoubtedly saved the State either the stain of a lynching, or a gun and tear gas battle between officers and mobsters over the custody of the prisoner. He had moved his prisoner already to a prison in another and unnamed county.

And, as the News and Observer remarks in philosophical postlude, those most appreciative of the sound judgment displayed by the sheriff should be the would-be lynchers themselves.

Lynching In The Shadow Of Florida's Capitol

There is something symbolical in the fact that these Florida lynchers went about their dastardly business in the shadow of the state's Capitol. The lynching victims were taken to jail only two blocks from the Capitol building and were put to death just a few miles from the center of Florida's government.

Just as this act was perpetrated near the heart of Florida's government, so also lynching strikes at the heart of orderly government. The right of every person, regardless of race, creed, color or suspected crime, to a legal trial is a foundation stone for a free people. And lynchers who deny that right are undermining that central stone.

Florida Lynchings

The lynching of two negroes in Florida Monday night was unfortunate.

The display of mob violence was the first reported in Florida this year and was the first double lynching occurring there in several years.

Those put to death were accused of attacting and wounding a police officer at Tallahassee, but regardless of the circumstances involved, they were charges of the state and were entitled to a fair and impartial trial.

The constitution guarantees to every person the right of trial by jury and there are no exceptions. Those who take the law into their own hands to mete out punishment are equally as guilty as those who they punish.

There is no place for lynchings or mob violence in our scheme of life and government and the lynchings in Florida make it a duty of the state to ferret out the mob and mete out punishment to its members commeasurate with the crime of which they stand accused.

Punishing the mobsters is the only means by which we can effectively discourage lynchings and eliminate this evil.

Lynching And State Rights.

Some two months ago a mob took two Negroes from jail in a Mississippi town, carried them into the country, tied them to trees and seared their flesh with a blow-torch. One of the Negroes died under the torture and the other was shot to death. As we recall, neither of these victims of mob brutality was accused of a capital crime.

The State's Attorney-General of Mississippi, acting under instructions from the Governor, instituted impeachment proceedings against the Sheriff of the county in which this outrage was committed, charging him with neglect of duty, cowardly conduct, and perhaps connivance with the mobsters. The officer was acquitted but, although he stated that he recognized some of the members of the mob, nothing further has been done.

Some two weeks since a mob took two Negroes from jail in Florida, carried them into the country and shot them to death. Neither of them had committed a crime for which death is or should be the penalty. The Sheriff seemed not to know much about the incident or to be seriously disturbed by it. The Governor of Florida said the killing of these Negroes was not a lynching, but murder, but so far as known no effort has been made to find the lynchers or murderers.

A dispatch from Statesville, North Carolina, says a crowd of about 125 white men rode into that town in thirty automobiles early yesterday, surrounded the county jail, and demanded that Sheriff John White Moore turn over a Negro prisoner accused of assaulting a white woman. The crowd disbanded after the Sheriff took three of the men inside the jail and convinced them that the prisoner they wanted was not there. He had been spirited away to an undisclosed jail.

A lynching was averted at Statesville because precautionary measures had been taken for the protection of the prisoner sought by the mob. Probably most mob murders could be averted in the same way. Despite the fact that any Negro arrested for almost any offense in some sections of the South is in danger of the mob, the responsible police authorities do not take steps to safeguard the lives of such prisoners and give them their day in court. Yet that is a part of their sworn duty.

The Senate has before it an anti-lynching bill which has already passed the House. Opposition to this measure comes mostly from Senators and Representatives from the South, the section of country in which nearly all of the mob murders occur and which should welcome Federal aid in the suppression of mob lawlessness. Prospects now are that legislative action on this bill will not be completed by a Congress confronted with other important measures and impatient to adjourn, but there also are prospects that if it fails of passage at this session it will be passed at the next session.

Protests that a Federal anti-lynching law would infringe the rights of the States have ceased to be impressive in the face of continued mob outrages and the failure of the States to uphold their laws and punish those crimes.

Lynch Lawlessness

THIS IS from the Southern Christian Advocate, state Methodist ournal, published in Columbia:

Following hard upon the announcement that the first half of 1937 had recorded four lynchings in the country, all four negro victims and all four in the South, came the Florida outrage of ten days ago. This double lynching, or "murder" as Governor Cone of that state termed it, was the double slaying of two negro youths who were alleged to have stabbed a policeman. The jail delivery transpiring as it did within four blocks of the state capitol, is a harrowing insult to constituted authority. There is never any excuse for mob violence in a land where one's protection is committed to legal processes. This Florida debacle reveals a long road of Christianizing ahead of us in our own land.

July 22, 1937

Florida had a double lynching this week for what seemed very insufficient provocation, as is so frequently the case. While lynchings in the South have shown a marked decrease from a few years ago, there are still entirely too many, if the Southern States hope to resist the enactment of a Federal anti-lynching law successfully much longer. The Governor of Florida has ordered the usual investigation but it's safe to assume that nothing will come of it.

PICKING ON THE SOUTH

When our Democratic congress ceases to inject periodically a bill to prohibit lynching, we will have some respect for that august body. Everybody with a reasonable amount of sense knows that the incentive behind each such attempt is to stab the South. And it is not going to stop lynchings, no matter how many such bills pass. It is safe to say that today here would be less of lynching and more of lawful behaviour on the part of the people of the South than there is today were there less of the nagging, spiteful injection of this quesion of Northern politicians. Everybody knows the South was making progress in overcoming the evil of lynch law, doing this by working out its own salvation. You don't hear of any bill introduced by these reformers to put down thug rule and racketeering and wholesale murder that is so often revealed in the great centers of population. And this for the reason that it is held a fixed principle of government that in such matters each state should be allowed to work out its own destiny.

ANOTHER BLACK MARK

"This was not a lynching. It was murder. I'm going to do everything I can to get whoever did this. It looks like a lot of carelessness here by somebody. I'm going to prosecute anybody we get to the limit of the law."

Such was the comment of Governor Fred P. Cone on the recent Tallahassee lynching. He has expressed the sentiments of many Floridians, who realize a black mark has been chalked up against this state because of the inexcusable "atrocity" that has occurred almost within the shadow of the state capitol.

There was no excuse for the inhuman actions of the Tallahassee "mob" of four men who went to the county jail, overpowered the officer on duty, obtained the keys to the cell blocks, removed two young negroes awaiting trial for a murderous attack on a policeman, took them out of town a short distance and riddled their bodies with bullets.

Florida, not the four men involved directly in the crime, will be blamed for the lynching of these black boys, who, in due time, would have been tried and convicted of the crime with which they were charged.

Florida, not members of the "mob" involved, will be held up before the nation in criticism when the congress comes again to debate passage of the anti-lynching bill now before that body. Every time anti-lynching legislation comes before congress the statement is made, by southerners, that bills to penalize the taxpayers of a community where a lynching occurs are directed at the south. Florida congressmen cannot defend such charges in the name of the south when their state condones such lawlessness as has just occurred at its state capital.

Floridians should uphold the hands of their governor in his evident determination to make a thorough investigation of the Tallahassee lynching and bring those responsible to justice.

A DISGRACEFUL BLOT

Murder is ever an abhorrent crime, and the mere mention of it is loathesome in the extreme. It implies all that is evil and unholy, and with startling abrubtness forces us to face the mysteries of life and death. Death is the inevitable, unavoidable thing which we know all things human must face. It is to this end we live; that we may meet it with a degree of fortitude and courage. Thus when life is suddenly terminated by an act of violence, we are shocked by the evil passions which cut a life short; and we suddenly face the fact that our own life strand is as fragile and uncertain.

Murder is an ugly, sordid affair, which may be divided into two classes—that is premeditated murder, and a murder of passion. The latter named may be understood although not condoned, but the first passes almost beyond the ken of human understanding. It is into this latter class falls the murder in Tipton County of this state, which occurred Monday night, August 16. At that time six masked men met Sheriff W. J. Vaughn just eight miles out of Covington on his return trip from Memphis with a Negro prisoner, Albert Gooden, and murdered the prisoner. His bullet-ridden body with a rope around the neck was found hours later, face downward in a creek.

The prisoner, himself, was to be arraigned on a murder charge the following morning. He was accused of shooting Marshal Chester Doyle of Mason, Tennessee, last July 17 during a raid on a dice game, and he would probably have been sentenced to death. His own crime of passion, however, does not alter the fact that six men planned and executed the prisoner's death, and for such murder they should, if possible, be brought to trial and sentenced as any other criminals. Unfortunately their apprehension is uncertain, since the Sheriff states he was not able to recognize any one of the murderers, nor did he see the license of the car they were using. Despite lack of clues, however, Circuit Judge R. B. Baptist has made an impassioned plea before the grand jury for a relentless search for members of the first lynch mob in Tipton County since the war between the states. Judge Baptist puts it mildly when he describes it as "one of the most horrible and disgraceful crimes in the history of the county."

In the first place it is extremely doubtful if the members of the mob were even friends of the dead Marshal. In all probability they are a bunch of hoodlums who, lusting for bloodshed and violence, sought to excuse crime and appease conscience by an appearance of justification. They didn't even have the courage of their own convictions, apparently, since they appeared masked. They were cowards of the worst type as they were fully cognizant of the fact that their victim didn't even have a fighting chance. In addition to being unarmed, he was manacled. He had no more chance of escaping his assassins than a rabbit surrounded by a pack of ravenous wolves.

In the second place the question of color distinction rears its ugly head. Had the prisoner been a white man would he have received the same treatment at the hands of this mongrel mob? The strench of the truth that the lower the strata of a white person the louder he howls about color distinction so often permeates the atmosphere and pathetically mars the perfection of an otherwise pleasant relationship.

The only way to control such an element in any community is by fear of the consequences—fear for the safety of their own cowardly necks.

Thus for the safety of those, not only in Tipton county, but any with whom these six murderers may come in contact, every effort should be made to expedite their apprehension. Having tasted blood and escaped unscathed, they may experience the urge to do murder again.

LYNCHINGS DECREASE.

For a number of years Tuskegee Institute has been tabulating the returns of lynching and it is pleasing to observe that President F. D. Patterson reports that there has been a decline in mob action every decade since 1887.

Dr. Patterson gives three reasons for the decline and they are, we believe, sound observations. The first is the disappearance of frontier characteristics in the South; the breaking down of isolation in the South through the development of rural free delivery, increased communication facilities; paved roads and radio; the third, "increased agitation within the South against lynching."

While the Tuskegee figures have always reflected a view that lynching was peculiarly a Southern phenomena it is surprising that the Negro does not give any credit to activity of people in other sections who are usually quick to condemn something happening away from home. He even goes so far as to term lynching a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

PROPER CHANNELS

A survey published a short time ago revealed that lynchings had declined remarkably during the past year.

Several months ago, night-riding members of the Midwestern Black Legion were brought to book by the law.

In Pennsylvania, a State trooper has been found guilty of the "third degree" murder of a hotel man.

These facts are all totally unrelated and yet, taken together, perhaps they are indicative of one thing.

Perhaps they reveal that people, in general, are coming more and more to realize that infractions against law and order must be handled only through the proper channels of justice; that citizens cannot take the law into their own hands no matter how well such a course seems justified.

Lynching—Plain Talk

The torture lynching of two negroes at Duck Hill, Miss., is an unspeakable crime. Lynching at law is murder. But mob murder is often more than murder, it represents a relapse into a psychic state that it is an insult to primitive man to call savagery.

Every responsible official of Mississippi is put on the spot by this crime. It must be investigated and followed by the indictment and prosecution of the offenders, or the state will suffer a terrific loss of face. Coming on the heels of a steady decline in the number of lynchings, the crime at Duck Hill is a crime against the whole south.

The tendency of mobs to revert to torture and sadistic orgy is age-old and world-wide. In "The Crowd," Gustave Le Bon more than a generation ago explained that in a mob the individual intellect and individuality is dormant, superseded for the time being by the collective mob mind, which represents the lowest common denominator of human mentality.

Such a relapse evidently occurred at Duck Hill, where the use of a blow torch in torture rivaled the barbaric mutilations in the massacre of nonunion miners at Herrin, Ill., a few years ago. The blow torch as an instrument of torture has not yet been adopted by the degenerate gangsters of New York, who still prefer slowly to hack their victims with cold steel. Burning with cigar butts used to be a routine incident of being "taken for a ride" in the environs of Chicago, but the blow torch seems to be something new in sadistic technology.

Coming at a time when anti-lynching bills are up in Congress, the Duck Hill lynching may tip the balance and lead to the enactment of an anti-lynching law, despite the fact that the circumstances of the Duck Hill lynching prove the impotence of such laws to prevent lynching. The theory of anti-lynching laws is twofold. Pecuniary penalties imposed on communities for lynchings are supposed to restrain the lynching urge. But what would a consideration like that have amounted to in the case of the infuriated mob at Duck Hill. The other part of the theory of anti-lynching laws is that by transferring the investigation of lynchings and the trial of offenders to outside tribunals such as federal courts, punishment can be had regardless of local public opinion or political pull. History is emphatic as to the fallacy of that. So far as the south is concerned, lynching got its greatest impetus at a time when military rule and federal force laws were in full flower, and in the nineties of the last century when the Lodge force bill was being pressed in Congress, lynching was rampant. In northern states where there are laws providing for the recovery of damages from counties and local communities by relatives of mob victims there have been most atrocious mob murders.

Sincere purpose to abate lynchings is almost entirely absent from the present propaganda for a federal anti-lynching law. Back of that movement—as every literate adult knows—are four elements.

(1) The remnant of the old Republican party machine seeking desperately to recover the negro vote in the northern states, through which it ruled the nation from the election of 1868, in which that vote first swung the balance.

(2) The Democratic political machines in big cities bidding against the G. O. P. for the same bloc vote.

(3) The Communist groups who have sought for more than 15 years to stir up racial strife north and south.

(4) The strangely assorted groups of psychopaths who take a morbid interest in lynchings and in characteristic crimes that lead to lynchings. These groups include many queer fish and epicene neurotics who swim in the stagnant social pools which have collected back of some of the great foundations and other endowments set up by doddering old men and women who had more money than sense.

The latter elements are not motivated at all by any desire to abate lynchings. The heavily financed propaganda against the social order of the south which was manifested in the Scottsboro case in Alabama and in the Herndon case in Atlanta are a dead giveaway as to that. An orderly trial in the south stirs up the degenerate martyr complexes of these people as much as a lynching.

In view of the south baiting that accompanies all the agitation for federal anti-lynching laws it is incumbent upon southern senators and representatives to make these facts clear upon the floors of the Houses of Congress, and to demand that any extension of federal police powers be made to cover the gang mobsters of the city as well as the rural mob.

A Lynching Embarrasses

The lynching of two Negroes at Winona, Miss., Tuesday by a mob of white men has placed in an embarrasing position every member of Congress who opposes enaction of a Federal anti-lynching law. The degree of that embarrassment and what it may lead to is reflected in the unprecedented action of Chairman Sumners, of the House judiciary committee, who Wednesday addressed to Gov. [illegible] White, of Mississippi, a telegram protesting against "as dastardly a crime as cowardice could devise and brutality execute." . . . A note of warning is discernible in these words of Representative Sumners:

"It (the crime) will be seized upon as a demonstration of the inability of the states to govern. As one Southern man to another, I hope I will not be considered impertinent by stating candidly my own reaction, and that is that the State of Mississippi cannot escape this reflection upon its governmental capacity, in fact cannot escape in effect from becoming an accessory after the fact unless it is able to and does bring these lynchers and officers to speedy and adequate punishment."

If Governor White replies to Chairman Sumners by bringing "these lynchers and officers to speedy and adequate punishment" he will provide at least a basis for the contention that Federal action in such cases is not necessary. A reasonable basis for that contention does not now exist. The repetition of lynchings is causing more and more people in this section to believe that such instances of brutality and terrorism should be regarded, not as a violation of the laws of a state, but as a crime against society itself and subject to prosecution under Federal laws.—Chattanooga Times.

THE MISSISSIPPI BLOW

Mississippi's blow torches are blowing a federal anti-lynching bill through Congress at breakneck speed. A beast with a blow torch in his hand can make the defenders of local self-government more ridiculous than all of the [illegible] philosophers of history.

There were 20 persons lynched in the United States in 1935 according to the Tuskegee Institute and 53 instances in which officers prevented lynching.

Dixie Lynchings Likened To Burning of Witches

Same Mental Attitude Motivated Both Crimes, Dr. Arthur Raper Declares; Introduction of Blow Torch in Mississippi Found Modern Sadistic Feature

ATLANTA, April 17 (AP)—Dr. Arthur Raper, research secretary for the Commission on Interracial Co-operation, said today the present lynchings in the south "are motivated by the same mental attitude that caused the historical Massachusetts witch hangings."

"Lynchings," he said, "come out of the state of mind of white people much more than out of the crimes committeed by Negroes, just as witches were burned in Boston not because there were witches in Boston but because of the state of mind of the people of Boston."

He said the use of a blow torch in a lynching this week in Mississippi demonstrated a new development: the impact of the mechanical age on a primitive method of social control."

Dr. Raper personally has investigated more than 100 lynching cases in the last nine years. He is author of the Tragedy of Lynching and A Preface to Peasantry.

The typical southern lynching falls into two classifications, Dr. Raper said. First, by the "orderly" mob directed by community leaders; second, by the wild mob type.

Sadistic Tortures Cited

"The first type is Bourbon in leadership and its principal object is to wreak vengeance on a particular individual," Dr. Raper said.

"The second type is proletarian and is distinctly directed against an entire class of people. It is distinguished by sadistic tortures of the victims."

He said the recent Mississippi lynching was a combination of the two types.

Dr. Raper said the typical lynching is "in the rural south, the mob victim is a Negro, the lynchers are native-born whites, and the courts punish no one."

He said his studies show that a man in the 200 "most rural counties" of the south is in 60 times more danger of being lynched than is a man in the half dozen most populous counties.

Dr. Raper declared lynchers seldom are punished because punishment depends on the same peace officers and court officials whose impotence they demonstrated when they lynched."

He said the leading white people in some communities direct a lynch mob to maintain control of Negro labor.

Poorer Whites Attracted

"But it is the poorer rural whites, who live on about the same plane as the landless Negroes near-by, to whom man-hunts, mock trials and lynchings prove most attractive. The racial dogma is precious to them because it is proof they are superior.

"They get a chance to escape boredom of restricted lives. For a time they are people of importance—they assume the role of society's protectors; they flourish weapons; they hunt down the accused; they determine his guilt; they destroy him."

Dr. Raper said the most effective answer to the problem of lynching is to give the poorer rural areas of the south a greater share in the economic and cultural wealth of the nation. He declared:

"Any effective program must be geared to the task of lifting above the lynching level the poorest rural areas and the poorest elements in a yet larger region. In this task, the county, state and federal governments all have responsibility.

"It is, of course, the part of wisdom that the contributions of each be so correlated that whatever responsibility can be borne locally shall be left there. At the same time, in no instance should the local community be permitted to lynch and then protect its lynchers from punishment, and thus violate the essential nature of the state and nation of which it is a part."

THAT LYNCHBURG TRAGEDY.

It has been a long time since such a gruesome tragedy was committed in Virginia similar to the one which took place in Lynchburg the latter part of last week. The fact is, it is next to impossible to conceive that a husband and father would so far forget himself as to slash the throats of his wife and son and use the same weapon in an attempt to end his own existence. Some idea can be formed as to the scene that was presented to the officers who investigated this affair by the statement of one of them who said that he had never been called upon to witness anything like it since his service as a soldier in the world war in France. William E. Craighead, who is alleged to have killed his wife and son and who did his best to commit suicide, stood well in Lynchburg and his friends were shocked when advised of what actually had taken place. Quite naturally he cannot plead justification for his deed, because if dissatisfied with his domestic life it was incumbent upon him to go his way and leave his wife and boy to choose their way in life. Time and again we have stated in these columns that no man can excuse himself for taking the life of a defenseless woman and this applies with equal force to the case in Lynchburg. Just about a week ago there was a triple tragedy in the town of Galax, but it in nowise compared with this latest happening in the Hill City. To be perfectly candid, we cannot find words to adequately express our feelings in the premises and all that it is possible to say is that we are in hopes that nothing like it will ever occur in Virginia again.

The Review has never been in sympathy with the custom followed by certain men in authority relative releasing persons charged with a crime with the proviso that they leave the community or State in which they were convicted. Quite recently Governor Browning, of Tennessee, granted a pardon to a man serving a term for murder and stipulated that the recipient of his clemency leave the Volunteer State at once. If the man set free by Governor Browning was entitled to his freedom he should have been permitted to remain in Tennessee instead of being forced to live among strangers. We have known mayors, magistrates and trial justices to overlook the misdeeds of men by ordering them to seek new pastures, but somehow or other we could not agree that such a policy was exactly right. Those who violate the law should be punished at home and not sent among strangers to carry on their acts of lawlessness. Although we believe in dealing mercifully with the unfortunates, we have yet to be convinced that they should be forced to go elsewhere, as this smacks too much of least resistance in handling cases of this kind.

THE DUCK HILL LYNCHING

Not one single word can be said in defense of the mob action at Duck Hill yesterday, when two negroes charged with the assassination of George Sam Windham, merchant, last winter, were taken from the sheriff of Montgomery county, carried into the woods, tied to trees, seared with blow torches, sprayed with gasoline and burned.

The action is to be deplored. It furnishes ammunition that the enemies of the south will not be slow in using.

The negroes were before a court ready for trial. There was apparently little doubt as their guilt. One of them had confessed when arrested, and their legal execution was a mere matter of going through the forms of the law.

Mississippi will suffer from yesterday's action.

Let Not Delay Aid Lynchers

It is to be regretted that the Tipton County Grand Jury found it necessary to adjourn until Sept. 1 instead of continuing its investigation into the lynching of a negro accused of slaying Marshal Chester Doyle of Mason.

Suspicion of indifference often accompanies delay. Tipton has a blot on its escutcheon that requires immediate effacement. A long record for law enforcement has been shattered by six hot-heads who not only defied a sheriff but actually overpowered him and took his prisoner and arms.

We do not urge undue haste—the deplorable results of improperly considered action are brutally dramatized by the lynching itself. We do believe, however, that the Grand Jury of Tipton County could well afford to stay in session to pursue its investigation. The only hope now is that the intervening weeks will not lessen its zeal to seek out the culprits who dared to seize the majesty of the law with their own gruesome hands.

When Is a Mob Not a Mob?

One hears of a gang of masked men seizing a man, carrying him into the woods, beating but not killing him. It has occurred in this state, in North Carolina, in all states. Is it "mob law"?

A small gang siezed a negro, who was in jail, took him to the bushes, intending to give him stripes. The negro fought and was about to kill one of the gang, so they killed him. Was that a "lynching"?

When a crowd of three or three thousand "take the law into their hands" and beat a citizen until he is all but dead—and he lives—is that merely assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature?

The Virginians enacted a law when Senator Byrd was governor, with intent to stop lynching, thus defining a "mob":

"A mob is a collection of people assembled for the purpose and with the intention of committing assault and or battery upon any person, without authority of law." The act makes the offense a felony with penalty of not less than one year or more than ten years.

Under this act a party of men belonging to a union were convicted, the evidence against them being that they tried to prevent non-union men going to work in a rayon factory, upset two automobiles and injured persons but not seriously. They, members of the C. I. O., have been sentenced to "long terms." The act is said to have had considerable influence in suppressing lynching in Virginia.

The men under sentence have appealed. It is said that if the sentences be sustained by the courts the "organized labor movement in Virginia will be virtually destroyed"—which is tantamount to saying that organized labor depends on violence or a show of it. That is an indictment of organized labor in which The News and Courier does not join.

When is a mob not a mob? When it is composed of persons engaging in violence or disorder when on strike?

Or would Senator "Bob" Wagner and his gang make assault and or battery by a mob lawful? Would Senator Wagner defend the legality of a thousand men attacking another group of men with intent to scare and beat them but ending by killing one or two of them?

One does not like to believe it, but the signs are that Senator Wagner and his senatorial crew are champions of mob law while denouncers of lynching.

Or is it, after all, that Senators Wagner, Van Nuys, Copeland and the rest of the Northern sectionalists pressing their anti-Southern law are merely taking orders from city negro voters who hate the poor whites and working people of the South?

The well fed, the well clad and the well housed, the fancy bucks, the lawyers, bankers, cotton mill presidents and the like in the South never go to lynching parties.

What a pity it is that circumstances over which they have no control prevent politicians from blurting out the truth?

When is a mob not a mob in the eyes of Senator Wagner and his gang? When it suits their political interests. That is the they can't afford to say it, and honest gentlemen are sorry for them.

answer. They well know it, but, poor devils,

RELIGION
In The Here and Now

By REV. NORVIN C. DUNCAN

The writer of this column has long maintained, with many other people of the South, that the matter of dealing with lynchers was something which should better be left to the States; particularly for the Southern States in which the problem is most acute. But, it seems to me, our arguments have fallen flat against our inability to deal with the problem at all, except to maintain, by implication at least, that lynching with impunity is the way to handle it. Recent outrages have been met with the same old "at the hands of unknown parties." "The sheriff could not recognize a single member of the party." We stand convicted before the world with an exhibition of hypocrisy which no kind of arguments can justify. It is doubly deplorable because it is difficult to escape the conviction that church members, either by actual participation, or acquiescence, share in the guilt of the outrages. Three lynchings in Florida in recent months serve to accentuate the hypocrisy in our arguments.

Recently a large photograph of a lynched Negro appeared in a magazine. It was a gruesome sight; but the dead Negro was not the horrible thing in the picture. What some white men had done to him was nothing compared to what they had done to themselves, and what they had done to law and to society. Their surrender to brute passions was tragic. They had done more than lynch a Negro; they had murdered their own souls. What they do to the Negro today they will one day do to each other. One witness is Spain. Spain brought up on the brutality of bull fighting as national sport. Now that brutal spirit finds itself engaged in murdering each other, with all sense of pity gone. We have already begun to reap what we have sown in the industrial conflicts throughout the land. Passions nurtured take no thought of race. White men turned against white men. The laws of the universe operate impartially. Every one knows the result of trials in which Negroes accused of rape are tried. There is no excuse for the crimes, but there are legal processes for dealing with them. Such crimes are terrible, but lynching is more terrible. Newspapers over the South, thank God, have spoken frankly and fearlessly. I do not hear many sermons, or reports from many, but so far I have not heard of one in protest. If you have heard one won't you drop me a post card? I'd like to know about it.

Mobs And Men

Recently near Fort Walton, Fla., a group of armed and hooded men halted a sheriff, seized his 30-year-old Negro prisoner on the eve of his trial and riddled him with buckshot. It was Florida's third, the South's eighth, lynching this year.

From Villa Rica, Ga., comes another kind of story. Three men—one white and two black—were in a railroad water tank 30 feet deep, painting the walls with tar. Suddenly there was a crackle of flame which spread with the rapidity of an explosive. A narrow, one-man ladder led to the top of the tank and safety. F. L. Hill, white foreman for the Southern Railroad, stood back and ordered his Negro assistants up the ladder. They got out without injury. Foreman Hill was overcome by fumes and burned to death.

There is a vast difference between men in mobs and men as individuals. As mobs they are emotional, brutal, cowardly; as individuals they act like F. L. Hill, hero.

That is why this country must have anti-lynching and other laws to punish mob anarchy. If ever this democracy is destroyed it will be by mobs.

Speaker Discusses Tragedy Of Lynching; Says Fear Of Harm Deters Disapprovers

Dr. Arthur Raper, Writer, Cites Needs for Overcoming Mob Violence; Seminar Concludes

"Lynchers go unpunished because punishment of their crime depends upon the same peace officers and court officials whose impotence they demonstrated when they lynched," Dr. Arthur Raper said yesterday at a session of the lecture-seminar conference which concluded last night at Hampton Institute. "The officers of the law have already shown their unwillingness or inability to administer justice, and lynchers, in most cases, are responsible only to the local courts," he added.

The speaker, author of a "Preface to Peasantry" and "The Tragedy of Lynching," said fear of violence, incendiarism and boycotts deterred the disapproving minority, white and Negro, from taking steps against the mob.

"Expecting these officers and this task the governments all have respon- sibility. It is like expecting a dethroned govern- ment to punish those who overthrew it. It is a grim fact that lynching mobs which burn courthouses are not wholly illogical. They and their sym- pathisers constitute the effective ma- jority in the community where [illegible] to be permitted to lynch and then pro- ceed to punish them for it. Mr. Raper said "local civilization must protect its lynchers from punishment, and there is no simple substitute for [illegible] and thus violate the essential nature of local civilization." He emphasized a need for riddling the American scene, part."

William M. Cooper, director of ex- tension at Hampton Institute, treated the subject of "The Negro in Indus- try." The most significant part of his paper was that which pointed out the fields in which Negroes lost fundamentally important also the employment during the ten-year period in a yet larger region. They are losses nevertheless and must be reckoned in the employment problem of the race. Each of these industries has its own story, and its own problem. In the main, however, one will have to investigate each singly to be intelligent as to wise steps to take to correct the situation."

Gains Recorded

The gains in employment during the period were set forth as follows:

"Special gains have been made in the following industries: buyers, 71.1 per cent; managers and officials, 90.6 per cent; manufacturers, 160.8 per cent; painters, varnishers, enamelers, 93.9 per cent; paper hangers, 125.8 per cent; plasterers and cement finishers, 92 per cent; pressman and painters, 87.1 per cent; steel rollers and roller hands, 63.3 per cent; roofers, 71.4 per cent; structural iron workers, 77.6 per cent; operators in building industry, 98.6 per cent; chemical and allied industries, 38.4 per cent. In these gains are reflected the demands made upon American industry due to new trends in America. In some fields, at least, Negroes have been alert and able to respond to the new demands."

Industries operated by Negroes were mentioned in this summary:

"Negroes own and operate a considerable number of industries about which the general public actually knows little. One of the largest groups is that of the manufacturing of beauty preparations. Negroes, also, operate furniture factories, casket factories, candy-making establishments, enameling plants making enamel and a few who are entering building construction on a larger scale. These establishments are located in all sections of the United States and are not markedly concentrated in the South as one might suppose."

The program allotted one and one-half hours to a round-table discussion with the workers of Hampton Institute. The visitors finally received the last courtesies proffered by the school and their conference came to an end.

MOB VIOLENCE

Recent Florida lynchings have provoked discussions as to underlying causes of disregard for law, Tampa Tribune and Sarasota Herald making contributions to the subject. "The undeniable slowness and uncertainty of the law," the Tribune asserts is one of the causes. The irresponsible "cowards who hide behind masks" is the Herald's answer to the question.

Almost certain knowledge that the courts will never convict perpetrators of mob violence is the main reason why mobs form to kill. Has any member of a lynching party been tried, convicted and sentenced?

There is a large element in the population which looks upon crime from an emotional background. Such persons never stop to reason about cause and effect. "He ought to be lynched," somebody will assert, and a mob is quickly formed. In most crimes of the nature to provoke emotional outbursts, the law is reasonably prompt. The accused has no powerful friends to delay his trial until the public forgets what it is all about.

What is needed more than anything else is thorough drilling in the responsibilities of citizenship.

That probably would take 50 years.

Our northern congressmen and senators would give a short course in this fundamental—a practical course, with a heavy penalty imposed on officers for failure to protect their prisoners—a penalty the community would pay in money.

Has anybody else a practical remedy?

LYNCHING AND PROSPERITY.

Baltimore Evening Sun.

A mob-murder in Florida was the third lynching in that State for this year and the eighth in the South.

Fairly reliable statistics on lynching are available now for a period of 50 years, which should be long enough to make it possible to draw inferences with some degree of reliability.

One thing that is quite clear is that, as the general level of civilization rises, the lynching rate tends to fall. The peak was reached in 1892, when the South was at the very nadir of depression, intellectual, financial, political and moral. In that year there were 231 crimes of this type.

In the last 10 years, however, the number has never risen above 28, the record for 1933—the low point of another depression.

But while the decline, viewed over a long period of years, has been continuous, it has not been altogether smooth. Although the curve is generally downward, there are small local irregularities, nearly always associated with the economic conditions prevalent at the time. In general, when the country is prosperous, lynchings are few. In 1928, for example, there were only 11 and in 1929—the panic struck late in that year—there were only 10. It is true that the lowest number recorded since 1885, eight, occurred in the depression year of 1932.

In the six years following the depression the average number of lynchings was 17. If eight have occurred so far this year, with less than three months to go, it seems possible that the whole number may not rise above a dozen. This would place 1937 as a year somewhat more prosperous than its immediate predecessors, without being a record-breaker; which agrees pretty well with the judgment of most economic observers.

Overthrowing Government

"If anybody comes down to Florida," said the Governor of Florida, "and tries to upset the government, they ought to be rode on a rail. They ought to be hung to the nearest lamp-post."

Such a statement is interesting for a number of reasons and not the least of them is that the Governor seemed not to be aware that when such a lynching occurs the government actually is overthrown. When Governors do not understand that the law is lynched whenever men are, how soon can we expect the hoodlums who make up Southern mobs to understand it?

A negro was lynched in southern Okaloosa county yesterday morning—four men took him from the sheriff. It appeared also from news stories that the sheriff had warning of the tragedy, but failed to interpret it correctly. Such incidents as that make passage of the Dyer anti-lynching bill all the more certain. No southern congressman or senator can argue against facts like that yesterday and that other incident at Tallahassee a few months ago.—Lakeland Leader.

MOB RULE SCORED BY JUDGE GRAHAM

Innocent Georgians May Suffer Because of Lawless Acts, He Declares

MOUNT VERNON, Ga., Nov. 3.—Mob rule was scored by Judge Eschol Graham in his charge to the Montgomery county grand jury here this week.

Touching on the proposed anti-lynching bill, Judge Graham asked:

"Must our people suffer for the lawless acts of the mob? Already we are threatened with an act of congress, which we think will be oppressive to our people, due to the mob taking the law in their own hands, and due to the failure of some grand juries to make diligent inquiry into and true presentment concerning the crime of the mob.

"Even if we sought to justify the mob in some instances . . . the mob is more often wrong than right. Many are the innocent who suffer and are sometimes put to death by the mob . . . one crime does not excuse another, and you cannot right wrong with wrong."

COULD IT HAVE BEEN IN OHIO?

We usually believe the statements we read in press dispatches. They are supposed to be accurate. However, we read that a mob of 200 to 250 people called at two different Ohio jails, searching for a young negro who had been arrested for an assault on a white couple. The mob was bent on vengeance. A representative of the mob was permitted to go through both jails, thus finding out that the prisoner was not therein. The mob then dispersed, and no lynching was chalked up against the peace and serenity of the state.

But could this have occurred in Ohio, whose citizens have so vigorously condemned the Southland for occasional lynchings?

Suppose the mob had found their intended victim, and carried out the evident intention of causing retribution. That would have been quite a different story. Explanations would have been difficult.

NEGRO SLUGGED

THE United Press recently carried the following story on its wires: "Spectators fought their way past police guards at an inquest and slugged and kicked Henry King, negro ex-convict charged with killing a filling station attendant. Police rescued King after a fight with the infuriated crowd."

The place was Chicago. It was a regrettable incident in the life of this great American city. The mob spirit showed a total disregard for law and order and the constitutional rights of the negro. The affair was markedly un-American, even as similar incidents are in the South.

The South is ashamed when mob violence outrages the law. It is not proud of its lynchings. But it sees that same spirit cropping out in Northern cities, where the large influx of colored people has created the age-old race problem—long peculiar to the South but now part of the life of certain great Northern industrial centers.

The race riots of recent years in New York, this Chicago incident, while they are to be deplored, show that given similar conditions, the unthinking mob behaves the same whether to the north or south of the Mason and Dixon line.

No anti-lynching bill can control the mob spirit. It is a matter to be handled and properly dealt with by the authorities where these un-American incidents occur.

LYNCHING SLOGANS

"To hell with the law!" is the answer a Tennessee sheriff said he received when he tried to reason with the six men who committed the latest lynching.

We do not doubt that the men were quoted correctly since that is a good lynching slogan. Perhaps they also used some of those other good old lynching slogans:

"To hell with decency!"

"To hell with democracy!"

"To hell with civilization!"

Another Lynching

Tennessee contributes the latest incident to arouse the ire of advocates of the anti-lynching bill. A negro, charged with the killing of a town marshal, was being brought from Memphis, where he had been held for safe keeping, to Covington for trial. Twelve miles from Covington he was taken from the county sheriff by a party of six men and the next seen of the prisoner was his dead body, riddled with bullets, hanging from a railway bridge. The sheriff said the men were masked and he recognized none of them. He was unable to give the number of the car in which they were riding.

If the prisoner's case was thought to be so desperate that it was necessary to take him to Memphis for protection, it would seem that the sheriff would have taken precautions to protect him on the way from Memphis to trial. Two or three deputies in the car with him and his prisoner would hardly have been overcome by a small party of six men.

Affairs like this have made a following in Congress for a federal law to prevent lynching. The sheriff expressed surprise that the murderers knew he was moving the prisoner. There seems to have been little reason why they should not have known, since his trial at Covington was set for the following day.

The states must demand protection for prisoners or they may have the federal government give that protection.

The American Mob Leaders

In Northern cities in the first seven and a half months of 1937 twice as many persons have been killed in labor disputes as have been lynched in the South or in the whole country in the same period.

Most of these victims have been members of unions. In a particular manner no one except a jury can finally pass on the rights and wrongs, but every one knows that these men, directly or indirectly, were sacrificed to the spirit of mob law and the toleration of it. No one would have been butchered if breach of the peace, trespass, turbulence, had been put down from the start.

These men dead in labor disputes are dead because the theory is accepted that certain mobs have rights and that the common law must not stand in their way. Often, usually, are two mobs in the controversies, and sometimes the victims belong to one, sometimes to another.

Always the killings follow from the toleration if not encouragement of disorderly conduct, intimidation, assault and battery. They naturally end in killing.

These men in their Northern graves are as dead from the toleration of the mob as is any negro dead at the hands of a mob in Mississippi.

There is more "mob law" rampant in New York city this day than has been in the whole South this year.

The fact is that in a country of 125,000,000 inhabitants, as the United States is, a country having two races living side by side in one great section, there is astonishingly little lynching or racial conflict—which to both races is highly creditable.

But the mob spirit is rampant in the Northern cities. They are the home of it. They seem to welcome it. The notion is that it is all right to encourage the city mob in lawless demonstration to a certain point and then to shoot into it, to start slaughter.

Never before in this country have mob spirit and mob action been so general in the United States as they are now—and they are not in the South.

Yet the Northern congressmen, Democrats and Republicans, all congressmen if Northern with two or three exceptions, ignore the outrageous and terrorizing conditions at their doorsteps while they press a bill having no other purpose than to please the negro voters in their towns—negro voters against whom their white populations discriminate in business and industry.

If mob law shall take this country, if misrule shall be ascendant, answerable for it will be Wagner, Guffey, Van Nuys, men of their kind, wanting courage to oppose the mobs that howl in their own streets.

They are the mob leaders in America. They sit in the air-cooled bomb proofs and lead the mobs.

Brutal and cowardly as are the creatures who lynch a negro in Mississippi or South Carolina, the danger to this republic is from the political allies of the mobs in New York, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Chicago, from the mob leaders in congress who would see the constitution and the laws lynched rather than risk their jobs.

Judge Lynch, Again.

Sheriff W. J. Vaughan of Tipton County, Tennessee has lost a prisoner. The prisoner was Albert Gooden, a Negro accused of killing an officer after a raid on what the Sheriff described as a "dice game." The crime was committed about a month ago and, because of threats of mob violence, Gooden was placed in jail at Memphis for safekeeping.

The Negro was to have been arraigned yesterday and Sheriff Vaughan was taking him back to Covington Monday night when he and a merchant who was riding with him were crowded off the highway by another car. Six masked men then covered the Sheriff and his companion with pistols, seized the handcuffed prisoner, transferred him to their own car and drove away.

Early yesterday morning officers found the body of the Negro hanging from a bridge near Covington. A plowline had been made to serve as a rope, and pistols also were used in the mob execution. There were more than thirty bullet holes in the victim's body from his shoulders to his legs. More than thirty shells from pistols of various caliber were found lying around.

Will any of the members of the mob that perpetrated this outrage be found and punished? That would be very unusual. There have been many lynchings in Tennessee, but so far no lyncher has ever been brought into court. Sheriff Vaughan said he was unable to identify any of the men who took his prisoner and that he did not get the license number of their car. Very likely they have nothing to fear.

According to the Sheriff's story, his pleas could not turn the mobsters from their purpose. He begged them to let the law take its course, assuring them that the Negro probably "would be hanged" after a speedy trial. "To hell with that" one of them shouted. "We want that ... . now!" And they got him and killed him in a rather brutal way, thus relieving the State of the duty of giving him his day in court and, if found guilty, of putting him to death in a legal and orderly manner.

"To hell with that" meant to hell with the Sheriff, to hell with the law, to hell with constituted authority, to hell with the safeguards of society. The State might in the same spirit reply "To hell with the mob," and suit the action to the word by hunting down these lynchers and holding them to account for their crime. But experience does not teach the public to expect that this will be done. The mob probably will continue to have its way until Congress places an anti-lynching law on the Federal statutes.

Greensboro, N. C., News

SOVEREIGNTY OF A STATE AND A MOB.

In Tennessee, one of the states whose rights were being so zealously guarded by some of our senators when they had the federal anti-lynching bill shelved recently, the country now has a striking example of a commonwealth preserved from this sort of federal intervention and, as a sort of side exhibition, the usual revelation of how local law enforcement does not apply to mobs.

Tipton county had its first lynching since the war between the states; and it would appear that if there was ever to be a place where those who take the law into their own hands were to be run down and punished this community where such a disgraceful occurrence is a rare event would be it. But what do we have?

The local authorities got off to a flourishing start. Hardly had the body of the dead negro, Albert Gooden, penetrated by 30 bullet holes and with the sheriff's handcuffs still binding his hands, been removed from its plow line hitch to a bridge timber before Circuit Judge R. B. Baptist was ordering the county grand jury to make a "real investigation" and indict for murder any members of the mob who could be identified.

It is unnecessary to go into the obstacles with which this local body of inquisition had to deal. They are so typical of those which have blocked similar investigations in other parts of the country that they are hardly worthy of being called news. The negro was dead and of course could not accuse his assailants. The only other eye-witness was the sheriff who had him in custody. And he did not recognize a soul. In corroboration of his contention that he could not identify any of the six men who snatched Gooden from the then very much unprotecting arms of the law, the sheriff alluded to handkerchiefs tied over their faces. Naturally nobody would expect a sheriff to get a peep under those improvised hoods of anonymity even if it does seem plausible that one or two might have flapped a little in the excitement of mobsters running down the negro after he was turned loose by the officer and beating him over the head with butts of their guns. Nor do we suppose a sheriff should be held accountable for looking at any of the other physical features of the mobsters—there must not have been a bandy-legged one in the lot or he would have remembered it — or mayhap identify the voice which shouted defiantly "To hell with the law."

The man sworn to protect the law found himself totally without memory of anything that would be of value to the grand jury.

Where are the murder indictments for which the Tennessee judge called so loudly? As usual in such cases they are non-existent. The federal authorities for lack of statutory power were helpless to step into the investigation. The grand jury adjourned without even making a report to the court and thus we are confronted with the sovereignty of a state being upheld as the Congress wished it. By and by we may forget the dead negro.

WHAT ALL LYNCHERS SAY

"To hell with the law!" a group of six masked men shouted Tuesday when they seized a negro accused of slaying a white officer in Tipton county, Tenn., "and left his body dangling at the end of a frayed rope after riddling it with bullets", states an AP dispatch. That's what all lynchers mean, whether they say it or not; but they would be the first to call on the law for protection if they got in a tough spot themselves.

LYNCH LAW IN TENNESSEE

"Tennessee Negro Lynched By Six," says the headlines in the papers. "Six masked men shouting, 'To hell with the law,'" the newspaper describe the lynching of a terror-stricken negro accused of slaying a white officer after taking the prisoner from Sheriff W. J. Vaughan yesterday and leaving his body dangling at the end of a rope and riddled with bullets.

It was said to have been the first lynching in Tipton County, Tenn., since the War Between the States and the seventh in the South this year.

Every time there is an effort to penalize through an anti-lynch law the community of the South wherein lynchings occur, you may expect to see more, rather than fewer, lynchings. Nobody with a sane mind can defend lynching. It is a grave crime. But you will never eradicate lynching so long as would-be reformers attempt to stop it by special enactment of congressional laws. Why should there be an anti-lynch law any more than an anti-murder law? The reason is plain enough. Lynching is murder, and as such should be punished by law—the law against murder. And the law specifically against lynching is superfluous. If it be said that there must be a specific law against that particular law why not enact one specifically against throat slitting, gunshot or any other murder? You would have to enact a hundred specific laws, that would punish the inhabitants of a community and after you had done so, murders would increase. Either those who join a mob and lynch a human being are murderers, or they are nothing. Let them be tried upon the charge of murder. If the courts fail, the failure itself will produce more lynchings.

Seventh Lynching in The South This Year

The first lynching since the Confederate war and the seventh in the south this year occurred this week in Covington. Tenn. A group of masked men seized a negro accused of slaying a white officer and left his body dangling from a limb, riddled with bullets.

The body was that of Albert Gooden, 35. The rope gave away under the weight of the swaying form and the body was partly submerged in a creek when found. The handcuffs placed on the negro by officers were still around his wrists his feet were bound together.

The sheriff was bringing the negro to Covington to face charges of slaying City Marshall Chester Doyle, of Mason. Tenn., several weeks ago. The sheriff said the men with handkerchiefs over their faces dragged the negro out of his car under cover of pistols. The negro jerked loose but was caught again and they dumped him into a car and sped away.

A Record Almost Bare.

In dealing with mob lawlessness, there is one instance to which Tennessee can point with pride. A year or two ago a large mob stormed the courthouse at Shelbyville, where a Negro had been arraigned on a charge of assaulting a white woman. The trial had scarcely begun when the mob attempted to enter and seize the prisoner. Trouble had been expected, State troops were on the scene, and there was a battle in which three or four members of the mob were killed. During the excitement and confusion the Negro was spirited away to Nashville, and that night infuriated mobsters burned the court house. The negro later was tried at Nashville, found guilty, and duly put to death in the electric chair.

But for this instance, Tennessee's record for dealing with mob lawlessness practically is bare of achievement. There have been numerous lynchings in the State, but with the exception of the mobsters killed at Shelbyville no mobster has ever been punished. If memory serves, few if any members of lynching mobs have ever been arrested. Therefore it will be interesting to note whether any of the six men who took a Negro prisoner from Sheriff Vaughan and brutally killed him will be apprehended and brought to book. The outlook is not promising, since the Sheriff said he did not recognize any of the men and did not get the license number of their car.

Under the Federal anti-lynching bill which has passed the House but which the Senate has left over to the next session of Congress, Sheriff Vaughan would be subject to penalty unless he could show that he had been remiss in the performance of his duty. Did he take all precaution to protect his prisoner? That seems to be open to question. When the Negro was arrested there was a threat of mob violence and he was hurried to Memphis for safekeeping. Yet when the Sheriff was returning him to Covington for trial he took along no deputies. His only traveling companion, aside from the prisoner, was a Covington merchant. Thus the six armed men had no difficulty in taking the Negro and visiting savage vengeance upon him. Probably three armed men could have done it just as easily.

Circuit Judge R. B. Baptist summoned a Grand Jury of farmers and merchants and, in a ringing denunciation of this lynching as "one of the most horrible and disgraceful crimes in the history of the county," charged them with the duty of investigating the outrage. After a two-day inquiry the Grand Jury recessed until September 1 with the statement that it had "nothing to report." So we repeat, it will be interesting to note whether anything will come of this latest official investigation of a lynching in Tennessee.

No More Excused

Judge Eschol Graham, addressing a charge to a Montgomery county grand jury, took cognizance of need for the South to take its own medicine to cure the lynch evil.

"Must our people suffer for the lawless acts of the mob?" Judge Graham asked. "Already we are threatened with an act of congress which we think will be oppressive to our people, due to the mob taking the law into their own hands, and due to the failure of some grand juries to make diligent inquiry into and true presentment concerning the crime of the mob."

Judge Graham touched the sorest spot in the problem of how to stop lynchings. Lynchings usually occur in communities where almost everybody knows almost everybody else. There can be no doubt that the identities of mob members are generally known—known certainly to at least part of the county grand jurors. But nobody ever seems able to identify lynchers. That is something the grand juries can remedy if they will.

Judge Graham repeated the well-acknowledged facts that mobs often kill the innocent, and that one crime does not excuse another. No more does the long-standing custom of lynching excuse any further delay by Southern jurors and Southern sheriffs in making an honest and forthright effort to stamp it out.

LYNCHING AND THE PRESS.

Winston-Salem Journal.

The Lynchburg Advance quotes The Philadelphia Record:

"The Southern people—who rarely hear of lynchings because most of their newspapers don't consider mob outrages to be news—feel the same way toward this relic of barbarism as the rest of the American people."

The Advance avers that the Philadelphia paper is bitterly antagonistic toward the South. We are not quite sure that this is true. At least we have not been able to detect such animosity in its editorials. But the Virginia paper properly takes The Record to task for the latter's charge that Southern newspapers suppress stories of mob outrages.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. The Southern press for years has published news about such incidents in a complete manner; and not only that, it has fought consistently, persistently and vigorously against all forms of hoodlumism and mob violence.

In writing the paragraph quoted, the Northern editor unquestionably neglected to confer with either memory or reason. Possibly, he didn't intend to put it just that way, but certainly he owes an apology to the newspapermen of the South, who, perhaps to a greater extent than any other individuals or institutions, have striven to extirpate forever from Dixie old Judge Lynch and all his henchmen.

THE TRUNKS OF MR. BEDAUX.

Philadelphia Record.

No, we don't refer to the gentleman's bathing suit, but the 22 trunks which he has shipped to England, while the author of the Bedaux-point system of labor speed-up and his wife prepare to travel incognito, as Jones.

It is the Bedaux ideal, as you know, that there be no waste time, no waste motion, that every little human movement have a meaning of its own and also a profit. Which has aroused in us intense wonder as to whether the Bedaux system was used in packing the 22 trunks.

We have, of course, observed the packing of trunks and bags. We have, in fact, helped pack some, invariably putting in all the trousers and leaving out all the coats, or packing shirts and no ties, or forgetting to pack the pin-cushion for Aunt Tootsie, or—anyway, we've always had to pack and repack, hunt for this, find the toothbrushes still left out, and finally sit on the lid to get the catch closed. Under the Bedaux system, we not only wouldn't be paid for our sheer inefficiency, we'd have to fire ourselves.

But now picture the neat, immaculate, scientific scene in the Bedaux household. A trim row of 22 valets and maids, before a shining row of 22 trunks: One valet for neckties, one for pajamas, one for shirts, one for socks, one maid for dinner gowns, one for jewels—and even one for milady's panties. The notion of these garments and—ahem, articles—being deposited in trunks with the neat precision of cars coming off an assembly line; the clocklike motions of the Jeeveses smoothing down ruffles, and fitting hairbrushes and razors and quarts of Scotch into such perfect position that not one square sixteenth of an inch of Bedaux trunks goes unoccupied—

All this—and then the thought of Bedaux missing the boat.

THE SOUTHERN SENATORS.

The New Republic.

In next month's special session, the Senate is pledged to consider the anti-lynching bill as soon as the Administration's farm measure has been voted on. It has been reported for weeks that the Southern Senators would secretly like to see the anti-lynching bill pass. They will pretend to filibuster against it, but they will take pains to see that the filibuster fails. In this way anti-New Deal Southerners hope to gain an issue to use against the Administration in next year's primaries. Men who must stand for re-election—for example, Senator George of Georgia—are said to feel that white supremacy is almost the only issue on which they can defeat pro-Roosevelt rivals. Other Southerners are reported to have more ambitious plans. They would like to capture the State Democratic organizations in next year's primaries, so that in 1940 they can take anti-New Deal delegations to the Democratic National Convention.

ANTI-LYNCHING.

Lakeland (Fla.) Evening Ledger.

The Southern Senators and Congressmen had as well realize that an anti-lynching bill is in the cards, to be dealt out sooner or later, and accept it as inevitable. Moreover, such a measure may be about the only way of halting mob violence throughout the country. Our communities and our States have been impotent.

LYNCHING HISTORY

(Charlotte Observer)

The most authentic and available data shows that 3,679 persons have been lynched in this country since 1882 and that of this number 700 were white and 2,979 were negroes.

No lynchings have ever occurred, according to these records, in the States of Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Vermont, and 10 other States have records that are almost clean, Delaware, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Nevada, Pennsylvania, Oregon, Utah and Wisconsin.

Nearly three-quarters of all lynchings (72.2 per cent) have occurred in eight States. Mississippi tops the list with 485 recorded lynchings. In order, come Georgia, 469; Texas, 354; Louisiana, 348; Alabama, 305; Florida, 248; Arkansas, 241; Tennessee, 210.

Far more negroes than whites have been lynched in the South, but in the West and Mid-West the situation is reversed.

Negroes comprised only 12.4 per cent of the 257 individuals lynched in 17 States. Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming. It is probable that many of the "white" victims in these States were Mexicans or Indians.

The six years, 1882-1887, inclusive, witnessed 752 lynchings or 20.4 of the 55-year total. The 15-year period, 1922-1937, inclusive, brought only 304 such crimes or 8.2 per cent of the total. The "high" year was 1883, with 158 lynchings; and 1933 was "low" with only eight. Nine lynchings were recorded in 1936, and seven through September 30, 1937. All the victims in the last two years were negroes, and the 16 lynchings occurred in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee.

The South Atlantic and South Central States account for 88.3 per cent of all recorded lynchings.

While there has been no decrease in the number of lynchings in 1937, there were no more than in 1936 and far less than in the two years previous to '36. Even if civilization is showing no advance, it is not retarding along that line. We are glad the attempted assault upon a negro prisoner in McDowell county did not materialize to increase the list this year.

THE LYNCH PROBLEM

From the Lanier County News.

Boake Carter, famous radio news commentator, said in a recent broadcast that only the South could solve its lynch problem, and that the federal government had no business to interfere in such a situation. Lanier county, without any lynchings, without any gangdom, without any labor violence and without any farm strikes, certainly looks like God's country. But, what of Senator Wagner of New York, trying so desperately to jam the anti-lynching bill through the upper house at this most critical time? We admire the senator, but we feel that at this particular time he is proving false to his great responsibility as one of the New Deal stalwarts. Perhaps he should be doing something constructive to help solve the gang murders, underworld lawlessness and labor violence which occurs so frequently in his own great section.

A LYNCHING EMBARRASSES.

The lynching of two Negroes at Winona, Mississippi, Tuesday by a mob of white men has placed in an embarrassing position every member of Congress who opposes enaction of a Federal anti-lynching law. The degree of that embarrassment and what it may lead to is reflected in the unprecedented action of Chairman Sumners, of the House Judiciary Committee, who Wednesday addressed to Governor Hugh White, of Mississippi, a telegram protesting against "as dastardly a crime as cowardice could devise and brutality execute."

If memory serves, no other member of Congress, certainly no other Chairman of an important congressional committee, has protested formally to a Governor against a violation of the laws of a State. The fact that Representative Sumners, a Texan, is the leader of Southern Democrats who are opposing the Gavagan Federal anti-lynching bill gives added force to his comment. Concerning the mob crime in Mississippi, Chairman Sumners has said to the Governor of that State: "It is the sort of thing which makes it hard for us who are here trying to protect the governmental sovereignty of the States." And a note of warning is discernible in these words of Representative Sumners:

> It (the crime) will be seized upon as a demonstration of the inability of the States to govern. As one Southern man to another, I hope I will not be considered impertinent by stating candidly my own reaction and that is that the State of Mississippi cannot escape this reflection upon its governmental capacity, in fact, cannot escape in effect from becoming an accessory after the fact unless it is able to and does bring these lynchers and officers to speedy and adequate punishment.

In effect, Representative Sumners has asked Governor White to carry out, under the authority of the State Government, the course of action which would be prescribed in the pending Gavagan bill. That bill would impose heavy fines and prison terms on not only the members of a lynch mob, but also on peace officers who permitted prisoners to be taken from them. Governor White has called upon District Attorney Clarence Morgan, at Jackson, Mississippi, to investigate the lynchings at Winona. Sheriff E. E. Wright, from whom the two Negroes were taken, has denied reports that he will not conduct an investigation.

No one acquainted with life in a small town (the population of Winona in 1930 was 2,067) will believe that a Sheriff and two Deputies, forced by a mob of 100 men to give up two prisoners, can fail to identify a large number of them. Winona is the County seat of Montgomery County. In rural Counties throughout the South, Sheriffs make it their business to know virtually every one in the County; the wider their acquaintance the more votes they obtain for election and re-election. The failure of peace officers to protect prisoners against mobs is, in effect, a confession that mob violence, when a Negro is the victim, is not regarded as a crime by those who participate, either as members of the mob or as peace officers who too infrequently make it hard for mobs to seize the objects of their brutality.

It is the lack of public sentiment against lynching which is the root of the problem. Police officers have demonstrated in several notable cases that Negroes can be protected against mob violence. But in communities where prejudice against the Negro is bitter, Sheriffs and other peace officers find it easy to surrender prisoners to a murderous mob. In one case in South Carolina, Governor Richards sent constables into Aiken County in 1927 to investigate the lynching of three Negroes—two men and a pregnant woman. Evidence incriminating several people was submitted to a Grand Jury, but no one was indicted. Sitting on the Grand Jury were men who had been members of the mob.

The fact that most Southern members of Congress oppose Federal anti-lynching legislation on the ground that it would be a "slap" at the South is itself an acknowledgment of the lack of sentiment against lynching. Many people who wish the South would enforce laws against mob violence and eliminate all grounds for Federal action will find little that is convincing in the arguments advanced by Southerners against the pending anti-lynching bill. Commenting on the Mississippi mob crime, Representative Miller, of Arkansas, asserts: "Those participating in this lynching have violated the law of Mississippi and the good citizens of that State will resent it. But it is not a case for Federal interference."

The "good citizens" who resent mob violence after the crime has been committed are apparently incapable of preventing it and, in virtually every instance, are equally incapable of punishing those who participate. If Governor White replies to Chairman Sumners by bringing "these lynchers and officers to speedy and adequate punishment" he will provide at least a basis for the contention that Federal action in such cases is not necessary. A reasonable basis for that contention does not now exist. The repetition of lynchings is causing more and more people in this section to believe that such instances of brutality and terrorism should be regarded, not as a violation of the laws of a State, but as a crime against society itself and subject to prosecution under Federal laws.

Lynching

Governor Hugh White, of Mississippi, is no doubt ashamed of the record of his state instead of "justly proud of the fact that Mississippi has not had a lynching in fifteen months," as he said in an address yesterday only a few minutes before a mob lynched two Negro men. Imagine the chagrin that he as the head of government in Mississippi must feel at the disrepect that some of the people of his state have shown toward law and order.

The two Negroes had been arrested charged with the murder of a white merchant near Duck Hill, had pleaded innocence, and were being taken from the courthouse back to jail, to await trial. Between 200 and 500 men overpowered the sheriff and his deputies and took the Negroes to the scene of the murder and tortured them by burning their bodies with flames from blow torches. One died from burns and the other was then shot. A third under slight suspicion was beaten and told to leave town.

Certainly if these men killed the merchant they deserved death, but they deserved this death only after a court had tried them. We are living under a system of government not in a land of savagery. Organized society points with pride to its government. One arm of government is the system of courts and in America anyone accused of crime is entitled to a trial before a judge that is elected by the people and a jury of twelve citizens. This plan was adopted in order to give the accused a trial that would be fair to them and also give the people a part in administering this branch of the government. People in this mob would probably give as their excuse for their act that they were afraid to risk the courts to administer justice. This is a foolish charge for twelve jurors would sit on the case when it came to trial and no doubt many of these jurors would have been chosen from the very people who took part in the mob. As jurors though, they would have heard all the evidence presented and weighed it carefully before giving their verdict. They would have gone about the trial in a calm and deliberate manner and not rushed at conclusions in a prejudiced mad frenzy.

Maybe it would not appeal to those who took part in this mob to be a part of an orderly jury, maybe they wanted to have a part in the execution to give vent to their anger. If this is the case they are guilty of murder and are no better than the murderer of the merchant at Duck Hill.

"Civilization"—1937

"Mob burns two Negroes."

Quoting a headline from the daily press—

Neither in the savage jungle of the dark continent of Africa—

Nor amid the teeming hordes of benighted India or China—

Not even in the barbaric savagery of the Fiji Islands—

But, here at home—in Mississippi.

The colored boys in question were accused of killing a white resident near Duck Hill, Montgomery County.

A white mob seizes the Negroes from the sheriff and his deputies—let the news dispatches tell the sordid story:

"The mob lashed Roosevelt Townes, 26, of Grenada, to a tree with chains. 'Bootjack' McDaniels, 26, of near Duck Hill, was the first to feel the searing blowtorch. He quickly confessed his part in the slaying.

"McDaniels was then riddled with bullets.

"The torch was next applied to Townes and he repeated the confession.

"After mutilating him with the blowtorch for an hour, the lynchers piled brush high about him, saturated it with gasoline and touched a match to the pyre."

Under the "ordeal of fire" the hapless Negroes confess their crime—

Doubtless guilty—however:

Under the searing pain of the blowtorch, almost anybody might confess to almost anything.

Not content with obtaining a confession, the lynchers mutilate one of the victims for an hour with the blowtorch—perhaps, just for "fun" to see him "squirm."

So much for "civilization" in Montgomery County, Mississippi.

Another dark and dismal chapter in our Mississippi history.

Small wonder that the federal anti-lynching bill seems headed for an early passage!

If and when the federal government shall step in to help rule states which cannot rule themselves—we shall be duly sorry—

All the more regretful because we have ourselves alone "to blame."—Meridian (Miss.) Star.

Alabama's Lynch Law

In Alabama the penalty for lynching is from five years in the penitentiary to the death sentence. For aiding in a lynching the punishment is from one to twenty-one years. Only eleven States provide any penalty for this crime. Five of these States are in the South. Eight States place a heavy liability for personal injury and property damage against cities and counties where damage is done by mob violence.

STATE OF MIND IS CAUSE OF LYNCHING

Sociologist Says Lynch Law Is Most Attractive To Poorer Rural Whites

Atlanta, April 17.—(AP)—Dr. Arthur Raper, research secretary for the commission on interracial cooperation, said today the present lynchings in the south "are motivated by the same mental attitude that caused the historical Massachusetts witch burnings."

"Lynchings," he said, "Come out of the state of mind of white people much more than out of the crimes committed by Negroes, just as witches were burned in Boston not because there were witches in Boston but because of the state of mind of the people in Boston."

He said the use of a blow torch in a lynching this week in Mississippi demonstrated a new development: the impact of the mechanical age on a primitive method of social control."

Dr. Raper personally has investigated more than 100 lynching cases in the last nine years. He is author of the "Tragedy of Lynching," and "A Preface to Peasantry."

The typical southern lynching falls into two classifications, Dr Raper said. First, by the "orderly" mob directed by community leaders; second, by the wild mob type.

"The first type is bourbon in leadership and its principal object is to wreak vengeance on a particular individual," Dr. Raper said.

"The second type is proletarian and is distinctly directed against an entire class of people. It is distinguished by sadistic tortures of the victims."

He said the recent Mississippi lynching was a combination of the two types.

Dr. Raper said the typical lynching is "in the rural south, the mob victim is a Negro, the lynchers are native-born whites, and the courts punish no one."

He said his studies show that a man in the 200 "most rural counties" of the south is in 60 times more danger of being lynched than is a man in the half-dozen most populous counties.

Dr. Raper declared lynchers seldom are punished because "punishment depends on the same peace officers and court officials whose impotence they demonstrated when they lynched."

He said the leading white people in some communities direct a lynch mob to maintain control of Negro labor.

"But it is the poorer rural whites, who live on about the same plane as the landless Negroes near-by, to whom manhunts, mock trials and lynchings prove most attractive. The racial dogma is precious to them because it is proof they are superior.

"They get a chance to escape boredom of restricted lives. For a time they are people of importance—they assume the role of society's protectors; they flourish weapons; they hunt down the accused; they determine his guilt; they destroy him."

Dr. Raper said the most effective answer to the problem of lynching is to give the poorer rural areas of the south a greater share in the economic and cultural wealth of the nation. He declared:

"Any effective program must be geared to the task of lifting above the lynching level the poorest rural areas and the poorest elements in a yet larger region. In this task the county, state and federal governments all have responsibility.

"It is, of course, the part of wisdom that the contributions of each be so correlated that whatever responsibility can be borne locally shall be left there. At the same time, in no instance should the local community be permitted to lynch and then protect its lynchers from punishment, and thus violate the essential nature of the state and nation of which it is a part."

PREVENTING LYNCHINGS.

The editorial expressions of leading newspapers printed elsewhere in this page constitute a worthwhile discussion of the social problems growing out of mob murders. The torture-lynching of two Negroes at Duck Hill, Mississippi, last Tuesday, by a mob of white men who committed the crime at the very moment a Federal antilynching bill was being debated in the House of Representatives, was, in the words of the Baltimore Sun, a "melancholy coincidence." It was, moreover, a coincidence which gives weight and influence to the contentions of those who earnestly believe Federal action is necessary if mob violence is to be stamped out. Granting that public sentiment is aroused over the failure of State officials to prevent lynchings, it is still seriously to be questioned whether the Gavagan bill just passed by the House provides an effective means for solving the problem.

The Gavagan bill is apparently airtight. It would authorize the Federal Government to take over any lynching case if, after thirty days, the State had not indicted and prosecuted the lynchers. Once the Federal Government assumed jurisdiction, a peace officer who had permitted a prisoner to be taken from his custody and injured or put to death, would be subject to a fine of as much as $5,000, and to a sentence of as many as five years in prison. Members of the mob which lynched the prisoner would be subject to prison sentences of from five years to twenty-five years. Finally, the County in which the lynchings occurred would be subject to damages ranging from $2,000 to $10,000, the money to be paid to the victim's family.

Those penalties are obviously designed to increase the protection afforded prisoners by making lynching extremely costly to both peace officers and taxpayers. That may be sound in theory, but in practice such a plan might be disastrous. The survivors of a Negro who had been lynched would find it impossible to avoid persecution once they had received out of the County treasury public funds paid to them by order of the Federal Government. A more valid objection to all the provisions in the Gavagan bill was stated in the House debate by Representative Robsion, of Kentucky, who believes the Federal Government should legislate against lynching. Emphasizing the fact that under the Gavagan bill Federal penalties would apply only after a prisoner had been taken from a peace officer, Representative Robsion made this important point: "What inducement is there for an officer to take an accused person into custody? He would subject himself to indictment and his County to damages."

That contention seems sound. Instances known to people in the South where peace officers actually co-operated with mobs in the lynching of Negroes are numerous enough to warrant the belief that if the Gavagan bill became law, peace officers in many Southern Counties would allow ample periods of time for the murderous expression of mob spirit before attempting to make arrests in cases which are likely to lead to lynchings. If the Federal Government is to prevent mob murders it would seem that its jurisdiction should begin when the prisoner can be protected and not after the lynching has occurred.

DIDN'T HELP

That negro in Georgia who killed two women deserved no mercy. But it did not help the cause of Southerners, fighting now against a federal anti-lynching bill hatched in Harlem and other negro sections of the North, for a bunch of high-strung and hot-headed Georgians to drag a dead negro's body all over Bainbridge after officers had shot him for trying to "escape." A few more incidents of that type and the Gavagan bill will become law.

Civilization in Bainbridge

As Sheriff W. J. Catledge, of Bainbridge, Ga., tells it, Willie Reed, a 20-year-old Negro, was arrested in Dothan, Ala., on a charge of killing two white women. He confessed his guilt. En route to Albany, Ga., the prisoner wrenched open the door of the automobile with his handcuffed hands, while the car was going at 35 miles an hour, and ran for nearby woods. Whereupon deputies from whom he had escaped shot and killed him.

The story smacks of the Latin-American technique of liquidating prisoners under the "law of flight." But the story may be true. In any event it is beside the immediate point. The deputies gathered up the body of their prisoner and deposited it in a Bainbridge undertaking establishment. Then the mob took charge. A hundred men broke into the undertaking establishment, took out the body, tied it to an automobile, dragged it around the public square and on to the Negro baseball park and there, after knocking boards off the fence, celebrated their triumph by burning all that was left of the dead prisoner.

Presumably this was not lynching. The mob did not kill the prisoner because he was already dead. It did not take the place of the law because there was no further punishment that could be exacted. All that is left, therefore, is the picture of American citizens descending to a ghoulish exhibition of sadistic savagery. Is it any wonder that the remainder of the country has roused itself to an ever more intensive study of the capacity of the Federal government to curb and control the spirit of bestiality which some Southern States continue to tolerate?

If (?) lynching is ever justifiable, it should have been applied on the spot to that drunken driver of the truck that ran into that Greyhound Bus near Orion Monday morning on the Bee Line Highway. It makes us sad to even think about the unsafety of our roads. Here is a bus loaded with 29 passengers who had a reason to believe that their lives were safe, but behold just a few yards away comes a high-powered truck driven by a drunken negro taking both sides of the highway, and rams the bus. An explosion occurs, sets the bus on fire. One person is burned and nearly all the passengers on the bus were more or less injured. One woman lost $400 hard earned money. Is that all? It is a serious matter to think that hundreds of men are employed by the State to patrol the highways. Where were these men? We doubt very seriously that there was a single patrolman on this Bee Line Highway between Troy and Montgomery when this accident occurred.. This driver no doubt, got his whiskey in Montgomery and then started out to clean off the highway. You can start out on some highways, in any direction at most any time, day or night and you never see a patrolman. Where are they? What do they do? It may be that McAdory's men are responsible for this wreck and destruction of property and injury to persons. The DRUNKEN driver should have been dumped into the fire he caused.

The Daily News was kind and considerate with Congressman Sumners, of Texas, chairman of the House judiciary committee, when he came to Jackson a few days ago to do some raving and rearing and tearing of what he has left in the way of hair concerning the subject of lynching.

Congressman Sumners, chief speaker before the Mississippi Association for Prevention of Lynching, was our guest and therefore it would not have been polite to say anything against the carefully prepared and shipped-in-advance speech he had written for the occasion. No newspaper printed it in full. In fact, he got only a few lines in the papers. More important things going on. His crowd was meagre. "Slimly attended," said one reporter.

That was in strict accord with the eternal fitness of things.

Congressman Sumners is not a good speaker.

Congress Sumners had a poor subject.

Congressman Sumners happens to be chairman of the House judiciary committee because of the rule of seniority and not because of any particular fitness he has for the place.

So much by way of prelude for a thumping good editorial.

Down at Biloxi dwells George P. Money who devotes his leisure time to writing darned good editorials for the Gulfport-Biloxi Daily Herald.

If you happen to know anything about Mississippi history you certainly know the prominent part that has been played in our state affairs by the Money family—beginning with that illustrious blind Senator Hernando DeSoto Money. George Money is his blood kin. He is a scholar and a gentleman, gracefully growing old but still capable of good thinking.

All right. That's the introduction. Now listen to what George P. Money has to say in the Gulfport-Biloxi Daily Herald concerning Congressman Sumners and the subject of lynching. Here it is:

> Congressman Sumners of Texas is chairman of the House judiciary committee, we believe. As such he feels responsible —in addition to being a Southerner—for the anti-lynching bill which has passed the House after introduction by a New York Congressman who has a well-shaded district, but perhaps has never been where one has to carry a lantern to see his way in a crowd down here. He has given interviews and written Southern Governors about it, and cries, even as of old. "Help me, Cassius, or we sink!"
> He warns all, that if "they" do not stop lynching—which generally is done unexpectedly and suddenly by a small number, some of them quite irresponsible—a Federal lynching law will be passed, and the Federal grand juries, once in a great while, first in the Northern and then in the Southern District, they will indict somebody or other if they can learn who they are, or even find John Doe and Richard Doe indictments—there will be great times at the trials.
> Under the President's court bill, even some of the new Northern judges may be assigned to try such cases.
> Suppose that somebody introduced a bill up there to indict the sheriffs, the constables, the governor and district attorneys who have failed to put down the mobs in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, New York, California, where thousands, innumerable times, have gathered and broken many laws; have defied the police and the courts and all constituted authority; have denied the right to others not affiliated with them to work; have stoned and beaten non-affiliated employes; have stopped business; have taken possession of plants and places of business; have stopped transportation and business. Why not such a Federal law? These things take place, have taken place; will continue to take place, and "conciliation" and "arbitration" and "conference" are resorted by the states where these things have occurred. Let the Federal government take charge of it. More than 70,000 are going out now —and they know what it means.
> Then, again, why not introduce a bill to give the Federal government authority to indict all those scoundrels who have kidnaped, abused and killed poor little children, grown men, women? Gangs of the large "cultivated" and "literate" cities who have taken men for rides and crossed state boundaries? And why not have the government take charge of the unconscionable and criminal rackets in the large cities?
> We do not condone lynching at all, and wish that all citizens of this and other states would abide by the law—resort to it for punishment of crimes. But we have to bear with it —the people of the East and West do not. But nevertheless the people of New York, by their Congressman's bill, would administer our police laws. They always are telling us what to do in the South. We are always wrong, deficient, omissive and commissive in some way—we always measure short when their yardstick is laid to us mentally, physicary, sentimentally, economically, educationaly, artistraly, productively, and otherwise.
> We ask them to clean their own stables. We know very well whence comes the motive of these bills and anti-lynch bills. We are not one whit deceived.
> At San Pedro, California, last week, a policeman shot a longshoreman. There was a mass meeting of 4000 marine workers who "took over" San Pedro for the day in protest, and defied the police. They paralyzed the lawful control of the city. Work on the waterfront was halted and business places closed. Yet we are unlawful in the South!
> And so, we ask that we give them a Roland for their Oliver. We want some Federal bills giving the government power to straighten out some conditions in other places if we are to have a Federal anti-lynch law. And we would like to read some of our Southern Congressmen telling them that. What happened in California until Southern Representatives helped the Western Congressmen pass the anti-alien law? Plenty of assaults upon Orientals. But their Congressmen now recall the help we gave them. Introduce a bill to repeal the Chinese and Asiatic exclusion laws and watch them squirm!

Marked copies of George P. Money's editorial have been sent to Senators Pat Harrison and Theodore G. Bilbo.

That absurd anti-lynching bill is pending in the Senate. It will die on calendar.

George P. Money's editorial will appear in the Congressional Record, which isn't a very interesting publication but more people read it than were assembled to hear Congressman-Chairman Sumners' diatribe in Jackson on the general subject of lynching.

The best explanation of passage in the lower house of Congress of that Federal anti-lynching bill is that members of the body stumbled into the chamber one day and felt that they were in duty bound to pass a bill of some sort that might make constituents believe they were doing something.

Concluding the subject:

Pass out some pity to the secretaries, clerks, and stenographers in the office of Congressman Sumners. They have so many angry letters to answer, most of them from the constituency of Congressman Sumners.—Daily News.

'TO HELL WITH THE LAW.'

Shouting "To hell with the law," six masked men laughed as they seized a Negro from Sheriff W. J. Vaughan near Covington, Tennessee, in Tipton County, early Tuesday. Twelve miles South of the city, the mob hanged the Negro to the outer beam of a steel bridge over Beaver Creek. Either before or after the Negro was lynched, more than thirty bullets were fired into his body. The first lynching in Tennessee since 1935—a crime as brutal as has been committed in this State—raises the immediate question whether the people of Tipton County will echo the mob's cry, "To hell with the law."

The forthright denunciation of the mob by Circuit Judge R. B. Baptist, and his demand that the County Grand Jury make a "real investigation," lead to the hope that an inquiry will result in identification of members of the mob, followed by speedy indictment and trial, and their conviction. Judge Baptist has demanded first-degree murder indictments against every one identified as having participated in the lynching. He has not only asserted that members of the mob and all who aided them are guilty of murder in the first degree, but he has also taken steps to assure that the investigating Grand Jury will be composed of men in sympathy with his course, and sympathetic also to the purposes of a statute which provides punishment for Sheriffs who "negligently and willfully or by want of proper diligence" allow prisoners to be taken from them.

The Negro, accused of having slain City Marshal Chester Doyle, of Mason, Tennessee, a month ago, had been kept in jail in Memphis because of a previous attempt at violence. The prisoner was being returned to Covington to stand trial when the attack on the Sheriff was made. In the light of the previous effort to substitute mob action for legal procedure, Sheriff Vaughan should be required to explain why he did not safeguard the delivery of his prisoner by providing an escort large enough, and determined enough, to discourage any lawless gang.

White men who hide behind masks, shout 'to hell with the law," and lynch Negroes, and members of their own race, rarely risk their own lives to do so. With all the cunning of cowards, they attack when they know there will be the least resistance. Law enforcement officers charged with protecting prisoners against whom public feeling has been aroused are seldom unable to keep their prisoners alive and in their custody when they desire to do so.

The law-abiding citizens of Tipton County, humiliated by the first lynching in their County since the War Between the States, can contribute a great deal to the campaign against mob violence by supporting Judge Baptist in his effort to identify and convict for murder the perpetrators of a brutal lynching. If the spirit of mob violence is to be sanctioned, if masked men are to be permitted to lynch the law along with their fellows, it will be only a matter of time before no one, white or Negro, is safe. Crimes like that near Covington, and the indifference of law enforcement officials which usually follows, are leading to the enactment of a Federal anti-lynching law. It remains to be seen whether the people of Tipton County will prove to the rest of the State, to the South and to the Nation that mob violence can be dealt with effectively in this section.

Indignation will be felt generally throughout Tennessee because of the shame which six men placed upon the name of the state Monday in stringing up a Tipton county Negro whom they had taken from an officer at the point of a gun.

Whether or not the Negro was guilty or innocent is not a matter which need concern us here. The point is that again Tennessee and the South have been disgraced by citizens taking the law into their own hands in defiance of the authorities.

To add to the disgrace of this affair, it is our prediction that nothing will be done about it. That's not because it happened in Tipton county, either, because there have been other lynchings and we've never known of a case so far where anyone was ever punished for participation in one of these returns to barbarism.

If there is anything that the state government can do to disclose the perpetrators of this latest offense against not only the Negro but our whole commonwealth, then by all means it should be done. If it were once demonstrated that those who hold these lynching parties were reasonably sure of themselves being punished under the law there would be a great deal less enthusiasm about organizing them.

With the national publicity Tennessee has gotten within the past decade from the monkey law trial, from child marriages, and occasional lynchings, it's remarkable that we stand as well among our sister states as we do.

Lynchings Can Be Stopped

There has been another lynching in the South—this time in Tennessee. It is another proof of the painful fact that no fundamental progress has been made in the long, hard problem of making people apply cold reason in times of heated passion.

It may be that argument and education never will suffice alone to make potential lynch mobs remember that the laws and courts exist to do justice. But The Telegraph is too obstinate to believe that words and reason are wasted on the subject. Concededly, so long as there is nothing but talk about lynching there will be no remedy for it. But enough talk eventually will have an effect on voters and they will have an effect on enforcement officers.

A few determined and perhaps sacrificial efforts to prevent lynchings will yield results. Not so many years ago Bibb county saw two good examples of determined law enforcement officers preventing lynchings—and officers who were instrumental in preventing each of the lynchings still hold office.

In one, a sheriff and his force stood off thousands of mobsmen at the county jail. In another a jailer flatly refused to surrender his prisoner and offered to meet force with force if necessary.

It is such cases as these which teach real respect for law and order.

In this week's lynching in Tennessee, a party of six white men took a Negro slaying suspect from Sheriff W. J. Vaughan and an assistant between Memphis and Covington. The sheriff said he did not recognize the men because they were masked. That may be possible. But less easily explainable was his failure to secure the license tag number of the car in which the lynchers rode. There was no indication of any real resistance to the "mob" of six.

The guilt or innocence of lynch victims or their suspected guilt naturally is the inflammatory element in mob motivation. But in reason it has no bearing on the issue. The reason for lynch law's despicability is simply that it abrogates the law, the courts, and everything that this country has set up for passionless administration of justice. Every lynching is a little contribution toward anarchy.

THE WRONG ATTITUDE

A Tennessee mob, shouting, "To hell with the law," recently wrested a colored prisoner from the sheriff of the county, spirited the luckless black away, strung him up to a tree, and riddled his body with bullets.

No sane man condones lynching. There is no defense either in law or morals for such crime. But, setting aside the act of this mob, there is food for thought in the attitude of those composing the mob.

There is too much of this "To hell with the law" attitude in the United States today. It can be found in virtually every phase of our life—social, political, industrial, ethical, even along religious lines.

Such attitude bodes ill for those who hold it, and also for the nation in which it exists. When we lose respect for law, when we hold in contempt the processes of law, then are we heading straight toward trouble which may border anarchy.

The individual in an organized society must submerge many of his own personal inclinations to the good of society as a whole. The result is that we have what are known as laws to govern our conduct. Such laws may not be perfect. Few of them are. But let us concentrate on making better those rules and regulations which govern society, rather than disregard law and hinder its enforcement because we do not agree with its provisions.

Governor Was Correct

Florida's Governor Fred P. Cone was right when he said this week's double lynching at Tallahassee "looks like a lot of carelessness by somebody."

He said the deaths of the two Negro victims were "murder, not lynching." Every lynching ought to be subjected to the same investigation and court procedure as murder. But every one is not.

Lest some of the newspapers and some of the individuals who have criticized The Telegraph in the past for its attitude on lynchings still misunderstand: There is no doubt that many men who are lynched deserve the punishment of death as long as capital punishment stands on the statute books. There is no doubt that delays, uncertainties and the possibilities of legal wrangling in the courts impel some persons to try to take justice into their own hands.

But every lynching weakens authorized law. Many lynchings involve the risk of punishing an innocent man. If the reliability of justice in trial by jury is so doubtful that the public can't depend on it in crucial cases, it's not worth having in ordinary cases and the whole jury trial system might as well be discarded.

Who wants that?

Under strict administration of justice in the courts the guilty and the innocent would be served far better than by mob rule. And if lynchers took as keen an interest in jury service, in seeing that delays and legally technical maneuvers are eliminated, as they do in forming mobs and storming jails, justice would be done in court.

In the Tallahassee case, the fact is that the lynchers probably thought their victims would not get the death sentence in court—if one credits them for thinking of anything beyond the murder thrill of killing. But giving them the benefit of the doubt, they may have believed the two Negroes deserved killing because they stabbed a policeman. The policeman was living when the lynching occurred, and certainly the Negroes would not have been given the death sentence in court had they been tried at that moment.

The Telegraph does not concede that so severe a penalty as death was warranted. But if it was, the law should be amended to cover such cases. Seriously, no majority of voters would favor any such amendment. Then why should a comparatively small group of men in a mob undertake to administer a punishment that the public would not enact into law?

Double Murder

Two Negroes, each about 18 years old, were taken from jail at Tallahassee, Fla., Monday night. Their shot-riddled bodies were found not far from the capital near the Jacksonville Highway.

The early stories of this double murder, as gathered by The Associated Press, were even vaguer as to just how this crime against all the people of Florida and the United States and against all law, occurred, than are the usual early accounts of such affairs. Nothing much, except the death of the Negroes, seemed definite. Everything was a "report." It was said there were reports that a band of men entered police headquarters . . . and forced an officer to accompany them at gun point to the county jail and get the two Negroes out of their cells."

Later this account seemed to be upheld. The county jailer said he found a police desk sergeant locked inside the cell block.

The Negroes are said to have confessed stabbing a policeman, who is reported seriously wounded.

Placards found at the scene of the lynching bore such statements as "Warning, this is what will happen to all Negroes that harm white people." The lettering on the placards was crude, with the "e" turned backwards.

The state's attorney is quoted as saying—not very confidently or resolutely, it seems to us—that "we're going to investigate this thing as far as we can. We're trying to get the parties who are responsible for it."

The simple recitation of these "reports" seem to constitute the most devastating indictment of this aboriginal crime.

The double lynching becomes another provocation or invitation to the federal government to attempt to do what some states have not yet succeeded in doing.

JUNGLE RULE AGAIN

FLORIDA WAS DISGRACED again early Tuesday when an armed mob of masked men took two accused negroes from the county jail at Tallahassee and riddled their bodies with bullets.

As Gov. Cone properly said, "This is not a lynching; it was murder." He could have added murder by a cowardly band too craven even to execute its victims with faces bared to public view.

It is to be hoped that the governor will stick to his promise to "prosecute to the limit" those charged with this ghastly crime. For years, Florida and other southern states have struggled to rid themselves of lynch law, and some measure of success has rewarded their efforts, at least to the point where the number of such outrages has been decreased.

But periodically, apparently as a throw-back to the days of jungle rule, lynching rears its ugly head and another black mark is chalked up to lawlessness and disorder in this and other states. The perpetrators should be apprehended and swift justice meted out to them. It is not alone that they have committed the crime of murder, but they have hurled open defiance at the orderly processes of law in this state. There should be no temporizing with the culprits.

Meanwhile, St. Petersburg hardly is in a position to cast any smug reproaches at the state capital for occurrences there. Events of this week have produced a revival of the sinister, hooded figure of the night-marcher.

Publicity attendant upon this incident will do the city irreparable harm everywhere throughout the north in the areas where St. Petersburg is so dependent upon the good will and respect of the people for its continued growth and development as a great tourist center of Florida.

For this disfavor, the city may thank those who treated it to the shameful episode of Monday night.

THE WORST OF ALL

The double murder at Tallahassee Tuesday morning when four men—"two stout men and two short men"—forced the night sergeant to accompany them to the jail, unlock several doors and surrender two negro youths, to be riddled with bullets, is about the rawest thing Florida has known in a generation. It happened four blocks from the capitol. The youths had stabbed a policeman, who is in a critical condition.

That crime was worse than lynching; it was premeditated murder.

Cowardly things like that make it impossible to prevent the passage of a federal anti-lynching bill. And why should not some capable authority take a hand?

Florida adds new fuel to the flames and presents the proponents of federal anti-lynching laws with one more argument in support of the enactment of the pending anti-lynching bill by lynching two negroes, accused of stabbing a Tallahassee policeman.

The prisoners were taken from the county jail, two blocks from the state capitol—which is a symbol of the state that will do nothing about the lynching.

Tallahassee, Fla. Democrat
July 20, 1937

An Unfortunate Incident in City's Record

The lynching last night was unfortunate. Tallahassee has an enviable record as a law abiding city and so long as the orderly procedure of enforcement is functioning it does not promote the city's prestige in the eyes of state and nation to adopt extra legal means for the enforcement of justice.

The victims who confessed attempted murder deserved the punishment, but that is not the point. Some will believe that the shooting of the negroes was entirely justified by the circumstances but the point of view does not take into consideration the Capital City's position and the effect of adverse publicity.

As lynchings go, last night's was about as free from the usual unsavory angles as any we have heard about. The method adopted was quiet, orderly, free from violence to police officers, forcible entry to the jail and from torture. But it was illegal and, as such, it cannot be condoned.

The causes behind lynching are complex. First we must contend with the aftermath of reconstruction days when extra-legal steps were absolutely necessary. Many men now active took part in the earlier enforcement of the laws of humanity without benefit of statutory authority. It is not easy for them to break old habits now that the necessity is removed. Too, we have the tremendous force of resentment against such crimes as the cowardly attack upon a highly respected and well liked officer of the law. And there is a force that grows from impatience at the law's delays.

There are two trends in our current history that serve to intensify the lynching spirit. One is the intrusion into southern law courts of outside legal counsel, hired by fanatics and communists in the big cities to delay trials such as that of the Scottsboro case. The other is the ill advised bill pending in congress.

Lynching is and has been on the decrease in the southern states. The only way it can be curbed is through public opinion and education and under the influence of those forces examples of mob violence have been growing steadily fewer.

The outsiders meddling into court trials, the interference of proposed federal laws will make the situation infinitely worse and may even result in making lynch law necessary again. The point is illustrated by the present case: Punishment either of the county or of the sheriff which would be imposed under the proposed statute, would be unjustified since there is no evidence that either the people of Leon county or its officers were at fault last night.

The only criticism that can be made is that keys to the jail were too readily available. It may be that long years without trouble led to the practice of keeping keys at a place with little defensive facilities but, in future, in seems to us that it would be the point of wisdom to wake the night jailer when necessary to place prisoners in safe keeping.

Probably the worst effect of such incidents as this is the stimulation it gives to organizations such as that which is now interfering in the Alabama Scottsboro cases. Radicals use lynchings as fuel to build fires under our legal processes, to incite bitterness toward the south and its institutions, to raise funds to send meddlers into our communities and to sponsor such legislation as that now pending in congress.

We may be able to eliminate lynch law from our section in time but if anyone thinks it can be done easily by "passing a law" he is mistaken. The process must continue to be slow and must be accompanied by speedier court action, a growing respect for legal institutions and a minimum of interference from outside.

LET US STAY THAT WAY

Just after the regrettable Duck Hill lynching in this state, a Syracuse, N. Y. newspaper came out with the following sarcastic editorial:

'Mississippi was admitted to the Union in 1817. Why, no one knows—And if the state continues to progress in civilization as rapidly as it has in the past, the next 1,000 years should see it take rank along with other states."

Answering on behalf of Mississippi we might say that we were admitted to the union for several reasons.

1 Because New York couldn't keep us out.

2 In order to lift the general level of civilization throughout the nation, brought so low by such states as this same New York.

3 To provide a place to mature and breed a pure Anglo-Saxon race, the hope of the world, rather than a polyglot nationality such as New York has always had.

4 To produce statesmen and thinkers who could then, and who can today, take the measure of any man from New York.

5 To produce a population that has grown to over two million citizens—perhaps not as rich in money as New York, but far richer in many other ways—rich in the pioneer spirit, in heritage, in love of living, in simplicity, in hospitality and gentility, in levels of character and civilization.

New York is a state of rackets, of chiseling, of lousy practices, of a conglomeration of nationalities, of crime of every description.

It is cold blooded, hard hearted, selfish.

The dollar rules 24 hours of the day.

Dozens of families live huddled up under one apartment roof and don't know their next door neighbor.

Down here in Mississippi, the loving hands of friends and relatives bury our dead.

Up in New York, hired mouners and hired pall bearers in many cases perform these last rites.

IN Tallahassee, the capital of Florida, two negroes were taken from the protection of the law and lynched. In Washington, the capital of the United States, the attempt to lynch the constitution may be prevented by the courageous stand of Democratic senators. The law may prevail. As mild compromise talked. Save the party. And the nation.

THE law is lynched when men are lynched. Within the shadow of Florida's capitol building two young negroes were removed from the security of the jail by hooded figures, taken outside the city, and shot. They were charged with stabbing a policeman while resisting arrest. But the lynchers stabbed more than a man; they stabbed the foundations of government. And the law abjectly failed.

WHILE cultured, educated, civilized United States has lynched six negroes in six months, it has killed thousands by motorcars; hundreds have been murdered. New Yorkers find the body of a slain French servant woman, shot and apparently thrown from a car, beside the Harlem river speedway. Bodies tossed here and there. It is criminal for mobs to execute criminals. It is no better—this epidemic of slaughter. America needs a revival in the heart and head; new respect for law and human life.

ANOTHER LYNCHING OUTRAGE

THE people of Florida owe it to themselves and to the South as a whole to hunt down and drastically punish the members of the mob that staged the double-lynching in that state Monday.

The negroes who were the victims of this outrage had not been convicted of the crime of which they were suspected, which, it may be observed, was not "the usual crime" in which lynch law is invoked.

Following close upon the heels of another lynching, in which the victim was put to death with a blow torch in Mississippi, this act complicates the fight that Southern representatives are making to prevent the enactment of the proposed anti-lynch bill that will largely increase federal authority in Southern states.

The decent people of Florida who have been outraged in this manner should not rest until those guilty of this atrocious crime have been arrested and punished as severely as the law allows.

Merited Praise For Sheriffs For 1936 No-Lynching Record

Governor White sends a letter to all Mississippi sheriffs congratulating and commending them on their part in Mississippi's achievement of a record of no lynchings during 1936.

"This is the first year since the turn of the century that Mississippi has been without a case of lynching at the hands of a mob," he wrote the sheriffs. "Realizing that this enviable record could not have been made without continuous vigilance and vigorous enforcement of our laws on the part of our law-enforcing officers, I am taking this occasion to commend you upon your part in keeping our state free from unseemly mob action."

This executive recognition of the sheriffs' aid in making this record, and of the necessity of courage and vigilance by sheriffs in the prevention of lynching, is appropriate and timely.

Much credit for the perfect 1936 record for Mississippi must go to citizens who have worked to improve racial relations on a firm basis, to the women's organizations which have used their influence to make lynching unpopular, and to the newspapers which have also aided the fight to reduce mobbery in Mississippi. But much credit also must go to the sheriffs and deputies.

Education helps this work. These activities mentioned above help it. But, in the final analysis, when it comes to a show-down in any specific case, nothing is more effective as a deterrent to lynching than a courageous sheriff determined to protect his prisoner and to obey his oath at all costs.

All good citizens of both races join in Governor White's wish and hope "that 1937 will be another year free of lynch law in Mississippi."

SHERIFFS AND LYNCHINGS

Every man in the Deep South knows that grand jury action against members of a lynching mob is an empty gesture. It means nothing except an increasing contempt for lawful processes and an increasing deference to the mob spirit.

The way to strike at the lynching evil is to strike at the county sheriffs. They love their jobs as well as their voting neighbors. There is nothing except his family that a jobholder loves as much as his job.

There isn't a sheriff in Alabama that given fair notice is not capable of preventing a lynching. Everybody knows that. Only in very exceptional circumstances is a sheriff helpless. A determined peace officer who has any sense knows how to stop a mob. Everybody in this State knows that is true.

It is all very well for Governor Graves to demand a grand jury investigation of the recent lynching in Henry county. That means that grand jurors, some of whom may have been in the mob, will return a no-bill. They nearly always do. Grand jurors are the neighbors and friends of lynchers. They are never likely to take vigorous action against mob killers. Petit juries are even less likely to take final action against neighbors who are known to have participated in a lynching, since the victim of the lynching invariably is the object of loathing by all good citizens.

But Governor Graves is hitting a home-run when he calls upon Attorney-General Albert Carmichael to institute impeachment proceedings against the sheriff of Henry county. That's the way to go after the lynch-loving yeomanry of our fair state. They don't like that. They can't handle it. They know that a negligent sheriff will be tried, not by jurors that helped lynch a man or at least lives next door to a lyncher, but by the Supreme Court of Alabama.

In other words, they know that a negligent officer must give an account of his conduct to the highest judicial authority in the State. He will get a fair trial, which is one reason that lynchers do not relish impeachment proceedings.

In demanding an impeachment trial of the sheriff of Henry county Governor Graves is acting in the best traditions of Alabama Governors.

The Governors of this State have always hated lynchings. The Advertiser, which is nearly as old as the State, does not recall a Governor who was indifferent to lynchings. It does recall that many Governors have been instrumental in impeaching many sheriffs for weakly condoning lynchings. The Advertiser is glad to reaffirm what it has frequently said before that Governor Bibb Graves has been one of the most diligent and courageous foes of lynchers that ever sat in the executive chair of a State that has never had a Governor who was indifferent to mob violence.

Only a stupid oaf would say that a guilty rapist could not be convicted by a jury and punished by the State. The danger always is that the wrong man may be killed. Due process of law is one of the noblest principles in the Constitution.

All rapists should suffer—no rapist has a chance to escape justice, if the evidence against him is sufficient.

Therefore, The Advertiser is glad to say to Governor Bibb Graves and Attorney-General Albert Carmichael, who desire only a fair trial of Henry's sheriff: Step on it!

THE LAW IN THEIR HANDS

In the year just ended there was no instance of mob violence in the state of Alabama, and for a number of years this state has been an example to its less thoughtful and law-abiding neighbors on all sides. However, early Tuesday morning a group of self-righteous citizens entered the jail at Abbeville, removed a lawful prisoner of the law and committed a

It was not a group of drunks who pulled the unfortunate accused from his cell; it was a crowd of forty or fifty men who undoubtedly consider themselves pillars of Henry county society, and they were probably well satisfied with themselves when they left the haltered and bullet-heavy body at the side of the country road to go home to have out their sleep and most likely they slept well.

EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY

Alabama has taken pride in her record of four years without a lynching, but was shamed this week when a Henry County mob removed a Negro from jail and put him to death. He was accused of the usual crime.

It makes no difference whether the accused was guilty or not. For the mob lynched more than a Negro. It lynched established law and order. And whether the mob knows it or not, it degraded the entire State.

An AP report from Abbeville says Sheriff Corbett, who was overpowered by the mob, recognized some of its 50-odd members. If this is true, then Governor Graves' order for a thorough investigation should have some teeth in it—and not curl up and die as so many similar investigations do.

Tarboro N C Southerner

Something New in Lynchings

In most particulars, the lynching yesterday near Headland, Alabama, of a strapping, 18-year-old Negro farm hand complied with the accepted formula for mob rule in the South. The victim, accused of assaulting a white woman, was being held in a jail which lacked a great deal of being mob-proof. Fifty men stormed it, held the sheriff and the jailer prisoner until the Negro could be removed from a cell, and later shot the alleged criminal an strung him to a tree.

Continuing the social graces demanded in all polite lynching parties in the South, Governor Bibb Graves at Montgomery instructed Attorney General A. A. Carmichael to conduct an inquiry. Then the chief executive made the customary pronouncement: "As long as I am governor of this state, mob rule will not be tolerated."

At this point, however, there is a possbiility that the lynching formula will be discarded for something quite original. Under all conventional rules, the sheriff is supposed to say that he has not the slightest idea concerning the identity of any member of the mob; newspapers are supposed to fume and fuss over the lack of official initiative; the governor is supposed to declare that all possible attempts to solve the matter have failed and that the investigation is at an end, and finally, everybody is supposed to settle down to normal again and pretend that the lynching was just one of those unsolved and unsolvable crimes that couldn't be helped.

But Sheriff Louis Corbett upset the apple cart. Perhaps he is one of those individuals who do not care for the little conventionalities of life. Or maybe he is just plain dumb, and didn't know what was expected of a sheriff under the circumstances. At any rate, he stepped out of his role to remark that he recognized some of the men in the lynching party and that a special grand jury would be called to investigate. This little piece of forgetfulness of the social niceties incident to a lynching is likely to turn into a tough break for the sheriff, especially when re-election time comes around, but what of it? A man possessed of the originality of Sheriff Corbett is too original to be wasting his time on a sheriff's job anyway.

Walter White's Campaign

Among the newer absurdities is the tale that a majority or even a strong minority of Southern white people wish a bill passed that would subject county sheriffs and other peace officers to trial in United States courts on allegations that they failed to protect prisoners in their custody from mobs.

Southerners, many of them, have fallen a long way from their oldtime faith and pride in the rights of their states to make and enforce laws against crime, but they have not fallen that far. Not yet.

It is not unlikely that some of the Southern congressmen would love to have a pretext to vote for the "anti-lynching" bill, so called. There is not much fight left in Southern congressmen. A few petitions from well meaning uplifters in the South would be welcomed by them. They hate the notion of opposing Wagner, Van Nuys, the president and the rest. It is pleasant to be in the swim with the dispensers of "allotments" and the controls of the new "Democratic" party in Pennsylvania and New York. It would delight them if the old South would surrender its last claim to the sovereignty of states.

The truth is that the Southern senators, a few like Glass, Bailey and Smith, excepted, are greatly harassed and annoyed. They are losing sleep of nights. They do not want to be "Southern Bourbons," as The News and Courier, for example, is.

What if Walter White, chieftain of the Society for the Advancement of the Colored People, can bring enough pressure to bear on the Roosevelt senators and representatives of the North to cause them to transfer trials of white men in Edgefield and York to federal courts. If the white voters of South Carolina would but consent to government with the hand of Walter White (able negro he is) on the lever behind a screen it would bring some of our senators relief from anxiety.

Well, the people of York, grandfathers of the living people, had plenty of experience with federal courts, but most of it has been forgotten.

Lynching has about ended in South Carolina. We hope that never again will there be a lynching in the state. Federal court trials won't stop it. Federal interference with courts and control of elections caused fighting, bloodshed and what would be defined as "lynching" by Senator Wagner, but it did not destroy state rights. Almost war was necessary to save them, but Hampton and his Red Shirts saved them.

There are signs, plenty of them, that some of our own people want to give up that which cost their fathers so much to preserve, but they will come to their senses.

If this measure be passed, the first time that a sheriff of a South Carolina county is dragged off to be tried in a United States court there is going to be trouble. The nasty side of the matter is that if the federal government begin this interference innocent negroes will be victims.

In South Carolina and throughout the South are ruffians who would welcome the pretext to manhandle and kill negroes and when they have done it and the United States begins a war against it, some of us who hate the ruffianism will be found defending the ruffians, standing by them, lest we too shall be crushed by a foreign power.

90 Per Cent Drop Shown In Lynchings Since 1887

Patterson Attributes The Decline To 'Growth In Humanitarian Attitude Of People'

BY LEROY A. SIMMS

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Feb. 20.—(AP)—A 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 was credited today by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, to "Growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 51 in the 1927-1936 span.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings were recorded as 1,000 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors, besides the more humanitarian attitude, as contributing to the decline.

The first he gave as "the tendency for frontier characteristics in the south to disappear." Lynching, he said, was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the west and in the south.

Second, the breaking down of isolation in the south by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephones in small towns and rural areas, and the advent of the radio and paved roads.

As the third and one of the most important, he gave "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

"From 1914 to 1919, the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched. From 1920 to the present, the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched."

"These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings in the United States. Not only in these statistics but in many other ways is there implied a growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people.

"This growth, I believe, has paralleled the development of educational and social agencies, all of which bid fair to rid this nation of the barbaric practice of lynching."

MISSISSIPPI LYNCHING

The lynching of two Negroes at Winona, Mississippi, Tuesday by a mob of white men has placed in an embarrassing position every member of Congress who opposes enaction of a Federal anti-lynch law. The degree of that embarrassment and what it may lead to is reflected in the unprecedented action of Chairman Sumners, of the House Judiciary Committee, who Wednesday addressed to Governor Hugh White, of Mississippi, a telegram protesting against "as dastardly a crime as cowardice could devise and brutality execute." — A note of warning is discernible in these words of Representative Sumners:

"It (the crime) will be seized upon as a demonstration of the inability of the States to govern. As one Southern man to another, I hope I will not be considered impertinent by stating candidly my own reaction, and that is that the State of Mississippi cannot escape this reflection upon its governmental capacity, in fact, cannot escape in effect from becoming an accessory after the fact unless it is able to and does bring these lynchers and officers to speedy and adequate punishment."

If Governor White replies to Chairman Sumners by bringing "three lynchers and officers to speedy and adequate punishment," he will provide at least a basis for the contention that Federal action in such cases is not necessary. A reasonable basis for that contention does not now exist. The repetition of lynchings is causing more and more people in this section to believe that such instances of brutality and terrorism should be regarded, not as a violation of the laws of a State, but as a crime against society itself and subject o prosecution under Federal laws

Once more Judge Lynch conducts the trial for two negroes, and this time adds horrors to their torture unheard of even in the days of the Inquisition—burning the victims with a gasoline torch before shooting them—and as might be expected the incident takes place in Mississippi, the most backward of any of the 48 states.

What effect the case will have on a Congress now debating the anti-lynching bill, is problematical; Congress is hard to arouse over anything other than the inconsequential, but it is to be hoped that the victims' death by new lynch law horrors may at least arouse enough indignation to pass the measure.

A race that taken as a whole is so ignorant that it never hears of half the lynchings that take place, is most assuredly not going to have the fear of God put in it by mob law. At least the theory has failed for the past 72 years.

The torturing with a blow torch first and subsequent lynching of two negroes out in Mississippi Tuesday for murder and robbery had exactly the effect it might have been expected to have up in Washington, where the House of Representatives was then debating a Federal anti-lynching bill.

wrongs never did make a and the fact that a Mississippi mob engaged in a particularly brutal lynching does not mean that congress should, because of it, impose the nefarious federal anti-lynching bill on the states.

Southern Scene

William Faulkner, the novelist who has disturbed the South by depicting the degenerate and horrid aspects of Southern life, comes from Oxford, Mississippi. The lafest Mississippi lynching took place on Tuesday at Duck Hill, where a mob killed two men suspected of the murder of a storekeeper. They killed like this:

Townes . . . was tied to a stake near Windham's store and tortured slowly to death by flames from a blow torch.

Nothing Faulkner has ever written has been more terrible. No horror ever attributed to the South could be more ghastly than that white hand holding a blow torch to that Negro's body. No people anywhere could be more dreadful than the white men whose eyes watched that and permitted that. Take that scene and regard it as a part of this South of ours. Is it any wonder that at the very moment that monstrous scene was enacted men in the Congress in Washington were urging the passage of a Federal anti-lynching bill? Is it any wonder, when such things can happen in the South, that men out of the South are ready to believe any atrocious thing about the South?

If it makes a decent man shudder to think of that Negro's fiendishly tortured flesh, what must a decent Southern white man feel when he thinks of men of his race not merely killing in anger but making a slow and sadistic festival of human torture? God help the South for it contains men like these! God pity the South for it contains hearts that can rejoice in such slow murder! In a South that contains such men and such hearts we may fear the Gavagan anti-lynching bill, but even more we should fear ourselves or our fellows who hold the blow torch against flesh. At a distance they are indistinguishable from other Southerners who are as sick over sadism and lynching as any decent law-abiding men anywhere.

Sanford, Fla. Herald

Southern mobs which burn negroes at the stake as they did in Montgomery county, Mississippi, the other night, are making it hard for other Southerners who are trying to prevent negro Congressmen from Chicago securing the enactment of federal legislation dealing with such matters. It is still our belief that the individual states are better equipped to cope with lynchings than Washington bureaucrats, but our case is weak in the light of those kerosene torches.

TIMELY EXHIBIT

If a lynching had to occur, there could have been no more propitious moment than that chosen by Mississippi's double portion for forcing itself upon the country and a congress which is in the very act of trying to decide what to do about federal handling of this self-same barbarity.

The Bayou state's dual exhibit is as atrocious as even the most meticulous lynchers could demand. Three Negroes were seized, taken to the woods and tortured. One was dismissed, run out of the country after a severe whipping, and the other two were fed to the flames and the mob's fury.

The usual pattern was followed. The trio were intrusted to the custody of the sheriff and two deputies, who must have known the community's temper and been cognizant of the likelihood of violence, for escort from the courthouse, where they had just pleaded not guilty of the murder of a white planter, to the jail to await subsequent trial. The prisoners were, therefore, not only under protection of the law enforcement officers but were direct wards of the court.

To be sure, the high sheriff deplores the seizure, the court condemns the mobbery and avows that a determined investigation will be made and the governor and solicitor add their excoriation to what the jurist has to say. Concurrently, however, one of the officers from whom the prisoners were seized tells how the crowd surged upon them, how the mobsters were unmasked but how, quite unfortunately, he failed to recognize a single person.

That is the picture before the national house of representatives while southern honorables rant about states' rights, counter with attacks upon New York gangster deaths and fervently declare that progress is being made in elimination of the lynching evil and that education is the only sure and satisfactory way to bring security to the persons of hapless victims. All of which may sound very well, but nothing like so effective as the ferreting out of a few mobsters by Uncle Sam's G-men and their subsequent arraignment in federal court.

All glory to education and its reformative processes; Mississippi's infuriated lynchers used a waiting school bus to carry two screaming Negroes to their death in flames.—Greensboro Daily News.

LYNCHING LAW.

Members of the Mississippi mob who Tuesday burned at the stake two negroes in one of the worst manifestations of lynch law on record probably little thought that their actions would have a material affect on the fate of an important measure pending in congress, for mobsters never reason at all, least of all about anything as remote as Washington politics.

Yet this lynching could not have been better timed from the standpoint of the proponents of the anti-lynching bill in congress, which if enacted will put the government into a new local field, and is sure to cause friction and ill feeling, meritorious as its purpose may be.

No thinking person condones lynchings, and all who have studied the matter know that there is a certain section of citizenship in the South which is blamable, and for which all must suffer. Also, aggressive steps to combat this menace, both by education for law enforcement, and by force at times have and are being taken, and the situation is gradually improving from year to year.

Yet lynchings are in the words of Chairman Sumners of the judiciary committee, an intense southerner opposed to federal intervention in these local problems, "dastardly as cowardice can devise, and brutally execute."

And the one which occured this week in Mississippi, marring that state's otherwise perfect record for this year, is fuel to the fire of the zeal with which those of other sections would have the U. S. clamp down on the South in these matters.

Every lynching is regrettable and this one double so. It is regrettable not only because it was illegal, the wrong way to act, a re[illegible] to the law of the jungle, but because it may prove to be the "great example" which will be used to pass the federal anti-lynching law, which for all its high motives, is going to but complicate the intensify and already complicated and intense situation, on which slow but sure progress is now being made, which progress may be halted entirely with the coming into the picture of Federal intervention

The Lynchings In Mississippi

Any lynching is revolting and horrifying. But no act of mob violence in a long time has been so sickening and so outrageous to people with any civilized instincts at all as the two lynchings in Mississippi Tuesday. It is bad enough when a person is lynched without being tortured beforehand. But when men's bodies are burned with blow torches while the breath of life is still within them, it is unspeakably revolting.

Mississippi, the worst actor among all the states with respect to lynchings, has outdone even itself in these two lynchings. While it hardly behooves Alabama or any other state where lynchings still sometimes occur to point the finger of scorn at Mississippi, the people of no state can refrain from denouncing these atrocities.

The victims, accused of murdering a white man, may have been guilty or they may have been innocent. No one knows. Certainly the mob which lynched them did not know. But whether they were guilty or not does not matter. It only matters that this Mississippi mob has done the most heinous act of the kind recorded in this country in years.

We have got to stop this sort of thing in the South. If we cannot or do not stop it ourselves, it is certain that the federal government will step in under the authority of such a measure as the anti-lynching bill now before Congress.

If any good can come from such an act as that of this Mississippi mob, it will be that the people of that state will be so outraged that they will demand punishment of these lynchers and put a stop to lynchings altogether.

THE MISSISSIPPI BLOW

Mississippi's blow torches are blowing a Federal anti-lynching bill through Congress at breakneck speed. A beast with a blow torch in his hand can make the defenders of local self-government more ridiculous than all of the inspired political philosophers of history.

THE LYNCH PROBLEM

To the Editor of The Telegraph:

The anti-lynch law, whatever we may think of it, seems on its way to enactment. This is the white man's move. The next is the colored man's move. In order to rid our civilization of this awful evil the colored people certainly have a great part to play—the main part—and they should not hesitate to do it.

The two crimes which provoke lynching are criminal assault and murder. The Negroes who commit these atrocities do not represent their race by a thousand blocks; it is the duty of the best element of that race to let the world know it.

I was reared among members of the race. Old Aunt Anne, my black mammy, used to put the lash on my back. Old Uncle Zeke stood guard around the old home while my father was at the front during the Civil War. These criminal assault fiends are a disgrace to the memory and deeds of Uncle Zeke and Aunt Anne, Uncle Charles and Aunt Charlotte.

To eliminate lynching let's go to the root of it all. Let the colored preachers and leaders of the race have a law observance day once a year and advocate law observance and pledge aid in apprehending the "lewd fellows of a baser sort" who act unworthy of the race to which they claim to belong. Let these leaders cry down from the housetops all lynch evoking crimes and prove themselves ready to assume the responsibility as well as the privilege of American citizenship conferred upon them by the Constitution.

They should let the world know that they do not want the parents of a criminal rewarded by county taxation for raising a semi-demon instead of a citizen while the parents of the unfortunate victim are left in sorrow and humiliation. They should help the white people to pull up these noxious weeds from among their race in a legal way.

White people are being taxed to educate the race and to furnish old age pensions for the race; white people also contribute funds through their mission boards to help evangelize the race; now let the race scorn a tax to reward parties in any way connected with crime and injury to any member of any family of the white race which has been and is today their real benefactors and friends

The first time such a tax is levied resentment toward the whole colored race will spring up unless the leaders and members of the race take a decided stand now to avoid it.

DUCK HILL DENIES

Lynching Not in Town or By Its Citizens, Says Mayor

To The Commercial Appeal:

We, the people of the town of Duck Hill, Miss., deny all the charges made against us by the world, concerning the lynching of two negroes.

It is true that two negroes were lynched, but not at Duck Hill nor by Duck Hill citizens. The lynching took place about six or seven miles from Duck Hill. The citizens of our town did not have anything to do with it, and we are wrongfully accused.

It was bad all right, but listen, was that any worse than what the two negroes did? [illegible] whom they killed, Mr. George Sam Windham, was a good man, loved by everybody, both white and black. He was a Mason and was buried by his brother Masons. He was a good man in his place of business where he was trying to make an honest living, bothering no one.

His loving wife and children were away from him and home at the time of his murder, so when the shades of darkness fell upon him little did he think that he would be murdered. He went into his store, leaving his front door open, so that anyone might enter his place of business should they want to, but he did not know that anyone was around, so he decided to eat his supper, so he was opening a can of meat.

There were two negro murderers standing in readiness to take his life. With a shotgun Red Towns slipped to the front window, took dead aim and pulled the trigge that took away Mr. Windham' life, shooting him in the back. Th poor man fell to the floor helpless no one around that he could call o for help. The two negroes on th outside, in the shades of darkness entered the store and did rob thi man of his honest and lawful mone that he had labored for. There h lay on the floor bleeding and dy ing, no one to help him, at th mercy of two murderers. No which was the worse of the tw crimes? There is nothing more cowardly than taking a man's life by shooting him through a window at night. Now just apply this to your own family.

This was a surprise to our good and noble circuit judge and to our most able district attorney. As to our good sheriff, E. E. Wright, and his deputies, there are no braver or better officers. They were completely surprised at this action.

LYNCHING AND THE CONSTITUTION

THE deplorable lynching of two negroes by a mob of stupid illiterates in Mississippi is comparable in its ultimates to the deplorable lynching of the United States Constitution by a mob of stupid lawmakers in the House of Representatives.

The Mississippi lynchers did violence to the civil law, bringing disgrace upon their state, while the equally excited mob in the House of Representatives did gross violence to the fundamental law of the land. In one respect they were worse than the Mississippi lynchers because they had taken a most solemn oath to uphold the constitution which they proceeded to lynch upon the floor.

Moreover, these congressional lynchers of the Constitution knew what they were about. They knew it not only because they were warned of the illegal nature of what they were doing, but, because they are men of education, they possessed an intellectual knowledge of the nature of the violation they were committing.

As Senator Borah has pointed out, the anti-lynch bill that has been given approval is a flagrant violation of the constitution. It seeks to give to the general government certain privileges that are clearly prohibited and which it has no more right to exercise than it has to tell the individual citizen what time he shall arise in the morning and retire at night.

The men voting for it knew also that the Supreme Court as now constituted, would throw it into the scrap-heap, but they ignored this and passed the act upon the theory that the court shortly is to be enlarged and that the new court, created to carry out legislative purposes instead of carrying out the provisions of the constitution, would place the stamp of approval upon it because of expediency and not because of its legality.

This makes vivid the warning of Senator Glass than an enlarged Supreme Court carries a threat to the very civilization of the South, and lends point to the grave warning of Congressman M. C. Tarver, of the Seventh Georgia District, that it threatens not only the election laws of the South, but points to the destruction of those laws under which necessary segregation is practiced in the South.

It is a first step in a crusade to destroy those laws under which whites and blacks are separated in schools, in hotels, in restaurants, upon trains and elsewhere, and throw them all together as has been done in the North. In sum, it is a movement to recreate in the South the conditions of a half century ago. And why? Because to do these things please certain negroes in certain states where the negroes hold the balance of political power.

Southern civilization is to be bartered for negro votes in doubtful states. That is the sum of it, as Senator Glass has seen, as Congressman Tarver has seen, and as has become clear to many other Southerners who are capable of seeing beyond the ends of their noses.

And one of the tragic phases of the situation is that no thought is being taken of the negroes in the South. What they may suffer through the recreation of the intolerable conditions of a half century ago enters not into the accounting of these white politicians who fawn at the feet of negro politicians and who seek to use both the whites and the blacks in the South as pawns in the scurvey game of fence-building for individual benefit.

Hickory, N. C. Record

FEDERAL ENCROACHMENTS

Southern solons who are fighting the anti-lynching measure which was passed so overwhelmingly by the House but which may be killed in the Senate, argue that their states resent the idea of Federal meddling with local affairs.

However, the way we all go after Federal funds belies the argument. The whole trouble is there is an alarming tendency to lean more and more heavily on the arm of Uncle Sam.

Then, too, due to laxness of local officers in probing lynching outrages as well as other crimes against society, many of our own people are being compelled to put their trust in Federal investigating agents whenever results are actually desired.

It is for such reasons that Federal bureaucracy is growing by leaps and bounds.

A revealing sidelight on this was provided the other day by Abraham Epstein, executive secretary of the American Association for Social Security, in an address before the association at New York.

Mr. Epstein was talking about old age pension systems, and he remarked that in too many states such systems have become "mere cogs in the state political machines."

"Grants are made frequently not on the basis of need, as the laws intend, but on the basis of political expediency," he said. "Politicians are outbidding each other with promises of bigger and better pensions in order to appease the appetite of organized selfish blocs."

Thus there is no uniformity between pension systems in the different states. Thus there are states in which the pension bureau is an acknowledged branch of political patronage. Thus there are states in which pensions are paid, not according to need, but according to what the winning candidates for office have felt it expedient to promise.

And as a result of all this, a great many people have come to feel that the old-age pension problem can be solved only by federal action.

This is typical of the situation in a great many other fields, and it is one of the most ominous signs in our whole political life.

Federal bureaucracy will continue to expand and grow until we succeed in making our state governments efficient, responsive and trustworthy.

A HORRIBLE CRIME

The story of the lynching of two Negroes in Mississippi last week is that of a horrible crime. Those who were responsible for it should be vigorously prosecuted and punished.

Such acts as these, while not as numerous in the South as our critics would pretend gave impetus to the proposal before Congress for a Federal law against lynching.

Southern states should insist that those charged with crime be tried according to the law of the land and should punish lawless individuals who seek to constitute themselves into a court and inflict punishment.

Lawless murders are not confined to the South, however. Various criminal "gangs" in other sections of this country commit crimes just as great and oftentimes under circumstances which constitute them "lynchings" just as the lawless killings of the South are termed.

The Mississippi lynching was brutal and cruel to an unusual degree. The men who planned it and carried it out deserved punishment. If a state is powerless to punish such happening wo do not know that it shold complain too much if some other government tried its hand to stop such barbarities.

April 15, 1937

Carroll County has had no lynching since the close of the war of the sixties; nor is she expecting one. Two negroes were taken from jail and lynched here during the later months of that war, by a squad of Confederate soldiers who came here from Dallas, Georgia.

York, S. C., Yorkville Enquirer
April 16, 1937

The lynching of two negroes by a Mississippi mob this week, was entirely uncalled for, and every man who participated in the outrage should be arrested, tried and convicted and severely punished. It was just a cold-blooded murder of men already in the hands of the law, and helpless in the hands of a blood thirsty and uncontrollable mob. While we are unable to see how a national anti-lynching law might stop or prevent a single lynching, we do see how such acts as was pulled off in Mississippi this week, will bring a national anti-lynching law just that much nearer.

Crime By Criminals

In the face of the ghastly spectacle which [illegible] made at Duck Hill, Mississippi, last week when it lynched a Negro with a blow torch, it may be difficult for men and women outside of the South to believe him, but Representative Sumners of Texas, did not exaggerate when he declared that "there are no people anywhere who are more sincerely opposed to lynching than are the better people of the South." Furthermore, these Southerners have made a remarkable record of improvement for their section in reducing the annual toll of the victims of this species of savagery.

Lynching is not a crime resorted to, as is sometimes suggested, by the better element of Southern people in defense of the most precious aspects of Southern life and living. The law in the South is amply able to provide such protection. Lynchings in the South are committed, by and large, by the same sort of people who commit other crimes in the South. The lynching mob is a criminal mob and always a large proportion of its members are those elements in the community which live on the border between decency and crime.

The best people in the South—and such a phrase is shaped in no snobbery but in realistic regard for the facts—condemn lynching and are contemptuous of lynchers. And gradually the consciousness of the moral depravity of lynching sinks through the whole social order of the South. There was a time when the best people did take part in lynchings. That time has gone. Today lynchings are, in comparison with the past, rare crimes and lynchers are more and more indistinguishable from the violent criminals who everywhere are the ugly enemies of public safety and public peace.

THE 100-PER CENTER

News and Courier:

The governor of South Carolina reiterates that he is "100 per cent for President Roosevelt." That is interesting, but it would be more interesting to know if he is 100 per cent for the so-called "anti-lynching" measures which the president is said to favor. The president has never uttered a word against these measures and a word from him would kill them dead. That he does favor them has been repeatedly published. If the congress shall pass an nati-lynching bill and the president shall allow it to become a law, will Governor Johnston be 100 per cent for it? Will he say as much? Or will he reduce his Roseveltism by 15 per cent when he speaks to the South Carolinians?

In the last three lynchings in South Carolina, in Aiken, Walhalla, and Union, the mobs were largely made up of people from cotton mill villages—or so it was said in the published accounts. There was no excuse for these lynchings. In the mobs were no presidents, secretaries or superintendnts of cotton mills, no lawyers, doctors, bankers, editors, no "economic royalists."

At whom are the anti-lynching bills aimed? They are certainly not aimed at the "aristocrats", the "silk-stockings", of the South. The Northern negroes are at the back of them. Is President Roosevelt against them? If he is, why does he not say so? It is difficult for a man like Byrnes ,like Russell, like Harrison, to be 100 per cent for Roosevelt—and they do not pretend to be although they adore the president.

The News and Courier agrees with Borah, the Republican, in this matter and will be 100 per cent against President Roosevelt if he shall approve a federal anti-lynching bill. It belivees that lynchers should be sent to the electric chair by juries drawn in their state courts. It is 100 per cent for South Carolina. It is NOT 100 per cent for any living man born of woman.

The Peril Is Real

Last year, in the midst of the campaign for the reelection of Mr. Roosevelt, Harold Ickes, secretary of the interior, member of the president's "official family," speaking to a convention of the Society for the Advancement of the Colored People, in Baltimore, said:

"Mr. Roosevelt is the first president since Lincoln to realize that the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments would as well not be in the constitution unless enforced." President Roosevelt did not at the time of the address or later repudiate the expression. If silence can assent, he has assented to it.

Enforcement of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments means "force bills" for the South.

A cabinet officer is an adviser of the president. Mr. Ickes is a cabinet officer.

If the president would oppose a force bill why doesn't he say so?

Repeatedly he is quoted as favoring the socalled anti-lynching measure. Back of that measure are the Northern negro voters led by Walter White, head of the society to which Mr. Ickes spoke.

If these dangers to Southern civilization to which Mr. Carter Glass has referred are not real and imminent. Mr. Roosevelt, the president, by a word can dispose of them.

The Sumter Daily Item rebukes The News and Courier for directing the attention of the people of South Carolina to the peril with which they are menaced by highest authority in Washington.

It will say nothing that will dispose of the peril.

Gulf Coast Mystery

The latest double lynching in the state of Mississippi introduced some fancy elements well designed to sicken even a commonwealth of men with strong stomachs.

The thing worth attention, however, is not the variations of sadism that perverts can imagine, but the fact that Mississippi is separated only by an imaginary line from Alabama. Geographically and geologically the two states are very much alike. They were settled by the same racial stocks. Agricultural methods and products are similar and the historical experience of the two states runs along almost parallel lines. Yet Alabama in recent years has exhibited a stout, even violent, opposition to lynching, whereas Mississippi not only indulges it, but develops fiendishly cruel elaborations of murder.

The difference does not appear in the higher levels of life. Pat Harrison is as civilized a man as Oscar Underwood was and a good deal more urbane than Tom Heflin. The mystery is why the backwoodsmen of one state seem inclined to form their ideal of sportsmanship according to Irvin S. Cobb's Judge Priest, and those of the other according to William Faulkner's Popeye.—Baltimore Evening Sun.

ALABAMA'S TWO VIEWS OF THE LYNCH EVIL

There are two "schools of thought" in Alabama regarding lynch mobs. One believes in the summary execution of offenders against certain laws, particularly the law against assault. This school often controls the grand juries that are summoned to investigate the faithfulness of peace officers in the face of revolting crimes. It is a shallow and irresponsible school.

It is a school that is scorned by Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael—to the glory of Alabama.

Regarding the white-washing of an Alabama sheriff who is charged with negligence in the face of a mob that lynched a Negro accused of attacking a white woman, Mr. Carmichael published a statement in The Advertiser Friday morning in which he, on behalf of the Governor as well as himself, took high ground for that "school of thought" that scorns mob violence. Announcing that the State of Alabama would ignore the recent action of a grand jury in white-washing the accused sheriff, he said he would proceed to bring the sheriff before the Supreme Court for impeachment.

The Governor and the Attorney-General investigated the facts in this case carefully and are convinced that impeachment proceedings are justified.

In the course of his statement Mr. Carmichael wisely and forcefully says:

> The recent report of the Grand Jury will not have the slightest effect on the impeachment proceedings now pending in the Supreme Court of Alabama. The impeachment proceedings will proceed and will be prosecuted with as much vigor as the office of the Attorney General is capable of putting forth.
> The framers of our Constitution did not accidentally provide that a sheriff should be impeached by the Supreme Court.
> I want to take this occasion to say that the Governor of Alabama and the Attorney General of Alabama feel very keenly about this matter; that we are most anxious that the outside world know that the Alabama State officials who are responsible in law for prosecuting cases of this character are doing their duty and will continue to do it.
> To say that lynching has anything to do with protecting womanhood in Alabama is pure poppycock. The answer to this is that a petit jury would require about 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict for the perpetrator of such a crime as this. Those unlawful hoodlums who imagine themselves heroes when taking part in lynchings have a distorted idea of patriotism. Only lawless hoodlums and the enemies of government take part in mob law. As the chief law enforcement officer of this State I condemn it and make known that as long as I am the Attorney General of this State, those persons who think they are more important and powerful than the law and who take the law in their own hands, will be prosecuted promptly and most vigorously, and in this I want to say that I will have the entire resources of this great State at my command.

Without prejudice to the sheriff now under fire The Advertiser nevertheless commends the foregoing statement as representative of the best thought in Alabama, the only thought on the subject that in the long run can be trusted.

Let us stop lynching human beings in this otherwise civilized State! The only way to stop it is to strike at the officials who permit it.

In the course of an editorial discussion of the recent impeachment trial of Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry county, in which he was acquitted by the Alabama supreme court, The Birmingham News indicates it is such occurrences as that in Henry which "tend to justify" a federal anti-lynching law. Of course it really is none of our business, but may we ask The Birmingham News if it favors the passage of either the Gavagan bill, the Wagner-Van Nuys bill or any other federal anti-lynching bill?

GEORGIA AND LYNCHERS

'Poor White Trash' Are Guilty Former Georgian Says.

To the Editor of The Chattanooga Times:

In the year 1851, the great state of Georgia in a majestic stride of progress built the first railroad into the wild wilderness of Tennessee at Ross Landing, thus discovering what is now Chattanooga. Chattanooga, therefore, is the last place in the world that should, or could, in good taste, "throw off" on Georgia. Yet, since I came to Chattanooga in 1897, a Chattanooga paper has done a good deal of that. It has called Atlanta a hot air town, built on Coca-Cola.

A seventy-mile radius from Atlanta, today, embraces more people and more wealth than any like area south of Washington. I was born in that queen of states in "slavery" days and knew the old south in its glory, when the world never knew better people, white and black. In Georgia we have them still, where there are more Negroes, mostly good ones, than in any other state. I don't know much, but I do know the Negro if anybody does. We loved them when we owned them and we've been their constant friends to this day. True, there are some very bad ones as well as some "poor white trash" and I've thorough knowledge of them. There is a reciprocal antipathy, hatred and contempt between and for these and that is where racial trouble begins and ends.

There are no finer people than the best ones of Bainbridge, Ga., and I'd stake my last dollar (if I had one) on the fact that "poor white trash" were the perpetrators of the atrocity there, that you've just referred to with an implied slur upon those who are as good as any that you live among. It's ludicrous and puerile to decry Georgia.

Another thought here: It doesn't matter whether the color is white, black, red or yellow and never did of the bestial wretch who would lay hands upon and ravish the wife of your bosom or the pure daughter of your heart. Would you be supine or a lyncher? It's a last resort that's reduced the crime 80 per cent. Take it or leave it. I am noncommittal.

A Southerner on Lynching

ONE of the strangest explanations we have heard thus far of Southern lynchings comes from H. M. WILEY who lives at Wheeler, Texas, and is president of his County School Board. In a letter to the Literary Digest he declares that the Southern community frequently finds it necessary to resort to lynchings, "to be sure that justice is done"!

He qualifies his assertion by saying that "no right-thinking person cares to go on record as defending outright our lynch practice in the South"—this statement is almost always made by apologists for the system—but immediately thereafter he goes on to say that lynchings are needed "to be sure that justice is done."

In view of the enormous number of innocent persons who have been lynched in the South during the past 50 years, MR. WILEY'S invocation of the fair name of "justice" in extenuation of these barbarities, is remarkable, to put it mildly. One infers from his argument that guilty Negroes in the South are often not convicted, and that consequently it is necessary, as he puts it, to attend to them in "the quick, easy and cheap way."

The only case he mentions to illustrate his point that "justice" is not done in the courts, is the Scottsboro case. It appears that in that case, a "misguided bunch of kind-hearted citizens up North" interfered with the processes of "justice" by sending "a set of smart criminal lawyers and several thousand dollars down here." The fact of the business is, of course, that the Scottsboro Negroes are innocent, and that if it had not been for the above-mentioned "misguided" citizens, they would have been either lynched or electrocuted long ago.

All of which is additional cumulative evidence on behalf of a Federal anti-lynching bill. If a citizen who is president of his County School Board can indulge in this sort of weird reasoning, the need for Federal action is even more apparent than it was before. Certainly if the attitude exemplified by MR. WILEY is general throughout the South, the prevalence of lynching is easily explained.

Lynching the Wrong Man?

The Alabama Supreme Court has found, after a three-day trial, that Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, Ala., from whose custody a Negro named Wes Johnson was taken by a mob in February and subsequently lynched, was not guilty of negligence and cowardice. The sheriff himself testified that he had merely locked the prisoner up, like any other prisoner, and had taken no special precautions, though the crime with which he was charged was an attack on a white woman. It was duck soup for the mob to break into the jail, get the prisoner, carry him out and murder him. But the Supreme Court has said that the sheriff was not negligent and cowardly, and that verdict stands.

It does not, however, settle everything. Midway of the trial the Attorney General of Alabama, acting in this case as the prosecutor, sprang a "surprise:"

> [He] charged that the mob lynched "the wrong Negro" and stated he was prepared to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence and testimony "unimpeachable anywhere throughout Southeast Alabama." Mr. Carmichael [the Attorney General] declared he could show that because of the tenseness of popular indignation and feeling that the sheriff was "forced," the pressure brought to bear on him being so great because of the existing situation, to arrest "the wrong Negro." He stated further he would be able to show that the victim of the alleged assault placed the time of the attack as between 11:15 and 11:30 a. m., on January 30, and that Johnson at 11:30 was four miles away.

This statement was immediately attacked by defense counsel on the ground that it had nothing to do with the trial. The court agreed, ruling that the question before it was whether the sheriff was negligent and cowardly, not whether the prisoner was guilty. Accordingly no evidence was produced to substantiate the Attorney General's charge that the prisoner lynched was "the wrong Negro.

Nevertheless, even though the sheriff is now held to have done his duty in protecting the prisoner, it ought to be obvious that the question unanswered is as important as the question answered. The Attorney General is presumably a responsible official. He has made a remarkable statement relating to what he asserts is a remarkable mistake. What is Alabama going to do about that? Let it go, as just an unfortunate mistake? Or get to the bottom of the matter?

Impeaching a Sheriff.

"There are two 'schools of thought' in Alabama regarding lynch mobs," says the Montgomery Advertiser. "One believes in the summary execution of offenders against certain laws, particularly the law against assault. This school often controls the Grand Juries that are summoned to investigate the faithlessness of peace officers in the face of revolting crimes. It is a shallow and irresponsible school. It is a school that is scorned by Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael—to the glory of Alabama."

The Advertiser is moved to this comment by the fact that Governor Graves of Alabama instructed Attorney-General Carmichael to bring impeachment proceedings in the State Supreme Court against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry County, and the Attorney-General acted promptly. Sheriff Corbitt is accused of "neglect, grave fault, connivance and cowardice" in connection with the lynching of a Negro whose bullet-riddled body was found on the morning of February 2.

Sheriff Corbitt's case was placed before a Grand Jury but no indictment was returned. Then it was that Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael took a hand and impeachment proceedings were filed. State Investigator McClung has testified before the Supreme Court that the Sheriff told him he knew some of the men who forcibly took the Negro from the jail. The Attorney-General has offered to prove that public indignation was so great that the Sheriff was forced to arrest the wrong Negro, and therefore that the wrong Negro was lynched. But the Court ruled such testimony incompetent.

If all the charges are true, an innocent Negro was put to death and the Sheriff connived of the crime. If he is guilty he is, of course, unfit for the office he holds and should be removed as soon as possible. But what of the members of the mob that lynched the Negro? It is well enough to punish a faithless Sheriff but the mobsters also should be brought to account. The law-abiding public will be thoroughly convinced of the sincerity of the desire and the efforts of Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael to suppress mob lawlessness in Alabama if they will proceed to hunt down the members of the mob that took a Negro from Sheriff Corbitt and killed him. Since the State Investigator has stated that the Sheriff said he knew some of the lynchers, it should be possible to find some of them.

'THE WRONG NEGRO'

The ruling of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama that it makes no legal difference whether or not the victim of a lynch mob was guilty of the crime of which he was accused is undoubtedly based on sound law. Guilty and innocent alike are entitled to the protection of government from the hands of mobs, and mobsters who kill either the guilty or the innocent are guilty of murder.

But in this particular case the enlightened people of the South will regret that the Chief Justice, presiding over the trial of a sheriff for neglect of duty in permitting a Negro to be lynched, did not allow the Attorney General to continue when he said he had evidence to prove that the mob LYNCHED THE WRONG NEGRO.

It makes no difference to the legally trained mind whether a mob lynched the "wrong" Negro or the "right" Negro. But it would make a tremendous lot of difference to the people of the South, we hope, if the Attorney General proved by "evidence and testimony unimpeachable in all Southeast Alabama" that an Alabama mob slaughtered a Negro who had never committed any crime. And it would make some difference, we believe, to the men whose hands are stained with blood to know beyond the shadow of a doubt that it was the blood of an innocent man.

So, though the evidence the Attorney General has gathered was not competent in the trial of a sheriff charged with permitting a prisoner to be lynched, we hope that he will broadcast it throughout the whole of our Southland. For surely it should raise the question, when another mob gathers, as to whether the intended victim is innocent or guilty. And whenever men consider that question, they are willing to let the law take its course.

Awaiting The Next Move.

An Alabama Supreme Court decision has freed Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry County in that State of charges of "negligence, grave fault connivance and cowardice" in connection with the lynching of a young Negro last February. A mob estimated at fifty to one hundred men took the Negro from jail, hanged him to a tree and riddled his body with bullets. He was accused of assaulting a white woman.

Thus ends the impeachment proceedings brought against Sheriff Corbitt by Attorney-General A. A. Carmichael upon instructions of Governor Bibb Graves. The State argued that the front door to the living quarters of the jail was not locked, thus giving the mob easy access to the structure, to which the Sheriff replied that he had no reason to fear a mob and that he was surprised at midnight and "covered with shotguns" when he awakened. The State charged that the Sheriff "went back to bed and to sleep," while he said he got his Chief Deputy and rode the remainder of the night in search of the mob.

Sheriff Corbitt has been freed of the charges and will retain his office. The effort of Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael to remove him has failed. But the fact remains that the Negro was lynched and possibly that he was innocent of the crime for which he was done to death, as the State asserted and offered to prove. The Supreme Court ruled that testimony as to his innocence would be incompetent but perhaps it would not hold incompetent testimony as to the guilt of members of the mob.

The names of nine men were mentioned during the three-day impeachment trial as having been seen in the Henry County jail the night the Negro was seized by the mob. Here is a clue for Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael to work on, if they are earnestly interested in upholding the law in Alabama. They have failed in their attempt to remove Sheriff Corbitt but they might succeed in a well-directed attempt to bring some of the members of the mob to justice. And after all, a few lynchers in the penitentiary might have a more salutary influence in the State than a Sheriff out of office. There will be interest in awaiting the next move of the Governor and the Attorney-General in connection with the mob murder perpetrated some four months ago with perhaps an innocent man as the victim.

NOTE ON A GREAT SILENCE.

That great silence to the south of us must be Mississippi's official [illegible] in that double lynching atrocity, committed to a blow torch accompaniment, which occurred some weeks ago at Duck Hill and which precipitated such condemnation and promises for retributive action in the immediate wake of its occurrence.

You recall how it was, in accordance with the generally accepted southern pattern? The governor condemned the barbarity, the attorney general condemned it, and the court from whose jurisdiction the victims were literally snatched by the mob condemned it. All joined in fervent promises of an investigation and a bringing of the mobsters to taw.

If these declarations of indignation and avowals of ultimate justice have got beyond the promissory stage, they have been completely lost in a southern press which would recognize them, above all others, as genuine news and take greatest delight in broadcasting such an unusual and unexpected turn of official events to the world at large.

Mississippi's dual lynching is going the way that practically every other southern lynching has gone. North Carolinians know full well what we are talking about. That Pender county mobbery which occurred several years ago was condemned in precisely the same fashion. Governor Ehringhaus scored mobbery, ordered an investigation and instructed the solicitor to submit a report. And there the matter rests, as still as Dock Rogers' body rested when it was deposited upon the courthouse lawn. The same procedure is subsequently recalled in Franklin county.

But, orate the southern honorables, we do not need any federal anti-lynching law. This is a matter for the states, a matter that they can and will handle in their sovereign capacity. And the echo, reverberating for the present in Mississippi recesses, flings back its mocking rejoinder.

In The Deep South

Four Negroes were lynched in the United States during the first six months of this year.

The record is exactly where it stood this time last year.

But the unfortunate thing about this year's record is that the four Negroes were lynched in the three states that most persons associate in their minds with lynchings.

The guess is right. Two of the lynchings were in Mississippi, one was in Georgia, and the third was in Alabama.

The Unwelcome Guest

Comes Borah, Republican, of Idaho, born in Illinois, offering a constitutional amendment limiting the "due process clause" of the Fourteenth amendment, so that the states would "have full power to handle social and economic problems within the states."

(The Northern negro newspapers refer to him as "Pro-lynch Borah," because he opposes the Wagner bill.)

The Fourteenth, the "Reconstruction amendment," was proposed in 1866; twenty-three Northern states ratified it, and ten Southern states rejected it—but later the ten also ratified it, after the "Radicals," by the Reconstruction of acts of their congress, had bound them hand and foot and delivered them into the band of legislatures and governors who were carpet-baggers, scalawags and negroes.

That is the amendment that Borah would in large part repeal.

So comes Borah, this brilliant Northern senator. Suppose he had come into the Democratic camp fifty-five years ago, how he would have been welcomed by the Southern Democrats! How Hampton and Butler, Lamar, old Isham Harris, Reagin of Texas, Ben Hill of Georgia, would have welcomed him! Fighting your battles they were sorely pressed. They needed friends. They had Democratic friends in the North Voorhees, Hendricks, The "Old Roman" Thurman, and the like of them, but a great Republican senator and constitutional lawyer, how they would have welcomed him!

Do your Southern senators now welcome him to their camp? Or is it their camp that he comes to?

Think you that Robinson of Arkansas, Bankhead and Black of Alabama, Harrison of Mississippi, Russell of Georgia, Byrnes of South Carolina, Sheppard of Texas, want Borah around? Is he not a thorn in their flesh?

"Ben" Tillman would have welcomed him when the Crumpacker bill was before the congress—but not these senators of the South of the "new order." Not they. The Fourteenth amendment is good enough for them, for it is good enough for the "greatest of all presidents".

Do these Southern senators, save Carter Glass, Byrd, Bailey and a few others, want "states to have full power to handle social and economic problems within the states"? Not they. They would have the "social and economic problems" handled by the United States, with laws framed by Wagner of New York city, "Joe" Guffey of Pittsburgh, Van Nuys of Indianapolis, and their kind.

In a camp of Southern "Democrats" (1937) an enemy of the "Reconstruction amendment" and champion of state rights is an unwelcome guest.

One Citizen of Henry County Protests Mob Action

Editor of The Eagle,

The Sunday issue of your paper carried a reply to a certain citizen of Abbeville who endorsed the recent lynching in Henry County. Your comment was that he doubtless reflected the sentiment of the community. Please allow me to say he possibly represents a large segment of public sentiment here, but does in no manner speak for everyone.

The day following this unfortunate occurrence the writer prepared an article for the county paper concerning it; but at the advice of a friend its publication was withheld till "all the facts were in." Such advice was sound and my acceptance of it now enables me to write more intelligently and perhaps less dispassionately. All the facts are evidently in now, inasmuch as those responsible for settling the matter seem to regard it as a closed issue.

Two pertinent facts that have trickled out of the extreme secrecy that has veiled the case are these: Nine members of the lynching party have been positively identified by the sheriff of the county; a jury called for the sole purpose of making "a thorough" investigation reports that it has no indictments to make.

Attitudes toward these facts and their interpretations may vary but their baldness remains.

The heinousness of the Negro's crime is appreciated by everyone, and it did not require a lynching to impress the fact on our minds. That swift and sure justice was in order no one doubted, and if there had been no other alternative any fair-minded person could have endorsed the method used. However, it requires little imagination to feature the fate that would have been the Negro boy's had he come before a jury of white men from this county.

If the Christian's Bible condones such monstrous and primitive practices my decades of Bible study have been in a measure abortive. Paul's admonition: "Avenge not yourselves beloved, but give place unto wrath; for it is written vengeance belongeth to me. I will recompense, sayeth the Lord," is not altogether a New Testament point of view, as will be observed by reading Deut. 32:35.

Nothing short of raw revenge could prompt a group of men to perpetrate such an act. In the humble judgment of the writer, no act can be justified by a Christian that does not reflect the spirit of Christ; that Southern chivalry can best be preserved by unimpeachable conduct in the lives of its male citizens, and a mental and moral equanemnity that can wait for orderly and legal means of justice.

LAW OVER LYNCH LAW

(Christian Science Monitor)

There is no crime so bad but lynching makes it worse. One didn't need to mention the word around the jail in Florence, South Carolina, the other day to see that things looked as bad for an angry crowd as for a Negro in its clutches. News dispatches tells how close those aroused citizens came to being a party of a lynching.

But what seemed like mob murder in the making become an orderly step in the due process of law. First the sheriff appealed to the crowd to forego violence and give the law—and the man—a fair chance. Then the father of the young woman alleged to have been molested pleaded with fellow citizens to let the law have its way. With that the crowd put up its vengeance and gave the prisoner to the sheriff.

It is satisfying to see how effectively that indignant southern crowd was able to curb is actions. Mob emotions usually run wild at such a time. The facts emphasize how strong is the average individual's instinctive respect for law to which the sheriff and the father appealed in this outbreak. And whatever this proves for the individual it proves for people as a whole. The supremacy of collection reason over mob rule manifested in this episode helps to dispel a sectional libel predicated on the mistaken opinion that southern communities prefer lynching to law.

Lynchings usually get all the publicity they deserve. We hope the happening in South Carolina gets all the public notice it rightly de-

Raleigh, N. C. Observer
February 12, 1937

Advance In The South

That great progress has been made in the effort of the enlightened South to rid itself of the crime of lynching is demonstrated by the recollection of The Columbia State of that time in South Carolina when "a Governor in the latter part of the last century encouraged mobs by declaring he would, in certain cases, lead lynching parties; and when prisoners were surrendered to lynchers without question; and announcement made 12 hours in advance of the running of a railroad train to a lynching! The train ran and the lynching took place."

Humanity, decency and law do advance. Though too many lynchings continue to take place they are nowhere countenanced by the power of the State and, though officers are sometimes still remiss in their duty, the growth of courage among Southern officers in defending their prisoners from lawless violence is a record in which the South may take increasing pride.

The best index of an increase in enlightenment is a decrease in lynching. Certainly no other index better measures the South's advance in enlightenment, in lawfulness, in humanity, and in the general level of its civilization.

U. S. Lynchings Show Steady Drop

Lynchings in the United States since 1887 have decreased 90 per cent, statistics of Tuskegee show. Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of the Institute, listed three major factors as contributing to the decline.

The first he gave as the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear. Lynching, he said, was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Second, the breaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephones in small towns and rural areas, and the advent of radio and paved roads.

Third, "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period and 151 in the 1927-1936 period.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings totaled 1,030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

BIG DECREASE IN LYNCHINGS DRAWS PRAISE

Tuskegee Head Credits Gain In Humanitarian Attitude

BY LEROY A. SIMMS

Tuskegee, Ala., Feb. 20.—(AP)—A 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 was credited today by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 51 in the 1927-1936 span.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings were recorded as 1,030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors, besides the more humanitarian attitude, as contributing to the decline.

The first he gave as "the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear." Lynching, he said, was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Second, the breaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephones in small towns and rural areas, and the advent of the radio and paved roads.

As the third and one of the most important, he gave "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

"From 1914 to 1919, the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched. From 1920 to the present, the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched."

"These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings in the United States. Not only in these statistics but in many other ways is there implied a growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people.

"This growth, I believe, has paralleled the development of educational and social agencies, all of which bid fair to rid this nation of the barbaric practice of lynching."

A table, from the institute's department of records and research, lists 231 lynchings in 1892, of which 162 were negroes. Succeeding years show lower totals, with 1932, with eight, and 1936, with nine, as the lows.

Of the 4,674 lynchings recorded since 1882, homicides were blamed in 1,921 cases; felonious assault in 198; Rape in 908; attempted rape in 282; robbery and theft in 227; insult to white persons in 81, and miscellaneous causes or cause unknown in 1,056.

Dr. F. D. Patterson Asserts 90 Per Cent Decline Since 1887

TUSKEGEE, ALA., Feb. 20.—(AP)—A 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 was credited today by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the Institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 151 in the 1927-1936 period.

Three Major Factors

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors as contributing to the decline.

The first he gave as the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear. Lynching, he said, was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Second, the breaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephones in small towns and rural areas, and the advent of the radio and paved roads.

As the third and one of the most important, he gave "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

1914 To 1919

"From 1914 to 1919, the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched. From 1920 to the present, the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched."

"These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings in the United States. Not only in these statistics but in many other ways is there implied a growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people.

"This growth, I believe, has paralleled the development of educational and social agencies, all of which bid fair to rid this nation of the barbaric practice of lynching."

Homicides Lead

Of the 4,673 lynchings recorded, homicides were blamed in 1,921 cases; felonious assault in 198; rape in 908; attempted rape in 282; robbery and theft in 227, insult to white persons in 81, and miscellaneous causes or cause unknown in 1,056.

Miscellaneous causes included being a witness, writing insulting notes, improper conduct, insisting on eating in a restaurant when refused service, discussing a lynching, misleading mob, enticing servant away, insisting on voting and gambling.

Mississippi was ranked first for 563 lynchings since records were started in 1882. Georgia ranked second with 515, and Texas third with 488, of which 143 were whites. Following came Louisiana, 389; Alabama, 343; Arkansas, 286; Florida, 272; Tennessee, 247; Kentucky, 209; South Carolina, 158; Oklahoma, 123, and Missouri, 121.

Other States

Other States, listed alphabetically, follow:

UP TO DIXIE'S SENATORS

The filing of impeachment proceedings against an Alabama sheriff as the result of the lynching of a 19-year-old Negro last week was at such variance with the customary procedure in such cases that it attracted nation-wide attention. We congratulate Governor Graves for his quick action in summoning a Special Grand Jury session to investigate the crime but, in the light of past experience, we shall be surprised if anything happens to the members of the mob. "In not one case in 10," says a report of the Committee on Interracial Co-operation, "is an effective effort made by the authorities to identify and prosecute the members of lynching mobs." It seems plain to us that the only way to wipe out the crime of lynching is by Federal action.

The several States of the South have had time enough to enact anti-lynching laws such as the one passed by Virginia a decade ago, but have not done so. There has not been a single lynching in Virginia, incidentally, since that law was passed. An increasing number of Southerners favor the enactment of a Federal anti-lynching bill. The Richmond Times-Dispatch last week printed a long editorial in favor of the bill. Its passage, however, will depend almost entirely upon the bloc of Southern senators. The issue is thus lifet squarely up to them.—The New Republic.

LYNCHINGS DECREASE

For a number of years Tuskegee Institute has been tabulating the returns of lynching and it is pleasing to observe that President F. D. Patterson reports that there has been a decline in mob action every decade since 1887.

Dr. Patterson gives three reasons for the decline and they are, we believe, sound observations. The first is the disappearance of frontier characteristics in the South; the breaking down of isolation in the South through the development of rural free delivery, increased communication facilities; paved roads and radio; the third, "increased agitation within the South against lynching."

While the Tuskegee figures have always reflected a view that lynchings was peculiarly a Southern phenomena it is surprising that the Negro does not give any credit to activity of people in other sections who are usually quick to condemn something happening away from home. He even goes so far as to term lynching a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

LYNCHINGS AND THE PUBLIC

It remains to be seen whether the brutal lynching of two Negroes at Duck Hill, Mississippi, last Tuesday, causes in the Senate a revulsion of feeling strong enough to overcome the objections of many Senators to a Federal anti-lynching law. The Cavagan bill was passed in the House by a vote of 277 to 119—by more than two to one—but such action by no means indicates the Senate will pass it also. It will be recalled that the Dyer anti-lynching bill was passed by the House in 1922 by a vote of almost two to one. A filibuster of Southern Senators killed the bill in the Senate.

The rules of the Senate make the filibuster an easy device with which to block legislation, particularly when they are invoked and interpreted by Senators who, as in the case of anti-lynching legislation, are sympathetic towards the purpose of the filibuster. There is no reason to believe that Southern Senators are prepared to withdraw their objections to a Federal anti-lynching law. On the other hand, the latest mob crime in Mississippi has caused some Southern members of Congress to feel that if the States do not enforce laws against mob murders a Federal statute is inevitable. Chairman Sumners, of the House Judiciary Committee, is opposed to Federal anti-lynching legislation, yet he has warned Governor Hugh White, of Mississippi, and, indirectly, the Governors of all other Southern States, that Southern Congressmen will not be able to defeat anti-lynching bills if the States continue to permit lynchers to go unpunished.

Many people who believe a Federal anti-lynching law would be held constitutional (Senator Borah among others contends such legislation would be unconstitutional), fear that it would be ineffective. For example, they emphasize the fact that lynchings go unpunished in States with anti-lynching laws. The further contention is made that if State court jurors will not vote to punish members of mobs, Federal court jurors in the same community would probably be as lenient. The fear that a Federal law might not be effective has outweighed the obvious fact that State laws are practically worthless except where the literacy rate is high and the standard of living is considerably above the average. In backward communities, laws against lynching are ineffective because the people do not regard as a crime the killing of a Negro, even when members of a mob hold a blow torch to the Negro's body until death has released him from agony.

The "good citizens" who condemn such crimes seldom bring about the arrest and punishment of the lynchers. It is significant that the Mississippi District Attorney who is investigating the Duck Hill lynching has said he is "afraid nothing will come of the investigation." Despite the fact the crime was committed in the early afternoon by a mob of 100 men who took the Negroes away from Sheriff's Deputies almost at the entrance to a courthouse, the Deputies are apparently unable to identify any of their attackers.

If peace officers were made subject to criminal prosecution and to the payment of civil damages in such cases the fact that severe penalties could be imposed might act as a deterrent to mob terrorism. Sheriffs and Deputies might then be as careful in protecting their prisoners as they are zealous at times when they desire to make arrests. The collapse of law enforcement when mobs gather is causing more people to think it might be worthwhile to give to the Federal Government authority to prosecute lynchers and peace officers who are, through negligence or otherwise, accessories before or after the fact.

Beastly!

The revolting episode that occurred in Mississippi Tuesday is one of the worst of its kind in Southern history. Two Negroes, who a few minutes before had pleaded innocent to a charge of killing a white man last December, were taken from officers of the law and tortured to death by an organized mob. Seldom in modern times have supposedly responsible men—if human they can be called—been guilty of an act so vicious, barbarous and beastly. It is almost unbelievable that such a thing could happen in a civilized country.

Gov. White had just been boasting that Mississippi had not had a lynching in 15 months when word came of the inhuman occurrence near Duck Hill. The House of Representatives in Washington was debating the Cavagan federal anti-lynching bill when Representative Cavagan was informed of the Mississippi lynching. He immediately took the floor and claimed additional evidence in support of his proposal. And many persons who have questioned the wisdom of a federal anti-lynching law will pause to wonder.

Dispatches say that none in the mob was recognized by the authorities. However, a thorough investigation has been ordered, and definite action is promised. The nation waits to see if the state of Mississippi is competent to enforce its laws which were flagrantly and openly flouted Tuesday. If the state is unable to obtain justice, then, of course, Representative Cavagan will indeed have another bit of concrete evidence to present in support of his bill.

Mississippi has the worst lynching record of any state in the union, with Georgia, Texas, Louisiana and Alabama following in the order named. All of these are Southern states, and yet we wonder why our neighbors in other sections sometimes speak of us as barbarians!

Gov. White has a serious and difficult task before him. He should leave no stone unturned in his effort to indict and convict the men guilty of this heinous crime—a crime worse than the one with which the Negroes were charged. There are bound to be some citizens who can identify some members of the mob. These citizens should be given the protection of the law, and they should have the courage to speak out. It is more than the name of Mississippi or the South that is at stake; the name of a whole country is blackened. We call ourselves civilized, yet men who have never been proved guilty of any crime are tortured and murdered by what the sheriff called an "orderly" mob. Let there be justice in Mississippi.

Mississippi's Lynching

Press dispatches from Mississippi say that public indignation is strong against the mob that tortured and killed two Negroes last Tuesday. The Mississippi newspapers that come to this office are unyielding in their denunciation of the lynching, and demand that the mobsters be punished.

Gov. White seems determined to take definite action as soon as full reports are made to him. He has ordered his attorney general to make a thorough investigation.

If Mississippi brings to justice the leaders of this inhuman mob it will clear, to some extent, the black name that is today upon the state.

Lynching Deplored By Women Of State

MCCOMB, Miss., April 14—(AP)—The lynching of two negroes yesterday near Duck Hill was declared "humiliating to Christian citizens of Mississippi" in a statement issued here today by the executive committee of the Mississippi Council of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching.

The statement said "We believe such acts of lawlessness are detrimental to government of our country, contrary to God's laws and handicap our mission work in other lands."

Another Foul Lynching

LYNCHING of two Negroes by a Mississippi mob Tuesday was but another outbreak of lawlessness and disregard for the majesty of the law. Irrespective of the crime for which the victims were held, to-wit the murder of a white man, the action of the mob but added to the outlawry and brings shame and disgrace upon a good State and community.

The sheriff and his deputies who were in charge of the prisoners when they were taken by the mob, say they recognized none of the lynchers. That's an old story. It was broad daylight and no doubt every man in the mob was a resident of the nearby scene of the murder. If that be so it is perhaps true that the only reason the officers failed to identify members of the mob, was because they shut their eyes and made no attempt to do so.

Details of the mob's violence indicate that the method pursued in doing death to the Negroes was particularly bestial and barbarous. Blow torches were used to slowly "simmer" the victims to death.

Such outrages most certainly inspire federal legislation.

Off The Bench

By Judge Walter B. Jones

A DEPLORABLE AFFAIR

Last Tuesday afternoon at Jackson, the Governor of Mississippi was delivering an address to the Farm Chemurgic Conference. And among other things he said: "We are justly proud of the fact that Mississippi has not had a lynching in fifteen months."

The sentence was hardly completed before the Governor's secretary nudged him on the arm and handed him a telegram from Duck Hill, Miss., stating that two negroes had just been lynched there. One of them was tied to a stake and tortured slowly to death by the flames from a blow torch. The other was riddled with bullets by a mob of one hundred and his body burned. The charge against the negroes was the murder of a white store-keeper last December. A jury was being impanelled to try them for the murder when they were taken from the custody of the sheriff of the county and two deputies, placed in a school bus and taken back to the scene of the alleged crime.

WALTER B. JONES

A lynching is a deplorable affair at any time. But it is more deplorable when a prisoner is taken from the officers of the law and murdered without hearing or trial by savage men who have no respect for the law and the jurors of the land. But especially deplorable is the Mississippi lynching coming, as at did, at a time when the House of Representatives at Washington was debating the Federal anti-lynching bill. The Mississippi lynchers by their savagery and flouting of the law gave those favoring the Federal punishment of lynchers, and the fining of counties where the lynching takes place, an argument that they made the most of, and that materially helped to speed the passage of the Federal law.

The press dispatches about the lynching leave one under the impression that little or no protection was given the accused men and that they were practically turned over to the mob by the sheriff without a struggle of any kind. No fight was made for the majesty of the law. No struggle was made to uphold our boasted right of trial by jury. The brave sheriff just quietly folded up his arms, and allowed a few members of the mob to hold him in light restraint while the rest of the mob drove off to murder the prisoners the law put in his hands and swore him to their protection.

A Denial of Justice

It is to be hoped that Mississippi will strike quickly and hard at the Duck Hill mob—a mob that flouted all of its laws, a mob that denied to the constituted authorities of the State right to conduct a trial in accordance with the Constitution of Mississippi, and denied to the helpless prisoners in the custody of the State trial by jury.

But One Kind of Court

In a charge to the Grand Jury of Montgomery County, Alabama, made by the writer of this article on July 11, 1927, when hooded gangs were riding the State at night and beating up any citizen the gang didn't like, taking the law into their own hands, and setting themselves up above the courts and the people, the writer said there could be but one kind of a court in this country, this land guided by the principles of Anglo-Saxon justice. And what sort of a court is that?

"It is a court where the accused has his day; It is a court where the accused has a trial by a jury of his peers; it is a court whose judges and jurors are under oath and sit by the authority of the people; it is a court where the accused knows and is confronted with the witnesses against him; It is a court that summons witnesses for the accused and hears both sides; it is a court that may imprison liars and perjurers; it is a court that meets in a public place; it is a court that meets openly at a known hour of a known day; it is a court that protects the rights of the lowly and weak with all the power at its command; it is a court that looks not to a man's race, his creed, or his political beliefs in measuring his rights; it is a court into whose counsels envy, hatred and prejudice do not come; it is a court which sits in the full glare of the mid-day sun; it is a court that administers justice without sale or denial; it is a court where under the law of the land every man is given what is his."

Give Governor Power to Remove Guards

In the Alabama Constitutional Convention of 1901, of which former Gov. Thomas G. Jones, of Montgomery, was a delegate from the second Alabama congressional district, this Alabamian tried to get a provision inserted into the Constitution to give the Governor of Alabama the right to remove a cowardly sheriff from office until impeachment proceedings had been initiated and terminated against the sheriff.

Governor Jones during his four years as governor, and during his 20 years as commander of the Alabama State Troops, had learned that if a sheriff really wanted to prevent a lynching he could do so. Governor Jones was firmly convinced from his experiences as Governor and as colonel of State troops that, most lynchings resulted from the cowardice and neglect of the sheriff in charge of the prisoner.

The section that he wished put in the constitution was in substance that "whenever any prisoner is taken from the jail or from the custody of the sheriff or his deputies, and put to death, or suffers grievous bodily harm, owing to the neglect, connivance or cowardice or other grave fault of the sheriff" such should be impeached and "the governor, when satisfied, after hearing the sheriff, that he should be impeached, may suspend him from office for such time as he may think proper, until the impeachment proceedings are finally disposed of." (See Journal of the Constitutional Convention of Alabama, 1901, at page 398 e. s.)

Governor Jones's Speech

In support of his proposition that the Governor should have the authority to remove a cowardly sheriff from office, Gov. Jones said (and the speech was made one hot Saturday afternoon—June 22—on the 27th day of the Convention):

"People in Alabama who have not taken the trouble to keep pace with events, will be startled to be told that within the last 10 years over 100 citizens of Alabama have been taken by mobs from sheriffs and jails and murdered. Yet, such is the case. Such is our bloody record. And yet two-thirds of those people were not guilty of a crime which I will not mention, because of fair listeners in the gallery. . . .

"Why is it of all men on earth, who are intrusted with the keeping of others, that a standard of honor must be made for officers different from all others, and that he should take no risks? Mr. President, the minister of the Gospel who would fail to see the veriest stranger, much less one of his own congregation, who is stricken with a deadly disease, because of personal fear, would be outlawed and scourged for all time.

"We see locomotive engineers every day standing by the throttle and risking their lives to save their passengers. We have seen captains of ships standing on the bridge, that the women might be saved, and going down to death in the waters.

False Standard for Sheriffs

"What policeman would be allowed to wear his uniform five minutes if he refused to make an arrest at the risk of loss of life? What man would have respect for the Alabama State Troops, no matter what the odds, if they allowed a mob to take a prisoner from them?

"Such a standard as is claimed for sheriffs has no recognition in any laws of honor. It is a false standard of duty, and if I may be pardoned for saying it, a cowardly standard of duty. . . . Let us not deceive ourselves. Two-thirds of the executions of prisoners by mobs are due to one of two things—either the cowardice of the sheriff, and I don't think there have been many cases of cowardice—or to a willingness for the mob to succeed, from the false conviction that a sheriff in fighting the mob is fighting not for the law, but for some worthless prisoner. In county after county everybody but the grand juries know who did the deeds. Case after case of this sort happens and continues to happen, and nobody is ever brought to the bar of justice. There is no prosecution. No strong voice ever condemns it. We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to our children, we owe it to our God, to put a stop to this base indifference to murder and making excuses for men who will not risk anything for the preservation of human life and the honor of the State.

Undermining Civilization

"The mob executions are brutalizing our children, blunting our religion and undermining our civilization. Can any one in the sound of my voice rise up and say that this is not so? We are undermining all noble ideals of duty and manhood. When we surrender to any local public opinion, which dominates in some places, that a sheriff is not bound to take any risk even to loss of life or limb in defense of a prisoner, we abdicate all our past and bow down and worship false and base standards of duty. Why should not the sheriff die at his post as well as the locomotive engineer, or the priest, or the doctor, or the soldier? We are setting a baleful example to our young sons who are coming up among us, if we teach that when a prisoner is given to an officer, that officer is free to desert his post of duty, because there may be danger in it. It is not like Alabama or the South to tolerate such a doctrine."

Governor Jones did not succeed in giving the right to the governor to remove a cowardly or neglectful or conniving sheriff from office. Perhaps he was too far in advance of his times; but he did succeed in getting put into the Constitution of Alabama the present Section 138 authorizing the impeachment of a Sheriff by the Supreme Court of Alabama. Section 138 has teeth in it, and has been used several times to remove from office a sheriff who allowed a mob to take a prisoner from him. It is one of the most statesmanlike provisions in the Constitution, and some day it should be amended so as to incorporate into the Constitution the right of the Governor to suspend from office a cowardly, conniving or neglectful sheriff.

July 23, 1937

The double lynching at our own Capital City Tuesday is regrettable, not only for the deed itself and for the direct slap in the face of the orderly processes of law, but for the unfavorable light in which it places us over the country. Each recurring lynching, and our own County has not been free of them in recent years, serves to make our whole section appear barbarous to those who do not understand the at times terrific problem with which we are confronted.

Decline Is Traced In Lynching In Country

Tuskegee, Ala.—Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, credits a 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades from the Institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period and 151 in the 1927-28 period.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings totaled 1,030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors as contributing to the decline.

The first he gave as the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear. Lynchings, he said, was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Second, the creaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities, such as more telegraph officers, more telephones in small towns, and rural areas, and the advent of radio and paved roads.

Third, "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynching."

The Institute's department of records and research lists 321 lynchings in 1892, of which 162 were negroes. Succeeding years show lower totals, with 1932, with eight and 1936 with nine, as the Iowa.

Of the 4,673 lynchings recorded, homicides were blamed in 1921 cases; felonies assault in 928; rape in 908; attempted rape in 282; robbery and theft in 227, insult to white persons, in 81, and miscellaneous causes or cause unknown in 1,056.

Mississippi was ranked for 563 lynchings since records were started in 1882, Georgia ranked second with 515, and Texas third with 488, of which 143 were whites. Louisiana had 389; Alabama, 343; Arkansas 286; Florida 272; Tennessee 247; Kentucky 290; South Carolina 158; Oklahoma 123; and Missouri 121.

Without Apologies

The lynching evil for which the south has been mercilessly criticized, fairly or unfairly, declined substantially last year, only nine of these outrages being perpetrated as against an even score for the preceding 12-months period. It is regrettable that similar violence, gang killings and criminal assaults throughout the remainder of the country, could not have had a similar reduction.

However, the north's violence as represented in street slayings that endanger the lives of uninvolved citizens, is too commonplace to cause much comment. That sort of thing has come to be regarded as a part of life as it is lived in the big population centers of the country although it reflects as much or more shame on those communities than lynching reflects on the south since it is engaged in for the settling of scores in illegal business that is carried on for heavy financial gain.

The Herald regrets the south's lynchings as much as the next one but we do not feel that we are called on as a section to apologize for a condition that does not begin to approach in gravity that which obtains in many other sections. At least there is an imagined reason for every illegal necktie party the section has ever held while there is frequently not a semblance of excuse for similar outrages that occur elsewhere and which are permitted to pass largely unnoticed.

DECREASE LAID TO HUMANITARIANISM

Alabama Fifth In Number Of Illegal Hangings For Period, Report Shows

BY LEROY A. SIMMS

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—(AP)—A 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 was credited today by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 151 in the 1927-1936 period.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings were recorded as 1,030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors as contributing to the decline.

The first he gave as the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear. Lynching, he said, was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Second, the breaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephones in small towns and rural areas, and the advent of the radio and paved roads.

As the third and one of the most important, he gave "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

"From 1914 to 1919, the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched. From 1920 to the present, the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched.

"These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings in the United States. Not only in these statistics but in many other ways is there implied a growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people.

"This growth, I believe, has paralleled the development of educational and social agencies, all of which bid fair to rid this nation of the barbaric practice of lynching."

A table, from the institute's department of records and research, lists 231 lynchings in 1892, of which 162 were Negroes. Succeeding years show lower totals, with 1932, with eight, and 1936, with nine, as the lows.

Of the 4,673 lynchings recorded, homicides were blamed in 1,921 cases; felonious assault in 198; rape in 908; attempted rape in 282; robbery and theft in 227; insult to white persons in 81; and miscellaneous causes or cause unknown in 1,056.

Miscellaneous causes included being a witness, writing insulting notes, improper conduct, insisting on eating in a restaurant when refused service, discussing a lynching, misleading mob, enticing servant away, insisting on voting, and gambling.

Mississippi was ranked for 563 lynchings since records were started in 1882. Georgia ranked second with 515, and Texas third with 488, of which 143 were whites. Following came Louisiana, 389; Alabama, 343; Arkansas, 286; Florida, 272; Tennessee, 247; Kentucky, 209; South Carolina, 156; Oklahoma, 123, and Missouri, 121.

South Dakota, 27; Utah, 8; Virginia, 99; Washington, 26; West Virginia, 49; Wisconsin, 6; Wyoming, 35.

RECORDS SHOW SLOW DECLINE IN LYNCHINGS

Statisticians Give Several Reasons for Drop in Mob Action

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Feb. 20.—(AP)—Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee institute, today credited a 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 151 in the 1927-1936 period.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings totaled 1,030 for the decade, beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major factors as contributing to the decline.

The first he gave as the tendency for frontier characteristics in the south to disappear. Lynching, he said, was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the west and in the south.

Isolation Broken Down

Second, the breaking down of isolation in the south by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephones in small towns and rural areas, and the advent of radio and paved roads.

Third, "increasing agitation within the south against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

"From 1914 to 1919, the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched. From 1920 to the present, the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched."

"These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings in the United States. Not only in these statistics but in many other ways is there implied a growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people.

"This growth, I believe, has paralleled the development of educational and social agencies, all of which bid fair to rid this nation of the barbaric practice of lynching."

Mississippi Ranks First

The institute's department of records and research lists 231 lynchings in 1892, of which 162 were negroes. Succeeding years show lower totals, with 1932, with eight, and 1936 with nine, as the lows.

Of the 4,673 lynchings recorded, homicides were blamed in 1,921 cases; felonious assault in 198; rape in 908; attempted rape in 282; robbery and theft in 227; insult to white persons in 81, and miscellaneous causes or cause unknown in 1,056.

Mississippi was ranked for 536 lynchings since records were started in 1882. Georgia ranked second with 515, and Texas third with 488, of which 143 were whites. Louisiana had 389; Alabama, 343; Arkansas, 286; Florida, 272; Tennessee, 247; Kentucky, 209; South Carolina, 158; Oklahoma, 123; and Missouri, 121.

Other states, listed alphabetically, follow:

Arizona, 29; California, 43; Colorado, 68; Iowa, 19; Kansas, 54; Maryland, 29; Michigan, 8; Minnesota, 9; Montana, 84; Nebraska, 57; Nevada, 6; New Jersey, 1; New Mexico, 36; New York, 2; North Carolina, 98; North Dakota, 16; Ohio, 26; Oregon, 21; Pennsylvania, 8; South Dakota, 27; Utah, 8; Virginia, 99; Washington, 26; West Virginia, 49; Wisconsin, 6; Wyoming, 35.

Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont were listed as having no lynchings since 1882.

The Lynching Spirit

EVIDENCES of attempts to betray the Negro by enrolling him in the ranks of the Communists have cropped out from time to time, but none has been so patent as a recent story from Spain, sent out by the Associated Negro Press, and written by Roy Arlan Woodson, who paints a gloomy picture of conditions in Spain under the monarchy and the succeeding democratic republic, and who depicts the current Red regime in roseate hues.

The particular venom of the Woodson article is indicated by its defense of the killing of thousands of priests and many nuns and the burning and desecrating of churches, and by the bold assertion of its author that the churches in Spain ought to have been burned many years ago.

This advocacy of the lynching spirit by a Negro against the institution which has done more to oppose the exercising of it against Negroes than any other institution in the world would be most disheartening if we did not realize that this alleged leader among the Negroes and those who circulated his attack are actuated by a spirit which is utterly foreign to the representative members of the race.

Vincent dePaul Fitzpatrick, president of the Catholic Press Association of the United States, in a letter of protest to the Associated Negro Press, recalls the services of Mother Drexel, the Oblate Sisters of Providence, the Sisters of Charity, the Sisters of Mercy and numerous other orders, and members of many religious orders of men to the colored people of the United States, without compensation or hope of any earthly return or reward, and often sacrificing even the necessities of life for the welfare of the Negro race.

"Do you think the members of the Negro race in the United States want to have their Negro papers endorsing the destruction of churches?" Mr. Fitzpatrick asks the director of the Associated Negro Press. "Is it not your wish, your province, your duty to encourage your readers to be law-abiding citizens?"

We feel that there is no need to be unduly excited by his evidence of sympathy with Communism on the part of some Negro leaders. It only demonstrates that they are no smarter than the white leaders who, either through bad judgment or ulterior motives, have become tools for the Communists. Unfortunately there are short-sighted people who have aided the Communists among the Negroes by their un-Christian attitude. While opposing Communistic efforts among the colored people as well as among the white, the Catholic Church will continue to strive to eliminate those conditions in which the seeds of Communism thrive.

MOB RULE NEVER JUSTIFIED

Mob rule under any circumstances is not to be condoned, but it is particularly despicable in a situation similar to that surrounding the hanging and shooting of a Negro near Fort Walton yesterday. He was accused of nothing more serious than a minor robbery, and striking of a white boy at the scene of the theft.

Would the mob have taken such drastic action if a white man had perpetrated the crime? Hardly. And yet we have white criminals who are just as vicious, who perpetrate far more atrocious crimes.

This is the second lynching to occur in Florida in recent months. Something should be done by officials to forestall such happenings in the future, and the greatest deterrent probably would be the apprehension and punishment in a court of law of the guilty parties.

However, in all probability the usual cry of "we are investigating, but officers did not know any members of the mob will go forth, and that will be the last heard of the case.

In some instances it is difficult to recognize members of a masked band, but such is not always the case and such violators of the law of the land should be captured and punished once in a while.

Florida Lynching

Five men, waxing wroth over the attack of a Negro on a 12-year-old white boy, take a Negro suspect away from a Florida sheriff and a deputy. They cart their victim off to a quiet place and riddle his body with bullets.

The sheriff, of course, recognized none of the men. Neither did the deputy. The mobsters, we are told, were disguised, hooded maybe in kluxer style.

What's more, the officers did not resist the five men. The sheriff had the resources of a whole county, not to say the state, at his beck and call. The five men had only themselves and their guns. But the county bows, the state yields, and the law is raped and trodden under foot. Is comment necessary?

ANOTHER LYNCHING

The Tampa Tribune puts the blame for the Milton lynching on the law's delays, pointing out that the crime was committed months ago and the culprit only recently brought to justice. There is a medicum of truth in the Tribune's allegation. Doubtless if the negro had been brought to trial promptly and as promptly sentenced, the impulse to lynch him might not have risen in the perverted minds of his slayers. But this does not justify the act.

The law may have been tardy but there is no evidence that it missed the mark, and the criminal had not constituted a public menace while awaiting trial. On the contrary, he was under as great restraint in jail awaiting trial, and later, on the fatal night, in charge of the sheriff en route to begin his sentence, as if he were in the penitentiary serving time which the court belatedly imposed. From the day of his arrest society was as safe from him as it would have been if sentence had been imposed on the day of his arrest.

We cannot place much responsibility for the lynching on slow court processes. Final responsibility and final blame rests upon the cowards who hid behind masks and took him from the law's agent, the sheriff, at gun-point, and shot him down in cold blood.

For the second time in recent months the name of Florida is smirched with lawless execution. It is to be hoped that there will not be a second failure to run the lynchers down and administer the punishment provided for them in the criminal code of the state.

Failure to bring the perpetrators to justice will be an equal smirch with the crime itself.

Florida's Contribution.

Florida added another lynching to its list near midnight Sunday when "five hooded men" halted Sheriff Joe Allen of Santa Rosa county and seized a negro prisoner, charged with attacking a white boy and with robbing a filling station.

The negro had been held at Panama City for safekeeping but Monday was to have gone on trial at Milton. So the sheriff drove to Panama City with one of his deputies to get his prisoner. Near midnight, the sheriff told the coroner's jury who arrived at the usual death-at-the-hands-of-parties unknown verdict, a car overtook him and forced him to stop.

"We want that nigger," the men told him and the sheriff obliged. The negro's body was found a short time later riddled with bullets.

Law enforcement surrenders easily in Florida where, it seems, lynchers no longer trouble themselves even to gather a fair sized mod. Five men in black hoods will do the job.

DEPLORES INCREASING LYNCHINGS IN SOUTH

Atlanta, Oct. 7.— (AP) —The Commission of Interracial Co-operation voted today to "exert all possible influence to put a stop to the wave of violations of civil liberties now current in the South . . ."

The commission, at its annual session here, elected Dr. Howard W. Odum of the University of North Carolina as president.

Approximately 100 members from all parts of the South attended.

The resolution dealing with civil liberties read: "Resolved: that the Commission on Interacial Cooperation and the individual members thereof exert all possible influence to put a stop to the wave of violations of civil liberties now current in the South; in particular the beating of white labor organizers and the illegal treatment of Negro farm workers."

Dr. Odum, the new president, is a native of Georgia and former dean of Emory University. He is the editor of Social Forces, and was president of the American Sociological Society in 1930.

R. B. Eleazer of Atlanta, secretary, said the announced purpose of the commission was to improve "conditions of neglect and injustice affecting Negroes and of the mistaken attitudes out of which such conditions grow."

The prisoner who was murdered had not been proved to be guilty of any crime. He may have been innocent. He was charged with robbing a filling station and assaulting a 12-year-old white boy. The law guarantees certain rights to every man, no matter how lowly or how despicable he may be.

Surely, the Florida authorities owe it to their state, to law, order and decency, to run down and bring before the judgment bar the midnight murderers who were abroad between suns in Santa Rosa Monday.

Incidentally, it is all too obvious that Santa Rosa county is sorely in need of officers who are worthy of the name and the trust reposed in them.

Another Florida Lynching.

Florida's escutcheon was again besmirched and dragged in the muck at midnight Monday when five hooded hoodlums, taking it upon themselves to act as judge, prosecutor, jury and executioner, took a negro prisoner from a sheriff and a deputy in Santa Rosa county and riddled him with buckshot.

Sheriff and deputy made no effort to resist the thugs who, according to the former, shouted "We want that nigger!" Both escorting officers declare they did not recognize any of the mobsters. Sheriff admitted knowing there were "high feelings" against the negro. He was being transferred to a "place of safety" when the masked murderers seized him.

JUNGLE RULE AGAIN

FLORIDA has one more lynching outrage chalked up to its discredit as the result of this week's disgraceful incident in Okaloosa county where a negro was taken from a peace officer and shot to death by an armed gang.

This is the second occurrence of its kind within a comparatively short period. The sinister shadow of mob rule cast over the state by these lawless events is not doing Florida's reputation any good in the north. Instead of being known as the Sunshine state, it is establishing itself as a region where the black clouds of intolerance and disrespect for the law prevail. All because a pitiful handful of citizenry prefers mob rule.

Governor Cone has ordered a thorough investigation of the crime, but the rest of the state will be none too optimistic over the chances of the guilty persons being brought to trial. The story is the same, each time. Officers who surrender the luckless prisoners invariably are unable to identify the mobsmen, the juries which make perfunctory inquiries uncover nothing, and ultimately the cases are written into the records as unsolved.

Callous public indifference in the communities where these crimes occur, makes possible such conditions. Yet each lynching that is not solved and in which the mob members go unpunished, is simply another lasting blot on Florida's reputation.

They Have Not Handled Them

When the Congress last summer laid over the Federal anti-lynching bill under an agreement that it would be taken up at the regular session of Congress in January, there was a tacit understanding that those States of the Deep South, where most lynchings occur, would have an opportunity to demonstrate their claims that the lynching evil could be handled through State action.

Since then there have been several lynchings, but so far as we have seen, no sincere or genuine effort to bring members of lynching mobs into court on the charge of murder.

The latest of these outbreaks has just occurred in Florida. A Negro accused of crime at Milton, Florida, had been transferred to another county for safe keeping, and was brought back to Milton for trial. Although the sheriff had been put on notice of inflamed public opinion, and had taken the precaution of removing the prisoner to another jail, no precautions were taken for guarding him on his way back for trial. A sheriff and one deputy were considered a sufficient escort.

And as they drove through the country with the prisoner in their car, the mob demanded their prisoner and got him without any protest or effort on the part of the officers of the law. As usual the sheriff—probably with an eye to reelection—now says that he did not recognize any members of the mob.

There is the usual promise of a grand jury investigation and that the Governor of Florida will do something. But no one expects any steps to be taken by either, other than the usual routine motions. The State of Florida has admitted that it is impotent to protect its prisoners when they are being transported along the State highways on their way to trial. And so the State of Florida, like the other States of the Deep South where such affairs have occurred, have lost their argument. They cannot oppose a Federal anti-lynching bill on the claim that they are capable of handling such affairs for themselves. They have not handled them.

Tennessee's Failure

About two months ago the sheriff of Tipton County, Tennessee, was transporting a prisoner along a public highway, on his way to the court house for trial, when several men surrounded the sheriff's car, took the prisoner and hanged him from a highway bridge. There was the usual promise of an investigation.

That investigation has now been held. The grand jury of Tipton county reports "with sincere regret" its inability to identify members of the lynching mob. It makes no recommendation as to the sheriff who meekly surrendered his prisoner.

Since that sheriff is an elective officer, it taxes credulity that he was wholly unable to identify any members of the lynching party. No evidence was presented to the grand jury as to who they were, but so far as the record shows, no effort has been made by the sheriff of the county, or by the Governor of the State to get that evidence.

When the Congress last August passed over the Federal anti-lynching bill, already passed by the House of Representatives, for consideration by the Senate in January, it was with the understanding that the States themselves were on trial. The States have asserted that they were able to handle this matter for themselves, and needed no Federal aid. Now it is apparent that the State of Tennessee has not handled it.

It is within understanding that some rude fellows of the baser sort should, perhaps under great provocation, commit a breach of the peace, attack an officer of the law, take his unarmed prisoner and murder him. That has happened before and, unfortunately, may happen again. But what is beyond understanding is that the so-called better element both of Tipton County and of the State of Tennessee, has not insisted on some real investigation, some real prosecution of those who committed this outrage. So far as we are told, the sheriff of Tipton County is still in office, notwithstanding his meek surrender of the prisoner entrusted to his keeping.

The pending Senate bill, passage of which is anticipated in January, does not provide for prosecution of lynching mobs in Federal courts. That is held to be still a matter for the State courts to handle, however poorly they have handled it in the past. But the pending bill does provide for prosecution in the Federal court of a sheriff or other peace officer who gives up a prisoner to a mob, and provides for a penalty on the county up to $5,000, payable to the victim's next of kin.

It may be questioned whether a Federal statute will end lynching. It may tend rather to inflame those of mob tendencies. But it may have the desirable effect of transferring from official position to Federal prison some vote-seeking sheriffs who fail to do their duty. And a few penalties imposed on the so-called decent tax-paying element, which had no part in a lynching mob, may cause that element to be more choice in its selection of its officials, and more aroused to see that members of lynching mobs are prosecuted for their murder of unarmed and defenseless persons who, in most instances, have not actually been convicted of any crime.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Daily Times

Tennessee and Lynchings.

From the Bristol (Tenn.-Va.) Herald Courier.

This is to remind Gov. Browning and members of the Tennessee legislature that there was a lynching in Tipton county some two months ago, and that nothing will be done about it; also that there have been several such outrages in the state in the last few years, and nothing has been done about them.

The governor and most of the legislators may recall the Tipton county affair. A Negro accused of killing an officer had been sent to Memphis for safekeeping. When the time for the trial arrived the sheriff went to Memphis for the prisoner and was returning home with him when six men stopped the car in which they were riding, took the Negro from the sheriff and lynched him, hanging him from a bridge and riddling his body with bullets. Notwithstanding that the prisoner had been taken to Memphis on account of the feeling against him, the sheriff did not even take a deputy along when he went after him.

No doubt there was a general opinion that this mob would go unpunished for its crime against the law and against society, although the responsible authorities announced that the lynching would be investigated. The opinion was based on the fact that no other Tennessee mob had ever been brought to justice. It has now been confirmed by a report of the Tipton county grand jury, which expresses "sincere regret" that the jury has been unable to identify any of the members of the mob. The report contains no word of criticism of the sheriff for having taken no precautions whatever for the protection of his prisoner, whom he surrendered to the mob without a show of resistance. . . . Virginia has a law which defines lynching as murder, makes each member of a mob liable to a charge of murder, and empowers state authorities to act in the event of a lynching in any part of the state. There has not been a lynching or an attempted lynching in Virginia since this law became effective more than ten years ago. Gov. Browning should call upon the Tennessee legislature, now in special session, to pass a law of that kind.

Steady Decline in Lynch Cases Seen Since 1887

Humanitarian Attitude of U. S. Believed Largest Contributing Factor to Trend.

Tuskegee, Ala., Feb. 25 (AP)—A 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 was credited today by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 151 in the 1927-1936 period.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline in mob action. Lynchings were recorded as 1,030 for the decade beginning in 1897; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

As the third and one of the most important, he gave "increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

"From 1914 to 1919, the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched. From 1920 to the present, the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched.

"These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings in the United States. Not only in these statistics but in many other ways is there implied a growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people.

Miscellaneous Causes.

Miscellaneous causes included being a witness, writing insulting notes, improper conduct, insisting on eating in a restaurant when refused service, discussing a lynching, misleading mob, enticing servant away, insisting on voting and gambling.

Mississippi was ranked for 563 lynchings since records were started in 1882. Georgia ranked second with 515, and Texas third with 488, of which 143 were whites. LARGE LYNCHINGS DECREASE HAILED

Growth In Humanitarian Attitude Of People Seen By Educator

9 Lynchings in 1936.

According to the records compiled in the Department of Records and Research of the Tuskegee Institute there were nine persons lynched in 1936. This is 11 less than the number 15 for 1934; 19 less than the number 28 for 1933. Six of the persons lynched were in the hands of the law; two were taken from jails, and four from officers of the law outside of jails.

There were 35 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings. Five of these were in Northern states and 30 in Southern States. In 20 of the instances the prisoners were removed or the guards augmented or other precautions taken. In the five other instances, armed force was used to repel the would be lynchers. A total of 69 persons, 7 white and 62 Negro, were thus saved from death at the hands of mobs.

Of the 9 persons lynched, all were Negroes. The offenses charged were: rape 3; attempted rape 3; murder 1; activity in share cropper strike 1; charge not reported 1.

The states in which lynchings occurred and the number in each state are as follows: Arkansas 2; Florida 1; Georgia 5; Mississippi 1.

Mobster Rule

Over 40 anti-lynching bills have been introduced in the present Congress. Despite cynical criticism, we think the flood of anti-lynching bills is most significant. Mob rule has virtually supplanted constituted authority in many places. In Chicago and Cook County, Illinois, for many years the number of executions by mobsters has vastly exceeded the number of electrocutions in the Cook County jail. The portly sheriffs of Cook County have been reduced to the status of civilian officials serving garnishments and eviction notices, while the job of executing criminals has been left to the official executioners of the Capone, Tuohy, Moran and other mobs.

And it must be admitted that these extra-legal executions are done with admirable dispatch. Many evildoers are removed from society. Many puzzling problems of business competition and control of labor unions are settled by the unofficial tribunals and executions of racketeer super government, which enforces its racket codes despite the Supreme Court's decision in the sick chicken case. In New York the super government of rackets executes many more offenders than march through the little green door at Sing Sing. As in Chicago, many lines of business are regulated by this system of lynch law. Restaurants, laundries, the cleaning and dyeing trades, the marketing of fish, not to speak of the distribution of beer and liquor to mobster saloons and the control of race track news and betting is regulated by racket law in many barbaric urban belts. Vulgarians often speak of these unofficial protagonists of social order as "gangsters," but from the historical standpoint the "gangster" of today is not intrinsically different from the vigilantes or members of the anti-horse thief associations which reduced the wild and woolly frontier to order.

Doubtless some will raise the old cry of "states' rights" against efforts by Congress to give the federal government control of local police matters, but if the authority of the constitutional local governments is to be restored, the strong arm of Washington must intervene. There is no doubt that mob rule can be destroyed. After the Mafia dominated Sicily for centuries, Mussolini broke it up. He even cleaned up the Camorra of Naples, which was every bit as strong as the Racketeria of Chicago.

However, restoration of old-fashioned courthouse law in the backward barbarian parts of America will be no easy task. In the first place, the highly organized urban mob operating continuously, well financed and well armed, presents a more difficult problem than the old-fashioned frontier mob that used to hang a horse thief or the spontaneous mob that once in a great while rises in wrath over some atrocious crime perpetrated against a woman or other helpless victim. That kind of mob was sporadic and is becoming so rare as to be a fading anachronism. But lynch law of the modern scientific variety is not declining. If anything it is becoming more powerful and pervasive. If there is an occasional lull in the number of urban lynchings it does not indicate that the properly constituted legal authorities have regained power, but on the contrary that resistance to the edicts and decrees of mobster government has about disappeared.

Any attempt to restore law and order in such places as Chicago, New York, Minneapolis or St. Paul will encounter much public sentiment that not only is inclined to condone, but to defend the summary execution of offenders against mob and racket rule. In Chicago most of these killings elicited a public response to the effect that the victim got what was coming to him. That sentiment was well summed up in the observation of Hon. Ted Newberry, himself a shining light in the realm of Racketeria before his light was put out with a sub-machine gun. Said Ted, in commenting on the demise of a once famous fellow mobster: "He must have done something; they don't kill you for nothing."

LYNCHING OVER NATION SHOWS DECREASE

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Feb. 22 (AP).—A 90 per cent decrease in lynchings in the United States since 1887 was credited Monday by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

A tabulation of lynchings by decades, from the institute's department of records and research, listed 1,583 mob victims in the 1887-1896 period, and 151 in the 1927-1936 period.

Each decade since the first revealed a decline. Lynchings were recorded as 1,030 for the decade beginning in 1987; 670 for that beginning in 1907, and 463 for the 1917-1926 period.

Dr. Patterson listed three major contributing factors:

(1) Tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear; (2) breaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities, such as rural free delivery, more telegraph offices, more telephone, the radio and paved roads; (3) increasing agitation within the South against lynchings.

"From 1914 to 1919, the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched," he said. "From 1920 to the present, the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched.

"These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings."

Of the 4,673 lynchings recorded, homicides were blamed in 1,921 cases; felonious assault in 198; rape in 988; attempted rape in 282; robbery and theft in 227; insult to white persons in 81, and miscellaneous cases or cause unknown in 1,056.

Mississippi was ranked first with 563 lynchings since 1882. Georgia ranked second with 515, and Texas third with 488, of which 143 were whites. Following came Louisiana, 389; Alabama, 343; Arkansas, 286; Florida, 272; Tennessee, 247; Kentucky, 209; South Carolina, 158; Oklahoma, 123, and Missouri, 121.

Other States, listed alphabetically, follow:

Politicians and Lynchings

It may be only a coincidence but it is striking nevertheless how, when a Southern state is pestered with a poor white trash politician, lynching bees in that state are likely to show a marked spurt. Louisiana is a good example. When Huey Long had the better elements in Louisiana at his mercy the worse elements took to the rope and faggot unchecked. In 1935, the last year of Huey's life, Louisiana had four lynchings. This year she had not one.

This year it was the State of Georgia that was afflicted with politicianitis. Lord Gene Talmadge, it will be remembered, stood on his tiptoes, threw out his chest, and thought that suddenly he had become of national stature. In furtherance of this delusion, he did not hesitate to stir up more or less quiescent racial animosities. This year, under Talmadge, Georgia accounted for five lynchings out of a country-wide total of nine.

It must be admitted, however, that the 1936 lynching record for the South as a whole, bad as it is, is a considerable improvement over the years before. Nine lynchings contrast favorably with 20 in 1935, 15 in 1934 and 28 in 1933. It exceeded only by one the all-time record low of eight in 1932. Only four states, all of them in what is called the deep South, were involved; and two of those, Florida and Mississippi had but one apiece. Arkansas two and Georgia's five made up the rest.

ORCHIDS FOR [illegible]

One of the excellent records hung up in the year 1936 is the fact that the lynching evil declined substantially. The year saw nine lynchings—and while it may be remarked that that was just nine too many, it should be noticed that it was 11 fewer than 1935's total.

Furthermore, there were 35 cases in which courageous officers of the law prevented attempted lynchings; and 30 of these cases were recorded in the deep south. Altogether, 69 people—all but seven of them colored—were saved from violence at the hands of mobs.

It is cause for congratulation, that record. And it emphasizes a fact that northern critics too often overlook—that the average southern official, supported by the sentiment of his own locality, is aware of his duty and brave enough to carry it out.

[Danville Register]

The perennial campaign of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to place a Federal antilynching law on the statute books has been launched anew with "prospects for its passage more promising than at any previous time," according to Walter White, its secretary.

Sympathetic as we are with the aims of the association, we cannot support such a measure because we cannot see how it possibly can help prevent lynchings or what good it will do to slap fines on communities where lynchings are perpetrated. In times past it may have been true that whole communities participated in these fiendish crimes against civilization, but on only the rarest occasions, if ever, is that true today.

On the contrary, the good people of a community where a mob of men take the law into their own hands and murder a Negro suspected of crime without giving him an opportunity to defend himself or prove his innocence resent those outrages quite as much as does the association which would penalize the county or town where is was committed. Moreover, unless the members of the mob were identified, the courts would have no way of knowing whether residents of the community in which the crime was committed were responsible for it or not.

These difficulties in the way of administering an antilynching law as well as the manifest injustice of levying a fine on a large body of people for the act of a few force us to oppose enactment of such a measure. And we are inclined to believe that the persistence of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in advocating the law is doing their worthy cause much harm.

Lynchings Reduced In The South During The Past Year

During the past year courageous officials, in some cases at the risk of their own lives, prevented thirty-five lynchings, or three-fourths of those attempted.

It is no credit to the South, however, that lynch-law took nine lives, even though that cut the number for 1935 in half. It is encouraging, however, to know that the number of lynchings is gradually decreasing, that officers are becoming more determined, and that public-sentiment is rapidly developing against the spirit of the "few" who flaunt the law, and set themselves up as witnesses, judge and jury in certain cases. If there be any elements of good in the "quick" action that comes from a mob, the evil that flows from it is so much greater that it is difficult to understand how such action could enlist the sympathy of any honest and intelligent citizen.

Says the editor of the Vicksburg Post on this subject:

"One of the excellent records hung up in the year 1936 is the fact that the lynching evil declined substantially. The year saw nine lynchings—and while it may be remarked that that was just nine too many, it should be noticed that it was 11 fewer than 1935's total.

Mob Violence

The Florence Times derives considerable amusement from the plight that Southern critics in the North must find themselves following an effort of New York women to lynch the confessed negro slayer of a white woman in her apartment home.

The shoe is on the other foot, the Times remarks, declaring:

"Headline: 'Women Try To Lynch Negro In Courtroom.'

"Where was this, in the Deep South, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi or one of the Carolinas, so long 'infamous' for their 'cruelty' to the black race?

"No, this occurred, much to the amazement and chagrin of the communists and racial inciters, in the metropolitan city of New York, which has long been the sneering base-station for all Red propaganda wending its way Southward.

"The attack was on the person of Major Green, black, who had just confessed to the killing of a 25-year-old white woman, and strangely enough, was instigated and carried out by women. Even in the South, according to traditions cherished above the Mason-Dixon line, women leave lynching parties up to their men-folks.

"Furthermore the paper in which we saw the account, a Southern metropolitan daily, 'played down' the story, placing it in the second section, under a 'dead news' head.

"Had this happened in Alabama, or any other of the Southern states, does the reader think it would have been 'played down'? He knows good and well it would have not, but would have been spread all over every yellow sheet in the country, and the International Labor Defense, Samuel Liebowitz, et al., would have leaped to the rescue of this 'down-trodden worker' with all the avidity of jackals to a cadaver, and the enlightened minds of the great populace northward would have eaten up the screaming black type with greatest of gusto.

[illegible] we are told in all solemnity that the South is a persecutor and exploiter of the black race, which latter has been upheld in all iniquity by this same I.L.D., and organizations of the kind, with especial reference to the infamous Scottsboro cases.

"What those New York women had in mind is not exactly discernible, unless it actually was application of the lynch-law. The principal thing they accomplished, however, was to place these Red organizations and the brilliant writers of the north in an extremely embarrassing position, at least until they can find another case south of the line, and attempt to spread a smoke-screen of sufficient volume to cover up this incident."

Reading the New Yok dispatches regarding the lynching incident, even a casual observer familiar with the circumstances cannot help but contrast the scene with the quietude which prevailed in Decatur through the several Scottsboro trials, in spite of desperate New York reporters, thirsty for excitement, chasing phantom mobs.

An observer, given the opportunity to see something of what was going on behind the scenes, also bound to wonder whether many of the wilds reports that eastern writers spent so much time "investigating" were actually believed hot "tips" by the reporters, or whether they were permitting themselves to become cogs in a gigantic propaganda machine.

An impartial judge probably would conclude the visiting reportorial contingent was composed of some who were writing "mob stories" for home consumption as propaganda and others who were dumb enough to believe the propagandists.

At any rate it would be interesting to know how some of the reporters who have covered Scottsboro hearings here would have covered the New York episode.

LAW OVER LYNCH LAW

There is no crime so bad but lynching makes it worse. One didn't need to mention the word around the jail in Florence, South Carolina, the other day to see that things looked as bad for an angry crowd as for a Negro in its clutches. News dispatches tell how close those aroused citizens came to being a party to a lynching.

But what seemed like mob murder in the making became an orderly step in the due process of law. First the sheriff appealed to the crowd to forgo violence and give the law—and the man—a fair chance. Then the father of the young woman alleged to have been molested pleaded with fellow citizens to let the law have its way. With that the crowd put up its vengeance and gave the prisoner to the sheriff.

It is satisfying to see how effectively that indignant southern crowd was able to curb its actions. Mob emotions usually run wild at such a time. The facts emphasize how strong is the average individual's instinctive respect for law to which the sheriff and the father appealed in this outbreak. And whatever this proves for the individual it proves for people as a whole. The supremacy of collective reason over mob rule manifested in this episode helps to dispel a sectional libel predicted on the mistaken opinion that southern communities prefer lynching to law.

Lynchings usually get all the publicity they deserve. We hope the happening in South Carolina gets all the public notice it rightly deserves.—Christian Science Monitor.

Spartanburg, S. C. Journal

As to Lynching

The suppression of a would-be lynching at Florence in this state recently, due to the sheriff's activity and appeal to a mob to let the law have its course, supported by an earnest request along similar lines by a relative of the person said to have been molested, is commended editorially by the Christian Science Monitor of Boston, which among other things says:

"Mob emotions usually run wild at such a time. The facts emphasize how strong is the average individual's instinctive respect for law to which the sheriff and the father appealed in this outbreak. And whatever this proves for the individual it proves for people as a whole. The supremacy of collective reason over mob rule manifested in this episode helps to dispel a sectional libel predicated on the mistaken opinion that southern communities prefer lynching to law."

There are those in other sections who labor under just such misapprehension—"that southern communities prefer lynching to law." A hostile press has dinned such contention into their ears for generations

WHEN we read the first paragraph of President Patterson's annual statement that the Department of Records and Research of the Tuskegee Institute showed that there were nine persons lynched in 1936, eleven less than the number of twenty for 1935; six less than the number of fifteen for 1934; and nineteen less than the number of twenty-eight for 1933, we rejoiced in the progress the country had made toward eliminating the most repulsive of all sins against law and order. But our joy was of momentary duration, for we read in the last paragraph of his statement that of the nine persons lynched in 1936, Georgia led, having five of the nine lynchings to her credit.

Fewer Lynchings

The recent lynching in Alabama, first for 1937, calls attention to the 1936 record of nine lynchings following 20 in 1935, 15 in 1934 and 38 in 1933.

Improvement is encouraging, but there is no assurance that it will continue. There is no certainty that there will not be 28 lynchings in the country this year. There is no way we can be sure that anyone will be punished for any of these lynchings that are going to happen before this year is ended.

During 1936 officers saved 35 persons from mobs which wanted to lynch them. In only five instances was it necessary to use armed force to rescue prisoners.

There is a growing impatience with lynching in this country. Opinion for federal anti-lynching legislation to fine communities where lynchings occur and to punish officers responsible for the safety of victims seems to grow stronger, even in some Southern centers. This adds one more item to the list of things the country is seeking a constitutional way of doing.

GEORGIA'S BAD SHOWING

Georgia came near spoiling the lynching record of the United States in 1936. An unusually small number of lynchings have been reported—just nine. While this is a good record for the nation as a whole it is depressing to read that Georgia furnished five of the nine lynchings.

An earnest effort has been made in this state to create a sentiment against mob law and the officers of the law have, as a rule, been faithful to their oaths of office and have tried to prevent lynchings where it has been possible. This year the mobs have stormed against this wall of sentiment and have done violence to law and order. We stand out nationally again, and in an unfavorable manner.

Only four states had any lynchings reported at all. Others present a clean slate. How fine it would have been for Georgia to be in that class. This would have meant that only four lynchings occurred during the year. There is encouragement for the future in the fact that officers of the law are becoming more and more determined to prevent lynchings. They are receiving the encouragement of the courts, the newspapers, the churches and the educators and many others. They are being given very substantial support by governors who have not failed to use the National Guard when it was necessary to protect a prisoner from a mob. Even with the increased vigilance of the officers of the law, six of the nine men lynched this year were in the custody of the law and were taken from the officers or from jails by mobs.

There is encouragement in the statement that 69 persons were saved from mob violence by the protective arm of the law. Thirty of these instances were in Southern states. Advancing civilization is leading us away from mob law. Georgia must move in that direction.

January 14, 1937

When the roll of lynchings for 1936 is compiled, it is found that Georgia led all the rest, with a total of five, while not one occurred in the surrounding states of Alabama, Tennessee and the Carolinas.

Why this breakdown is law and order in the state of Georgia? That is a question that should interest churches, the educational leaders and all the thoughtful citizens in all the walks of life.

A state that takes pronounced leadership in lynching is not the state which is going to appeal most strongly to those seeking new homes or new fields of investment, and Georgians should take steps to end the existing condition.

When outbreaks of mob violence increase it shows a significant lack of enforcement as well as a lack of support for the law, and that is always bad. Georgians are too rich in religious, moral and spiritual qualities to permit a condition of this nature to continue but it will continue unless these influences are put to work more aggressively.—Gadsden, Ala., Times.

PREVENTED LYNCHINGS

(Cumberland Times)

The lynching record is low again after four bad years. The total for 1936 is nine. It was 20 in 1935 and 16 in 1934.

There is a hopeful development in the situation. Increasingly lynchings are prevented. The prevention figures are not yet available for 1936, but in 1936 more than 80 persons were saved from mob violence. Some of these were protected by officers of the law who employed extra guards for the purpose. Some times a prisoner was quickly and secretly moved to a different location until the vengeful mania died out.

Mob wrath develops and spreads quickly, sometimes with slight provocation. The job of controlling calming or dispersing a mob is not easy, but has often been well done, showing that it is quite possible where authorities are courageous and intelligent.

LEE FOE OF LYNCHING

Atlanta, Jan. 19—(AP)—Robert E. Lee, long honored as warrior, statesman and educator, was commended as a foe of lynch law today on the 130th anniversary of his birth. While states from Virginia to Texas paid official tribute to the memory of "Marse Robert," the interracial commission cited Riley's biography to prove Lee on two occasions personally thwarted mob violence.

NORTHERN LYNCHERS

We humbly call the attention of Senator Wagner of New York, anti-lynching bill proponent, to the rioting that took place in New York state the other day when a negro confessed killing a white woman. "Lynch him!" cried New Yorkers. These people back Senator Wagner, we presume.

DYING LYNCH LAW

Two recent items of news have brought glad tidings to thoughtful Americans who do not feel the citizens of the South have the God-given right to take unto themselves lengths of rope and dispatch other persons—mostly black men—whose ways do not meet with their approval.

One short news story mentioned the fact that the famous "Lynching Limb" in Tombstone, Arizona, has been hacked off the parent tree. Lynching is no longer in favor in Arizona, it was explained.

Taking up a more serious aspect of mob law, it is good to see that there is now an active Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. At the organization's first biennial session, held in Atlanta, the director, Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, said:

"Economic greed is the cause of more lynchings than the protection of white women's honor. For years crimes have been committed in the South in the name of women, without cause. White women of the South now are realizing this is a travesty on justice and a slur on their honor." She added that 35,000 women in 13 southern states have signed pledges to fight lynching.

As any discerning observer knows, what Mrs. Ames said is true. The majority of lynchings in the South have been caused, not by negro attacks upon white women, but because of economic jealousy between the poor white classes and the negroes, their closest competitors for a livelihood. As a rule, the southern white man's dislike for the negro is more intense the nearer he approaches the average black man's own economic status. The "southern chivalry" idea has long been a smoke screen for the play of other forces.

Nobody in the South in taking a stand against lynching is endorsing attacks on women, either by negroes or white men. Neither is the question of social equality involved. The whole thing just boils down to the irrefutable fact that no one group of the population has the right to take the life of anyone without due process of law.

It is a satisfaction to know there is far less lynching now than there was a generation ago, and that last year, from this standpoint, was one of the best on record.

Laurels For South

One of the excellent records hung up in the year 1936 is the fact that the lynching evil declined substantially. The year saw nine lynchings—and while it may be remarked that was just nine too many, it should be noticed that it was 11 fewer than 1935's total.

Furthermore, there were 35 cases in which courageous officers of the law prevented attempted lynchings; and 30 of these cases were recorded in the deep south. Altogether, 69 people—all of them colored—were saved from violence at the hands of mobs.

It is cause for congratulation, that record. And it emphasizes a fact which northern critics too often overlook—that the average southern official, supported by the sentiment of his own locality, is aware of his duty and brave enough to carry it out.

Thirty-nine mobs formed in the south last year, bent on violence; all but nine of them were broken up and foiled. The South can take pride in that record.

Narrow Escape

The first lynching of 1937 didn't take place in Olanta, South Carolina yesterday. All of the ingredients were present:—an alleged attempted assault upon a white woman by a Negro; the Negro, taken from two officers of the law; an angry crowd which could have turned into a lustful mob in a split second. That the lynching didn't take place seems to have been due to the persuasiveness of the two deputies and the father of the girl concerned. They argued with the crowd that the law should take its course and, strangely enough, they prevailed. The Negro was delivered back into the custody of the officers and jailed.

Which is in all respects complimentary to the officers, the father and the incipient mob. If the Negro has attempted to commit an outrage, he will be punished for it. But it is well to leave it at that and not to compound one outrage with another or to besmirch the good name of the community. Especially to be commended is the father, who kept his head when his neighbors were on the point of losing theirs.

SHERIFFS AND LYNCHINGS

Every man in the Deep South knows that grand jury action against members of a lynching mob is an empty gesture. It means nothing except an increasing contempt for lawful processes and an increasing deference to the mob spirit.

The way to strike at the lynching evil is to strike at the county sheriffs. They love their jobs as well as their voting neighbors. There is nothing except his family that a jobholder loves as much as his job.

There isn't a sheriff in Alabama that given fair notice is not capable of preventing a lynching. Everybody knows that. Only in very exceptional circumstances is a sheriff helpless. A determined peace officer who has any sense knows how to stop a mob. Everybody in this State knows that is true.

It is all very well for Governor Graves to demand a grand jury investigation of the recent lynching in Henry county. That means that grand jurors, some of whom may have been in the mob, will return a no-bill. They nearly always do. Grand jurors are the neighbors and friends of lynchers. They are never likely to take vigorous action against mob killers. Petit juries are even less likely to take final action against neighbors who are known to have participated in a lynching, since the victim of the lynching invariably is the object of loathing by all good citizens.

But Governor Graves is hitting a home-run when he calls upon Attorney-General Albert Carmichael to institute impeachment proceedings against the sheriff of Henry county. That's the way to go after the lynch-loving yeomanry of our fair State. They don't like that. They can't handle it. They know that a negligent sheriff will be tried, not by jurors that helped lynch a man or at least lives next door to a lyncher, but by the Supreme Court of Alabama.

In other words, they know that a negligent officer must give an account of his conduct to the highest judicial authority in the State. He will get a fair trial, which is one reason that lynchers do not relish impeachment proceedings.

In demanding an impeachment trial of the sheriff of Henry county Governor Graves is acting in the best traditions of Alabama Governors.

The Governors of this State have always hated lynchings. The Advertiser, which is nearly as old as the State, does not recall a Governor who was indifferent to lynchings. It does recall that many Governors have been instrumental in impeaching many sheriffs for weakly condoning lynchings. The Advertiser is glad to reaffirm what it has frequently said before that Governor Bibb Graves has been one of the most diligent and courageous foes of lynchers that ever sat in the executive chair of a State that has never had a Governor who was indifferent to mob violence.

Only a stupid oaf would say that a guilty rapist could not be convicted by a jury and punished by the State. The danger always is that the wrong man may be killed. Due process of law is one of the noblest principles in the Constitution.

All rapists should suffer—no rapist has a chance to escape justice, if the evidence against him is sufficient.

Therefore, The Advertiser is glad to say to Governor Bibb Graves and Attorney-General Albert Carmichael, who desire only a fair trial of Henry's sheriff: Step on it!

IS THIS THE REMEDY?

So hopeless is the Richmond Times-Dispatch "of ever wiping out lynching, the greatest crime against Southern civilization, except through Federal action," that it comes out strongly, in a featured editorial, in favor of the new Federal anti-lynching bill which it says has just been introduced in the House of Representatives at Washington.

The theory of The Times-Dispatch, apparently, is that a Federal law under which the government at Washington could clamp down on and punish local peace officers who failed to protect a prisoner from a mob and upon communities in which lynchings occurred, by levying a fine against the county, would tend to stop mob murder.

We have never been able to see the force of this contention. It might well be, we think, that the assumption by the Federal government of the responsibility of preventing lynchings and punishing lynchers and the local officers who could not show that they had exerted themselves to the utmost to protect their prisoners might have the very reverse effect to that intended.

The prevention of lynching is now a local responsibility and the only cure for this crime is, we believe, a continued quickening of the public sense of this responsibility, the continued development of a public and individual revulsion against lynching. There has been a steady change for the better on these lines. Less than forty years ago there were more than a hundred lynchings every year. Twenty years ago we still had sixty to eighty lynchings a year. The number was down to eight in 1932, to twenty-eight in 1933, to fifteen in 1934 and to twenty in 1935.

The steady decline in the number of lynchings has been accomplished as a result of the pressure of public sentiment, the building up of an attitude of detestation for mob murder, the increased feeling on the part of the people in those sections in which lynchings were most prevalent that a lynching was a stigma on the community, the more vigorous efforts that have been made to protect prisoners and prevent lynchings.

What the effect of the Federal activities that are proposed would be is, in our opinion, a fairly large question. Resentment of outside pressure applied by force has repeatedly, as could be instanced, lead whole communities to take strange attitudes. Our guess is that more often than otherwise the Federal government would make local martyrs and heroes of the sheriffs—or governors—it sought to punish under this proposed legislation. Feeling might easily be aroused as a result of which the real objective, that of stamping mob murder out, might be lost sight of.

We do not now discuss the constitutional question that is involved. The fact that an important Southern newspaper is willing to disregard this phase of the matter is interesting. The fact that The Times-Dispatch has come to think that the Federal government might do a better job in suppressing mob murder than the States is significant. At the last, however, it is human nature that is being dealt with, and one may be permitted to doubt whether an act of Congress can yet change human nature over night.

That lynching is a crime against the civilization of the South is not to be disputed. We are in full agreement with our Richmond contemporary on that score. But we cannot see eye to eye with it when it argues that the civilization of the South would be relieved of the stigma by the enactment of the Federal legislation it favors. The remedy to serve its purpose must come from within. No region, we venture to assert, has ever had or is likely ever to have a civilization better than its own people.

NO-LYNCHING RECORD

Mississippi, our sister state, continues the fight against lynching by word of mouth and by letter. The Jackson, Miss., Clarion-Ledger reprints a congratulatory letter sent to sheriffs who had no lynchings in their territory during 1936.

The Clarion-Ledger says:

"Governor White sends a letter to all Mississippi sheriffs congratulating and commending them on their part in Mississippi's achievement of a record of no lynchings during 1936.

"'This is the first year since the turn of the century that Mississippi has been without a case of lynching at the hands of a mob,' he wrote the sheriffs. 'Realizing that this enviable record could not have been made without continuous vigilance and vigorous enforcement of our laws on the part of our law-enforcing officers, I am taking this occasion to commend you upon your part in keeping our state free from unseemly mob action.'

"This executive recognition of the sheriffs' aid in making this record, and of the necessity of courage and vigilance by sheriffs in the prevention of lynching, is appropriate and timely.

"Much credit for the perfect 1936 record for Mississippi must go to citizens who have worked to improve racial relations on a firm basis, to the women's organizations which have used their influence to make lynching unpopular, and to the newspapers which have also aided the fight to reduce mobbery in Mississippi. But much credit also must go to the sheriffs and deputies.

"Education helps this work. These activities mentioned above help it. But, in the final analysis when it comes to a show-down in any specific case, nothing is more effective as a deterrent to lynching than a courageous sheriff determined to protect his prisoner and to obey his oath at all costs.

"All good citizens of both races join in Governor White's wish and hope 'that 1937 will be another year free of lynch law in Mississippi.'"

YET A CHANCE

A negro was lynched in Alabama yesterday. It says much for the State's recent advance in civilization that this is news. Had the mob murder occurred in Georgia, to the east, or in Mississippi, to the west, it would have been much less surprising. But of late Alabama has shown a definite dislike of lynching—a dislike so strong that the sport has become dangerous there.

Perhaps yesterday's occurrence shows that she is slipping. However, be it noted that the Sheriff concerned, although he lost his prisoner, says that he recognized some of the mob. Usually the officers give the impression that the lynching was done by visitors from another planet, so strange are they to the eyes of the Sheriff and his men. If the Sheriff sticks to his identification, some of the lynchers may yet feel the heavy hand of justice; and, if that happens, Alabama's reputation with the outside world will be at least partially restored.—Baltimore Evening Sun.

Alabama should give her best curtsy to the Sun for classing a lynching in our state as "news," owing to its rareness, but we feel that the compliment is undeserved. Nobody familiar with the facts knows any reason why lynching should be more frequent in any state of the Deep South of like racial population than in our own chosen commonwealth. These outbreaks of violence will occur just as readily in Alabama as in Mississippi, Georgia, and portions of South Carolina and Tennessee. Lynchings are due to racial prejudice and a sense of security on the part of the white men who perpetrate them. The most hopeful symptom of our mixed civilization is that the highest type of our citizens and newspapers frown upon these acts of violence and sincerely work to abate them and to engender more respect for the law. Here we have the only hope for the slow amelioration of this evil.

Another Whoop For The Mob

Editor of The Eagle:

As a constant reader of The Dothan Eagle I read the letter of Mr. Ezell concerning the lynching of Henry County and the reply.

Maybe Mr. Ezell does approve of the mob's actions, but is he the only one? No, not by a long shot! There is not a woman or young girl anywhere that would not want to be protected from such brutal attacks. It is time for our men to protect womanhood!

Why impeach a good man for something he could not help when overpowered by a mob of furious men?

Hasten on the calamity! We are ready for Mr. Ezell to be our next sheriff.

Lynching Attitude Causes Problem

Bristol Delivers Talk In Atlanta on Cause And Prevention

Problems of race relations in the south should be settled by the people of the south, according to Dr. L. M. Bristol, head of the sociology Department at the University, who spoke in Atlanta last week before the bi-annual meeting of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

"I am convinced," he said, "that the South is capable of working out its own salvation with reference to race relations without coercion from any other section of the country." He was referring to a newspaper release containing resolutions adopted by the National Conference on Problems of the Negro and Negro Youth, one of which favored "a strong Federal anti-lynching law."

Praises Women's Work

Dr. Bristol commended the organization and work of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of lynching and said that he believed that this association together with the Commission on Inter-racial Cooperation were among the greatest influences for good in developing wholesome public opinion with reference not only to lynching, but to the whole field of race relations in the south.

He stated that to solve the problems of lynching among other race problems, it would be necessary to approach it from the scientific viewpoint.

"A study of this question from the scientific point of view," the speaker maintained, "will show, I believe, that lynching is but one expression of a whole system of attitudes; that this system is the product of a culture that has been in process of development for three hundred years or more; that as the lynching attitude is an integral part of a system it can not be changed effectively and permanently until the culture is changed of which it is a logical expression. This is the reason why mere legislation cannot prove effective; for any legislation to be effective must have the support of enlightened public opinion."

Scientific Study

Turning to the question of lynching in the South and its relation to the whole question of racial prejudice, he made a suggestive analysis from the theoretical point of view holding that tentative conclusions should be tested and corrected by scientific study although such study would prove difficult because so little could be learned about lynching mobs. He held that much could be learned, however, by a study of the attitudes of samples of people in the South concerning race relations including lynching.

"Lynching," said Dr. Bristol, seems to be the legitimate child of race and class prejudice and hated, and closely related to all defense-reactions that are impulsive and emothional rather than bulit up on a consideration of social welfare for all."

Conclusions

He maintained that so far as could be assumed concerning the question, the following conclusions are warranted: "(1) that so long as the poor whites of the South are struggling for existence in competition with the negro, with an urge to lord it over someone to compensate for a feeling of inferiority dating back from slavery days, just so long will there be racial antipathy which may be expected to express itself at times in lynching or other forms of violence and injustice; (2) that so long as white industrial workers in Northern cities are struggling for existence in competion with negros, just so long will there be racial antipathy which will be liable at any moment to break out in race riots; (3) that so long as descendants of the planter aristocracy of any other class glory in a culture that can be maintained only by the exploitation of fellow human beings by means of a caste system built on recognition of innate superiority and inferiority and by a controlling purpose to maintain an order of dominance and submission, just so long will there be attitudes and sentiments favorable to lynching under certain conditions and to other forms of lawlessness."

Suggestions

The speaker made several suggestions with reference to a program looking not only to the prevention of lynching, but to changes in the whole culture of the South which seemed to be fundamentally related. Foremost place was given to a study of the social sciences in public schools and institutions of higher learning, and closely related to this special preparation of teachers and particularly to supervising principals who are often in charge of negro as well as white schools.

Solutions

For a practical solution to the problems he said, "The attitude favorable to lynching—all too prevalent in the South—may be changed by intelligent cooperation, and mainly, I believe, through increasing emphasis on the social sciences, especially sociology, in our schools and institutions of higher learning. Much can be done, too, through a study of the application of both science and religion to problems of human relations through study clubs and reading circles, and perhaps best under such leadership as that provided by the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching and the Commission on Inter-racial Cooperation."

What Big Eyes!

The lynching of a negro in Alabama isn't big news because it is nothing particularly out of the ordinary. But it is news that in reports of the lynching, which occurred at Headland Tuesday, an Alabama sheriff, Sheriff Louis Corbett, is quoted as saying he "recognized some members of the mob."

One is reminded of what Little Red Riding Hood said to the Big Bad Wolf who was trying to impersonate the good old grandmother: "What big eyes you have, grandmother!"

What big eyes Sheriff Corbett has, and how well he uses them. Gov. Bibb Graves declares: "Alabama, so long as I am governor, never will tolerate mob rule." Bravo! Governor Graves should have the Alabama prosecutor get in touch at once with Sheriff Corbett and get names of mobsters recognized by the latter.

How much better this sheriff can see than some of our North Carolina sheriffs have been able to see in similar circumstances!

It is recalled that in one of the most recent mob crimes in North Carolina, not far from the state capital, a sheriff and deputies had a good look at the mob in broad daylight but they could not see well enough to identify any of the mobsters. This occurred some years ago, but as yet none of the lynchers have been apprehended. The Alabama sheriff has the best pair of eyes of any sheriff in whose bailiwick a lynching has occurred in several years.

Disgraced Alabama

Last week the New York Herald Tribune said editorially:

"On Tuesday some 50 men broke into a county jail in a little Southeastern Alabama town, carried away a cowering Negro, hanged him to a tree and riddled him with bullets. There were no arrests, and the pages of 1937's history were blotted with their first lynching outrage. . . ."

Almost immediately after the announcement of the atrocity, Gov. Graves ordered Attorney General Carmichael to make "a special and thorough investigation."

The governor further directed that "the attorney general . . . file impeachment proceedings against any officer if he finds such proceedings warranted. Alabama, so long as I am governor, never will tolerate mob rule."

On Saturday the specially appointed Grand Jury, after what may be considered a careful investigation of the lynching, returned no indictments.

Thus the constituted representatives of the people and the law have admitted that so far they have been unable to arrest those guilty of mob action. It may be supposed that no other course, in view of the evidence before it, was open to the Grand Jury and that it did its duty.

Sheriff Louis Corbett, from whom the prisoner was stolen, said that he could identify several members of the lynching party. So far he has failed to do so. So far as can be learned the sheriff has made no attempt to arrest the members whom he could identify.

This newspaper respectfully calls these facts to the attention of Gov. Graves, and asks him if in his opinion the sheriff of Henry County has fully and adequately performed his duties as an officer of the state?

Is the governor of Alabama going to allow this case to drop? Are the law enforcement officers of Alabama going to admit to the world their inability to bring justice in this lynching case? If they are willing to admit that—as must be the case unless vigorous and immediate action is taken by them—then perhaps it is going to be necessary to enact the federal anti-lynching bill and call upon the federal government to enforce our state laws for us.

It is up to Gov. Graves to see that justice is done. If any officer of the law is guilty of neglect of duty, the state should demand his impeachment.

Alabama must act. It must bring about justice. Fifty men flagrantly disregarded the law of the land and murdered a man who had not been proved guilty of any crime by a jury of his peers.

Alabama today stands disgraced before the civilized world.

"The Beginning And The End of Lynching"

(New York Herald Tribune)

On Tuesday some fifty men broke into a county jail in a little southeastern Alabama town, carried away a cowering Negro, hanged him to a tree and riddled him with bullets. There were no arrests, and the pages of 1937's history were blotted with their first lynching outrage. But it was on the same day, in almost the same hour, that a memorable blow was being struck in another Southern state against the lynching evil—a blow that may end by retiring that form of crime at last into the barbaric past to which it belongs. The Richmond Times-Dispatch in a two-column editorial was formally demanding the enactment of a Federal anti-lynching law, on the ground that it saw "no hope of ever wiping out lynching, the greatest crime against Southern civilization, except through Federal action."

Responsible Southern opinion has long deplored the lynching evil. Latterly, thoughtful Southern newspapers have begun to suggest that unless their states roused themselves to more vigorous action a Federal law would prove to be the alternative. But The Times-Dispatch is the first influential Southern organ to sweep aside all the old, bitter memories of force bills and the "bloody shirt" and to declare that the time for the South itself to invoke that alternative has come. Virginia has had a strong anti-lynching law on her books for ten years, and there has not been a lynching in the state since its enactment. "But it has become plain," The Times-Dispatch continues, "that few, if any, of the Southern States will follow Virginia's example." Something more must be done "to end the present intolerable situation."

The new anti-lynching bill, already introduced in the House and soon to appear in the Senate, is constructed, as The Times-Dispatch points out, on the sound principle of enforcing Federal action not against the members of the mobs but against the local officers whose dereliction allows the mobs to operate. It thus provides for effective Federal intervention at the points where it will be of the maximum preventive effect, but through the normal Federal court machinery and without the release of swarms of Federal police upon Southern communities. This is closely in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution and involves the least violence to Southern feeling. But overshadowing the terms of the bill itself is the fact that a great Southern newspaper has formally urged its enactment.

There has been small hope of a Federal bill so long as it has seemed to represent a holier-than-thou attempt by a moralistic North to coerce the South into a solution of a Southern problem. But when the South itself begins to look at a Federal act as no more than a convenient mechanism to assist it in meeting the problem of its own accord the whole position changes. The Northern states had no hesitation in inviting the Federal government under the kidnaping law, to assist them in combating that horrible crime. The editorial in "The Richmond Times-Dispatch" means that lynching is falling from its status as a sectional issue to that of an equally horrible crime, appropriate to similar treatment. And that, in turn, means the beginning of the end of lynching.

The Alabama Lynching

The first lynching of the year was that at Abbeville, Alabama, Monday night when a mob seized a prisoner in the hands of the sheriff or his officers and put him to death.

Governor Bibb Graves, as soon as he learned of the action of the mob, sent a captain of the state highway patrol to investigate and report upon the case. Upon that report the governor ordered the judge of the district to summon a special grand jury and the state attorney general announced that he would file impeachment proceedings, charging neglect of duty, against the sheriff of the county.

The governor and attorney general will be commended for their prompt action. Members of the mob are guilty of murder and if it be shown that the sheriff was guilty of neglect of duty he should be discharged from office.

Lynchings And Powers Of The State

On the lynching in Henry County last Monday, The Baltimore Evening Sun commented:

It says much for the state's recent advance in civilization that this is news. Had the mob murder occurred in Georgia, to the east, or in Mississippi, to the west, it would have been much less surprising. But of late Alabama has shown a definite dislike of lynching—a dislike so strong that the sport has become dangerous there.

Perhaps yesterday's occurrence shows that she is slipping. However, be it noted that the sheriff concerned, although he lost his prisoner, says that he recognized some of the mob. Usually the officers give the impression that the lynching was done by visitors from another planet, so strange are they to the eyes of the sheriff and his men. If the sheriff sticks to his identification, some of the lynchers may yet feel the heavy hand of justice; and, if that happens, Alabama's reputation with the outside world will be at least partially restored.

Impeachment proceedings have been ordered against Sheriff Corbitt, of Henry County, and a special Grand Jury is investigating the lynching. Sheriff Corbitt has repeatedly expressed his willingness to identify those he recognized among the men who stole his prisoner from him. His identification of members of the lynching party would constitute perhaps the best defense of himself against any charge of negligence in the performance of his duty.

A bill has been introduced in Congress which provides that any responsible peace officer who fails to protect his prisoner or to apprehend the members of the mob that lynched the prisoner shall be guilty of a felony and fined up to $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years. If the federal law were in effect today it might be invoked in this Henry County case.

But the bill is still pending, and the members of Congress will watch with great interest the developments in Alabama. If the state prosecutes the lynchers then the opponents of the federal anti-lynching bill will have a concrete argument against its passage. On the other hand, if the state is unable to punish the guilty persons, sponsors of the bill will have a concrete argument on their side.

The federal anti-lynching bill is not the best answer to the lynching problem. The states themselves must by the proper exercise of their police power and by education

MR. EZELL AND THE MOB

Elsewhere on this page is a curious letter from Mr. Clem Ezell, former Mayor of Dothan, regarding the Henry County lynching.

The letter is curious for several reasons.

Although Mr. Ezell heartily approves the mob's action, he begins his letter by alluding with some piety to his "zeal for law enforcement, or allowing the law to take its course."

Whereupon he launches into a 200-word defense of the mob and winds up by misquoting Christ as saying, "Let him who is the least guilty cast the first stone."

There is little use in arguing with Mr. Ezell on the subject. Nor is there much use in debating it with the many other citizens who share his viewpoint.

The men who condone mob violence are not impressed by the eternal fact that something vastly more important than an individual is lynched when a mob assembles. That important something is law, order and the courts, which are fundamental pillars of our society and civilization, and without which every citizen wuold live in peril.

In addition to this, there is always danger of the angry mob killing the wrong man, because the mob does not stop to reason. The mob is actuated by emotion. In the Henry County case, The Eagle learns that there is some doubt in Henry County that the Negro was the one who committed the crime. But even if he were guilty, the law should have been allowed to punish him. The crime was unpardonable, of course, but so was the mob's. Two wrongs have never made a right, and never will.

Mr. Ezell complains of "trickster lawyers" and the slow process of court justice. Then the remedy lies in correcting these evils. They can be corrected. They should be corrected. But they cannot be corrected through lawlessness.

It is an open secret that Mr. Ezell desires to be the next sheriff of Houston county.

In the light of his remarkable espousal of mob law, The Eagle believes his election to the office would be nothing short of a calamity.

For a sheriff's sworn duty is to protect his prisoners with his life, if necessary.

Mr. Ezell not only admits he wouldn't do it in certain cases, but hints he wouldn't be above constituting himself prosecutor, jury, judge and executioner as well, by joining the mob.

THE LAW IN THEIR HANDS

In the year just ended there was no instance of mob violence in the state of Alabama, and for a number of years this state has been an example to its less thoughtful and law-abiding neighbors on all sides. However, early Tuesday morning a group o fself-righteous citizens entered the jail at Abbeville, removed a lawful prisoner of the law and committed a crime which has been condemned by Christian society since Stephen was stoned.

According to Henry county officers, the mob was orderly and quiet. It was not a group of drunks who pulled the unfortunate accused from his cell; it was a crowd of forty or fifty men who undoubtedly consider themselves pillars of Henry county society, and they were probably well satisfied with themselves when they left the haltered and bullet-heavy body at the side of the country road to go home to have out their sleep. And most likely they slept well.

Every man, whether black or white, inside or out, regardless of his crime, has a right to a trial and, if the verdict warrants, to a decent death. As old as the south is the saying that examples must be made of negroes. It seems never to occur to lynchers that their actions set a far worse example than the crime of the lynched.

We have law in Alabama. We have laws against rape and against attempt to rape, and except for a few regrettable instances the law has not failed to carry outits proper function. A group which attempts to make a stupid and horrible joke of the laws of this state does more to break down the government than any criminal.

If the men who instigated the lynching in Abbeville are proud of what they have done, if they think that they have accomplished something to tell their children about, if they gather old-woman-fashion around the hot stoves of the country stores to describe again and again how the negro kicked and twitched as he died in the cool night and how his body rolled from the car into the ditch on the lonely road, then law and decency mean little in Henry county.

Where there was one crime, there is now a total of more than forty crimes. And no figures in the world can be made to balance the one against the forty.—Eufaula Tribune.

Anti-Lynching Bill Is Attacked By Congressional Leaders

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6. (U.P.)—House Democratic leaders today planned to block consideration of any anti-lynching legislation at this session.

Chariman Hatton W. Sumners, Democrat, Texas, of the House Judiciary Committee, which has more than 40 anti-lynching bills pending before it flatly opposed such measures "because I am against lynching."

Sumners pointed to statistics showing that under state law enforcement, lynchings have declined from 3.4 per million persons in 1892 to approximately .07 per million in 1936.

"No crime has decreased as rapidly as lynching," Sumners said. "No one dealing with another matter being corrected as fast as this would undertake to shift the responsibility of law enforcement as these bills would shift responsibility from the state to federal government."

Lynching in Alabama.

THE NATION'S FIRST 1937 lynching was staged in Alabama last week when an 18-year-old negro was seized by a mob of about 50 men who stormed the jail at Abbeville, took the prisoner to a thicket, hanged him and riddled his body with bullets. He had been accused of assaulting a white woman.

The body was found several hours after the lynching by a deputy sheriff.

Sheriff Corbett said he recognized some of the mob and indicated a special grand jury would be called to investigate.

Governor Bibb Graves at Montgomery directed Attorney General Carmichael to conduct an inquiry and file impeachment proceedings "against any officer if he finds such proceedings warranted."

WHEN STATES FALL

In Alabama a few days ago a mob called at the jail after a prisoner had been locked in his cell and demanded that the sheriff turn him over. The sheriff, probably feeling unequal to the task of defending the prisoner surrendered the keys. The prisoner was taken out, carried some distance and lynched in a rather public place, the lynchers lingering to see the aftermath. A grand jury investigation followed, the sheriff was called and testified. Yes, he had recognized some of the men in the mob, etc. The grand jury failed to indict.

A few days later the information leaked out in Washington that plans are under way to pass a federal law against lynching and take lynchers into the federal courts. That will be different.

For a number of years there have come threats from the north, east and west, of making lynching a federal offense. It has been fought back one way and another. We would not be surprised to see the threat made good this time. There is a strong feeling out of the South that southern states are not doing what they can do to prevent lynchings. There is a feeling that the situation would be far different if the parties who make up the mobs knew that they would be brought into the federal courts and tried for murder.

Here is another case where the state loses "rights" to the federal government because the state is doing the job poorly. If the states would handle the lynching problem as they should handle it, there would be no further talk of federal interference. And this goes for other matters in which the states are slow to act in safe-guarding the rights of the people.

New Approach to an Old Stench

Every new year revives the hope that in the coming twelve-month the South will for the first time remain undisgraced by a lynching. Every year has seen the hope defeated. We managed to get through January without raising the old stench, but February 2 revived it. At Headland, Ala., the usual mob, overpowered the jailer in the usual fashion and lynched an 18-year-old Negro accused—this time—of the usual crime. Some say they hanged the victim before they shot him. Others say they shot him before they hanged him. All agree that no judge or jury ever tried him.

The crime is timed with the introduction in Congress of a new anti-lynching bill virtually identical in terms with the Costigan-Wagner bill which was choked to death in the Senate on May 1, 1935 at the end of a Southern filibuster. Will it be choked to death again? It is hard to say. Our guess would be that it is good for at least one more choking. But not for indefinitely repeated chokings, unless the South frees itself of this form of savagery by its own unaided efforts—a somewhat forlorn possibility, but yet a possibility, for the lynching curve is undeniably on the downgrade.

One reason why Southern filibusters are not likely to prove as effectiye in the future as they have been in the past, is because the idea of Federal intervention in the stamping out of intrastate crimes shown to be beyond effective prosecution by the States themselves, has become less abhorrent to the States-righters as one State after another has welcomed the ministrations of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in connection with kidnapings and kindred offenses. It requires logical agility of a high order to denounce Federal anti-lynching intervention as an invasion of States rights and at the same time to welcome Federal intervention in kidnaping as a safeguard of the lives of States citizens.

Another reason why Southern filibusters against Federal anti-lynching bills are likely to lose potency is because they no longer excite the old admiration back home that they used to. The idea is taking deeper and deeper root that lynching is a corrosive Southern disgrace and that, if it can't be eradicated any other way, it is worth risking a little help from the central government. Signs that the old Southern squeamishness over Federal anti-lynching bills is beginning to evaporate, are appearing in the South's newspapers. The Richmond Times-Dispatch on last Tuesday devoted a searching and bluntly-worded editorial to the thesis that there is no visible "hope of ever wiping out lynching, the greatest crime against Southern civilization, except through Federal action" and called upon Congress to make the anti-lynching bill law.

Other Southern newspapers had already moved to this position. They include the Virginian-Pilot which, departing from its old hostility to this type of legislation, urged the passing of the Costigan-Wagner bill two years ago. Dealing with this measure on February 16, 1935, we said:

> To the Virginian-Pilot, which has in the past feared that the difficulties that would flow from a Federal anti-lynching law might outweigh its benefits, it no longer seems reasonable to entertain that view. It has become wholly illogical, it seems to us, to applaud the Federal Department of Justice for its efficient pursuit of bank robbers and kidnapers, and at the same time distrust a proposed Department of Justice pursuit of persons who, as members of orgiastic groups, hang men to trees or burn them at the stake, without benefit of judge or jury.

If it should be asked why Southern newspapers are moving now to a position that filled them with apprehension several years ago, the answer would have to be, we think, that the "moral climate' of the South, as regards this peculiarly Southern foulness has undergone a great change. Contemporaneously with this change, has taken place a reappraisal of the States' rights dogma in the course of which it has been denuded of much of its old chest-thumping mumbo-jumbo.

The legalists—Senators Bailey and Borah among them—continue to warn us that a Federal anti-lynching bill would do something terrible and irreparable to the reserved rights of the States. Legalistically, that may make sense. Morally, it makes no sense at all. There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish.

We have failed, in the exercise of our unabridged State sovereignty, to clean up this foul thing and it stinks all over the lot. It is worth sharing a bit of our superfluous and unused sovereignty with the Federal government if it will expedite the clean-up. There is at least some reason to believe that it would.

SOUND AND FURY

When the negro was lynched last week in Henry County, Governor Graves acted promptly and wisely in calling for "a thorough investigation," and strengthened his position by instructing the Attorney-General to bring impeachment proceedings against any derelict official. Well and good, for Alabama's Chief Magistrate. But why add this bit of political hokum, to the shameful proceeding: "Alabama so long as I am Governor, never will tolerate mob law."

The Henry County Grand Jury met and after the usual inquiry it was announced, "no true bills are found."

It is recalled that when Gelders, professed Communist, was seized by three cowardly villains in Birmingham, and carried 50 miles in a car, stripped and flogged and left by the way-side, half-dead, Gov. Graves was rightly incensed and declared "they can't do such things and get away with it in this state." So far nothing has happened and nothing is anticipated.

Gov. Graves is not to blame for these two flagrant miscarriages of the law but he is to blame for his tall talk, which was nothing more than a lot of sound and fury, intended for Northern consumption. The Old Testament warns us, "Be not rash with thy mouth."

A Stain On The Record

While Governor Hugh White of Mississippi was extending congratulations to the sheriffs yesterday on the fact that the state had gone through 1936 without a lynching, the newspapers were reporting that a stain had been placed on Alabama's record early this year by a mob killing. This occurred at Abbeville where a Negro suspected of attacking a white woman was taken from the jail and hanged at the scene of the alleged crime.

Governor Graves is to be commended for his prompt action in ordering an investigation of the lynching and his announced determination to learn whether the sheriff and jailer were negligent in their duty in regard to protecting their prisoner. The Governor has stated that steps will be taken to impeach the sheriff if it is found in the investigation that such action is justified, and he will have the support of the citizens of the whole state in that stand.

However, while Mississippi was being credited with a clear record in 1936, it was noted that it was the first year in several in which there had been no lynching.

"This is the first year since the turn of the century that Misssissippi has been without a case of lynching at the hands of a mob," the Governor wrote. "Realizing that this enviable record could not have been made without continuous vigilance and vigorous enforcement of our laws on the part of law-enforcing officers. I am taking this occasion to commend you upon your part in keeping our state free of unseemly mob action."

Alabama, fortunately, has not had many lynchings in recent years. But that fact does not make the Abbeville incident any less shameful and revolting.

THE WHITEWASH

The coat of whitewash which the Henry county grand jury smeared over the lynching is not particularly surprising because the mob's action received the blessings of the majority of the people of the section.

Sheriff Corbitt has declared repeatedly that he recognized several of the mobsters. There is no way of knowing, of course, whether or not he revealed their names to the grand jury. But if he did, then the grand jury not only balked at its sworn duty, but made Corbitt the goat.

And, this being true, the Sheriff emerges as the bravest man in the entire mess. His self respect is intact for he performed his sworn duty against great odds to the best of his ability—and, moreover, he can always remember with satisfaction that he was not a member of a gang of lawless killers.

We reproduce on this page an editorial from The New York Herald Tribune which the thoughtful reader will find of interest. The Eagle does not agree that a Federal anti-lynching bill should be passed; but The Eagle does know that every time a grand jury refuses to return indictments in a lynching the possibility of a Federal law becomes more probable.

If Virginia hasn't had a lynching since she passed a strong anti-lynch law 10 years ago, it might be well [illegible] the Alabama Legislature to inquire into the nature of the law with a view of applying it to this State.

The Picture The Eagle Didn't Run

Some newspapers believe in illustrating the gruesome, the horrible and repulsive in unvarnished fashion; The Eagle does not. It may be wrong in declining to print pictures of such brutalities as the lynchings, gory wrecks and so forth, but this newspaper sticks to that conviction. Above, is the outline of the body of Wes Johnson, Negro lynched in Henry County the other day. Printing the picture as it came to the news desk may have been of "educational value;" again it may not. But The Eagle invites the opinion of its readers upon pictures of this sort. Write what you think about pictures of this kind and address your letter to the editor of The Eagle. They will be welcomed. This picture was taken by an Eagle staff photographer and was treated in this newspaper's plant.

They Will be Surprised.

Wes Johnson, a negro, was arrested on charges of attacking a white girl in Alabama and, if guilty, would have been convicted by an Alabama jury, punished by Alabama courts.

But he was never tried. A group of armed men took him from the custody of authorities at the Abbeville, Ala., jail and a few hours later there was his body hanging from a tree near Headland to complete the all too familiar and excuseless story of law and order's surrender—another lynching, futile and foolish, debasing and dangerous.

Alabama has been making endeavors at achieving something like a civilized regard for organized government, but this "undetermined number of men" who do not trust Alabama juries to do their duty bring them all to naught.

And these very men, big with the courage of numbers—25 carloads against one unarmed Negro prisoner—will be surprised when the federal anti-lynching bill is eventually passed and made law, as it will be if the states do not take the obvious steps that can be taken to prevent lynchings.

LAW OVER LYNCH LAW

There is no crime so bad but lynching makes it worse. One didn't need to mention the word around the jail in Florence, South Carolina, the other day to see that things looked as bad for an angry crowd as for a Negro in its clutches. News dispatches tell how close those aroused citizens came to being a party to a lynching.

But what seemed like mob murder in the making became an orderly step in the due process of law. First the sheriff appealed to the crowd to forgo violence and give the law—and the man—a fair chance. Then the father of the young woman alleged to have been molested pleaded with fellow citizens to let the law have its way. With that the crowd put up its vengeance and gave the prisoner to the sheriff.

It is satisfying to see how effectively that indignant southern crowd was able to curb its actions. Mob emotions usually run wild at such a time. The facts emphasize how strong is the average individual's instinctive respect for law to which the sheriff and the father appealed in this outbreak. And whatever this proves for the individual it proves for people as a whole. The supremacy of collective reason over mob rule manifested in this episode helps to dispel a sectional libel predicted on the mistaken opinion that southern communities prefer lynching to law.

Lynchings usually get all the publicity they deserve. We hope the happening in South Carolina gets al the public notice it rightly deserves.—Christian Science Monitor.

The Lynching In Henry County

Alabama, which for years now has had one of the best records among the Southern states in the matter of lynchings, is the scene of the nation's first lynching in 1937. An 18-year-old Negro, accused of assaulting a young white woman, was lynched Monday night in Henry County. It is a great pity that a group of some 50 men should have outraged the law in this way, taken a human life without due trial and marred Alabama's relatively good record.

Let no one think that the crime of lynching is any longer condoned by the people of Alabama, or of any other state. It has been obvious for years that public sentiment did not uphold lynchings, as some have pretended to believe. There can no longer be any doubt on this score since the publication of the American Institute of Public Opinion's poll last Sunday on sentiment with regard to making lynching a federal crime. In the South 65 per cent of the people were shown to be in favor of a federal law against lynching, and in the nation 70 per cent. Since, even among those who condemn lynching, there is in the South some opposition to a federal statute on the subject, Southern sentiment against lynching is certainly much stronger than the 65 per cent favoring a federal anti-lynching law.

The reaction to this Henry County lynching in official circles is most gratifying. Gov. Graves, saying that so long as he is governor Alabama will not tolerate mob rule, has ordered a thorough investigation into the crime. Let the investigation proceed at once. If any of the lynchers can be brought to justice, Alabama will have done much to atone for the crime.

THE WAR AGAINST LYNCHING.

The New York Herald Tribune sees in a Virginia paper's demand for the enactment of the federal anti-lynching law, "The Beginning of the End of Lynching."

The occasion for the newspaper comment was the recent murder of a Negro prisoner, who was taken by a mob from an Alabama jail, hung to a tree and riddled with bullets. There was no defense of "the majesty of the law" by officers of the law, and no arrests.

The New York journal is probably correct in sensing that the end of such crimes, with assured freedom for the perpetrators, is in sight. But the beginning of that end is not just now. It has taken a long time to build up public opinion, and the task has been peculiarly difficult in the Southeastern and deep Southern states where, because of the practically numerical equality of the races, race antagonism was most bitter.

The Herald Tribune cites Virginia as having had a strong anti-lynching law on the statute books for ten years; and as having had no lynching in that time. Because of political and other conditions, that was rather easy for Virginia. It was vastly different in South Carolina where a governor in the latter part of the last century encouraged mobs by declaring he would, in certain cases, lead lynching parties; and when prisoners were surrendered to lynchers without question; and announcement made twelve hours in advance of the running of a railroad train to a lynching! The train ran and the lynching took place.

When the mob spirit was at its worst forty-six years ago The State was founded, and one of its first acts was to declare against lynching for any cause. It was, we believe, the first newspaper in the South to take that stand. Forty-one years ago, its editor was denounced in public mass meeting called for the purpose of condemning The State's condemnation of a lynching. A state senator presided at the meeting, and the editor was at its conclusion, burned in effigy.

But hard as the going was, public sentiment was formed and strengthened. So much so that in the first term of D. C. Heyward as governor (he was inaugurated in January, 1903) the legislature voted him a substantial fund—$30,000 we believe—to employ Pinkerton detectives to gather evidence against lynchers. With evidence thus obtained, a lyncher was brought to trial. The jury finally set him free, but his defense cost him and his family a small fortune. The apprehension that lynching had become a pastime only safe for men of means, had a very sobering effect.

About the same time the legislature made a county, in which a lynching occurred, liable to the heirs of the mob-murdered man for $2,000. Not very effective because of the difficulties of collecting, but nevertheless a gesture to strengthen the hands of law officers in defending prisoners. They could fall back upon the plea that, in duty bound, they must protect the taxpayers from the cost of a lynching!

There have, however, been many brave and duty-loving sheriffs and deputies in the South who have rightly maintained that in resisting mobs they were not protecting a criminal or alleged criminal, but were defending the law which stands for civilization.

More than a year ago, in comment on a Southern lynching, The State declared that if the federal anti-lynching law was enacted, the responsibility would be upon the lynchers and those officers of the law who were tender with mobs. We then held that all the states having accepted, not only without protest but cheerfully, the intervention of the federal government against kidnapers, the logic of resistence to the anti-lynching law on the ground that it abrogated the right of states, was weakened. We regarded the anti-lynching law as less of an invasion of the rights of states than a federal child labor law.

The State said then and we repeat, that when it comes to taking a position which might bring upon us any moral responsibility for murders by mobs, such position we will not take. With us civilization comes first.

MOB RULE IN ALABAMA

The first lynching of the year having occurred in Alabama, Governor Bibb Graves declares, "Alabama, so long as I am Governor never will tolerate mob rule." Although he may not have so understood it, the Governor's assertion is in effect a challenge, a challenge to none other than Bibb Graves, Governor of Alabama. For if the State is not going to tolerate mob rule, what does he propose to do about this flagrant instance of mob rule?

No Governor of any State in the Union condones mob rule. That goes without saying. But some are more vigorous than others in combating it.

The recent lyching is not the first in Alabama. We mention that fact in sorrow rather than in reproach. With the Governor on record as declaring that mob rule will never be tolerated in the State while he holds office, the obvious question is, what is he going to do about it? —Roanoke Times.

THE MONITOR LOOKS AT LYNCHING

Because it was the first instance of mob violence in 1937 and the first lynching in Alabama in several years, the Henry county rope and lead party which put away Wes Johnson has come in for discussion in a great number of leading American papers. Invariably, the question of a federal anti-lynching law has been coupled with comment on the killing of the Alabama negro.

The Christian Science Monitor, realizing that lynching in the south is not merely the manifestation of a widespread race prejudice but rather the stupid attempt of ignorant and unthinking mobs to take the law in their hands without thought of justice, comments upon the spirit in the south which supports the movement for an anti-lynching law.

The Monitor states:

In contrast to the customary aftermath to deplore lynching and do nothing to prevent further outbreaks by prosecuting citizens who participate in such crimes, popular feeling is now crystallizing in a purposeful direction. The Richmond Times-Dispatch recommends enactment of a federal anti-lynching law as stringently phrased and enforced as the federal kidnaping law. It cites the Virginia statute against lynching as a model—and with good effect. In the ten years since its enactment Virginia has not had a lynching.

That this drastic proposal to prevent lynching emanates from the south is significant in more ways than one. It attests a sectional preference for law and order where the rights of the individual are at stake, and a natural dislike for uncivilized orgies of communal crime. This attitude embraces a clearer, collective recognition of the fundamental fact that two lawless deeds never mend one broken law. Appeals for enactment of a federal anti-lynching statute show furthermore that lynching is not merely the south's problem. They appeal to the humanitarian impulse in all people. There is increasing assurance that either by state or federal action lynching will be stopped.

SHERIFFS AND LYNCHINGS

Every man in the deep South knows that grand jury action against members of a lynching mob is an empty gesture. It means nothing except an increasing contempt for lawful processes and an increasing deference to the mob spirit.

The way to strike at the lynching evil is to strike at the county sheriffs. They love their jobs as well as their voting neighbors. There is nothing except his family that a jobholder loves as much as his job.

There isn't a sheriff in Alabama that, given fair notice, is not capable of preventing a lynching. Everybody knows that. Only in very exceptional circumstances is a sheriff helpless. A determined peace officer who has any sense knows how to stop a mob. Everybody in this state knows that is true.

It is very well for Governor Graves to demand a grand jury investigation of the recent lynching in Henry county. That means that grand jurors, some of whom may have been in the mob, will return a no-bill. They nearly always do. Grand jurors are the neighbors and friends of lynchers. They are never likely to take vigorous action against mob killers. Petit juries are even less likely to take final action against neighbors who are known to have participated in a lynching, since the victim of the lynching invariably is the object of loathing by all good citizens.

But Governor Graves is hitting a home-run when he calls upon Attorney-General Albert Carmichael to institute impeachment proceedings against the sheriff of Henry county. That's the way to go after the lynch-loving yeomanry of our fair state. They don't like that. They can't handle it. They know that a negligent sheriff will be tried, not by jurors that helped lynch a man, or at least live next door to a lyncher, but by the supreme court of Alabama.

In other words, they know that a negligent officer must give an account of his conduct to the highest judicial authority in the state. He will get a fair trial, which is one reason that lynchers do not relish impeachment proceedings.

In demanding an impeachment trial of the sheriff of Henry county, Governor Graves is acting in the best traditions of Alabama governors.

The governors of this state have always hated lynchings. The Advertiser is glad to reaffirm what it has frequently said before, that Governor Bibb Graves has been one of the most diligent and courageous foes of lynchers that ever sat in the executive chair of a state that has never had a governor who was indifferent to mob violence.—Montgomery Advertiser.

The Decline In Lynching

POSSIBLY nothing will deter those citizens, an increasing number of whom are of the South, who favor the proposed federal anti-lynching law; but they will do well to deliberate over a statement by President F. D. Patterson of Tuskegee Institute pointing out the tremendous decrease of mob violence since 1887.

In this period Dr. Patterson finds that lynchings declined 90 per cent. due, he says, to "growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people."

The record shows 1,531 mob victims in the period 1887-1896, and 151 between 1927 and 1936.

Dr. Patterson lists three factors as contributing to the slow but great advancement of law against lawlessness.

1. The disappearance of frontier characteristics from the South. In the frontier West and South lynching was prevalent.

2. The breaking down of isolation in the South by the telegraph, telephone, radio, and paved roads.

3. "Increasing agitation within the South against lynchings. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings."

If this movement to have a federal police law virtually replace the police laws of the states had been proposed say in 1890. it would have been more logical than today. That was the period in which over 1,500 victims were done to death by mobs.

But at that time the fever to make all things new and better by statute law had not gained the pitch which we find in it now.

And so perhaps the well meaning but mistaken statesmen and publicists, North and South, will press on for a law that enacted will have this unhappy though unintended effect: to condemn and belittle the efforts—the successful efforts—of millions of people, chiefly in the South where most of the lynching occurs, who after years of hard struggle begin to see the substantial fruits of their labors.

Wise teachers and law-givers praise and encourage all reaching out toward justice and right doing. This sound pedagogy is now indirectly decried even by some prominent Southern newspapers and Southern citizens.

For the proposed federal law, to say nothing of its advance into new areas of centralization of all things political and governmental at Washington, will inevitably instill into the thinking of the Southern people the false and harmful notion that they have done badly and not well in this matter. Will that harsh and unjust criticism from the Congress of the United States foster co-operation with a federal law enacted to supersede the police powers of the states?

The Negro Is Dead, But The Enthusiasm Of Mob Spirit Lives On

Editor of The Eagle:

I have been a constant reader of the Eagle for some time and have read all the letters conserning the Lynching of Wes Johnson

Now there is a few words I would like to say I agree with Mr McKnight a think he was right in every statement he made and expressed my thoughts very much Also Mr Ezelle I think Houston county aught to be proud of a gentleman like hem and do all they can to make him thier next shereff his letter I am sure won him a scare of votes

Now a word to Mr E E Johnson of Abbeville Ala will you please turn to Second Samuel read the 13 chapter 32 verse and Zech 14:2 also Deut. 22:25-27 and I am sure you will find that the mob men of Henry Co. did the right thing by puting the negro to death surely Mr Johnson has not just read one scripture and not looking on further in his Bible we should read it through and believe according to our understanding now we surely read in these scriptures I have given you where way back in those days they did the same for a man who committed rape as they did for West Johnson.

Now here is hoping that no other white lady is attacked by a negro man who is not worth the powder and lead that it takes to kill him with, and if ever there is he will get the same that Wes Johnson got

BASCOM ANTHONY ON LYNCHING

He is oftener right than wrong, but he's dead wrong in wanting a bill passed that would include the payment, by the county, of $10,000 to the lynched person's family. Lynching, like many other crimes, indefensible, but to reward the family of the person lynched would encourage rather than retard the crime.—Editor.

Dr. Anthony's article in part follows:

"You probably won't agree with what I shall now say about our lynching bees. But if I were Hitler I'd make a law that automatically remoed from office any sheriff with all his deputies, bailiffs and jailor in any county where a duly arrested prisoner was lynched. I'd also make the county automatically due $10,000 to the lynched person's family. If we have not enough moral character to stop lynching then maybe our love of office and the love of money would be our best substitute for character. Over half the lynchings in the United States for 1936 took place in Georgia, be it said to our shame. If the officers responsible for the arrest and detention of these who were lynched were automatically removed from office then lynchings would soon become as rare as the Dionne quintuplets. I wish some member of the Legislature would introduce such a bill."

A National Disgrace.

There has been another mob murder in Alabama, with a Negro as the victim. The Negro was Wes Johnson, a young farm hand, whose bullet-riddled body was found handing to a tree near Headland after a posse of armed men took him from jail at Abbeville the night before. Authorities said he was charged with attacking a white girl.

Johnson had been arrested and placed in jail. There can be no doubt that had he been given his day in court he would have been convicted if there had been the slightest evidence of his guilt. Everybody in Alabama, including the mobsters in this case, knows that a Negro in that State who commits or attempts to commit a crime against a white woman had as well go hang himself.

There was no chance for Johnson to escape justice. He was in the hands of the law and would have suffered the penalty which the law prescribes for his crime or for the crime of which he was accused. Yet, according to a dispatch from Headland, about twenty-five automobiles containing an undetermined number of men drove up to the jail, took the prisoner from the jailer, and put him to death.

Late reports are that no arrests have been made in connection with the lynching. The history of such outrages in Alabama and most other Southern States teaches the public to suspect that no arrests will be made, or certainly that no member of the mob will be held to answer for the murder of the Negro in defiance of constituted authority. In all probability the Coroner will find that Johnson came to his death "at the hands of parties unknown," and that will end the matter.

A number of anti-lynching bills have been offered in Congress in the last several years but none has passed. The measures have been defeated largely through the opposition of Senators from Southern States, where the lynching evil flourishes. These Senators have contended that a Federal anti-lynching law would infringe the rights of the States, but the States should not claim rights which they refuse to exercise. If States have a right to condone lynching, as many of them apparently do, it would seem that the government also has a right to do what it can to suppress mob lawlessness, since the Constitution of the United States declares no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

Congress now has before it another anti-lynching bill. The measure should be enacted into law, since the evil at which it is aimed is a national disgrace. Many who have opposed such legislation have been forced to the conclusion that the only hope for stamping out lynching is in Federal action.

A Protest From Chairman Of A. A. C. P.

Editor of The Eagle:

We feel that as the mouthpiece of the best element of colored citizens, we would not do our duty if we did not comment on the picture of the lynching carried in The Eagle last Thursday.

Let us say at the beginning that such incidents are regretable, and we do not condone such criminal acts as the victim of the lynching was supposed to have committed. We believe not only this crime, but all crimes perpetuated against society should receive just punishment. But not only does a lynching disregard established law and order, but it completely ignores the guilt or innocence of the victim.

Not only is this true, but a lynching creates a hysteria among the entire populace, and thereby makes it unsafe for the most law-abiding Negroes. A lynching stirs up latent animosities, and thereby makes for bad race relationship.

If the law was allowed to take its course all of these things would be negligible. There is no virtue in a lynching that will stand the test of enlightened civilization in organized society.

If lynch law is justifiable, then the number of mulatto Negroes would give the Negro just reason to stage a number of lynchings.

The picture that you printed can only serve to create more prejudice. And surely we can do without any more of this.

We heartily compliment you on the editorial stand that you have taken in regard to the lynching.

H. SHIVERS, Chairman Press and Publicity Committee, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Sound And Fury

(Selma Times-Journal)

When the Negro was lynched last week in Henry County, Governor Graves acted promptly and wisely in calling for "a thorough investigation," and strengthened his position by instructing the Attorney-General to bring impeachment proceedings against any derelict official. "Well and good, for Alabama's Chief Magistrate. But why add this bit of political hokum to the shameful proceeding: "Alabama so long as I am Governor, never will tolerate mob law."

The Henry County Grand Jury met and after the usual inquiry it was announced, "no true bills are found."

It is recalled that when Gelders, professed Communist, was seized by three cowardly villains in Birmingham, and carried 50 miles in a car, stripped and flogged and left by the way-side, half-dead, Gov. Graves was rightly incensed and declared "they can't do such things and get away with it in this State." So far nothing has happened and nothing is anticipated.

Gov. Graves is not to blame for these two flagrant miscarriages of the law but he is to blame for his tall talk, which was nothing more than a lot of sound and fury, intended for northern consumption. The Old Testament warns us, "Be not rash with thy mouth."

Something New in Lynchings

In most particulars, the lynching yesterday near Headland, Alabama, of a strapping, 18-year-old Negro farm hand complied with the accepted formula for mob rule in the South. The victim, accused of assaulting a white woman, was being held in a jail which lacked a great deal of being mob-proof. Fifty men stormed it, held the sheriff and the jailer prisoner until the Negro could be removed from a cell, and later shot the alleged criminal an strung him to a tree.

Continuing the social graces demanded in all polite lynching parties in the South, Governor Bibb Graves at Montgomery instructed Attorney General A. A. Carmichael to conduct an inquiry. Then the chief executive made the customary pronouncement: "As long as I am governor of this state, mob rule will not be tolerated."

At this point, however, there is a possbiility that the lynching formula will be discarded for something quite original. Under all conventional rules, the sheriff is supposed to say that he has not the slightest idea concerning the identity of any member of the mob; newspapers are supposed to fume and fuss over the lack of official initiative; the governor is supposed to declare that all possible attempts to solve the matter have failed and that the investigation is at an end, and finally, everybody is supposed to settle down to normal again and pretend that the lynching was just one of those unsolved and unsolvable crimes that couldn't be helped.

But Sheriff Louis Corbett upset the apple cart. Perhaps he is one of those individuals who do not care for the little conventionalities of life. Or maybe he is just plain dumb, and didn't know what was expected of a sheriff under the circumstances. At any rate, he stepped out of his role to remark that he recognized some of the men in the lynching party and that a special grand jury would be called to investigate. This little piece of forgetfulness of the social niceties incident to a lynching is likely to turn into a tough break for the sheriff, especially when re-election time comes around, but what of it? A man possessed of the originality of Sheriff Corbett is too original to be wasting his time on a sheriff's job anyway.

LYNCHING IN ALABAMA.

The nation's first 1937 lynching was staged in Alabama last week when an 18-year-old negro was seized by a mob of about 50 men who stormed the jail at Abbeville, took the prisoner to a thicket, hanged him and riddled his body with bullets. He had been accused of assaulting a white woman.

The body was found several hours after the lynching by a deputy sheriff.

Sheriff Corbett said he recognized some of the mob and indicated a special grand jury would be called to investigate.

Governor Bibb Graves at Montgomery directed Attorney General Carmichael to conduct an inquiry and file impeachment proceedings against any officer if he finds such proceedings warranted."

As If It Was a Crime

Alabama, after a gallant fight in which it has staved off lynchings for more than a year, succumbed to the malady yesterday and gave the nation its first mob murder in 1937. This year's was on the 33rd day, as compared to the 74th day last year, and the 11th day the year before. Last year's lynch victims were nine — five in Georgia, two in Arkansas, one in Mississippi and one in Florida. That was less than half the 20 of the previous year and, beside, 1936 presented evidence of a genuine determination to stamp out mob law. Officers prevented 35 lynchings, and 30 of these instances were in the South.

Wes Johnson, a six-foot Negro youth, was in the jail at Headland, Ala., awaiting trial on a charge of raping a white woman. The mob imprisoned the sheriff and the jailer, took the Negro out, shot him and hung him to a limb. Sheriff Louis Corbett declared that he recognized certain members of the mob. Governor Bibb Graves, whose firm stand with respect to lynchings has made Alabama outstanding, ordered an immediate investigation with a promise to bring about the impeachment of any officer of the law who should fail in his duty.

Just to show the vigor with which Alabama may be expected to prosecute its investigation: Last May, soldiers snatched three Negroes from a mob in Huntsville; police officers, also in May, recovered a Negro from a mob near Goodwater; militiamen faced a mob with machine guns and protected a prisoner at Anniston a month or so later. They don't coddle lynchers in Alabama, but treat them as ordinary criminals, which they are.

No Different

The editorial in last Sunday's News headed The Alabama Way seems to have been somewhat premature. The government of Alabama has a way of saving prisoners from mobs, all right, as it has demonstrated on more than a few occasions. And it appeared from Governor Graves' prompt action after the lynching in Alabama last week, the first in the United States for 1937, that the State was going to make up in the vigor of its prosecution for the ineffectiveness of the officers of the law at Henry County jail.

But grand juries in Alabama, it turns out, are no different where lynchings are concerned from other grand juries in the South. This one failed to return any indictments. No, it did not investigate the conduct of the sheriff. Yes, it whitewashed the whole affair.

We have learned, however, to expect the unusual from Alabama, and it may be that some way will yet be found to circumvent the unwillingness of citizens in a community to indict other citizens for a mere mob murder.

Last week a negro man was lynched in Alabama for the usual cause, assault, of which he was charged. We do not approve of lynching whites or blacks, but believe in law and order. But is it not possibly true that this lynching is an echo of the farce trials of several negroes at Scottsboro, where continual butting in of outside influences have prevented the law being carried out?

UNFORTUNATE FOR BAINBRIDGE

The burning of a negro's body, after he had been shot and killed by officers, in the discharge of their duty, was indeed unfortunate for that community. Last Saturday two young women were outraged and their bodies mutilated almost beyond recognition. This brutal crime was committed near the city of Bainbridge, in an isolated section of forest near a river. The bodies were dragged to a secluded spot and thrown in the underbrush. After an all night search by officers and citizens, the negro who committed the crime was caught and arrested in a nearby town, Dothan, Alabama. He confessed to his actions and to the murder of the two women; the officers, in order to avoid trouble, decided to carry the culprit to Savannah. While enroute to that city, the negro attempted a daring escape by jumping from the automobile and running. The officers fired upon him—some of the bullets taking effect, the negro died instantly. The body was brought back to Bainbridge and turned over to a negro funeral home for burial. When it became known that the negro had been caught and his dead body was in the mortuary, a hundred or more people gathered around the undertaker's place, stormed and overpowered the attendants, carrying the body through the streets of the negro residential section, and then to the baseball park where kerosene was applied to fuel stacked around the negro's body and soon it was cremated.

Such action on the part of a citizenry is inexcusable and without justification. The crime committed by the negro meant a death sentence by the court, but after he had been shot and killed by the officers, common decency would have demanded a funeral and burial.

The occurrence is regretable and a blot on a law abiding community. Such crimes of course, causes the blood of our people to boil, but when it is known that such criminals will be shown no mercy by the courts and that they will receive the death penalty, be they white or colored, the perpetrators should be dealt with under the terms of the law and the sanctity of the community upheld and protected.

QUIT YOUR LYNCHING!

Congressman Sumners of Texas is chairman of the House judiciary committee, we believe. As such he feels responsible—in addition to being a Southerner—for the anti-lynching bill which has passed the House after introduction by a New York Congressman who has a well-shaded district, but perhaps has never been where one has to carry a lantern to see his way in a crowd down here. He has given interviews and written Southern governors about it, and cries, even as of old: "Help me, Cassius, or we sink!"

He warns all, that if "they" do not stop lynching—which generally is done unexpectedly and suddenly by a small number, some of them quite irresponsible—a federal lynching law will be passed, and the federal grand juries, once in a great while, first in the Northern and then in the Southern District, will indict somebody or other if they can learn who they are, or even find John Doe and Richard Roe indictments—and there will be great times at the trials.

Under the President's court bill, even some of the new Northern Judges may be assigned to try such cases.

Suppose that somebody introduce a bill up there to indict the sheriffs, the constables, the governor and district attorneys who have failed to put down the mobs in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, New York, California, where thousands, innumerable times, have gathered and broken many laws; have defied the police and the courts and all constituted authority; have denied the right to others not affiliated with them to work; have stoned and beaten non-affiliated employes; have stopped business; have taken possession of plants and places of business; have stopped transportation and business. Why not such a federal law? These things take place, have taken place, will take place, and "conciliation" and "arbitration" and "conference" are the resort by the States where these things have occurred. Let the Federal government take charge of it. More than 70,000 are going out now—and they know what it means.

Then, again, why not introduce a bill to give the federal government authority to indict all those scoundrels who have kidnaped, abused and killed poor little children, grown men, women? Gangs of the large "cultivated" and "literate" cities who have taken men for rides and crossed State boundaries? And why not have the Government take charge of the unconscionable and criminal rackets in the large cities?

We do not condone lynching at all, and wish that all citizens of this and other States would abide by the law—resort to it for punishment of crimes. But we have to bear with it—the people of the East and West do not. But nevertheless the people of New York, by their Congressman's bill, would administer our police laws. They always are telling us what to do in the South. We are always wrong, deficient, omissive and commissive in some way—we always measure short when their yardstick is laid to us mentally, physically, sentimentally, economically, educationally, artistically, productively, and otherwise.

We ask them to clean their own stables. We know very well whence comes the motive of these bills and anti-lynch bills. We are not one whit deceived.

At San Perdo, California, last week, a policeman shot a longshoreman. There was a mass meeting of 4000 marine workers who "took over" San Pedro for the day in protest, and defied the police. They paralyzed the lawful control of the city. Work on the water front was halted and business places closed. Yet we are unlawful in the South!

And so we ask that we give them a Roland for their Oliver. We want some federal bills giving the government power to straighten out some conditions in other places if we are to have a federal anti-lynch law. And we would like to read some of our Southern Congressmen telling them that. What happened in California until Southern Representatives helped the Western Congressmen pass the anti-alien law? Plenty of assaults upon Orientals! But their Congressmen now recall the help we gave them then. Introduce a

The Bainbridge, G[illegible] affair a few nights ago made more votes in all probability for the Gavagan anti-lynching bill. A negro guilty of a hideous crime, had been shot to death by officers while attempting to escape, and a mob, not content with the negro's death, collected, took the body from an undertaking place, dragged it about and committed other indignities that no civilized community should tolerate. Were help needed to line up a few doubtful votes for the Gavagan measure, this latest Georgia affair, on top of the dual lynching in Alabama a few weeks ago, should prove ample.

THE BAINBRIDGE LYNCHING

The people of Bainbridge are shamed in the same manner as was one of her sister cities some years ago. The body of a negro was dragged through the streets and burned. The negro had been slain by officers when trying to escape from them. He had been accused of attacking two women in or near that city. The mob that dragged the dead body through the streets and then burned it may have been actuated with a desire to warn others of what they might expect if that crime was committed but we doubt that this was the sole motive.

There is too much of passion in such an affair, too much of unreasoning excitement that often eggs those who ordinarily might not be tempted to take any part to commit such acts. They are never proud of it afterward. It will never be a credit to that county or to ours to have been some means adopted to prevent it—imagine dragging a dead body through the streets to be seen by women and children, even though the crime that aroused such fury was against them and the resentment was in their behalf as a group.

It has happened and only the Good Lord knows why it was done. We never have understood that form of lust, although we might feel so mentally unbalanced if the crime was committed against one of ours, rather than in an abstract sense. In the anti-lynching law recently passed in the congress there is no provision for punishment of such a crime although we think that a law to fine all who participated in that

Barbarism At Bainbridge.

Willie Green, twenty-year-old Negro, was arrested near Bainbridge, Georgia, on the charge of killing two white women and was said to have confessed the crime. As officers were taking him handcuffed to jail at Albany in that State he attempted to break open a door of the automobile and escape, and they killed him. So the officers reported.

Thus the young Negro paid in full for his crime, if he was guilty, and it would seem that everybody should have been satisfied. But everybody was not. The body was taken to a Negro funeral home in Bainbridge, but a mob went to the place and took possession of the corpse, tied it behind an automobile, dragged it through the streets and burned it in a baseball park.

"Twice around the main square went a caravan of some fifty automobiles, one of them dragging the body," says a dispatch from Bainbridge. "Then a tour was made of the town's Negro district. It ended at the ball park, where a section of fence was used to make a pyre whose flames leaped twenty feet high around the body. 'There is not enough left of it to burn,' a reporter on the scene declared."

"I'm mighty sorry to see this happen," Sheriff Catledge said when informed of the incident, but he made no statement as to plans for a possible investigation of the violence. Since perhaps the most serious charge that would be brought against the mobsters would be that of disorderly conduct, the city authorities may make an investigation and collect a few fines for the city coffers. The mob did not kill the Negro. Possibly resentful because they had been deprived of an opportunity to pull off an old-fashioned lynching-bee, the savages who composed the mob dragged the dead body around the town until there seems to have been little left of it, and then burned that little.

We protest against this outrage, not so much because of what was done to the young Negro who confessed the murder and mutilation of two white women, but because it was done by white men who are supposed to be civilized and to live in a civilized land. Another sickening exhibition of barbarism has been staged, and the shame and the disgrace are Georgia's and the South's.

Mob Rule Assaulted.

A recent lynching in Henry county, Alabama, was followed by a grand jury investigation which resulted in recommendation by the inquisitorial body that the case be dropped. It was alleged, however, that the sheriff of Henry county had been negligent in that he failed to protect a prisoner against a mob.

The grand jury's decision appeared to be just another case of white-washing by local officials. Attorney General Carmichael took issue with the jury, and after personal investigation of the crime he says he is convinced "beyond doubt" that the sheriff should be ousted. Meanwhile, Alabama's governor, Bibb Graves, vigorously declares he intends to "put an end to lynching in this state." Matching action to word, he has instructed the state's attorney general to institute impeachment proceedings against the sheriff.

It is not often that a governor and an attorney general go over the heads of grand jurymen. In attacking the usual excuse for resort to lynching—namely, to protect womanhood — Governor Graves says such excuse is "pure poppycock," for it would not take a petit jury "more than 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict" for that character of crime.

In further striking out against mob crime the governor says—and it is the truth—that "only lawless hoodlums and enemies of government" participate in lynchings. The courageous words and the forthright action of the governor and the attorney general of Alabama afford convincing proof that the south has been awakened and is stirred over the shame, disgrace and discredit lynch law invariably brings.

More Mob Violence

The South seems to be making up for lost time as regards lynching. Only a short time back the country was stunned by the brutal demonstration of mob law in Mississippi in which two negroes were tortured and burned. Now Georgia has her share of spotlight in this infamy. A negro man who is reported to have confessed to killing and mutilating two white women was shot and killed while deputies were in the act of taking him to jail. Subsequently an infuriated mob stormed the undertakers' shop where the body lay seized it and carried it to a baseball park, where it was destroyed by fire.

There was extreme provocation of course, but nothing that would justify such exhibitions of mob violence. Lynching seems to have its fits and starts in this section. Of course mob violence is not confined to the South, but every time such barbaric assaults are made upon law and constituted authorities it gives the South-baiters of other sections just one more peg upon which to hang their resounding harps of prejudice and enmity.

THE CAUSE OF LYNCHING

Last week a man was convicted and sentenced to one year in prison for causing the death of his wife. He had made her pull a plow and had performed an illegal operation on her, so it was charged. And he got one year in prison on a charge of manslaughter, then admitted to bond and probably a new trial.

And, then people will ask why mobs go crazy and lynch people. Until the courts function much more efficiently than they do now we will have lynchings regardless of whether theiniquitous anti-lynching bill is made a law by the national congress.

We do not cry for the blood of this man who abused his wife. He may have been innocent, but if he was nt the cause of his wife's death, he should have been given his freedom. If he was he should have been more severely punished.

Sheriff vs. Mob.

We would like to know more about that Texas sheriff, Jess Sweeten, who unstrapped his guns before he went out to tell a gathering mob that he was going to protect his prisoner as the law demanded.

The best guess is that he is one of those grey-eyed men with a reputation for meaning what he says, like the lone Texas Ranger who was sent to a small town to handle another riotous gathering. This apocryphal person, when a citizen expressed surprise that only one officer has been sent to deal with the situation, is credited with replying: "Well, there's only one mob." Reports have it that he did his job well.

Sheriff Sweeten seems to have thought too much of his reputation to submit to being "surprised" by about a hundred men, some of them hardened workers from the east Texas oil fields. One of his deputies had been seized and deprived of his shooting irons, but within the jail there were five more deputies in addition to their chief.

When he faced the mobsters, unarmed, he indulged in no fancy oratory. "Boys," he said, "it's my business to protect my prisoner. I don't want any trouble, but I'm going to protect him in case there is any."

The men out front looked the speaker over for a minute, and then decided that it would be unhealthy to proceed further. Nobody made a threatening gesture and the sheriff went back inside to report that all was well. There would be no lynching in Athens, Texas, where the incident occurred.

With a few more sheriffs like Jess Sweeten lynch law would lose a good deal of its popularity in the South and the heated discussion over a federal law to curb the evil would hardly be necessary.

'LYNCHING' THE DEAD.

In the light of the crime which occurred at Bainbridge, Georgia, Monday, how pale by comparison seem stories of war atrocities. The most insidious propaganda could not possibly make more horrible than it actually was the act of a mob of white men which took from a mortuary the body of a Negro who had been shot and killed, and, after dragging it through the streets of the city behind a procession of automobiles, took it to a Negro baseball park, tore down part of the fence with which to make a pyre, and then burned the body. If one did not know such a thing had taken place, it would be impossible to believe it had happened. Yet it did happen, not in the midst of war, not in darkest Africa, but in a Southern community whose people boast they are descendants of an authentic aristocracy.

The Negro who was shot and killed and his body burned was the confessed slayer of two white women, one of whom he had attacked. The Negro was slain, according to Sheriff W. J. Catledge, when he suddenly wrenched open the door of a police automobile with his handcuffed hands and fled toward the woods. The Sheriff's report that the automobile was being driven at a speed of thirty-five miles an hour at the time seems worthy of investigation. A person who jumps from a car going that fast is scarcely able to flee. Since the Negro was handcuffed and presumably unarmed, it seems strange that three Deputies should have found it necessary to shoot the man dead. Perhaps if his legs had been shackled, he might have escaped. In any event, the Negro was killed, a fact which wiped clean the law's claim upon him.

The members of the mob which dragged the Negro's body through the streets and then burned it achieved nothing but disgrace for themselves and humiliation for their countrymen. There will be joy in Nazi Germany when the news is received that in the American Democracy which boasts of its freedom and its intellectual superiority over regimented peoples, a mob has seized and burned the body of a Negro. How must it seem to millions of people in our own country when these bestial crimes are permitted to occur with stereotyped expressions of regret in official quarters and nothing ever done about them?

Atlanta, Ga. Constitution

The mistaken impression that lynchers always escape unpunished in the south is an encouragement both to lynching and to those who believe federal law the only way to prevent the crime. In the 30-year period ending in 1930, the records show that some 70 lynchers were caught and given prison sentences. In Georgia, in 1930, for example, two lynchers were sentenced to imprisonment for life. In the same year Texas imposed prison terms on two. And in Alabama, during the governorship of Thomas E. Kilby (1919-23) some 34 lynchers were caught and punished.

In other words, mob murderers can be punished and have been punished in the south. Not enough of them and not severely enough, it is true, but it seems important that all parties concerned should know the facts.

HUMANITY AT ITS WORST
(Dothan, Ala. Eagle)

Spanish Loyalists, inflamed by intense hatred of the church, dug the bodies of long-buried priests and nuns from their graves and defiled and burned them.

The Bainbridge mob, burning with a hatred equally white hot, removed the body of a negro rapist and murderer from a morgue, drug it behind an automobile around the square and, followed by hundreds of men, women and children, burned it in a baseball park.

The Negro was already dead—"shot while attempting to escape," said the officers. (The car was moving 50 miles an hour, but the Negro "hit the ground running," they said.) So there was no point in staging the ghastly spectacle. But apparently the "best thought" in Bainbridge approved.

Fundamentally, the Bainbridge mob was the same as the Spaniards. Their reaction to hate was identical. And both were stupid.

But the writer simply cannot understand the man and woman who eagerly holds their child high in their arms that it might have a better view of such gruesome degeneracy of "civilized" people.

Mankind, it is proved again, will do anything through hatred.

FEDERAL REGIMENTATION

TWO statements in a recent report of the Wagner-Van Nuys anti-lynch bill are enough to make the blood of any ardent supporter of states rights,, if there are any such left in these days of Federal regimentation ,boil in righteous wrath.

The first is that, in the event the bill, which has been given a favorable report from a senate judiciary subcommittee, is passed by the national congress, it would use federal power to force state prosecution of lynchers. Now, lynching is a terrible crime. It brings out all the lust and animalism that is in civilized humans. It is bad for the morale of the community, for if a lynching of a member of one race occurs at the hands of another race, it is likely to incite race prejudice and may possibly lead to a race war. Lynchings are not to be condoned in any civilized and Christian community.

But that is no reason why the federal government should take a hand and "force" state prosecution. It's no business of Uncle Sam's. It's up to the local officers to see that the guilty persons are prosecuted. We grant that in the past there have been lynchings for which no one has ever been punished, but in the majority of cases we venture to say that this has been due to the slyness of the lynching party and not due to a lack of vigilance and courage on the part of the law officers.

The bill would seem to place the burden of responsibility for the lynching upon recognized police officers in a county or municipality, when they are very probably in no way responsible for the outrage. It is their duty to round up the criminals and turn them over to the prosecuting officers for conviction or acquittal, dependent on the strength of the evidence. It is not within the pale of federal jurisdiction to step in and tell county and state officers what to do.

The other paragraph that is enough to make a states right adherent see red is this: "A provision of the bill . . . would make counties in which lynchings occurred liable for civil damages to victims or their legal representatives. Civil damage could be sought in federal district court."

Why, we would like to know, should a county be liable for the action of a few people who might or might not be its citizens? Lynching parties are always composed of a few hot-headed people who act without thinking, spurred on by arosed feeling of the moment. In the county, then, to be indicted and all its tax-paying citizens to be made responsible for these people's actions? There doesn't seem any grounds for justification of such legislation.

Humanitarian the bill probably is, but we have had entirely too much "forcing" by federal power to tolerate a continued encroachment on jurisdiction that properly belongs to local officers, and there certainly appears to be no real reason to make counties responsible for acts with which they have had nothing to do.

"FUTILE" IS THE WORD.

The Daily News, for its part confesses satisfaction over the failure of southern oratory to prevent favorable action by the house of representatives upon federal anti-lynching legislation, say the southern honorables between snoozes over the passing of state's rights, is futile.

But their outbursts, for all the progress which the southern states have obviously made in the reduction of mobbery, are drowned by the moans, the shrieks, the piteous appeals and the protestations of innocence from victims who continue to be done to death with pistol, with shotgun, with faggot and with blow-torch.

State's rights carry commensurate responsibilities, and so long as those responsibilities are not met corollary rights and privileges are nullified. Is it, has it ever been, a state's right to allow a helpless prisoner to be snatched from the law, dragged from the temple of justice, condemned by shouting mobsters and impaled upon the nearest tree?

Futility is the keyword around which we would place our arguments for federal anti-lynching legislation. Lynchings may occur with less frequency. But so long as a single instance does occur and local authorities fail to apprehend and convict the perpetrators the responsibility for retributive justice, for guarantee of the right of due process and trial by law, reverts to higher and more powerful agencies of government. Southern honorables failed to narrate how many mobsters had ever been identified, tried and convicted in their or anybody else's bailiwick. One of the North Carolina representatives referred to what was presumably the Needleman case and the effective manner in which its perpetrators were punished. All possible glory to Solicitor Gilliam and Judge Sinclair who cleaned up in Martin county; but that example hardly contained all the factors which enter into a lynching and its denouement. The victim of mobbery was not a negro and he lived to aid in the prosecution. Comment upon general lynchings as they occurred subsequently in Edgecombe, Pender and Franklin counties was conspicuously missing.

Whether the Gavagan act, if approved by the senate, will accomplish its purpose, the Daily News frankly does not know. It can be no more futile than present state and local indifference. Our greatest hope of results comes not from imposition of penalties upon counties in which lynchings occur or upon officers who allow prisoners to be taken from them but from the possibility of the ferreting out of mob members by Uncle Sam's sleuths and their subsequent imprisonment for their atrocity. Once the idea obtains that the federal government means business, as the state governments do not, prospective lynchers will do more sober thinking than the moments preceding a rope and faggot party had ever been thought capable of producing.

Heavy Must Lie the Mobster's Heart

(Birmingham News)

The great danger that always exists when an impassioned mob assumes to administer what it may think is justice is exemplified in this charge at Montgomery that the Henry County mob which took a prisoner from jail and lynched him had the wrong negro.

One of the great reasons why lynchings are wrong is that they deny the accused the right of a fair chance to prove his innocence. And always when a mob acts, there is the possibility that the wrong man becomes the victim of the crowd's irrational anger.

Any normal-thinking man after participating in a lynching must have twinges of conscience. He has done an illegal thing. He has joined in an act that strikes at the roots of justice. He has yielded to passion in a case where, because a life was at stake, reason should prevail if it ever prevails anywhere.

But on top of this remorse rests also the ever-present fear that the mob acting in haste and in heat has lynched the wrong person. The mobster can never get away from that fear. He can never get rid of the possibility that he has killed in error. A juror sitting in a capital case may have that feeling, but never in the degree that a mob-killer has.

Of course this charge at Montgomery should be investigated. For if it could be proved that the mob was mistaken, then lynching would have received a worse blow than it could from either the impeachment of Sheriff Corbitt or the conviction of some of the mob members.

It is seldom that the citizens of the Muscle Shoals district are privileged to hear such a distinguished scientist as Dr. George Washington Carver, of Tuskegee Institute, who addressed a capacity audience at the Sheffield High school auditorium Tuesday night, under the auspices of the Wilson Dam chapter of the American Chemical Society. Dr. Carver, the world's greatest negro scientist, not only demonstrated the wonderful work he has done with the lowly Alabama peanut, but propounded a number of great truths that struck a responsive cord in the minds of his interested audience. Those who failed to avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing this brilliant scientist have suffered a distinct loss.

One of Five Talents

(New York Times)

"And to one he gave five talents." He was a Negro boy born in Missouri, the son of slave parents (and once traded for a horse), who as a man has made so great a contribution to his country that, as reported in Thursday's Times, "Southern notables of two races" paid honor to his genius by having a bronze bust made of him. George Washington Carver (for that was the name that he grew into), who had received the five talents, spent years in the study of the vegetable world about him and "made other five talents" not for himself, however, but for his world neighbors. He lived so close to the earth and its trees and plants and insect life that he got at first hand what they had to tell others in books. He ever learned to draw and paint objects in nature out of that intimate acquaintance—and so well that he won recognition here and in Europe as an artist.

But his five talents were spent mainly in getting the vegetable kingdom to make unheard-of additions to what it was giving mankind. He got the peanut to produce 300 useful products and encouraged the sweet potato to yield more than 100 products of varying human values. He has turned down salaries for himself mounting to six figures, it is said, and has been content to get along with one that could perhaps not get into the lowest income tax brackets. Best of all, he has made his talents count largely in Tuskegee's gifts to the Negro race.

THE Tuskegee Institute issues a report upon lynchings during the past six months, showing that there were only four during the half-year, one each in Georgia and Alabama and two in Mississippi. This is two less than for the previous six months.

This decrease is most gratifying and it is unfortunate that a similar decrease in lynching in portions of the country outside of the South, is not revealed. Instead of lynch law decreasing elsewhere, however, it has increased at an almost unprecedented rate, especially in the industrial regions of the north and central west.

It may clarify understanding upon this subject to give the official definition of "lynch", this definition being "to inflict punishment upon or kill without the forms of law, as by mob or any unauthorized persons."

Thus while there have been but four lynchings recorded in the South during the past six months there have been literally hundreds in such places as Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, Johnstown, Warren and other industrial centers. Yet in the face of this transparent fact, the pending anti-lynch bill in congress specifically exempts the lynchers of the North from its provisions and includes only those of the South.

Mob law is deplorable regardless of where it breaks out but it is even more deplorable when one form of mob law is condoned or regarded lightly while another form is dealt with in vigorous and proper manner. The South is alert to the perils of mob violence and it is high time that the North became equally alert, for mob violence in that quarter is even worse than in the South because it constitutes a sinister attack upon government itself.

LYNCHINGS DECREASE

For a number of years Tuskegee Institute has been tabulating the returns of lynching and it is pleasing to observe that President F. D. Patterson reports that there has been a decline in mob action every decade since 1887.

Dr. Patterson gives three reasons for the decline and they are, we believe, sound observations. The first is the disappearance of frontier characteristics in the South; the breaking down of isolation in the South through the development of rural free delivery, increased communication facilities; paved roads and radio; the third, "increased agitation within the South against lynching."

While the Tuskegee figures have always reflected a view that lynching was peculiarly a Southern phenomena it is surprising that the Negro does not give any credit to activity of people in other sections who are usually quick to condemn something happening away from home. He even goes so far as to term lynching a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South.

Pacific Coast Voters Much Opposed

It is interesting to note that in today's survey the opposition to a federal anti-lynching law is strongest not in the South, but on the Pacific Coast. There 41% of the voters reached are against federal action, as compared to a national average of only 30%. There may be several explanations for this. Possibly one is that when the murderers of Brooke Hart were lynched in California a few years ago, no less a personage than California's governor, James Rolph, said publicly that at times lynching was a deserved punishment.

Furthermore, today's survey was being conducted at the time the body of Charles Mattson was found near Everett, Wash. The ghastliness of this crime is said to have caused many Pacific Coast citizens to declare privately that lynching would be an appropriate punishment for the murderer.

WHAT MAKES THE DIFFERENCE?

In the wake of Troy's bank robbery it was announced that federal authorities had been notified and that G-Men were expected to be assigned to the case.

Which, the Daily News conceives, is as it should be. The situation is covered by federal legislation and, in no other connection, there is deposit insurance which brings banks generally under Washington's eye and protection.

The point we have in mind is thus emphasized by the acceptability of the arrangement. Federal intervention in the person of G-men to assist in tracking down the offenders is requested and presumed. Not a single cheep did we hear while this Washington authority was being extended or in its subsequent application, as in the Troy robbery, anent state's rights and their abrogation or infringement by an over-stepping federal government. When a person is kidnaped, when a bank is robbed, Washington's assistance is fine and dandy; but if some hapless victim is seized by a mob and done to death, why, by the hallowed name of state's rights and all that is politically holy, Uncle Sam's sleuths must play hands off absolutely.

And if that incongruity makes either sense or justice, you can strike us pink.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

(Will you please give space in your paper to the following article, which was written especially for the Dothan Eagle.)

The Sunday issue of your paper carried a reply to a certain citizen of Abbeville, who endorsed the recent lynching in Henry County. Your Comment was that he doubtless reflected the sentiment of the community. Please allow me to say he possibly represents a large segment of public sentiment here, but does in no manner speak for everyone.

The day following this unfortunate occurance the writer prepared an article for the county paper, conecerning it; but at the advice of a friend its publication was witheld till all the facts were in". Such advice was sound and my acceptance of it now enables me to write more intelligently and perhaps less dispassionately. All the facts are evidently in now in as much as those responsible for settling the matter and seem to regard it as a closed issue.

Two pertinent facts that have trickled out the extreme secrecy that has veiled the case are these: Nine members of the lynching party have been positively identified by the sheriff of the county; a jury called for the sole purpose of making a "thorough" investigation reports that it has no indictments to make.

Attitudes towards these facts and their interpretations may vary but is bald aspects remain.

The heiniousness of the negro's crime is appreciated by everyone, and it did not require a lynching to impress the fact on our minds. That swift and sure justice was in order no one doubted and if there had been no other alternative and fair minded person could have endorsed the method used. However, it requires little imagination to feature the fate that would have been the negro' boy's had he come before a jury of white men from this county.

If the Christian's Bible condones such monstrous and primative practices my decades of Bible study have been in a measure abortive. Paul's admonition: "Avenge not yourselves beloved, but give place unto wrath; for it is written vengence belongeth to me, I will recompense, ssyeth the Lord, is not altogether a New Testiment point of view, as will be observed by reading Duet. 32:35.

Nothing short of raw revenge could prompt a group of men to perpetrated such an act. In the humble judgment of the writer, no act can be justified by a Chrristian that does not reflect the spirit of Christ; that Southern chivalry can best be preserved by unimpeachable conduct in the lives of its male citizens and a mental and moral equanimity that can wait for orderly and legal means of justice.

FASTER ACTION NEEDED—

A comment on the action taken by some of the citizens of Bainbridge, Georgia, evokes this comment in a recent dispatch from Washington, D. C.:

"Down in Georgia, a prisoner who had confessed assault and double murder was shot while trying to escape. His body was taken from the morgue, dragged around the public square and then burned. On the surface, and perhaps unconditionally, such conduct must be disapproved as an exhibition of childish or primitive rage, yet it is safe to say that the same offense will not be committed in the same locality for some time to come.

"All must turn a face of cold disapproval on lynching or anything that resembles it, but on the other hand one is etitled to speculate as to whether criminal law is not a little too soft, too uncertain and too slow in its operation.

"In the days of the Old West, order was brought out of turbulence, in more than one place, by vigilance committees who tried criminals at eight o'clock in the morning and executed them before sundown.

"Self-appointed judges and hangmen have no place in modern civilization but the success which sometimes has followed their efforts points to the conclusion that, after all, a careful study of their work may yield helpful suggestions to those who think that the rules and regulations governing the punishment of high crimes need a shake-up and revision."

And in this connection it might be noted that it was not until the G-Men let it be known that they would shoot to kill that the wave of kidnapping that was a disgrace to the entire country, came to an end.

Quick action for the guilty is the greatest deterent to crime that has yet been discovered, and always will be as long as there are the thousand and one delays that are thought up by slick criminal lawyers, venal courts, and lenient parole boards.

New York Takes Scottsboro Boys To Its Heart

Scottsboro Negro Goes Back To Jail

On petition of Osmond K. Fraenkel of New York, defense attorney, the Supreme Court of Alabama yesterday issued an order suspending sentence of 75 years imprisonment imposed on Heywood Patterson, negro Scottsboro case defendant, following his most recent conviction—pending disposition of another appeal that has been filed on his behalf in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Following issuance of the suspension order, Hamp Draper, head of the State Convict Department, directed that Patterson be transferred from the State Prison Farm at Atmore, to the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham, to remain there until action on the pending appeal is taken by the nation's highest court.

Patterson was removed from the Jefferson County Jail to Kilby on June 14, shortly after the Alabama Supreme Court had affirmed judgment of the Morgan County Circuit Court, finding the defendant guilty and sentencing him to imprisonment for 75 years. It was Patterson's fourth conviction. The prisoner was transferred from Kilby to the Atmore Farm and assigned to light duties there on Sept. 7, as he had not at that time fully regained his physical strength after recovery from a leg infection

NEGRO RETURNED TO BIRMINGHAM

Haywood Patterson Transferred Here Pending Appeal

Haywood Patterson, 24, Negro defendant in the "Scottsboro case," was transferred from state prison back to Jefferson County Jail Tuesday afternoon, to be held here pending his appeal of a 75-year penitentiary sentence to U. S. Supreme Court.

Patterson was brought back to Birmingham at the direction of Hamp Draper, chief of the State Convict Department, after the Alabama Supreme Court had granted a stay of execution in the sentence, which was imposed by a Morgan County Jury. The Negro was taken to Kilby Prison last June 14, after the Alabama Supreme Court had affirmed his lower court conviction, but was transferred Sept. 7 to the Atmore Prison Farm.

Clarence Norris, under death sentence for the criminal assault of Victoria Price in the "Scottsboro case," has been held in jail here since his conviction.

SCOTTSBORO CASES ARE OVER

Some of the best news that has been heard in Alabama in a long time came over the radio Monday about noon, when it was announced that the U. S. supreme court had decided not to review the Scottsboro cases. This means the end of this nauseating mess that has made Alabama a byword in many places. It is to be hoped that no rehearing will be granted and such a thing is hardly likely.

Vicious Circle

Once more the interminable Scottsboro case swung around the circle yesterday, and apparently to as little decisive end as ever. Appeal is to be taken on the conviction of the Negro, Clarence Norris, for rape — and since the Supreme Court has already twice overturned the same verdict in his case, it is likely that he will presently have to be tried all over again.

It is time this farce was brought to a close. It is entirely possible that the Negro committed the crime; but it is the presumption of the law that he is innocent until proved guilty, and the eternal disagreement between the Alabama juries, which unquestionably have pretty intense prejudices about the business, and the Supreme Court, which presumably has none, suggests pointedly that, under the law, the court is right. Surely, the evidence is dubious enough in all conscience. The Bates woman, who was one of the two original complaining witnesses, has completely repudiated her story; and a local police officer Wednesday testified of the Price woman that he wouldn't believe her oath on any subject whatever.

We have the uncomfortable feeling that Alabama — or at least the Alabamans who sit on juries — are more concerned with defending the "honor" of Alabama than with dispassionate examination of evidence. It is a sentiment we can understand, in view of the antics of the Communists and the generally idiotic yammering from the North, but it is not one we can sympathize with — and it does the real honor of Alabama a grave disservice.

"Thou canst not say I did it; never shake
Thy gory locks at me."

Who did this thing to the South? Who made this ugliness, this bitterness, this rotten place in a civilization, this stench in the nostrils of a world, this Scottsboro Case? Some say the lust of black men did it, some the lies of white women, but there are more defendants than these, and more plaintiffs. The ghastly, unending mess is chargeable against both the South and the North, against radicals and reactionaries, against politicians, against juries, against the press, against the bar, against the bench. Sometimes the charge is of pride, of stubbornness, prejudice, hate, ambition, sadism, vanity. Sometimes it is of stupidity, bungling, carelessness, bad psychology, thoughtless sensationalism, unintelligent altruism.

Who that has had any part in this case on either side or as a neutral can say he did not do it, that he did not contribute something to the elements that have made the compound so foul? To admit the mess and confess a part in it is good for all of us now. It may help us somehow to make an end of a case which has gone so far beyond the gondola car at Paint Rock that the original plaintiffs and defendants are almost forgotten.

There just simply isn't anything for anybody, good or bad, to gain out of the Scottsboro case any more. It is very well to talk of fundamental principles of right and wrong but when those principles are lost in a thousand extraneous considerations and when both sides are joined in holy deadlock, the only thing for sensible men to do is to close the case out, compromise it to death, postpone the vital issues to some other case where they will be less confused, more resolvable.

This Summer may go down in history as the one when people in general learned the importance of eating salt to offset perspiration losses. At the same time come rumors of great salt domes in the South where perspiring is heaviest. Isn't nature wonderful!

In this column's experience the most oppressive heat to be found anywhere in the country is that of Washington, D. C. And the most dangerous is that of New York, N. Y. Southern heat is highly uncomfortable but it is more a thing of perspiration than of prostration. Below the Potomac many swelter but few expire. Above the Potomac it is different—and worse. And now that science is telling us to take salt here in lieu of lost perspiration, it may be that the heat won't even make Southerners lazy any more.

Is there a back-to-the-home movement for women, and are American women holding out against it more successfully than European ones? Miss Gordon Holmes, managing director of the National Securities Corporation, of London, says so. Unemployment, she reports, has caused a "general slide back" in the status of women abroad and brought about the return of many women to their homes. She thinks American women hold the future of the business woman in their hands, and wants them to do something about it. Particularly she wants them to put more women in public office.

Since women are the latest-comers to the economic table it may be natural that they should be asked to retire when the table seems to have 13. But against this is the fact that women have proven themselves more capable in certain types of work than men. Against it, too, is the claim that there really aren't too many at the table, that given a proper distribution, the consumption demands of the world are enough to give everybody a job.

At any rate, the modern American answer to whatever excesses of job-seekers over jobs occur is that elimination shall be on a basis of age, not sex.

WILL THE CARPETBAGGER RETURN?

We had carpetbaggers back in the late 60's and early 70's in Alabama, and if this court-packing bill goes through, we may have them again—perhaps not quite in the same form, but nevertheless just as vicious.

In his splendid speech before the Senate a few days ago, Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming called attention to this little-noticed feature of the court bill, which calls for a traveling or carpetbag judiciary. Under the terms of the bill, a chief justice who is dominated by the President could designate a judge from any district in the United States to go into any other district to try a paraticular case.

Samuel Leibowitz is going to the Supreme Court the next time on Judge Callahan's refusal to let the Norris case be removed to the Federal district court for trial. As the decisions of the Supreme Court now stand, Judge Callahan ruled correctly on that, as we understand it, but a new and enlarged court, appointed from northern states and composed of radicals, might very conceivably overturn the law and hold with Leibowitz that the cases must be tried in Federal court. Then, under the court bill, if it becomes law, a chief justice could send a judge from the district in Chicago which is now represented in Congress by a Negro to Alabama to try that case.

If this seems far-fetched, me might remember that Attorney General Daugherty, in Harding's administration, tried to pull just such a trick when he and his colleagues "framed" a case on Senator Wheeler. The Harding crowd tried to send a judge from Ohio to Montana to try him, but they did not succeed under the present law.

Of course, the Scottsboro case is only a minor illustration. A greater menace would be that we might have a Federal judge from Chicago deciding on the rights of Negroes to vote in our party primaries and elections. And we must keep in mind that the court bill is permanent legislation—not temporary or emergency legislation. It's full effects might not be felt for five or ten years.

The bill provides for a centralized and bureaucratic judicial system, which alone would be bad enough, but this carpetbag feature, which may well be the first step toward abolishing white supremacy in the South, makes it intolerable to us. — The Tuscaloosa News.

SCOTTSBORO CASE.

Talk now is of compromising the aged and in many respects infamous Scottsboro case in which nine or ten negroes have been convicted several times and sentenced to die for criminally assaulting two white women hoboes aboard a freight train in Alabama.

The bi-racial situation in the South has a tendency to place a great social emphasis on assaults and attacks of all kinds between members of the different races, not only to protect the individual but to prevent the creation of incidents likely to cause mass ill-feeling and violence between the white and colored people, who are showing the world that two different races can live harmoniously together.

This emphasis undoubtedly enters into the Scottsboro case and influences it.

We think the average Southern white man is torn between two sentiments in the Scottsboro case.

The first sentiment is to punish to the limit of the law the perpetrators of the attack on the two white women if an honest jury is satisfied of the fact of the attack and the identity of the assailants.

The second sentiment is one of disgust with two women who would invite just the type of assault the Scottsboro prosecutrices allege by putting themselves in a position to be abused by using a form of transportation habitually used by the most vicious and depraved members of both races.

Decatur Repeats

To those who wonder why the Scottsboro negroes are sentenced to the death penalty with such persistence and relentlessness, trial after retrial, let it be said that the Alabama law which is different to that of most states is chiefly responsible.

The Scottsboro cases long since got out of their true perspective having been made national racial issues during the six and a half years that they have been going the course of the courts with the United States supreme court so far an impassable barrier to the execution of any of them.

Whether at this late day justice can be done we cannot say. One may well question the clarity of accurate human recollection and evidential detail after so long a lapse of time when it is bitterly crossed with extraneous currents. But we cannot get away from the fact that juries in Alabama must take into consideration very heavily the weight of the judge's words in his charge to the jury or what we know in Virginia to be the instructions.

Where the complaining witness is a white woman and where the defendant is a negro the question of consent must be put from the minds of the jury and there is the old Alabama law which provides, in cases of this kind that the unsupported testimony of the woman is all that is needed to pin the crime on the accused. It is not difficult therefore to understand the unfailing course of convictions at a trial in the deep South which places the defendant at such a severe legal disadvantage from the outset—

Stamp Out Injustice Within The States

The supreme court in refusing to set aside the conviction of Patterson, the Scottsboro boy who appealed his 75 year sentence, did not declare that he was proven guilty by the evidence. Its opinion was legalistic, which means that in its judgement the trial was in strict conformity with Alabama law.

To Negroes who have experienced the bias of southern courts, the evidence does not prove Patterson guilty. But the procedure, not the evidence, was at issue before the supreme court. For that reason this decision is no cause for dispair, or for saying that Justice Hugo Black shows his hand already.

Like all states, Alabama has jurisdiction in trials for crimes committed within its borders. The reason why its previous convictions of the Scottsboro boys were not permitted to stand was that the supreme court found that it had not abided by its own rules in trying them. This time it did, and the supreme court's refusal to interfere makes apparent that the only place where the innocence of a Negro accused of crime can be established is also within the state.

Up to now most of us have fancied that somehow the supreme court would save the innocent. This Scottsboro decision bids us start our fight for justice in the state, the place where injustice has its beginning.

It is notorous that the Alabama police, judges and juries who convicted the Scottsboro boys have one standard of official conduct toward whites and an entirely different one for Negroes. Through the repeated reversals in this Scottsboro case, they learned how to give their misuse of power the appearance of fairness. But the bias is there. That is injustice's vulnerable spot, the Achilles heel to be attacked.

The fight will not be easy. It will take time, it will take money. Both trials in the courts and lynchings by mobs prove it will cost even life. But there is no other way and there is nobody else to ask justice for Negroes but themselves. They cannot say they cannot afford to pay the price of the effort. The truth is they cannot afford not to pay it. The material losses suffered in any one year from unequal treatment would finance the fight for justice. The lives lost through unholy industrial practices and unwholesome living conditions imposed, if spent for justice, would win it.

The proof that injustice can be overcome is already established in cases involving housing, education, and freedom of speech. Kentucky, Maryland and Georgia whose attempts to put Negroes on a different basis from other citizens were thwarted, prove that Alabama and the others will be forced to deal justly by all—when the Constitution is the measuring stick for state laws.

The citidel of bias and prejudice must be pulled down to the foundations. Somehow Negroes must drive home the realization that their citizenship has rights as well as responsibilities. They have this same legalistic supreme court to appeal to. Alabama wrangled through a conviction after many failures. Let's take disfranchisement, labor laws, and all else that prejudice has contrived for our hurt, to that court until we resurrect justice. Remembering their defeat at the Alamo, Texans made it their battle cry of victory. Let "Scottsboro" stir Negroes to strive for justice.

ALABAMA MAY FREE SCOTTSBORO GROUP

Release Already Given to Four Prepares Public to Accept Pardons by Governor

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 29.—If the action of the United States Supreme Court last Monday means that there is no further recourse through the courts for the Scottsboro case Negroes, who were accused of attacking two white women, and that the only hope of relief now is through executive action by the State of Alabama, it is not unreasonable to believe such action possible.

This factor will no doubt influence the Scottsboro Defense Committee and its allied group of Alabamians in deciding upon the nature of the defense campaign which both are determined to maintain.

Without any new evidence, the prosecution has indicated a unanimous change of opinion as to the guilt of four of the defendants. It may be that this was part of a compromise agreement with opposing counsel, but it has weakened the logic of the case against the remaining five in the public mind in Alabama as well as elsewhere.

Public Ready for "Shock"

If the State could have been wrong all these years about four of the Negroes, it could have been wrong about all nine, the general public seems to think. The release of the four Negroes has, in fact, set people of the State to stand the "shock" of freedom for all the rest with the exception of Ozie Powell, who is under an additional charge of a knife attack upon a deputy sheriff in January, 1936.

Another factor tending to make the thought of Executive action in behalf of the remaining defendants more popular here is that the case seems to be now closed to what was called "outside interference" and that if anything is done for the Negroes it will be the work of Alabama itself, not that of "New York attorneys" or radicals.

WILL HE BE FREED?

Associated Press

Heywood Patterson — Alabama might pardon this Scottsboro prisoner.

Still another favorable factor, and one which involves national public opinion rather than local, is the political future which Governor Bibb Graves is believed to have in mind for himself.

Forbidden under Alabama law to succeed himself as Governor, he is thought to desire some Federal post. Though he has been high in the councils of the present National Administration, he has come in for unfavorable national opinion lately by reason of the disclosure that he, as well as Justice Black, rode into office in 1926 with the aid of the Ku Klux Klan. The resurrection of the Klan matter has been thought to have impaired his chances for any Federal preferment, but if he should present himself to the nation as the savior of "the Scottsboro boys," it is quite likely that the Klan incident might be overlooked and that he might go forward to a Federal career.

State Tired of It All

But the most favorable factor of all is Alabama's great weariness with the Scottsboro case and all its works. This profound fatigue was reflected in the scant local attention evident at the last trials a few months ago, and in the surprising lack of protest when four of the defendants were released.

Years ago Governor Slaton of Georgia sacrificed his political career when he freed Leo Frank, but nobody's career is going to be hurt in Alabama now if the remaining Scottsboro Negroes go free.

SCOTTSBORO COMMITTEE ASKS AID

General Public Must Give $5,000 For Further Effort

COFFERS EMPTY

The Scottsboro Defense Committee is making a plea to the general public to contribute to the $5,000 fund "needed at once to assure the successful conduct of the legal defense and to continue the work of this committee in winning further support."

It will be remembered that four of the nine Scottsboro boys have been freed by Alabama courts. The Scottsboro Defense Committee states that "the statement of Alabama officials, made when they released the four boys, proves conclusively the complete innocence of the others."

The critical situation of the remaining five is as follows:

One has been sentenced to death one to 99 years imprisonment, two to 75 years each and the last to 20 years. Heyward Patterson was transferred to the Atmore Prison Camp from the prison hospital at the state penitentiary where he has only recently been operated upon for a chronic bone infection of the left leg. Three of the other boys are still in Kilby Prison, two are just recovering from operations and the third—Ozie Powell—who was shot in the head by a deputy sheriff in January 1936, is literally wasting away mentally and physically.

The Scottsboro Defense Committee states that its treasury is completely exhausted, and anyone willing to aid this cause may send a contribution to the committee at 112 East 19th Street, New York, N. Y. Allan Knight Chalmers is chairman. William Jay Schieffelin is treasurer.

MR. GRAVES ON SCOTTSBORO

Mr. John Temple Graves 2nd, writing from Birmingham, Ala., says in an article published in the New York Times that the release already given to four of the Scottsboro boys has prepared the public there to accept pardons by the governor for the others. Mr. Graves, who knows the psychology of his state, believes that "if the action of the United States Supreme Court means that there is no further recourse through the courts for the Scottsboro case Negroes, and that the only hope of relief now is through Executive action by the State of Alabama, it is not unreasonable to believe such action possible."

According to this authority, the Alabama public has come to feel that if the State could have been wrong all of these years about four of the accused colored boys, it could have been wrong about all nine. It is therefore prepared for the release by pardon of the remaining Negroes —except, of course, of Ozzie Powell, held under an additional charge of attacking a deputy sheriff with a knife.

There are other factors, too, which Mr. Graves feels will count more or less heavily in favor of a more lenient attitude. One is that the case is closed now to "outside interference." Therefore, whatever is done in behalf of the boys after this will be done by the State of Alabama itself and not appear the work of "New York attorneys or radicals."

Moreover Alabama's Governor Bibb Graves is supposed to be harboring ambitions toward some post in the Federal government. During the controversy over Justice Black and the Klan it was, according to Mr. Graves, widely rumored that Gov. Graves, too, had had Klan connections which helped him into office in 1926. Therefore the role of "savior of the Scottsboro boys" would be a valuable aid in living down accusations of race prejudice.

Last of all, but not least powerful reason for expecting governmental clemency, as John Temlpe Graves 2nd sees the affair, is "Alabama's great weariness with the Scottsboro case and all its works." Which attitude, it might be said, is shared by many other Southerners besides those who live where the stars fell. At the risk of growing tedious, however, The Citizen passes on this resume of the Graves article for The New York Times because one instinctively feels that few other people can speak so well for Alabama as the distinguished Southern columnist.

NEW YORK. — Revelations that the prosecutors of the Scottsboro boys made an agreement with the defense to free them and then reneged by liberating only four have recently been made by Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers, chairman of the Scottsboro Defense Committee.

Unsolicited, said Dr. Chalmers, the Alabama attorney general and Tom Knight, lieutenant-governor and special prosecutor, traveled to New York at the State's expense to get Samuel Leibowitz, chief defense counsel, to agree to a deal for freeing the boys.

The reported proposal was that none of the boys would plead guilty to the original charge, but four would plead to a lesser crime in the indictment and not involving any sex offense.

Agreement Reached

If that were done, according to Dr. Chalmers, Alabama agreed to impose sentences less than the time already served in jail by the boys. These would be retroactive and all the boys freed.

An agreement was reputedly arrived at in good faith and was considered legitimate and supported by the newspapers. Following conference with the boys respecting their wishes, the committee expected the State to carry out its part of the bargain, the chairman stated.

Alabama's failure to carry through is history, however, Dr. Chalmers prophesied, "All the boys will be freed by the State of Alabama."

Scottsboro Mother to Lead Delegation

Mass Rally Scheduled Tonight at Abyssinian Church in Harlem to Name Delegates to Push Anti-Lynch Bill in Congress

(Daily Worker Harlem Bureau)

A mass rally to send off a delegation to Washington to urge the special session of Congress to pass the Anti-Lynching Bill and to urge the President to speak on the Constitutional rights of minority peoples will be held tonight at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, 132 W. 138th St., at 8 P.M.

The rally is being held under the auspices of the Harlem Scottsboro Defense Committee and the National Negro Congress, with the endorsement of the Baptist Ministers Alliance and the Inter-denominational Ministers Alliance.

It is expected that a delegation of 50 will be selected, among whom will be Mrs. Ada Wright, mother of two of the Scottsboro boys, Roy and Andy; and two of the freed Scottsboro boys, Roy Wright and Olen Montgomery. The balance of the committee will be composed of liberals, ministers, union and working class representatives, and members of leading Harlem civic and fraternal organizations.

TO VISIT PRESIDENT

In the capital the delegation will be joined by representatives of defense and church organizations from Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond. It will call upon Congress and urge the passage of the Anti-Lynching Bill, and will later call upon the President and urge him to throw his support behind the measure.

The delegation will also urge the President to speak over the radio or otherwise on the constitutional rights of the Negro people and other minority groups; the delegation will also urge the President to connect his talk with the Scottsboro and other such cases, thus showing that the Supreme Court is not the defender of the rights of minority people.

Last week, as the result of a plea made by Mrs. Ada Wright, the National Negro Congress threw the weight of its 2,000 affiliated organizations behind the Scottsboro struggle and is supporting the delegation to Washington.

MEETINGS SCHEDULED

Parallel with the mass meeting to be held in New York, there will be mass meetings in Washington, Philadelphia, and Richmond under the auspices of the National Negro Congress.

Preceding the mass meeting tonight at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, there will be three open-air meetings in Harlem taking place at 7 P.M. The locations are as follows: 113th St. and Fifth Ave.; 126th St. and Lenox Ave.; and 138th St. and Seventh Ave.

Tonight's mass meeting will be addressed by Mrs. Ada Wright, Roy Wright, and Olen Montgomery. Other speakers will be Dr. Max Yergen, director of the International Committee on African Affairs and acting secretary of the National Negro Congress; Richard B. Moore, vice-president of the International Labor Defense and secretary of the Harlem Scottsboro Committee; the Rev. J. N. Lenister, representative of the Baptist Ministers Alliance.

The Rev. Thomas J. B. Harris, representative of the Inter-denominational Ministers Alliance; Col. William Schieffelin, of the Scottsboro Defense Committee; Dr. P. M. H. Savory, of the United Aid for Peoples of African Descent; Frank R. Crosswaith, chairman of the Negro Labor Committee; the Rev. D. N. Licorish, of the New York Council of the National Negro Congress; and Atty. Thurgood Marshall, of ...the National Association for the Advancement for Colored People.

Another Scottsboro Attack

Those who thought that the Scottsboro case was "settled" with the freeing of those four negroes last summer have got a little to learn, if we are to judge by the latest scurrilous attack upon this state, its courts and its people in the form of a booklet issued by the "Hollywood Scottsboro Committee."

This attack, coming from the pen of Guy Endore, sets a new high mark in the civilization of Alabama, and it announces boldly that the Scottsboro case will not be finished until the "last one of the nine" is released from those "Alabama dungeons." We presume that Mr. Endore looks upon his California institutions of incarceration as "model prisons" but Kilby, one of the finest penitentiaries in America, is a "dungeon" just because it happens to be in Alabama. At least that's the tenor of the whole booklet.

Mr. Endore goes at great lengths to prove that the nine negroes involved in the Scottsboro case did not assault those two white women—predicating his case on the theory that the law of averages wouldn't permit nine such negroes, all of them willing to attack a white woman, to be found anywhere! We do thank Mr. Endore, however, for at least an attempt to prove that the women were attacked; most of those who have vented their spleen against Alabama didn't bother about that little item—they merely asked, with eyebrows raised, "What if they did attack them?"

Endore's effort, in brief, is little more than a left-wing blast for the purpose of stirring up political troubles in the South and, even more, for the purpose of making political profit with the negroes elsewhere in this country. For instance, Endore rails against the "Southern Tories" as those who have persecuted the Scottsboro negroes, and he would have us believe that if it were not for those "Tories" we would have had no Scottsboro case. He wishes to convey to his readers the idea that the mill workers, the farmers and all those who are not "anti-New Dealers" have never been interested in prosecuting those negroes; that the prosecution has been led and demanded by the remnants of the "plantation aristocracy."

From which we gather that Mr. Endore has got a lot to learn about the Scottsboro case, the political aspects of the South, and the people of this section in general. Any fool in the South could have told him that the strongest sentiment for a halt to the Scottsboro prosecution could have been found among that element which sympathizes with the so-called "economic royalists." There are so few "economic royalists" themselves in Alabama that they aren't worth considering. Those of the erstwhile "planter" class were the ones who spoke out boldly and frequently against the prosecution of the Scottsboro negroes. The mill workers, the small farmers and the average white man in general demanded that those negroes be prosecuted, and they were the most angered when almost half of them went free.

Mr. Endore also reaches the amazing conclusion that, "despite the poisonous mass of lies that has been permitted to invade our textbooks," the Reconstruction Era was the most enlightened that the South has ever seen. "It can be asserted with accuracy that the South never enjoyed such progressive and intelligent administration as under the Black Parliaments," he said of the legislatures which, in Alabama and elsewhere, were composed of ignorant blacks, renegade whites and adventurers from the East, many of whom could neither read nor write. They were the men who looted the treasury, and made a drunken carnival out of the state capitol, and tossed the white Democrats out of offices to which they were duly elected, and placed upon our benches of justice illiterate fools who had never seen a law book.

As a political document for left-wing use among the negroes of Northern cities, Mr. Endore's work may prove of value, but as an impartial investigation of an important case, or as a social study, it doesn't even merit the wastebasket. He won a certain amount of fame as— shall we say?—a "sexologist" when he delved into the amours of one Casanova de Seingalt, a Venetian who had a way with the women. We suggest that Mr. Endore continue his research into the life and loves of Casanova—and leave those nine negro rapists to hands which will not be so blindly sympathetic.—Tuscaloosa News.

SCOTTSBORO CASE HELD NEAR AN END

Death of Knight, Prosecutor, Is Expected to Aid Move for a Compromise

POLITICS NOW NO FACTOR

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 21.—The death in Montgomery this week of 39-year-old Thomas E. Knight Jr., Lieutenant Governor of Alabama, who has been prosecutor in each of the Scottsboro trials, may have an important bearing upon the notorious case. In a situation shot through from the beginning with prejudices and interfering emotions, Mr. Knight had become a target for something of the same bitterness from sympathizers with the defendants as has been directed at Samuel Leibowitz, chief defense counsel, by friends of the prosecution.

Professionally able and well matched as the two had proved themselves, it was felt that their association with the case any longer was a factor against hope of settlement or fair trial.

An Altered Situation

Now that death has withdrawn Mr. Knight and that Mr. Leibowitz is entrusting much of the defense to an Alabama attorney, Clarence L. Watts of Huntsville, there is promise of an end to the six-year-old case.

However much of a bitter-ender the late Lieutenant Governor may have been about the case at first, he was known to have changed his mind in recent months and to feel that the best possible end to the case for every one would be a sentence of imprisonment, with the years already served counted out of the term.

Otherwise, as he saw it, there could be no end to the round of convictions and appeals.

Although a compromise of this sort would not serve the principles or prejudices for which both sides have fought, it would mean for one side the early freedom of the defendants and for the other elimination of an expensive trial from Alabama.

More and more now there is talk here of such a compromise. The sentiment of the Alabama Bar Association, although not officially expressed, is believed to be in this direction, as is that of the Alabama Scottsboro Committee, an organization of fifty or more prominent citizens, devoted originally to obtaining what was termed "an unencumbered trial."

People Weary of Case

Dr. Henry M. Edmunds of Birmingham, who is chairman of the committee, and Forney Johnston, well known Birmingham attorney, who has been active on the committee, are especially persuaded that some such compromise is the only solution.

The people of Alabama are weary of the Scottsboro case to the point of a very genuine apathy now toward the disposition of it. More than anything else, they want an end to it. It is of no political value to anybody any more and in that fact there is much promise.

Patterson Case Is Up Today In Supreme Court

One Of Scottsboro Nine Wants 75-Year Term Set Aside

Heywood Patterson, negro defendant in the "Scottsboro case," will attempt today to have the Alabama Supreme Court set aside a 75-year-sentence imposed a year ago on a criminal assault conviction.

Patterson's case comes up for arguments on appeal before the State justices. Both Attorney General A. A. Carmichael and Clarence L. Watts, associate defense counsel, pronounced their sides "ready."

Thrice Patterson has escaped death sentences through judicial reversal, two condemnations being set aside by the U. S. Supreme Court and one by a trial judge. The Alabama court refused to intervene in either case taken to the U. S. justices.

Patterson and eight other negroes are accused of assaulting Mrs. Virginia Price and Ruby Bates, two white women, aboard a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., six years ago last March 25.

The cases have dragged through one court after another, both the State and defense waging bitter legal encounters at many turns.

A resumption of trials, other than for Patterson, has been set for June 6 in Morgan County Circuit Court at Decatur, where the case was taken on a change of venue from Jackson County.

Supreme Court records available last night showed Patterson's counsel possibly would base appeal arguments on two major grounds:

1—That Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan erred in permitting admission of certain State evidence and in refusing to accept some testimony tendered by the defense.

2—That Judge Callahan erred in refusing to transfer the trials to U. S. district courts on a defense plea that Alabama laws permitted only one change of venue and a fair trial could not be had in Morgan County.

Many other points were raised, but lawyers termed most of them as "technical in nature, some of which already have been settled in the courts."

The Supreme Court meets at 10 a.m. but there was no indication when the "Scottsboro case" would be reached. It had been continued three times previously, twice on defense requests.

Talk of "compromise" in the eight remaining cases, which developed at several points Tuesday, subsided somewhat yesterday.

Atty. Gen. Carmichael denied the State had entered a "compromise agreement" and said he would be "ready for appeal arguments today and for trials in July. Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, said in New York he wanted a "showdown" compromise, and Dr. Allan Chalmers, chairman of a defense committee, asserted there had been no efforts to compromise the case.

New Trial Set For 8 Negroes In Attack Case

Scottsboro Fight Starts Anew At Decatur On July 6; Ninth Appeals

DECATUR, ALA., May 25—(AP)—Another revival of an old court drama involving alleged assault was heralded today as Judge W. W. Callahan set July 6 for resumption of trials in the "Scottsboro" case.

Nine negroes are accused of a mass attack of two white girls.

The call for new trials in Morgan County circuit court, in mid Summer overshadowed quiet efforts underway for months for an agreement for expeditious disposal of the six-year-old cases without further trials.

Agreement Talked

One agreement proposal, in discussion by members of the Alabama Bar and other prominent persons, was that the three youngest of the nine negroes be discharged, with the others pleading guilty to assault not involving a sex crime, the sentences to be agreed upon.

In New York, Samuel Leibowitz, Chief defense counsel, called for a "show down" compromise on the fate of the negroes, but Alabama sources indicated hopes for an agreement had faded.

Attorney General A. A. Carmichael, who will have charge of the prosecution, declared in Montgomery "the State will be ready." He has denied rumors of a pending out-of-court settlement.

While nine negroes are accused of the attacks, only eight were ordered brought here for arraignment. The ninth, Heywood Patterson is under sentence of 75 years imprisonment, imposed after his fourth conviction here in January, 1936.

Changed To Decatur

The trials were brought here under change of venue from Scottsboro.

Judge Callahan called a special term of court for the new trials. There was no indication which of the eight defendants would be tried first although Clarence Norris followed Patterson in previous hearings, and had been named as the next defendant when the trials were adjourned 16 months ago.

The negroes were arrested March 25, 1931 at Paint Rock, Ala., and accused of attacking Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price aboard a freight train.

Supreme Court Kills Verdict

Original convictions, carrying death sentences for seven defendants, were set aside by the United States Supreme Court on the ground the negroes were without benefit of adequate counsel.

Transferred to Decatur, Patterson was sentenced to death at a new trial but the judge set the verdict aside as not being justified by the evidence. Ruby Bates appeared here and repudiated her story of the attack.

With Mrs. Price as complaining witness, Patterson and Norris again were tried and sentenced to death. The United States Supreme Court a second time set aside the sentences, holding negroes had been "systematically excluded" from juries which indicted and convicted them.

Led To New Jury Laws

The decision led to new jury laws for Alabama, and for other Southern States. The negroes were reindicted by a grand jury which included a negro and the names of negroes were placed in jury boxes throughout the State.

Patterson's fourth conviction was appealed to the State Supreme Court. Arguments on the appeal have been set for Thursday in Montgomery.

The 1935 Alabama legislature appropriated $35,000 to reimburse Jackson County for costs in the case. No estimate of probable costs of new trials was available.

Patterson Asks High Court To Void Sentence

Counsel For Scottsboro Negro Claims Trial Court Erred

On briefs and oral arguments by opposing counsel, the Alabama Supreme Court took under consideration yesterday the third appeal from a judgment of conviction that has been made to that body by Heywood Patterson, one of the eight negro Scottsboro Case defendants. Patterson has been convicted 4 times and twice sentenced to death. The third verdict of conviction was set aside by the trial judge. After affirmance by the State Supreme Court the first and second judgments of convictions were reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The pending appeal is from the fourth conviction and sentenced to a prison term of 75 years.

For the State the oral argument yesterday was by Assistant Atty. Gen. T. S. Lawson. Clarence L. Watts of Huntsville argued the case for the defense. He was first to address the court. The trial judge, he maintained, committed reversible error in a variety of instance, and his conduct on the bench constituted denial to the defendant of constitutional rights. He insisted also that rulings by Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan who presided at the trial, in limiting the extent of cross examination, and excluding testimony and other evidence sought to be introduced by the defense in various instances were erroneous.

Error Claimed

It was argued by defense counsel, for instance, that the trial court erred in limiting the presenting in detail of evidence attempting to show conflict between physical facts as to the length of the train aboard which the criminal assault of two white women with which Patterson and his co-defendants are charged, is alleged to have taken place—and the point at which the two women claimed to have gotten off the train after the assault was committed.

The trial judge was in error, it was insisted, in excluding evidence offered by the defense seeking to show immoral conduct by one of the two women alleged to have been attacked prior to the assault charged aboard the train. A number of instances of alleged improper remarks and comment by Judge Callahan from the bench, were cited by the defense counsel. It was error by the Circuit Judge, he argued, to permit reading into the record of the Patterson case, testimony by Dr. R. R. Bridges, in the companion case of Clarence Norris, as to examination of the two women following the alleged assault; the services of Dr. Bridges as a witness not being available at Patterson's trial, on account of illness.

Assistant Atty. Gen. Lawson, in his argument, declared that in raising the question of previous misconduct by one of the women attacked, defense attorneys had referred to the physician's testimony in the Norris case, only in part, and that Judge Callahan had properly ruled that all of this testimony would be placed in the Patterson record, or none at all. Furthermore, Mr. Lawson declared, this testimony was not relevant, and what the woman's conduct was prior to the attack had nothing whatever to do with the attack itself, nor any bearing on it.

As to the ruling out by Judge Callahan of certain questions by defense attorneys on cross examination, regarding testimony by the same witnesses in the Norris case, Mr. Lawson declared the testimony sought to be adduced was not relevant to the Patterson case, and was inadmissible. Moreover, he said, what the defense was attempting to establish by the testimony ruled out, had already been clearly indicated otherwise by counsel. Testimony admitted in comparison of physical facts with testimony of the two women, was ample, he said, and its presentation in further detail was unnecessary.

State's Contention

With regard to alleged improper and prejudicial conduct and comment by the Circuit Judge during the trial, Mr. Lawson said that while Judge Callahan might, at times, have appeared irritable or impatient, such irritability and impatience was but a human and natural accompaniment of a long-drawn-out and tedious proceeding, and certainly could not be construed as being prejudicial in any way to the defendant. Other points stressed by Mr. Watts were not commented upon specificially by Mr. Lawson who was associated with the late Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., in prosecution of the Scottsboro Cases, the Assistant Attorney General stating they had already been presented in previous appeals, and ruled on.

The two women Patterson and the other defendants were found guilty, of having assaulted, are Victoria Price and Ruby Bates. At one point in his argument when Mr. Watts was attempting to show previous moral misconduct by Victoria Price, and improper relations between her and another principal witness for the State, Justice Joel E. Brown of the Supreme Court inquired from the bench whether counsel was trying the woman or arguing for his client.

Under statutory provision, the Supreme Court will recess on June 30, but it is expected that decision in the Patterson case will be announced before that date.

NEGRO GETS 50-YEAR TERM

Assaulter Sentenced After Identification As Attacker

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 9.—(AP)—Convicted of assaulting a white woman here May 15, Edgar Dawson, negro, was under a 50-year imprisonment sentence today, imposed by a circuit court jury.

Dawson was charged and identified as the negro who forced the woman and her escort into a cemetery as they returned from a night baseball game. Dawson denied at his trial yesterday assaulting the woman and robbing her companion, and presented witnesses in support of an alibi defense.

ONCE MORE THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Once more the Scottsboro case is in the headlines as this case is hard to end. The negroes convicted of assaulting two white girls are probably guilty but the Civil Liberties committee has backed them with enough money to carry the case to the highest courts in the land.

Much ado has been the result of this case and communist sympathizers have been the most vocal in their defense of the defendants. We doubt that this has been wise move as public sentiment has not been gained as to the public at large on the issue although some negroes in the north have been impressed with the spirit shown by the communists.

An effort has been made to make this a second Sacco and Vanzetti case. The radical organizations made a mistake in their spirited defense of Sacco and Vanzetti for the evidence against these two men was overwhelming. The communists overplayed their hand on this case. In the Tom Mooney case in California things were different for the evidence against Mooney was not nearly as clear. The communists and other radical organizations sprang to the defence of Mooney and gained more or less public sympathy for him. It worked so well that they have been looking for defendants to make martyrs of.

In the Scottsboro case there are mitigating circumstances. The morals of the white women were questionable but the crime of assault seemed to have been proved.

Andalusia, Ala., News

The notorious Scottsboro case will be settled next fall when both sides agree to a compromise. The nine negroes will plead guilty while the prosecution has agreed to lessen the sentences. It is a disgrace when the prosecution has to compromise with the defendant and a slap in the face of our present system of meting out justice. These nine negroes will, in all probability, be given a contract for stage appearance before they die.

Scottsboro Negro Loses His Appeal

Supreme Court Overrules All Defense Points

Heywood Patterson, negro "Scottsboro case" defendant thrice saved from death verdicts, yesterday lost before the Alabama Supreme Court his appeal from a 75-year sentence imposed a year ago in Morgan County Circuit Court.

Clarence Watts, associate defense counsel, said at Huntsville, "I understand an appeal will be taken" to the U. S. Supreme Court. Samuel Leibowitz, New Yorker and chief of defense, later confirmed this.

The Alabama court ruled against Patterson on all points raised in his appeal, including one that he was denied constitutional rights in the trial court.

Patterson and eight other negroes, pulled from a freight train near Scottsboro in March, 1931, were accused of assaulting two white women hoboes, Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville. Patterson was convicted last in the Price case.

Other defendants, held in jail at Birmingham, await a resumption of trials at Decatur on July 6.

"When the record is examined, as has been done, we find no reversible error," the Supreme Court's verdict said. It was written by Associate Justice W. H. Thomas and concurred in by Chief Justice John C. Anderson and Associates Joel Brown and Thomas E. Knight. Three remaining justices did not sit on the case, argued May 27.

SCOTTSBORO CASE BOBS UP AGAIN DOWN IN ALABAMA

(Copyright, 1937, by United Press.)

Birmingham, Ala., March 25—(UP)—Six years after their original arrest on a charge of attacking two white women, the nine internationally famouse Scottsboro boys tonight faced prospect of reopening of their trials.

The United Press learned from a reliable source that new trial dates had been set and would be announced in the near future. The informant said the trials probably would be reopened in midsummer if "present plans are carried out."

Meanwhile, the Alabama supreme court granted a new continuance on the appeal of Heywood Patterson, under a 75 year sentence after his fourth conviction of attacking the two white women hoboes.

Patterson has been under death sentence three times, but has won new trials in high courts. His last trial—last year—ended in a sentence of 75 years' imprisonment. Samuel Leibowitz, chief of the Scottsboro defense, requested the postponement until April 22 on the young Negro's appeal.

Only six of the nine Negro youths who allegedly attacked the white women March 25, 1931, will face trial at the new hearings this summer. In order of their scheduled trials, they are: Clarence Norris, Andy Wright, Charlie Weems, Ozie Powell, Willie Robertson and Olin Montgomery.

Patterson's new trial ended in conviction, and the others were postponed when Powell was shot by a sheriff. The Negro attempted to stab guards taking him to the Jefferson jail here.

Two others of the nine—Eugene Williams and Roy Wright—were minors at the time of the alleged crime. They have not been rearraigned.

"We have, as lawyers, a definite obligation in this situation. If the American people fully realize the gravity and importance of the issue, if they are given an opportunity to form an intelligent understanding of the results almost certain to follow if this assault on the judiciary is successful, if they are brought to a full knowledge of the fact that the American system of government is at stake, and that what may work in Europe will not work in a federal union such as ours, if they can be made to see that their birthright of freedom and individual liberty, purchased at an immeasurable price, is about to be sold for a mess of doubtful pottage, the outcome is far from hopeless. As members of the bar, we can, more than any other group or class, promote this understanding. It is, I believe, our solemn duty to do so."

Scottsboro Case Appeal Is Postponed To May 17

Atlanta

By agreement of counsel, submission to the Alabama Supreme Court of the appeal of Heywood Patterson, one of the eight negro "Scottsboro Case" defendants, which had been set for yesterday, was postponed until May 17. 4-23-37

The postponement was asked, it was stated, on account of the inadvertent omission from the transcript of certain affidavits and testimony introduced by the State in evidence during the trial. These omissions will, in the meantime, be corrected.

Charged jointly with his seven co-defendants, with criminally assaulting two young white women near Paint Rock, in Jackson County, in March, 1931, Patterson's appeal is from his fourth conviction and the imposing of a sentence of 75 years imprisonment.

Fear, Suffering Seen In Eyes Of Scottsboro Boys

Writer Who Covered Second of Famous Trials, Revisits Youths In Birmingham Jail; Finds Freedom Is Still Their Fond Dream

By P. BERNARD YOUNG, JR.
Journal and Guide Managing Editor

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Six years and a few days ago nine boys were trapped in a web of circumstance that put them in the valley of the shadow of death, thrust them into the headlines of the world's press, and set in motion the longest, bitterest, and most costly series of trials in the history of Alabama.

Four years ago—in 1933—this writer covered the second in their series of trials, held at Decatur, and ordered by the U. S. Supreme Court upon the grounds that the speedy, mob-dominated trials held at Scottsboro were legal mockeries. On Friday he visited them in the Jefferson County jail here, where they are being held for safekeeping pending their next trials.

In these six years one of the youths, Haywood Patterson, has heard the awful sentence of death pronounced three times, and the hardly less severe sentence of 75 years pronounced—at his fourth and last trial, a little over a year ago.

BACKGROUND OF CASE

Clarence Norris has been sentenced twice to die, once at Scottsboro and once at Decatur.

Six of the others were doomed to die at the Scottsboro fiasco trials, while Eugene Williams' tender age caused a mistrial even in passion and hatred-filled Scottsboro.

These six others doomed at Scottsboro in April, 1931, are Ozie Powell, Olin Montgomery, Willie Robertson, Charlie Weems, Andy Wright, and Roy Wright—the latter two brothers.

In the first appeal of the case the verdict against Roy Wright wa sset aside by the Alabama Supreme Court because of his age. The other convictions were set aside by the land's highest tribunal in Washington after the first trials.

NEW TRIALS ORDERED

Judge James Horton, presiding judge at the second trial, removed to Decatur in the hope that more exact justice might be achieved, himself set aside the second verdict against Patterson, reached on Palm Sunday of 1933, with the emphatic declaration that "the preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the innocence of the defendant." That ended his judicial career in this state. The Supreme Court ruled for the boys in subsequent appeals.

Except for Patterson and Norris, none of the remaining seven youths has faced a jury since that terrible April 9, 1931.

What have these six long dreary, hopeless years meant to these boys, so clearly the children of injustice, so certainly the victims of a crime which was never committed by them nor anyone else?

What have these half dozen interminable twelve-months done to them? How have they changed? What do they do? What do they hope for? What is in the hands of fate for them?

These things this writer, accompanied by Ellis F. Corbett, circulation manager of the Journal and Guide, sought to discover in the interview.

BOYS HAVE CHANGED

They have matured, naturally, with the years—but most significantly, beyond their years. In their eyes, in the droop of their bodies, in the lines of their young faces, is the story of misery and fear and dread, of hope and hopelessness, and of suffering almost unimaginable.

Not so much physical suffering, although that is there, what with dark, solitary confinement and heaven really knows what else. But the suffering of cowed, helpless, innocent boys.

Haywood Patterson, to one who watched him closely and often talked to him during the eventful course of his two-weeks second trial, has suffered most during these six years. Beyond question he is breaking. The brilliant counsel of the boys, Samuel Leibowitz of New York, charged some months ago that they were slowly losing their minds. Only an expert could pass final judgment on that, but the great lawyer's fears do not rest lightly upon one after visiting these long suffering youths. 4-24-37

PATTERSON HARD HIT

Patterson is highly nervous and jumpy; his eyes have a strange and oppressive brightness; his smile seems forced. Oue sees these things and his heart bleeds and tries to understand, and one seeks to convey his sympathy and instill courage into Patterson and his comrades in misery.

One does not attempt to give them hope. Too often they have hoped and hope has been dashed. One cannot bring himself to instill a new hope that may, for long years yet, be dashed in the harsh words from the sternly lined lips of another jury foreman—"guilty as charged and his punishment fixed at death in the electric chair."

One simply grips the boys' hands and says: "Keep your chin up!"

GUARD 'NEARBY

They talked freely, although the stout guard escorting us to their seventh floor cells, stood within earshot watching our every move. This particular jail attendant was far above the average of those encountered in two visits to

HIGH COURAGE

These boys are unlettered and the products of a system of proscription and discrimination, but their courage is marvelous to behold. Time and again mobs have almost smashed their jail doors; day in and day out they have known the intimidation of Alabama police; trial after trial they

THIS IS HOW THEY LOOK AFTER SIX YEARS IN PRISON

the jail, during the first of which we were literally put through the third degree and flatly refused permission to visit the boys, the refusal being freely punctuated with profanity, the venomous use of the epithet "nigger," and a shouted warning that "if you want to stay around here you will learn to say 'yes, suh' to us white folks." But that is another story to be found in another column.

Once I addressed one of the boys during the interview as "Mr." and several chorused: "Don't call us 'Mr.' around here, please." I knew what was back of that admonition, only too well. A citizen must be ready and willing to suffer indignity upon indignity, and even flirts with violence in the deeper South, when he attempts to merely be a man: and a reporter must decide between getting a story or conforming to the unequal amenities.

PRESENT AGES

Two of the boys are now 35 years of age—Montgomery and Weems. Three are 24—Patterson, Norris, and Andy Wright. Powell is 22, Roy Wright 20, and Eugene Williams, 19. Robertson is 20.

Patterson's father, Claude Patterson, 50, of Chtattanooga, Tenn. he told us, died on last March 25, the exact 6th anniversary of the arrest of the Scottsboro boys at Paint Rock, Ala.

He still is in love with Miss Mattie Johnson, the Decatur girl he met during his trials there.

"But she done been scared," he said. "They wouldn't let her visit me the last time I was in Decatur. She sure is pretty and nice."

BOYS GRATEFUL

Next to her Patterson most admires Miss Juanita Jackson of the N. A. A. C. P. staff, who visited them some months ago. This admiration is shared by all of the boys. They also think the world of Mrs. Walter Harris, of Birmingham, who sponsored Christmas baskets for them in cooperation with a local group here.

The general health of the boys seems good, but Andy Wright needs money for medicine for a painful ailment growing out of his inactivity, while Patterson complains of high blood pressure. Eugene Williams reported himself feeling very poorly.

The parents and relatives of the boys, who are living, write them and, as often as their meager finances permit, they visit them. Interested persons in several countries write the youths letters of sympathy and encouragement they stated.

IN SOLITARY CONFINEMENT

Here in the jail, built a few years ago, and absolutely escape proof, the youths are kept in separate cells in solitary confinement. Twice a week they are permitted an exercise period in a walled but roofless section of the top (7th) floor.

For the interview they were brought to this exercise area, all but Robertson, Andy Wright, and Eugene Williams. To these we talked in their cells. Before the interview with them was over the jailer let them out and re-locked them in a larger cell where we could talk to them simultaneously. Why they were refused leave from soliary confinement with the others was not explained clearly to us.

The boys are divided in their opinion of their ultimate fate. All are hoping for the best and constantly think of the day of eventual freedom.

PRAISE JUDGE HORTON

They are unanimous in their opinion that Judge Horton was the fairest judge. They share, with emphasis, the opinion which all fair-minded citizens do of Judge W. W. "Speed" Callahan, who has conducted the hearings since Judge Horton was defeated for re-election to the bench They frankly do not expect an even break from him.

Of the scrape on the highway while they were enroute from Decatur to Birmingham following their last trial, they were not so willing to talk, but there was agreement that the officer who was knifed, allegedly by Powell was wounded only after maltreating and pummeling the youngster. One effect of the bullet wound Powell suffered in the head is difficulty in hearing.

THEIR WANTS LISTED

The boys want cigarettes most of all. After that they want spending change and clothing and shoes, or money to buy them with. We divided several dollars among them for smokes. Patterson insisted that the writer give him a handkerchief as a memento of our acquaintance.

Young Williams even went so far as to designate the brand, color, and heel style of a pair of shoes he craved —and sorely needs.

As the interview closed the boys moved without hesitation, upon orders from the jailer, to their respective cells. As the electrically opened and closed doors of the escape-proof jail clanged behind them, I wondered —as the world wonders—"What will be the final fate of these martyrs to the implacable tradition that a white woman's charge is prima facie evidence of a Negro's guilt?"

WHAT IS THE ANSWER?

One hesitates to answer. If someone had violated the hoboing girls—one of whom has recanted and confessed that the charges were made to save themselves from prosecution on Mann Act charges--and it was a question only if these were the guilty persons, one might feel that there was no hope of vindication for the Scottsboro boys. But after hearing every word of testimony of the Scottsboro physician who examined the girls within forty minutes of the supposed crime, I Know That nobody attacked Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on that fateful freight night.

Hence I cannot bring myself to believe that even Alabama will take the lives of these nine boys, or much of the cruelest possible miscarriage of longer deprive them of their precious liberty. I may be wrong. But if I am, the State of Alabama will have been guilty

NEGRO IS GIVEN CHAIR IN ATTACK

Appeal Taken In Sentence For Injury Of Overton Schoolgirl, 11

Case of Curtis Cobb, 21-year-old Negro janitor at Overton School, who was sentenced to death yesterday for criminally assaulting 11-year-old Ethel Weaver, today was headed for the State Supreme Court.

Defense Atty. J. R. Payne said he would serve notice of an appeal immediately. Cobb was ordered to die in the electric chair, Feb. 26.

The Negro, his spine severed by a pistol bullet fired by the girl's father the day after the attack last October, heard death sentence pronounced as he sat in a wheel chair in Judge Robert J. Wheeler's court.

Ethel had identified Cobb as her attacker from the stand. Her testimony was corroborated by her school chum, Katherine Ballinger. The two children were going home from school when the attack occurred.

Ethel's father, J. G. Weaver told of going with a group of men to find his daughter lying with her arm broken at the foot of a ravine where she was thrown by her attacker.

Cobb, the only witness in his own behalf, attempted in a barely audible voice, to establish an alibi. He said he arrived at the school that afternoon as usual after the children had left.

When he finished his work, he said, he went home "by the highway," to distinguish from the railroad short-cut the girls had taken.

Judge Wheeler took a hand in the questioning at this stage and repeatedly asked Cobb if he had met anyone during his walk home, but the Negro was unable to name anyone who could support his alibi testimony.

As he testified he fingered a tattered Bible which lay in his lap.

NEGRO ACQUITTED IN ATTACK CHARGE

Jury Finds Monroe Prentice Not Guilty

1-20-37

Monroe Prentice, 64-year-old Negro janitor of a Southside apartment house, was at liberty today after a jury of business men last night acquitted him of the charge of criminally attacking Mrs. W. P. Bitz, who lives in the apartment house.

Mrs. Bitz accused the Negro of attacking her when he was called to her apartment to go on an errand last Sept. 4.

Prentice, emphatically denying the charge when he took the stand in his own defense yesterday afternoon, said he was physically incapable of committing the offense.

The jury brought in its verdict to Circuit Judge Robert J. Wheeler after deliberating two hours and 15 minutes.

Negro Is Identified By Girl, 10, As Attacker

1-22-37

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Jan. 21.—(AP)—A pretty 10-year-old school girl took the witness stand today and pointed to Curtis Cobb, school janitor, as the negro who attacked her and broke her arm.

Cobb, who pleaded not guilty, was brought into the courtroom in a wheel chair to face trial. He still was suffering the effects of a bullet wound inflicted last Oct. 6 by the girl's father. The shot was fired when the negro was brought before the child and her father.

The girl told the jury her assailant seized her as she and another girl walked along a mountain path en route home from the school where the janitor worked. She said the negro dragged her down a slope, attacked her and then tossed her over a cliff. Her arm was broken in the fall, she said.

NEGRO GOES ON TRIAL FOR ATTACKING GIRL

Curtis Cobb, Overton Negro, sat in a wheel chair in Circuit Judge Robert J. Wheeler's court today and listened to testimony which the state believes will name him as attacker of 11-year-old Ethel Weaver.

Dr. E. M. Robinson, Overton physician, told the jury that he examined the girl at her home and found she had been criminally attacked. He said he also found she had suffered a broken arm.

Cobb was shot by Ethel's father, J. G. Weaver, watchman-operator of near Overton, the day following the attack last October.

Nullification of Scottsboro Decision Seen in Bell's Measure

Daily Dispatch Bureau,
In the Sir Walter Hotel.
By J. C. BASKERVILL

Raleigh, Jan. 13.—Recalling successful nullification of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments by indirection, veteran political observers see a similar effort to nullify the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case in a bill introduced by Senator James A. Bell, of Mecklenburg, empowering superior court judges to dissolve grand juries at their pleasure.

Of course the bill cuts both ways, the same observers agree, as it would give judges the power to prevent discrimination against Negro jurors by use of the same power of dissolution.

Senator Bell declined to commit himself definitely on the meaning and implications of his proposal, but smilingly offered no objection to the interpretation that it was an effort to nullify the Scottsboro decision.

It was recalled on all sides that Negroes have recently served on Mecklenburg grand and petit juries for the first time since Reconstruction days. It was pointed out at the time that the presiding judge had no course open to him other than to quash all indictments found by grand juries on which Negroes had not been drawn.

But if the Bell proposal becomes a law, any judge could dissolve any grand jury whose composition he did not like and there are many who believe that the jurists would not hesitate to exercise this power in such a way as to prevent too many Negroes serving, as well as to prevent too gross discrimination against members of the Negro race.

The measure does not extend to petit juries, observers believe, because attorneys for the State or for the defense can always take care of the situation there by use of the challenges allowed by law.

"LONDON CALLING"

English Newspaper Again Phones About Scottsboro Negroes

London had checked up on the Scottsboro Negroes a second time by overseas telephone today.

One of the many episodes in the Scottsboro case prompted a London newspaper to call the sheriff's office here more than a year ago. And last night Warden J. G. Murphy was surprised when he picked up the phone and was told the editor of The London Daily News was on the other end of the wire.

Murphy said the London editor's voice was almost as clear as if he had been making a local call, as he questioned the warden about the Scottsboro Negroes, who are confined in County Jail. The editor asked if the Negroes were still in solitary confinement, and Murphy told him some of them are. There are nine of the Scottsboro Negroes in jail here.

Murphy answered other questions propounded by the editor and, after an exchange of holiday greetings, the overseas interview was ended.

More Evidence Of Racial Fairness

For the second time within the last few months, a Jefferson County jury has acquitted a Negro identified by a white woman as her assailant in a criminal attack. The case decided this week involved a Negro janitor on the Southside. The other case resulted in the acquittal of a Negro WPA worker living near Irondale.

In each of these trials a white jury weighed the identification against testimony brought forth on behalf of the Negro and decided that the evidence did not point to the defendant's guilt. Not infrequently, of course, an identification is a matter of doubt. Apparently the jurors concluded that this was true of these cases.

Let those who cry out in other sections that the black man in the South always is denied an even chance at justice ponder these two cases.

Last night a Criminal Court jury returned a verdict in another assault case. In this case a 21-year-old Negro school janitor was convicted of criminally assaulting a 10-year-old schoolgirl. This was a most atrocious case, and there was no doubt of the criminal's identity. The jury gave him the death penalty.

It is worth while to consider these verdicts together. They show that justice can be done in such cases in the South, without regard to racial considerations. It is heartening to see juries base their judgments strictly on the evidence in such cases. It is good to know both that jurors will convict and give due punishment under the law when the evidence warrants it and that they will not convict when the testimony does not, in their deliberate judgment, justify a verdict of guilty.

Scottsboro Case To Be Resumed

DECATUR, ALA., Feb. 27.—(AP)—The six-year-old "Scottsboro Case"—involving nine negroes charged with assaulting two white women—bounded back into Alabama's legal picture today with some legal authorities predicting a resumption of trials "within several weeks."

Predictions were based on a closed conference here today between Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael, Thomas S. Lawson, assistant attorney general assigned to the "Scottsboro case", and Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding jurist of Morgan circuit, in charge of trials since the case was moved here from Jackson County.

All the conferees were non-committal, although Carmichael said:

"It was a routine, informal conference before trial."

The negro defendants, the State charges, assaulted two young white women aboard a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., on March 25, 1931. Eight are awaiting trial, while the ninth is under a 75-year sentence now pending on appeal.

Twice death sentences in the case have been reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court. First, when seven received death sentences, the U. S. Court held they had been without adequate counsel. The second time, when two death sentences were carried up, the high tribunal held that negroes "systematically" had been excluded from jury service. Two defendants were held to be juveniles.

The trials were brought to Morgan County on a change of venue. The defendants are held in jail at Birmingham, 90 miles away.

CAUSE FOR REJOICING

If rumors to the effect that the "Scottsboro cases" have been adjusted turn out to be a prelude to actual settlement, Alabamans, as well as southerners in general, will have reason to rejoice. The amazing thing is that some short cut was not found long ago to get rid of this nightmare.

Whatever may be the merits of the controversy, two outgrowths of the affair are beyond dispute. It was given a political aspect when Lieutenant Governor Knight, who prosecuted the cases, ran for his present post largely on the basis of his handling of the trials. And it made the state of Alabama the special target of radicals and reformers eager to exploit every untoward event.

If this case had been well handled to begin with, there would have been no such aftermath as has developed. The cases would not have gone to the United States supreme court time and again, giving the whole country a painful and distorted impression.

Since that first blunder, Alabama authorities have continued making grievous mistakes, with the result that "Scottsboro" has become another name for a shirt of Nessus, to be worn with agony and not to be cast off. It is a sorry mess, which ineptitude, reversals from Washington, and resentment cooked up to bedevil the people of Alabama.

Recently, former Congressman Carmichael, of Tuscumbia, undertook to represent the defendants. There was thereby brought into the picture a sane and respected force likely to make itself felt for the good of the community. If an agreement has been reached to prevent a fresh ventilation of the Scottsboro business, Mr. Carmichael's participation must have contributed to the arrangement.

WHY SHOULD WE CONTINUE TO PAY THE BILL?

The recent announcement that the negroes in the famed "Scottsboro Case," will be given new hearings soon in Decatur reminds one of the immensely tangled red tape found in the law where money making schemes appear.

On March 25, 1931, six years ago nine negroes (foreign to this county) were arrested for attacking two white women of Huntsville who were enroute home from Chattanooga by freight train near Stevenson. In spite of the high tension created by the crime Jackson County did itself justice in protecting the criminals and giving them fair trials according to law. Thus the publicity branded the cases as the "Scottsboro Case."

Since then the negroes have been kept in other county jails for their safe keeping, spending the greater part of the time in Jefferson County and their board bill marked up to Jackson County, plus the cost of the court procedure of their various trials during the long stretch of six years.

It would be well that Jackson Countians object to continue to pay the cost of the negroes upkeep and court trials. If there is doubt to the evidence submitted in the trials why couldn't the sentences have been so that the criminals could have been put in the work houses like other criminals and given something to do toward paying for their own upkeep?

This case has undoubtedly proved the weakness of the law of our state. It lowers the dignity of our courts and costs the citizens of the state enormous amounts because someone grasped the chance to cash in on a money scheme.

Scottsboro Boys Observe Their Sixth 'Anniversary'

'We Want To Get Out,' They Chant As Fourth Trial Nears; Date For New Hearing Already Has Been Set, With Knight Ready To Prosecute

"We wanna git out."

Nine young Negro men stood in the "sun room" of the Jefferson County Jail today and chorused this plea in unison on the sixth anniversary of their arrest in a case which has become famous around the world.

It was six years ago this morning that a freight train puffed out of Chattanooga, Tenn., towards Scottsboro, with 12 Negro boys huddled in one gondola car and a carload of white hobos, including two women, in the car just in front of them.

On the day the alleged Scottsboro attack case occurred, not a newspaper in Alabama carried the story on the front page, although since then the story has been published repeatedly on the front pages of newspapers the world over.

It was a little before noon that a white hobo, with his trousers torn and a cut on his knee, shuffled into the office of the railroad agent at Stevenson and told a story of how the white men had been thrown off the train and the two girls ravished.

The agent immediately wired to Scottsboro, where the train was stopped and nine of the 12 Negroes were captured.

Since then the cases have been tried three times, twice to be reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court and once for the verdict to be set aside by an Alabama circuit judge who held the evidence insufficient to convict.

New trial dates have been set and will be announced soon, it was learned on high authority today.

A central figure in prosecution of the cases said the trials would be reopened in the early Summer "if present plans are carried out."

Special Prosecutor Thomas E. Knight, on account of whose illness the trials have been postponed since January, 1936, told United Press in Montgomery today that he was fully recovered and "ready to go ahead with the trials at any time."

Only six of the Negroes will face trial when the new dates are announced. They are, in the order of their scheduled trials, Clarence Norris, Andy Wright, Charlie Weems, Ozie Powell, Willie Robertson and Olin Montgomery.

Two of the nine—Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, minors at the time of their arrest—have not been rearraigned.

One, Haywood Patterson, was convicted at his fourth trial in January, 1936, and sentenced to 75 years in prison. This conviction also is on its way to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Two—Williams and Wright—have grown up behind prison bars. Wright is 20 years old today. He was 14 when he was first arrested. Williams is slightly older.

Ozie Powell, shot by a deputy after he slashed a guard's throat in an escape attempt last year, said he was "feeling all right."

In accordance with ruling by the United States Supreme Court, the Negroes were reindicted in 1935 by a Jackson County Grand Jury that included a member of their own race. The high court had previously reversed death sentences for all nine on the grounds that Negroes were barred from jury lists in Alabama.

All but the two youngest, who were turned over to a juvenile court, were rearraigned.

They were formally charged with the assault of Mrs. Victoria Price, traveling woman "hobo" aboard a freight train roaring through Northern Alabama.

Nine Identified

Mrs. Price testified that six of the 12 Negroes on the train attacked her and that the other six attacked Ruby Bates. She identified six of the nine caught as her attackers and three as among those who attacked the Bates girl.

The Bates girl at the trial of Heywood Patterson in Decatur in 1933 dramatically denied that the Negroes attacked her and declared that she and Victoria cooked up the attack story to gain sympathy.

MONTGOMERY, March 25.—The Alabama Supreme Court today continued until April 22 a hearing on an appeal by Haywood Patterson, one of the Scottsboro Negroes, from a 75-year sentence imposed in Morgan County last year. NEW TRIAL ASKED FOR CONDEMNED NEGRO

MONTGOMERY, March 31.—Defense attorneys today charged that Negroes were excluded from jury lists in Calhoun County in the trial of Roosevelt Collins, 21-year-old Negro sentenced to die for an alleged attack on a white woman near Alexandria last July.

In a brief filed with the Alabama Supreme Court, the Negro's attorneys asked that the high tribunal grant Collins a new trial on grounds he was denied "equal protection under the law."

Collins was convicted in Calhoun Circuit Court last September for assaulting Mrs. Lula Hill near Alexandria.

Atty.-Gen. A. A. Carmichael denied that Negroes were excluded from venire lists. The court took the appeal under advisement.

End of Scottsboro Trials Seen; Two Others Are Found Guilty by Jury.

7-25-37

DECATUR, Ala., July 24.—(AP) Freedom for four "Scottsboro" negroes, and penitentiary terms for two others, came in swift succession here today, and a source competent to speak of the famous gang rape case said "this is the end of these trials."

After more than six years in Alabama jails, four defendants were released here at noon.

Laughing and smiling, Olen Montgomery, Willie Roberson, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright ran out of the Morgan county jail and were driven out a highway leading to Nashville. They were accompanied by two state highway patrolmen and by the Scottsboro defense chief, Samuel S. Leibowitz.

Two Found Guilty.

A few minutes earlier, a jury returned a guilty verdict and fixed punishment at 75 years imprisonment for Charlie Weems, and Ozie Powell pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder, and was sentenced to 20 years.

The rape charges were dropped in Powell's case, as they were against the four freed. Powell was sentenced for an attack on Deputy Sheriff Edgar Blalock in January, 1936, made while the negroes were being transferred from Decatur to Birmingham.

A death decree still is on the record against one "Scottsboro" defendant, Clarence Norris; and two others are under prison sentences, Andy Wright 99 years, and Heywood Patterson, 75 years.

It was predicted by a high source the defense "will drop the appeals in the Heywood Patterson and Andy Wright cases, and the Governor will extend clemency to Clarence Norris."

Thus, the source which declined to be quoted directly, foresaw the end to the case, which began March 25, 1931 when the nine negroes were taken from a freight train at Paint Rock, Ala., and accused of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates. The girls claimed they became the victims of a gang rape after they caught the train to return to their Huntsville, Ala., homes, after a trip in search for work.

Huge Cost of Case.

Prosecution of the case during the six intervening years has cost the state between $50,000 and $75,000, according to Alabama Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael.

A prepared statement, issued by Assistant Attorney General Thomas S. Lawson, Solicitor Melvin Hutson, of Decatur and Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of the Scottsboro circuit, said the prosecution staff considered Roberson and Montgomery innocent and would release Williams and Roy Wright, brother of Andy Wright, because they were juveniles at the time of the alleged crime and "in view of the fact they have been in jail for six and one half years."

In vivid contrast with the original trials at Scottsboro, Ala., in 1931, the court room was virtually empty when the Weems jury came in at 11 a. m. to begin the most eventful 30 minutes of the six-year-history of the case.

At Scottsboro, troops guarded the courtroom and hundreds tried vainly for seats.

Eleventh Jury in Case.

The Weems jury was the eleventh to hear the evidence in the "Scottsboro" case. All but one returned verdicts of guilty, and that, the Roy Wright jury at Scottsboro in 1931, failed to agree.

Twice the United States supreme court set aside death sentences, first because the defendants were "without benefit of adequate counsel" in the original trials, and later holding negroes were systematically excluded from the juries which handled the case.

The latter ruling brought changes in jury methods in many deep south states.

Negroes were drawn in the jury panel for each of the last series of trials, but none served.

Leibowitz, worn by the strain of nearly two weeks in a sweltering courtroom, was jubilant after the cases were dropped. "No statement," he told newspapermen as he left Decatur.

There was no demonstration in Decatur as the cases were dropped. The negroes were gone within 25 minutes. No crowd gathered either at the court house or jail.

Leibowitz Takes Exception To Entire Charge Of Judge Callahan

DECATUR, July 21.—A jury today deliberated the fate of Andy Wright, Negro Scottsboro defendant.

Wright's case was given to the jury at 10:35 a. m. after a charge by Judge W. W. Callahan which lasted more than an hour.

The state has asked that Wright be given virtually life imprisonment for his part in the alleged attacks.

As Judge Callahan concluded, Defense Atty. Samuel Leibowitz entered a blanket exception to the entire charge on grounds that the jurist "unduly stressed testimony of the prosecution" without summarizing defense testimony.

In a statement to newspapermen, Mr. Leibowitz termed the judge's charge "biased and unfair," and declared:

"It sounded more like a summation for the state than a judge's charge. He reviewed testimony of practically every state's witness and did not mention that of a single defense witness."

For the first time in the history of the six-year-old Scottsboro cases, the state did not ask the death penalty. A compromise was reached whereby the defense agreed not to ask for a special venire if the prosecution would waive the death penalty.

Solicitor Melvin Hutson, of Morgan County, however, asked the jury to fix punishment at "a term of years that will amount to life imprisonment."

"Under the law," he said, "you cannot say life imprisonment on your verdict, but you can say 75 years or 50 years." He explained that agreement not to demand death did not mean the state had any doubt of the defendant's guilt.

Labor Defense Group Plans Wide Appeal

NEW YORK—(AP)—The International Labor Defense Saturday urged "nation-wide action on a greater scale than ever" to free the five convicted Scottsboro case defendants.

The organization suggested mass circulation of petitions to Gov. Graves, of Alabama, formation of local committees and mass meetings throughout the country.

"The people of the United States have saved these boys' lives for six years," Secretary Anna Damon said.

"We call upon our membership and friends of justice throughout the country to plunge into action which will demonstrate the mandate of the people—including a good proportion of the people of Alabama itself—that the Scottsboro boys shall not burn in the electric chair, shall not be imprisoned for life, on charges which no one, not even the prosecution and the prosecuting judge who is conducting these trials, can for a moment believe are true."

Samuel Leibowitz's office said Saturday night it had received a telegram from him at Pulaski, Tenn., saying he was on his way here by train with the four Scottsboro case defendants freed Saturday.

His plans were not known, but an assistant said he had spoken in the past of possibly setting up a trust fund for the "boys" and educating them here.

READY TO RESUME SCOTTSBORO CASES

Leibowitz Unlikely to Ask Delay, Despite Illness of Associate in Defense

TRIAL SLATED TOMORROW

Second of Defendants to Face Decatur Jury—Compromise Sentiment Gains

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., July 17.—Despite the illness of Clarence J. Watts, his associate defense counsel in recent trials of the Negroes in the Scottsboro case, Samuel Leibowitz of New York indicated today that he was prepared to proceed alone Monday with the trial of Andy Wright, one of nine Negroes accused of attacking two white girls.

Judge W. W. Callahan recessed the trials Thursday after a jury which deliberated about four hours had found Clarence Norris, another defendant, guilty as charged and condemned him to death in the electric chair.

Eighteen months ago a jury convicted Heywood Patterson, alleged ringleader of the gang of Negroes who are accused of attacking the white girls on a freight train six and a half years ago after driving several white hoboes off in a fight. Victoria Price, one of the girls, is the complainant.

Patterson was sentenced to seventy-five years' imprisonment, and an appeal from the sentence has been considered by the defense, even in the face of a prospect that if he were tried again here he would be condemned to death provided the prosecution, represented by Thomas S. Lawson, Assistant Attorney General, and Melvin C. Hutson, the local solicitor, were to insist upon that penalty.

Defense in Predicament

The conviction of Norris leaves the defense in its worst predicament since the United States Supreme Court reversed the original convictions handed down at Scottsboro more than six years ago. In the several trials that have been held since, the defense always has had some vital Federal issue on which to take the case to the Federal Supreme Court. The Norris trial just ended left the defense attorneys with only a slender reed on which to lean.

That reed is the motion denied by Judge Callahan to transfer the trials to the United States District Court for Northern Alabama on the ground that the Alabama law denying more than one change of venue was discriminatory in that it denied the defendants their constitutional right to a trial before a fair and impartial jury.

It is the contention of the defense that events here since the cases were transferred in 1933 from Jackson to Morgan County have inflamed public opinion against the Negroes and their lawyers.

Following Patterson's last trial, Ozie Powell, one of the defendants, who, the defense says, is now insane, stabbed a deputy sheriff who was guarding him during his transfer from the local jail to Birmingham and was shot through the head. This episode and the defense attack upon the jury system which excluded Negroes from service—a point on which the United States Supreme Court reversed one conviction—have been leading contributions to the hostile attitude of the townsfolk and farmers toward the defense.

Many Favor Settlement

Local sentiment against the Negroes is as strong as ever, but Morgan County is growing weary of the repeated trials, convictions and reversals. To some extent here, and to a greater extent in other sections of the State, there are many among the more literate who, while unwilling to go so far as to concede the possibility that all the Negroes are innocent, feel a reasonable doubt about the guilt of all and would welcome a final settlement which would satisfy the ends of justice and at the same time be acceptable to the defense.

The attitude of these persons is that the constant agitation over the Scottsboro case, which has become as synonymous with Alabama as the name of Tom Mooney with California, is doing the State no good. As the trials have proceeded it has become increasingly evident to observers that a compromise would probably eventuate. As long as the State demands death sentences against a Negro accused by a white woman, juries here will mete them out and a compromise would be the only way of settling the case without death verdicts.

Scottsboro Defense Gives Up Hope For Acquittal Of Third Negro

By James C. Hutto
Post Staff Correspondent

DECATUR, July 23. — Samuel Leibowitz, chief of the Scottsboro defense counsel, today indicated he virtually had abandoned hope of an acquittal for Charlie Weems, Negro charge with assault in a mass attack on two white women.

In a closing argument, bitter with denunciation of "hates and prejudices," the New York attorney declared:

"I'll be frank with you—I'm not confident of an acquittal. If the solicitor asks you to sentence this Negro to 50 years in prison, your verdict probably will be 99 years."

Leibowitz, who has argued the Scottsboro cases through six years of litigation in state and Federal courts, said he was "sick and tired of this sanctimonious hypocrisy."

"Charlie Weems is not on trial here," he declared. "The State of New York is on trial—put on trial by the solicitor.

"He asks you men on the jury to lynch this Negro because his lawyer comes from New York."

Leibowitz charged that Circuit Solicitor H. G. Bailey, in the state's opening argument yesterday, "spent three minutes discussing the evidence and 27 minutes in flaming the old hates and prejudices."

Leibowitz, attacking the testimony of Mrs. Victoria Price, recalled the testimony of Lester Carter, white youth who identified himself as the companion of Mrs. Price at the time she and Ruby Bates allegedly were assaulted aboard a moving freight train near Scottsboro in 1931.

Earlier, Mrs. Price had identified Weems as one of the six Negroes who allegedly assaulted her and said he was one of "two or three" who had pistols. She said he hit her on the head with his gun.

Closing arguments began with opening of court today and the case was expected to reach the jury before noon.

SCOTTSBORO JURY ASKED TO GIVE LIFE

State Waives Death Penalty in Case of Andy Wright, but Insists on His Conviction

CLASH OVER NEW YORK

Prosecution Again Attacks Outside Efforts for Negroes and Brings Retort From Leibowitz

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., July 20.—Melvin C. Hutson, circuit solicitor of Morgan County, told the jury in the Scottsboro case today that he wanted Andy Wright, a Negro accused of attacking Victoria Price, punished not by death in the electric chair but by life imprisonment.

Making the closing argument for the State, Mr. Hutson declared that, in waiving the death penalty in Wright's case, he was not expressing the least doubt regarding his guilt. Why, after all these years of demanding death for the Negroes, the State had shifted, he declared, was no concern of the jury.

"If you do your duty as well as I'm trying to do mine," he said, "we'll get through with this business right quick.

"There is no question but what the crime was committed on that freight train," Mr. Hutson declared.

"The question for you men to decide is whether Andy Wright participated in the commission of that crime and I submit that, by his own story and the testimony of Victoria Price, he stands convicted."

Praising Mrs. Price for her six-and-a-half-year fight "to vindicate the laws of Alabama against the onslaughts of powerful forces in the North, aided by skillful and resourceful counsel," the Solicitor continued:

"Now we are nearing the end of that long fight. This jury can ill-afford to call Victoria Price a miserable perjurer just because Wright, this Negro defendant, says he did not do what she says he did. The question before you is what punishment to mete out.

Leibowitz Sees "Reasonable Doubt"

"Don't say to yourselves that, because we consented to the dismissal of the special venire in this case and waived the death penalty, there was any question of doubt about the guilt of this defendant," Mr. Hutson went on. "If I had any such doubt I would not be here prosecuting him. It is not for you members of the jury to ask why we did what we did. That is for the State.

"Alabama expects you to do your duty. Let's do the job. Let's get it behind us."

H. G. Bailey, the solicitor from Jackson County who prosecuted the first trials in Scottsboro in April, 1931, opened the State's summations with an attack on New York City generally, and Lester Carter, who had come from New York to testify for the defense, especially.

Samuel Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defense, argued for Wright's acquittal because of the many "reasonable doubts" which, he said, the State's case left regarding the defendant's guilt.

Mr. Leibowitz declared he was growing a little weary of listening to attacks on lawyers and witnesses from New York. He was being forced to the conclusion, he declared, that this extraneous issue was being introduced at the close of every trial as a sort of "knockout punch for the defense."

As a lawyer, he pointed out, he had a right to try cases in any State in this country, but, he declared, if juries here were to make up their minds before hearing any evidence that they would put outsiders "in their place," he was just wasting his time and might "just as well go home and let you do what you will with these helpless Negroes."

Jury Is Locked Up

"Every time these cases have been tried they've got in the business about New York at the very end," Mr. Leibowitz said. "That seems to be the clincher, and its worked every time.

"I can't fight that kind of thing. I'm entitled to an acquittal in this case, and I ask you men in all seriousness to do what you swore at the outset you would do.

"If a reasonable doubt arising from the evidence springs up in your minds, give the defendant the benefit of that doubt then stand pat for 100 hours if necessary so that justice may be done."

The jury to try Wright was completed at the opening of the morning's session. Victoria Price took the stand immediately afterward, relating her story once more.

Following Mrs. Price, the State called farmers and others who have been subpoenaed because Wright had made no statement whatever.

The summations were ended at 5:20 P. M. at which time Judge W. W. Callahan, holding that it was too late to charge the jury, recessed court until tomorrow morning and ordered the jury locked up.

William Richter, an associate of Leibowitz, took the witness stand to impeach the testimony of C. F. Simmons, a Jackson County deputy Sheriff, who testified for the State that Wright told him that he had not molested the white women, but that the eight other Negroes had.

Mr. Richter said that five minutes before Mr. Simmons took the stand the deputy had told him that he was at a loss to tell why he had

At Last We Are Rid Of The Scottsboro Case

The Scottsboro case is ended. The state has dropped all charges against four of the nine defendants. In reality, the charge of assault on Victoria Price and Ruby Bates has been nol prossed in five of the cases, for while the fifth Negro is under sentence, it is for a charge of assault with intent to murder growing out of an attack on a deputy sheriff. The other four Negroes remain under conviction on the charges of rape, with varying sentences imposed on them.

The dropping of five of these cases and the reported agreements concerning the other cases in which convictions have been secured represent a triumph of common sense and moderation. These cases, dragging on for more than six years in an atmosphere of doubt and dispute, with all the unsavory elements that have entered into them, have been a perennial nightmare to Alabama. The great majority of the people of this state, The News-Age-Herald is convinced, will rejoice to be rid of them.

At most, the truth of these charges has been extremely doubtful. There has been evidence and testimony to indicate that the Negroes actually were not guilty as charged. One of the accusers, Ruby Bates, repudiated her original testimony that she was assaulted, and denied that there were any assaults on either her or Victoria Price. The latter testified throughout the numerous trials that she was assaulted, though her testimony, in its conflicting statements and in its discrepancies with the testimony of others, was of such a nature that it was never conclusive.

Grave doubt therefore surrounded these charges. In view of this doubt, and in view of all the other circumstances, no one could be certain of where truth and justice lay. In this uncertainty, the sensible thing from every standpoint was to do just what the state has done—end the sorry mess in the most convenient way.

Apparently there has been an agreement between the state and the defense that the most convenient way to end the cases was to drop the remaining charges and let the convictions stand, together with an understanding, according to reports credited as authoritative, that clemency would be granted in the case of the death sentence imposed on one of the defendants.

The status of the five Negroes under conviction is varied. In the case of Ozie Powell, the charge of rape has been dropped, but he has pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder in connection with his attack on Deputy Sheriff Edgar Blalock in January, 1936, when he was being transported to the Jefferson County Jail. For this he has been sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary. There is no question that this was a criminal act and that he was guilty as charged. Accordingly, in whatever adjustments might be made concerning these cases in the future, his should be considered separately from the rest.

As for the other four under conviction, the varied sentences imposed and the fact that the rape charges were dropped against the other five defendants clearly call for adjustments. Either all nine Negroes were guilty, or none was. Since there was so much doubt of their guilt that the assault charges were nol prossed in five of the cases, it would hardly be fair to let the sentences stand as they are.

In the case of Clarence Norris, sentenced to be executed, there is assurance, apparently, that the death sentence will be commuted. Another defendant, Andy Wright is under sentence of 99 years. Two others, Heywood Patterson and Charlie Weems, are under sentence of 75 years.

Thus, while the Scottsboro trials are ended, there remain further questions for consideration. The responsibility for the adjustment and disposition of the cases under conviction rests on the governor. Since the governor doubtless knew of the disposition that was to be made of the cases in court, whether or not he gave his own sanction to the arrangement, he must surely be contemplating an exercise of clemency powers which as nearly as possible will prevent undue punishment of some while others go free. This paper believes that the governor can be trusted to deal wisely with these convictions.

What the state officials in charge of the prosecution have done should be accepted by all Alabamians, and the state's course upheld by public opinion, regardless of individual feelings concerning the question of guilt or innocence. For let everyone remember that whatever may have been his opinion about the Scottsboro case, he could not be sure that there was any foundation for his opinion.

And whatever the governor may do in adjusting the sentences of those under conviction, it should likewise be accepted by all Alabamians. The final responsibility in this will be solely the governor's. The public should realize that, in the circumstances, the governor will be closer to the subject and will have a fuller knowledge of all its aspects than any other person. Whatever he sees fit to do, we may all be sure, will be done in accordance with the best dictates of his judgment and conscience. Let us all trust the governor's conscience and judgment in this matter. Let us all abide by any decision he reaches in making adjustments.

The state's action in dropping these trials was one of high courage as well as of good sense. The officials responsible for the decision and any others who might have had a hand in bringing it about are to be highly commended. And if there are persons to whom this disposition of the Scottsboro case does not give satisfaction, they can at least take comfort in the fact that a great and troublesome burden has been lifted from Alabama.

SCOTTSBORO FINISH

We breathe a sigh of relief that the sixth trial of the Scottsboro case has finally ended. The final result was, the condemnation to death of one, the conviction of four to terms equivalent to life, and the release of four. This trial dragged on too long, and the entire country finally tired of the spectacularism that was displayed by both sides. There has always been a doubt in the minds of many people as to the truth of the charges against these negroes, and this growing feeling is undoubtedly what led the court to drop the case against the final four.

We trust that some compromise will be worked out even in the case of the five that have been convicted, in order that this entire sordid mess can be forgotten and put behind us. Despite the many lurid pictures that are painted in Northern sections against the South and its tendency for lynch law, the fact that these men were tried six times, and no violence was visited on them shows that law and order can be enforced in any community if the authorities are so minded. The feeling against these negroes was high, and the slurs that their attorney made on the community in which they were tried inflamed this feeling even ore but despite these facts, the trials were orderly and these men lived for six years while the cases were being fought in every court in the land.

The regard of the people of Alabama for law, and their determination to see the law prevail should inspire weak knee officials in other sections to prevent lynching of persons in their custody. If law and order could be preserved in this most trying ordeal there is no reason why other communities should not likewise restrain themselves even in the face of the most revolting situations.

Leibowitz Throws His Hat

Samuel Leibowitz, the protector of the infamous Scottsboro boys, was in his glory last week when he arrived in New York with four of the boys that had been acquitted in the last episode of this sickening drama. He was met at the station by hundreds of Harlemites and as he alighted from the train he poked the lid out of his straw hat, threw it into the air and exclaimed: "There goes the grime of Alabama."

Although Mr. Leibowitz claims that there will be no exploitation of the boys in Alabama, arrangements had been made when he arrived for a big celebration at the Hippodrome and we may take with a grain of salt any statement he may make, as this case has been one of the greatest assets of this notorious publicity seeker for seven years. Already the boys have been dolled up in New York finery and Leibowitz will not quickly allow them to be forgotten, as the red organizations of the metropolis have been putting up too much money to feed his kitty.

In so far as Alabama is concerned, it is to be hoped that every effort will be made to settle the cases against the remaining culprits and allow us to forget once and for all time this nauseating case.

SCOTTSBORO

HOPING to be done with the Scottsboro case, Alabama has abruptly freed four of the nine defendants. It is predicted that the governor will commute the single death sentence now standing, if no appeals are taken in behalf of the five other Negroes.

The Sunset News has expressed its opinions before on this case. We have never felt that the Scottsboro boys were guilty of the charges against them. We have talked with Alabamans who, while not upholding the defendants, declared the boys should not be "put to death on what that one woman says." The following editorial comment from the Washington Post represents our view of the case at this time:

> The six-and-a-half year rape trial has done little to enchance the state's reputation. On the contrary, mention today of the name of Alabama raises all manner of unpleasant thoughts of injustice, blind prejudice and abject social failure. Ten times Alabama prosecutors rose in court with only the word of a female tramp to justify their demand for the lives of nine Negroes. Ten times Alabama juries acceded to the request, closing their eyes narrowly not only to competent medical testimony but—most important—to the oath of one of the women involved that the whole story of the attack on them was "framed."

> A more evident miscarriage of justice the nation has rarely witnessed.

PATIENT UNDER FIRE.

During a month when freeing of four "Scottsboro case" defendants evoked expressions of gratification from newspapers, North and South, the flight of a prisoner from a Georgia chaingang to Massachusetts gave occasion for the censuring of a Southern State. Return of the Negro fugitive to Georgia was refused by the Governor of Massachusetts on the ground that evidence indicated the existence of brutality in Georgia penal institutions.

Time was when allegations of brutality and race persecution could stir a long and acrimonious controversy. There are signs now, however, that Georgia has become philosophical under attacks, if not quite reconciled to them. It is true that Governor Rivers protested that the remarks of Governor Hurley were "an indictment" of the people of a sovereign State, but in other portions his reply was softer. The suggestion was made that the Massachusetts Executive visit penal institutions in the South to see for himself, while one correspondent proposes that a new Oglethorpe liberate from Georgia jails all those prisoners who might want to become colonists near Boston.

Evidently strictures long continued have a disciplinary effect on their object comparable to that to be found in jail or gang. If the spirit isn't broken, the speech becomes more discreet. Only in Scottsboro is to be found evidence of sardonic amusement that "somebody else is gettin' it." Patient under the notoriety of a case dumped into its lap, Scottsboro watches Birmingham, object of excoriation by a national magazine, and the editor of the Jackson County Sentinel consoles his Birmingham neighbors with the remark:

> Hold your seats, boys, they hain't nothin' ye can do about it—you dirty, brow-beating, slave-holding Southern colonels, suh!

Perhaps Birmingham, too, will learn to be philosophical when the heat is turned on.

The Scottsboro Case.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Among the editorials of your valuable paper dated Monday, July 26, was one entitled "The Scottsboro Case."

I am happy to say that in your fearless denouncement of the blind prejudice, shameless injustice, the crushing of truth and the enthronement of falsehood, in the unfair trials of the nine Negro youths in Alabama, you have expressed the sentiment of thousands of fair-minded people all over the world, of all races and creeds.

Congratulations to you on the heroic stand that you have taken for right. SARAH E. LAWTON.
Washington, July 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the prosecuting witness in the Scottsboro case was a "tramp," the Hoover administration, which brought 15,000,000 Americans to the verge of starvation in the midst of plenty, made her so. Alabama never sank so low. G. G. MOORE.
Washington, July 26.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read your splendid editorial of July 26 and wish to commend you for your earnest and frank advocacy of justice and freedom in the case of the Scottsboro victims. You deserve the loyal support of all liberty-loving Americans.

May you continue to have the courage to cry out against the miscarriage of justice whenever and wherever it prevails.

SCOTTSBORO 'BOYS' TAKE TO THE STAGE

Four of Them, With Natty New Clothes and Shining Hair, Ready for Harlem Debut

TO RE-ENACT COURT SCENE

Youths Decide, Over Objection of Leibowitz, That They Are Career Men Now

Four completely transformed Scottsboro boys, speechless in new clothes, with their hair slicked to a bright polish—two of them even sporting canes—admitted yesterday that they were going on the stage.

No longer the cringing, despairing youths who stared from Alabama prison cells, they announced they were taking the step against the advice of Samuel Leibowitz, who was their lawyer.

Olen Montgomery, peering from behind thick-lensed glasses, mumbled that he felt that since he was free he would be his "own man" (meaning his own master) in deciding on a career. The others echoed that sentiment.

They plunked one-finger tunes out of the piano in the parlor of the home of the Rev. Thomas S. Hartens at 443 Franklin Avenue, Brooklyn, smoked one cigarette after another and kept smoothing out their new suits and ties.

It seems they have tasted the wine of high living and feel they could stand lots more of it. They have been to Coney Island and to the big movie houses and have been lionized in various Negro homes in Brooklyn and in Harlem.

Mr. Harten, explaining why he thought it best to find them some kind of work, said it is his philosophy that "an idle head is the devil's workshop." He is a bit afraid, though, that, unless they are properly supervised, the boys might get into trouble.

The four—Montgomery, Eugene Williams, Willie Roberson and Roy Wright—are to appear in a show in a Harlem theatre. They will have parts in a re-enactment of the court scene in the hour of their release.

Monte Hawley, a Negro player, will act as the lawyer. At the theatre last night it was said the actor who will play the role of the presiding judge will probably be a white man, but that had not been decided.

Scottsboro Development.

IT IS NOT POSSIBLE to interpret the developments in the Scottsboro case in favor of the boys in the fateful international [illegible] terms and death sentences while four go free.

One thing stands out, however, and that is the belief in the innocence of all the youths will be more firmly established throughout the world.

For the guilt of the convicted boys rests upon the evidence given by Victoria Price as the guilt of the four boys which the State of Alabama set free evidently upon a premise of innocence, or the theory that, even if they committed any crime they did not deserve further punishment.

Perhaps the real explanation is that Alabama has been beaten in her holy war to send these boys to the electric chair in retaliation for what she called outside interference with her right to administer justice or injustice according to the good old Dixie tradition.

For this vindictive war has cost that State not only thousands in dollars, but has pilloried it as the classical example of color prejudice, human barbarism, prostituted criminal justice and reactionary ignorance of all spots in these United States in the eyes of the civilized world.

Has Alabama Changed?

STILL ANOTHER viewpoint of interpretation is possible, however. The action of the State's attorney in setting the four boys free may indicate that something has happened to public sentiment in Alabama. For ambitious State's attorneys in this Southern State would not take such a chance. It would seem to many, in the face of the old traditional dynamics of public opinion.

This viewpoint is weakened by the death sentence and long sentences for the other unfortunate youths. It is also possible that the State's attorney considered the matter of balance of account and could well afford to rest his laurels on the impressive sentences already meted out and plead that he was saving the State further cost.

Whatever the interpretation, another chapter has ended in this celebrated case. Perhaps another important chapter begins.

Kink Is Still There.

FOR THERE REMAINS the long prison terms and death sentence for five boys believed to be innocent. The fight for them cannot be abandoned.

Alabama has failed to respond to any appeal of ethics, fair play, Christianity, or civic honesty in this matter. The grim fight to eradicate the basic injustice behind this case is far from being won anywhere in the South.

This kink in American democracy is still there, and the work of straightening it out is still enough to tax the best efforts of white and colored Americans who believe that this great country can yet be a "land of the free and home of the brave."

No doubt the International Labor Defense, which lifted this case into the limelight of world attention, will again take up the cudgels and carry on. No doubt all of those organizations and forces which helped the fight against this injustice will also renew the fight.

What of the Future?

THEN THERE ARE the four freed boys. Caught up as they were in this maelstrom of important human events they have become more than mere human beings. In their experiences they have been charged with dynamic possibilities out of all proportion to their humble place in this maladjusted economic and social fabric.

Released in the right way, their tragic experiences may become blasting dynamite in the cause of liberty or they may be used in a cheap effort at personal gain for themselves or by others.

Then there is Ruby Bates and Victoria Price. Perhaps they should not be mentioned in the same breath, for nobody could have looked on that dramatic moment in the first Decatur trial, as did this writer, when Ruby and Victoria sat on the same witness stand and testified for and against these boys.

It was the first time in the history of the South that a white girl had under similar circumstances, and in a world-famous case, so blasted the testimony in a rape case.

What is yet before Ruby Bates, now a crusader in the case of human justice? What will be the future of Victoria Price?

All of these are dynamic questions which may some day be answered by important events in the history of this country.

For the present, at least, let no fair-minded American, no colored American least of all, forget for a moment that the Scottsboro case still lives, and that the fight around it is the eternal fight against racial discrimination which far transcends in importance the immediate fate of the nine boys, as grave and as appealing as their fate may be.

YOU'RE WELCOME

(By L. S. Turbyfill

According to press radio news a few thosand New Yorkers gave four of the nine black brutes that attacked a couple of young white women and abused them shamefully a few years ago upon in Alabama, a hilarious welcome. Likewise their emancipator, the notable criminal lawyer Samuel Leibowitz who came down to that state and pulled these demons from under the justice of the Alabama courts. In addition to their crime they must have cost the taxpayers of that state a pretty sum during their incarceration and court trials in which they were found guilty repeatedly, yet when this emancipator got on the job he succeeded in freeing them and took them to New York where they apearantly are wanted. We don't know what for, but, if it's to perform such crime as they did in Alabama, then, they have a quartet of well qualified and efficient performers for the job. Fortunately the country—especially the South—has but few of this type of colored gentlemen, and Alabama and the South have good reason to be thankful to Mr. Leibowitz for taking them away and this is hoping they never come back. Such efficiency as these blacks exhibited is not desired here. Furthermore, such performances are forbidden by the better class of their own race. Th negro of the South deservedly rates a better name than he is usually credited with. The truth is a majority of our group of negro population bear a record of good behavior and citizenship.

They are making use of their equal privilege of enjoying the rights and opportunities of any other American citizen. They are recognized for their ambition to keep pace with progress. They have an equal share of public utilities and service, such as highways, schools, etc. Their schools are segregated from the whites. The better class negro appreciates the difference in races. They don't expect epuality in society — they've got better sense.

The better class of negro respects his white neighbor, puts confidence in him, remains loyal so long as the white man conducts himself honorably.

Likewise, the white people appreciate the negro so long as he stays in his place. The white people rely upon the services of the negro, pays him liberally for his services and willingly shares with him the conveniences of comfortable living.

The fact is, the betters of both races are harmonious and fair with each other, but that type of black that received a hilarious welcome from a New York contingent is not welcome down here. This fact should be well understood. New York can have all of this class of colored gentlemen. Neither is the type of their emancipator.

Only recently the Governor of Florida used every means at his disposal to protect one of those demons while on trial for one of the most henious crimes ever committed in our fair state. In this case justice prevailed promptly and this brute was disposed of to the safety of society.

Our courts provide ample protection to the law abiding class but, too often, as in the Alabama case, justice is defeated by employing talent void of principle. This is an old time-tried subject that needs correction in order that violence might be eliminated. But so long as examples of the kind that affords material for this comment are prevelant, there is little hope that lynchings will cease.

It's easy for people afar off from the location of crimes like those nine blacks committed, to condemn violence, but should a thing like that occur to them in their family or even occur in their community, how diferent would be the sentiment!

Most of our law enforcement officials condemn violence, but they

Alabama Madness

THE decision of the "Scottsboro Case" prosecution staff dismissing charges of rape against five of the defendants leaves that celebrated chapter of southern jurisprudence in a state of unholy contradiction.

After six and a half years, four of the boys are now under sentences ranging from fifty years in prison to death in the electric chair on counts of verdicts brought in by as many separate juries. The paradox becomes weird when it is considered that no two of the four verdicts recommend the same penalty. The rape charge against Ozzie Powell, formerly convicted, was dropped and he was given 20 years on a charge of assaulting an officer with intent to kill.

These sentences, including the death decree for Clarence Norris, were based on the accusation of Victoria Price that she and Ruby Bates were criminally attacked on a freight gondola by ALL NINE of the defendants. This account, told at the original 'trial,' and corroborated by Ruby Bates, brought sentences of death in the electric chair to all nine of the boys.

Although Judge W. W. Callahan warned Attorney Leibowitz that his efforts to show that Mrs. Price had perjured the evidence would land him in serious trouble, the court's theory that circumstances in the evidence did not justify the claim of perjury, will stand examination.

Ruby Bates repudiated the accusation. Lester Carter, white companion of the two women, and star witness for the State in earlier trials, repudiated the accusation. Expert testimony of physicians who examined the women contradicted their claim that they had been assaulted.

Then came the State's own agents, the legal prosecutors—who knew the truth in the case better than anyone else, save the complaining witness herself—with another repudiation of Mrs. Price's testimony as it affected the five boys. They virtually admitted that, as to the four released, and one imprisoned on another charge, that same evidence was not sufficient to justify a conviction.

If Mrs. Price's story as told the first time was true, then all nine of the boys were equally guilty and entitled to equal punishment. If she changed her story as it affected the four defendants now at liberty, she perjured her first testimony and her accusation, unsupported by other reliable testimony, ought not to have been accepted. Since the prosecutors finally admitted that her story was not adequate to convict five, then it was not adequate to convict any of the nine boys.

With the sole exception of Judge Horton's setting aside of the first verdict at Decatur, which resulted in his tragic elimination from the bench, the judicial machinery of the sovereign State of Alabama was seized with madness. The 'majesty of the law' was suspended; justice was sent on an enforced vacation; and hypocrisy, deception and innate prejudice were enthroned as judge, jury and executioner. The element of 'reasonable doubt' was ignored in the heat of passion and local prejudice.

The judicial conduct of Judge Callahan was not only reprehensible—he stained the Alabama judiciary with dishonor, and meted out a cruel injustice to white womanhood by placing the questionable character of Victoria Price on the same level with that of the daughters of Southern aristocracy.

The sentences given five of the boys reveal the stricken conscience of the State of Alabama trying to square itself, trying to save faces. This Alabama madness has lowered the prestige of American jurisprudence.

ATTACK CASE IS BACK IN GROOVE

Scottsboro Affair Appears Headed Again For U. S. Supreme Court

By United Press.

DECATUR, Aug. 30.—Alabama's Scottsboro cases today apparently were headed for a third airing before the United States Supreme Court, following denial Saturday by Judge W. W. Callahan of a defense plea for new trials for three of the Negro defendants.

Judge Callahan, in ruling out all four points upon which the defense based its motion for re-trials, charged that an agreement between defense and prosecution to appeal only one of the cases had been "thrown to the winds."

His charge brought an emphatic denial from Clarence Watts, Alabama member of the Negroes' counsel, and a threat that if such a pact had been made without his knowledge, he would withdraw from the cases.

Judge Callahan revealed that defense and prosecution had a "hard and fast" agreement not to appeal any sentence except that of Clarence Norris, who was ordered to die.

Attorney Watts sought new trials for Norris, Andy Wright, sentenced to 99 years, and Charlie Weems, sentenced to 75 years.

The state agreed under the terms of the agreement, Callahan said, to nol-pros charges against four of the nine defendants. The four were freed at the close of the trials here last month.

Watts announced Saturday following Callahan's denial of his new trial plea that he would appeal the three convictions to the Alabama Supreme Court. It was considered certain that an appeal would be carried to the U. S. Supreme Court if the state tribunal acts unfavorably on the defense motion.

Watts Resigns As Defense In Scottsboro Case

Counsel Out After Judge Reveals Leibowitz-State Agreement

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., Sept. 1.—(AP)—Clarence Watts, of Huntsville, associate "Scottsboro" defense counsel, stated tonight his services in this six-year-old gang attack case were at an end.

When Judge W. W. Callahan revealed officially at Decatur last Saturday that the defense and State entered an "ironclad agreement" in July to end the case "for good," Watts announced he would withdraw from the defense, "if such an agreement was entered into."

The attorney was ill when the "agreement" ended a new series of trials at Decatur July 24, and four of the nine negroes accused of assaulting two young white women were released.

In stating his work in the case was done, Watts said his firm simply had completed what it was employed to do. He said he accepted Callahan's statement about the agreement, but the attorney did not directly say the agreement was responsible for termination of his services.

Upon denying new trials for three of the five defendants still under sentence, on a petition presented by Watts, Judge Callahan last Saturday, cited the "hard and fast agreement" which, he said, provided if the State would waive capital punishment in remaining cases and release four of the nine original defendants, no appeals would be taken of the other cases, except in that of Clarence Norris, the one negro under a death sentence.

"The whole case was closed under the agreement I just stated," the judge said, adding: "I know of no way to enforce it, however."

Appeals Are Filed In Scottsboro Case

DECATUR, ALA., Sept. 17.—(AP)—Convictions of negro defendants in the "Scottsboro Case" were appealed to the Alabama Supreme Court today, the fourth time since the alleged assault of two white women in 1931.

Notice of appeals in the cases of Charlie Weems, sentenced to 75 years, and Andy Wright, given 99 years, was received by the circuit clerk. Notice of appeal for Clarence Norris, sentenced to the electric chair this Summer, was filed when he was sentenced.

The case of Heywood Patterson, the fourth negro under sentence, who was given 75 years, has been appealed to the United States Supreme Court for the third time. The State court upheld Patterson's sentence.

One other negro, Ozie Powell, is serving 20 years for assault on a deputy sheriff in an escape attempt. Mass attack charges against Powell and four others were dropped this Summer. The four were freed. The State court has upheld "Scottsboro" case convictions three times in the past.

TWO NEGROES FILE APPEALS

Scottsboro Defendants Seek New Trials In Latest Maneuver

By United Press.

DECATUR, Sept. 17.—Defense attorneys today filed formal notice of appeal for Charlie Weems and Andy Wright, Negro Scottsboro defendants convicted on criminal assault charges at the July term of Morgan Circuit Court.

Appeal notice was filed by Attorneys Samuel Leibowitz and Osborne K. Pankal of New York. Wright was sentenced to 99 years in prison, Weems to 75.

New trails for Weems, Wright and Clarence Norris, sentenced to death on the same charges, were denied by Trial Judge W. W. Callahan last month.

Norris' execution has been stayed by appeal notice. A 75-year sentence given Heywood Patterson, another of the defendants, has been appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Four of nine Negroes accused of a mass attack on two white women in March, 1931, were released at the conclusion of the July trials here. A fifth defendant, Ozie Powell, was sentenced to 20 years for stabbing a deputy.

U. S. SUPREME COURT REFUSES TO REVIEW SCOTTSBORO CASE

Athens, Ala., Courier

Negroes' Lawyers Say They Have Another Plan In Reserve

The Supreme Court, after twice saving him from death, refused Monday to interfere with a 75-year prison sentence imposed in 1936 on Haywood Patterson, one of nine negroes who figured in the Scottsboro case.

In asking the court to review his conviction, Patterson contended it was impossible to obtain a fair trial in Morgan County, Alabama. He was found guilty of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, a white woman, in a freight train near Scottsboro in 1931.

Justice Hugo L. Black did not porticipate in the decision. There had been some talk among observers that if he did participate, the decision might be challenged because of his former membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

In New York, Samuel Liebowitz, counsel for Patterson and the other negroes, received news of the court's action with the comment "We're not licked yet. We have a definite plan for new action and we will start working on it immediately." He did not divulge the plan.

Patterson and the others escaped the death penalty in 1932 when the high tribunal ruled they had not been adequately hepresented by counsel and set aside their conviction. Subsequently, in 1935, the court ordered a new trial because negroes had been systematically excluded from juries which had indicted and convicted Patterson and the other negroes. At the next trial Patterson was sentenced to prison.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily

Congratulations

The United States supreme court has declined to review the conviction of Haywood Patterson, convicted in connection with the Scottsboro trials, thus ending the litigation so far as that particular case is concerned.

The court, by its decision, upholds the trial court, the Alabama supreme court and the prosecution in the famous trial and it is fitting that Judge Callahan, Attorney General Carmichael, Assistant Attorney General Lawson and Solicitor Hutson should be congratulated upon their vindication in the highest tribunal in the nation.

The decision of the supreme court not to review the Patterson case, as we understand it, means that the court did not find any reason for interference with the proceedure in the Alabama courts; that no constitutional rights had been denied the defendant.

What effect this decision will have on subsequent cases which may be appealed to the supreme court, we have no way of knowing. The inference is strong, however, that the members of the court are convinced that in trials of the obnoxious litigation, the courts of Alabama have wrestled with the problem in an entirely legal manner and in accordance with the guarantees of the constitution of the United States.

NEGRO TREATMENT IN SOUTH

People of the United States have been reading and hearing a great deal in recent years about the Scottsboro case in Alabama, about alleged unfairness in the trials of a group of negro defendants. Certain individuals who have interested themselves in the case would lead people to believe that the white people of the South are obsessed with the idea of ill-treatment of the black people in their midst.

These same individuals who strive so diligently to propagate the idea of ill-treatment and unfairness pass over the stories that tell of the high esteem and admiration that the white people have for members of the negro race who endear themselves to those with whom they deal by their exemplary conduct. One such noble character is described by The Birmingham News, which is convincing evidence that the Alabamians are not the heartless type that they have been pictured as being.

"Ed Wilson was just a negro janitor," says The News. "For 46 years he had kept clean the building and premises of the South Highlands Presbyterian Church. He was a menial performing a menial task.

"Ed Wilson died this week, died in the church he had served so long. And they buried him from that church. Its pews were crowded with members of his own race and by several hundred white persons. It was a moving service as white and black people joined in tribute to this humble janitor.

"Perhaps Ed Wilson had heard of the Scottsboro boys. Perhaps he knew of the sharecroppers on the plantations. But all this did not seem to matter much to him. Ed Wilson did well what fell to his hands to do, and whites and blacks buried him with the honors of a grateful admiration."

And such examples are not confined to Alabama. They are related from time to time from all points of the South. Here is another. This one from Florida, Tampa to be exact. The Tampa Tribune relates this story of a ceremony in that city recently.

"At the impressive ceremony Sunday in honor of the 24 Tampa young men who went down to death with the shattered U.S.S. Tampa," says The Tribune, "the roll was called of mothers of the victims of that war-time tragedy—those who were present at the exercises. When the names of the white mothers on the platform had been called and each had been given a floral remembrance, another name was called—that of the mother of E. D. Legree, a negro boy who was one of the 24. This mother came forth from the audience, and she too received a bouquet. She was asked to sit on the platform and modestly did so. The audience, largely white, burst into spontaneous applause.

"The incident was eloquent of a regard for patriotic service and sacrifice that is not limited by racial lines, by the color of the skin. That negro mother gave her boy as willingly, suffered his loss as keenly, as did any other mother who wears the gold star of a Nation's recognition and honor. It was to the credit of the directors of the program, of the Tampa audience, that they forgot the color line in tribute to those who died in action under the flag that flies for all Americans, of whatever creed or race."

Intelligent members of the negro race prefer life in the South to anywhere else in America because they know that here they are understood as nowhere else. They know that their best friends are to be found here, regardless of opinions that may be expressed to the contrary by troublemakers who project themselves into isolated controversies for the purpose of getting their names before the public. They satisfy an ego that can not find expression through legitimate and worthy channels.

End Of Scottsboro Case?

Haywood Patterson, one of the nine Negroes involved in the famous "Scottsboro Case," lost in the Supreme Court yesterday in an effort to escape a seventy-five-year prison sentence imposed by Alabama Courts for an alleged attack on a white woman. The High Tribunal, which twice had saved Patterson from the death penalty, denied his petition for a review of his case.

Of the nine Negroes involved in this case four were recently released on condition that they leave Alabama and never return. Samuel Leibowitz, their leading lawyer, took them to New York City, where they were lionized in Harlem for a time. Whether he will succeed in having them learn useful trades, as he had planned to do, remains to be seen. Only one of the other five defendants in the noted case, we believe, is under sentence of death, and that sentence was imposed for a crime other than the alleged attack on a white woman or on two white women.

Possibly the action of the Supreme Court in denying Haywood Patterson's petition spells the end of the Scottsboro case. The public generally may hope so, although many believe the nine Negroes were falsely accused and should have been set at liberty long ago.

WHAT NEXT IN THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

THE DECISION of the U. S. Supreme Court not to again review the case of Heywood Patterson, sentenced to serve 75 years in the Alabama State Prison for an alleged attack on Victoria Price near Scottsboro, Ala., seems to have written "finis" to the famous Scottsboro case. For the court ruled that the state of Alabama had met previous objections of an unfair trial by placing Negroes on the jury panel that tried Patterson. The decision stated that the federal court could not interfere with the action of the state court on any other grounds.

It is very likely that a similar opinion will prevail in the cases of the other four Negroes convicted in the case. From all appearances, they are doomed to serve life imprisonment. But this does not have to follow. No state or individual can flout public opinion and if those who are interested in the case continue to arouse public opinion in the case, the Governor may be forced to exercise executive clemency.

Alabama is already sensative to criticism in this case as witness the action of the state in voluntarily releasing four of the nine defendants, and in the refusal of Justice Black to participate in the Supreme Court deliberations on the case. We don't know what further legal action can be taken, but we do know that through the medium of the press and other avenues of publicity, this case can be held up to the country and the world as a sample of the the kind of justice given Negroes in the South until Alabama and all southern states will be glad to hear the end of it.

Let those who are sincerely interested in seeing that Patterson and his associates get justice continue their mass protests until something is done to right the wrong that been done in this case.

The Dred Scott decision did not settle the question of slavery, it was so strongly against public opinion; neither did the Supreme Court's decision in the case of Tom Mooney end the fight for justice in his case. We as Negroes should see to it that this decision does not mark the end of the Scottsboro case, and continue the fight and urge friends of justice to fight until a complete victory is won.

The Disposition Of The Scottsboro Cases

The United States Supreme Court has denied the petition of Haywood Patterson, one of the defendants in the Scottsboro cases, for a writ of certiorari. Patterson's conviction, carrying a 75-year sentence, therefore stands. Presumably, this closes the door to further consideration by the Supreme Court of any of the four Scottsboro cases in which convictions have been obtained on the charge of rape. The state, in its reply to Patterson's petition, contended that all constitutional directions given by the Supreme Court in its previous opinions in the Scottsboro cases had been followed in the latest trials. Evidently the Supreme Court was satisfied that this was done.

This decision leaves strictly to the state the question of the disposition of the Scottsboro cases. As matters stand, four of the nine defendants have been freed. In reality, the rape charges against five of them were nol prossed, but one of the five is under sentence of 20 years for an attack upon a deputy sheriff. One of the four convicted of rape is under a death sentence, and the other three are under prison sentences ranging from 75 to 99 years.

Manifestly, this is not a satisfactory outcome, from the standpoint of evenhanded justice. In the circumstances, of course, justice could not be evenhanded in these nine cases. But it should be possible, by the exercise of clemency powers, to narrow the wide gap in a situation in which some go free while others, tried on the same charge, find themselves under sentences ranging from 75 years to the death penalty. Certainly the governor should commute the death sentence in the one case in which that penalty has been prescribed; and in all four cases under conviction on the rape charge he should, in view of the dubious nature of the whole proceedings, see to it that these men do not face the prospect of spending the rest of their lives in prison, while four of their fellow-defendants enjoy liberty.

FREEING OF FIVE NEGROES ASKED

Scottsboro Decision Brings Plea Gelders To Governor Graves

With the U. S. Supreme Court refusing to review the latest conviction of Haywood Patterson, key defendant in the Scottsboro case. "It is now up to Governor Graves to free immediately all of the Scottsboro boys," Joseph S. Gelders, Birmingham liberal, declared today.

Mr. Gelders, Southern representative of the National Committee for the defense of political prisoners, issued his statement from New York where he is visiting.

Five of the nine negroes originally charged with mass assaults on two white women in 1931 remain in prison, the four others having been freed by the state last Summer. One of the five in prison, however, has been freed of rape charges but is serving 20 years for knifing a deputy.

Mr. Gelder's statement declared: "Since the state of Alabama itself nol prossed the cases against four of the Scottsbor defendants and released them, no one with real knowledge of the case believes any of the boys guilty.

"The people of the United States will not be satisfied with the decision of the Supreme Court upholding the prejudiced verdicts in the Scottsboro cases. Even the people of Alabama have on the whole, become convinced the defendants are not guilty."

Gifford Cochran, New York, secretary of the national committee, issued a statement terming the Supreme Court action "a bitter disappointment and a shock to every person in Alabama and in the world who believes that the Scottsboro defendants should receive justice."

Scottsboro case

"HAYWOOD PATTERSON, petr., v. State of Alabama. Petition for writ of cert. to the Supreme Court of Alabama denied. Justice Black took no part in the consideration and decision of this application."

Thus tersely the United States Supreme Court last week refused to review the latest appeal in the Scottsboro case. Three times sentenced to death since that day of March 25, 1931, when he, with eight other Negro youths, was accused of rape, and three times granted new trials, Patterson now must serve seventy-five years in jail. The Supreme Court, which twice overruled convictions on technical grounds, declines to consider his charges that he was deprived of a fair trial by refusal to shift the case to another court and by a judge's charge to a jury.

Since Justice Black did not participate in the decision, his former Klan connection cannot be brought into the case.

The ledger now reads: four of the nine boys free, one jailed for 20 years for stabbing a prison guard, four convicted of rape. Two of the convicted will serve 75 years, one 99, and one is sentenced to die. While Samuel Liebowitz, chief defense counsel, was meditating new action last week, the Rev. Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers, chairman of the Scottsboro Defense Committee, declared: "The decision of the United States Supreme Court apparently closes out further legal action in the case of Haywood Patterson. It does not settle the matter of justice."

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

ALABAMA COURTS STILL BLOOD-THIRSTY.

A living death of 99 years' imprisonment in Alabama penitentiaries was imposed by an all-white Morgan County jury on Andy Wright, second of the innocent Scottsboro boys to go on trial here.

Judge W. W. "Speed" Callaham at once imposed sentence on Wright and immediately afterward sentenced Clarence Norris to die in the electric chair on September 24. Before adjourning court, the judge set in motion the machinery for the trial of the third boy, Charlie Weems, in keeping with the clock-work schedule he had earlier announced for the trials.

9-18-37

Not Justice, Boys Declare.—Norris was the first of the boys to be tried and was given the death sentence by another jury of Morgan County whites who seem agreed, almost to a man, to uphold the six-year-old conspiracy to legally lynch the nine youths and indict the Negro people, in accordance with Judge Callahan's slanderous charge to the first jury, as a race of rapists.

The death sentence was stayed automatically by notice of appeal filed by Samuel Leibowitz, New York Attorney and head of defence counsel. Leibowitz said the cases would be "appealed, appealed and appealed."

The nine youths have spent their teen years in Alabama prisons following their arrest in March, 1931, on the trumped-up charge of "raping" two white women who were hoboing on a freight train between Chattanooga, Tenn., and Paint Rock, Alabama.

"I didn't get justice," Andy Wright fearlessly told Judge Callahan as he stood at attention to hear his sentence.

"I didn't get justice," he repeated, after the judge, addressing him familiarly by his first name in accordance with the Southern tradition, asked him if he had anything to say before sentence was passed on him.

Norris also fearlessly threw at the court his indictment of Southern "justice."

"They did't find me guilty," he declared. "They thought they found me guilty. I am charged with a crime I never thought of or committed." His voice was clear and unafraid.

Neither of the boys had the ghost of a chance in the prejudice-filled court.

Judge's Charge Biased. In his charge to the jury, Judge Callahan dwelt for forty-eight minutes upon the State's case without mentioning reasonable doubt or the possibility of acquittal. Not once did the judge mention the testimony of the late Dr. R. R. Bridges, which was read into the record by the defence.

Dr. Bridges, who examined Victoria Price and Ruby Bates less than two hours after the alleged attack, testified for the State at earlier trials before Judges James E. Horton and Callahan that he observed no cuts on Victoria Price, such as she has testified she received. Her pulse and respiration were quite normal, the white Alabama physician testified.

Ruby Bates, the other girl, repudiated her testimony against the boys in 1933 and testified that the nine boys had not even touched her or Victoria Price and that the charge of "rape" was concocted by Alabama officials.

The court charged the jurors that if they believed the boys conspired to attack the girls or that the defendant was present at the scene of the crime, he was guilty even though he had not lifted a finger against the girls.

Defence Hits Judge's Charge.—It was only toward the end of his charge to the jury that Callahan dealt briefly with some of the evidence produced by the defence, and told the jurors they could acquit if they "believed that evidence" and then warned them against returning a verdict of death in the case of Wright.

Callahan immediately proceeded to nullify in the minds of the jurors any impression that might have been created by his belated reference to defence evidence with the statement that the jury should consider if the alleged attack was a case of an "aggravated conscious mass rape."

Jury Ignored Evidence.—Leibowitz took exception to the entire charge of Judge Callahan to the jury. This was the first time defence attorneys took this step on the entire charge of the judge.

"I except to the entire charge," the defence said, "on the ground that the court unduly stressed all the testimony of the prosecution and its corroborating evidence without at the same time referring to the defendant's testimony, especially that of Dr. Bridges."

Leibowitz added that a "fair and just trial was impossible in this court room" and that "the defendants' rights as guaranteed by the 14th amendment of the United States Constitution were violated."

John T. Cooper, jury foreman, told reporters that the jury had not even debated the guilt or innocence of the defendant, Andy Wright, but had spent three and a half hours determining whether to set sentence at 75 or 99 years. The delay in reporting the verdict was caused by one man, who held out for a time for a seventy-five years' sentence.

Wright's trial was the tenth that has been held since the boys were taken off a freight train at Paint Rock, Alabama and made the victims of a ghastly frame-up.

One jury at the original Scottsboro trials disagreed in the case of Roy Wright, then 13 years of age, another here returned a seventy-five years' sentence at Heywood Patterson's fourth trial, and in Wright's case, the State waived the death penalty. All the other verdicts have carried death sentences.

Scottsboro Boys Framed, Ruby Bates Again Tells America.—Ruby Bates, one-time prosecuting witness in the celebrated Scottsboro case, told again this week the story of the notorious frame-up of the nine boys as she learned of the sentence of death imposed upon Clarence Norris, by an all-white Morgan County, Alabama jury.

"The nine boys are innocent," the young woman said, repeating the recantation made in an Alabama courtroom in the spring of 1933. "They were found guilty by white juries who with Judge Callahan and the prosecution wanted to kill them in order to save, so they say, white womanhood of the South.

"Neither Norris nor any other of the nine Negro boys touched me or Victoria Price during that freight train ride on March 25, 1931. I exposed the whole framed-up in the Decatur trial in 1933. I would have been glad to testify in Norris's trial this time but neither side called me. Should the defence ask me to testify in any of the coming trials, I would gladly do so."

The present indictment under which the boys are being tried is based on the unsupported charge of Victoria Price that she was "rapped" by the nine boys.

The boys will never get a fair trial as long as they are tried before Judge Callahan" Miss Bates continued. "This last hearing was the same as all the others—the same lynch spirit whipped up by the Scottsboro papers, and the same feeling on the part of the jurors.

"But the worst of all was, Victoria Price. According to the newspapers, she has told a different lie every time she testified.

"She is still testifying againt the boys because she is a disreputable character who is disliked by every one around her except those who are also disreputable. I believe she is being paid or given jobs where others could not receive jobs."

Miss Bates, who was employed until recently on a W.P.A. sewing project, was among the thousands who received pink slips in the recent mass firing of W.P.A. workers.

Harlem Protests Verdicts.—Vigorous protests against the barbarous verdicts against Clarence Norris and Andy Wright, first two of the Scottsboro boys to be tried in Decature, Alabama, were made at scores of open air meetings held throughout Harlem. Most of the rallies were held under the auspices of the Harlem International Labor Defence and the Harlem Division of the Communist Party.

The Scottsboro Defence Committee, 112 East 19th Street, New York City, issued an appeal for funds to appeal the cases and at the same time spiked persistent rumors, generally considered harmful to the defence, that a compromise was imminent in the six-year old fight for the lives and freedom of the Scottsboro defendants.

"Because of repeated rumors that the cases of the Scottsboro Defence Committee affirms that it is not party to any compromise agreement whatsoever," the statement said. "The committee under no circumstances will surrender the rights of the defendants. It will continue the legal battle in the courts until every recourse is exhausted.

The committee is wholly convinced of the complete innocence of all the nine boys on the basis of the original evidence and the opinion of the trial judge James E. Horton.

Whether the present trials in Decatur result in long-prison sentences or death sentences the committee will prosecute appeals at once with vigour. "The basis for appeal to the Federal courts has already been laid."

Funds Needed at Once.—The National Association for the advancement of Colored People, one of the member organizations of the Scottsboro Defence Committee, called for a "united and unrelenting" fight for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys.

"The whole world is shocked at this verdict," said a statement issued by the Association, "and immediate steps must be taken to intensify the fight for the complete freedom of all nine defendants. The charge of Judge Callahan to the jury was his usual prejudiced statement. It shows that the Morgan County Court has no intention of administering justice to these youths. The defendants have been ordered to trial in machine-like fashion at the rate of two a week, further evidence that there is no desire to give justice, but to hustle the case through the courts.

"We urge every person who loves justice and liberty to send a contribution to the Scottsboro Defence Committee, 112 East 19th Street, New York City. The Defence is in desperate need of funds. We have a long, hard bitter battle before us in which nothing must stand in the way of complete vindication and acquittal.—Crusader News Agency, New York.

Supreme Court Decision Condemned by Defense Committee

(Daily Worker Harlem Bureau)

The various units and branches of the Communist Party in Harlem are swinging into full action this week against the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in denying Haywood Patterson a new trial.

The Nat Turner Branch is holding an open air demonstration at 134th St. and Seventh Ave., tonight at 7 o'clock. Resolutions demanding a new trial for Patterson will be sent to the Alabama Supreme Court.

The conference called by the Harlem Scottsboro Defense Committee is urging all liberty-loving people and organizations to send the following telegram to President Roose-

WIRE TO ROOSEVELT

"We deplore the unjustifiable and un-American verdict of the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of Haywood Patterson, one of the five Scottsboro boys. It constitutes provocation of the judicial arm of the United States Government against the Negro people and condones legal lynching. We wholeheartedly support your Chicago speech calling for revision of foreign policy and condemning destroyers of peace and harmony between nations.

"We will render all aid to carry this into life, but revision of domestic policy toward Negro people is a necessary condition for its realization. We ask you as chief executive to raise your voice in this direction. We believe Scottsboro the most advantageous point of departure for such a declaration.

HIGH COURT DENIES SCOTTSBORO PLEA

Justice Black Fails To Participate in Decision on Patterson's Appeal.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—(AP)—The supreme court, after twice saving him from death, refused today to interfere with a 75-year prison term imposed in 1936 upon Haywood Patterson, one of nine negroes who figured in the Scottsboro case.

In asking the court to review his conviction, Patterson contended it was impossible to obtain a fair trial in Morgan county, Alabama. He was found guilty of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, a white woman, in a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., in 1931.

Justice Hugo L. Black did not participate in the decision. There had been some talk among observers that, if he did participate, the decision might be challenged because of his former membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

In New York, Samuel Leibowitz, counsel for Patterson and the other negroes, received news of the court's action with the comment: "We're not licked yet. We have a definite plan for new action, and we will start working on it immediately." He did not divulge the plan.

Patterson's Plea for Review of 75-Year Sentence May Bring Challenge to Black

28 PETITIONS CONSIDERED

One Is Appeal to Stop $2,852,000 WPA Aid for a Power Plant —Rulings Tomorrow

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23 (AP).—The Supreme Court Justices assembled today to decide whether to review the conviction of Haywood Patterson, one of the Negroes involved in the famous Scottsboro, Ala., cases.

Some observers expressed the belief this litigation might provide a basis for challenging any participation by Justice Black, who at one time was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Justice Black denied in his recent radio address, however, he had any prejudice against Negroes.

One challenge of Justice Black's participation in litigation already has been promised. It resulted from the court's refusal last Monday to interfere with a lower court ruling that the Securities Commission could subpoena telegrams sent and received by three Florida companies.

While chairman of the Senate Lobby Committee, the new justice utilized telegrams obtained by the Communications Commission from persons under investigation.

Twenty-eight petitions, including Patterson's, were placed before the justices at their weekly conference. Whether the appeals will be heard in open court will be announced Monday.

Patterson was sentenced to serve seventy-five years in prison after his conviction of attacking a white woman on a moving freight train near Scottsboro in March, 1931.

The Supreme Court has saved him twice from the death penalty by ordering new trials. It held in 1932 that he and other defendants had not been provided with adequate counsel. Three years later it ruled that Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from the juries which indicted and convicted him.

At the third trial he escaped a death sentence but drew a seventy-five-year prison term.

Other litigation before the justices included:

An appeal by the Duke Power Company in an attempt to prevent the Public Works Administration from making a $,852,000 loan and grant to Greenwood County, S. C., for an electric plant at Buzzard Roost. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in favor of the government. The Supreme Court already has agreed to review similar litigation brought by the Alabama Power Company.

An attack by South Bend, Ind., on constitutionality of a 1933 State law under which a tax was imposed on its municipally owned water plant. The Indiana Supreme Court sustained the assessment.

Patterson Gets First Rebuff In Supreme Court

Scottsboro Appeal Lost, Justice Black Taking No Part In Decision

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—(AP)—The Supreme Court, after twice saving him from death, refused today to interfere with a 75-year prison term imposed in 1936 upon Haywood Patterson, one of nine negroes who figured in the Scottsboro case.

In asking the court to review his conviction, Patterson contended it was impossible to obtain a fair trial in Morgan County, Ala. He was found guilty of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, a white woman, in a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., in 1931.

Justice Hugo L. Black did not participate in the decision. There had been some talk among observers that, if he did participate, the decision might be challenged because of his former membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

In New York, Samuel Leibowitz, counsel for Patterson and the other negroes, received news of the court's action with the comment: "We're not licked yet. We have a definite plan for new action, and we will start working on it immediately." He did not divulge the plan.

Patterson and the others escaped the death penalty in 1932 when the high tribunal ruled they had not been adequately represented by counsel and set aside their conviction. Subsequently, in 1935, the court ordered a new trial because negroes had been "systematically excluded" from juries which had indicted and convicted Patterson and the other negroes. At the next trial, Patterson was sentenced to prison.

Of the other defendants, one had been sentenced to death, four spent six years in prison and then had charges against them dropped, and the remainder were sentenced to prison.

cisive victory by the courts of the State of Alabama in the disposition of these cases that have been pending for more than seven years.

Two previous appeals to the nation's highest tribunal have resulted in reversals of the judgments of the State courts and the ordering of new trials. Last June, the Supreme Court of Alabama, for the third time, affirmed a conviction judgment by a trial court in the case of Patterson, the opinion of the high court in the case being written by Justice William H. Thomas.

According to advice received at the office of Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael, the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court yesterday, denying Patterson's petition of appeal, held that no federal question of sufficient importance for that Court to take jurisdiction of it was presented in the case. That holding, it is understood, disposes of all federal questions that defense counsel had given notice would be raised while Patterson's trial was in progress and after sentence of 75 years imprisonment had been imposed.

Asked if he had any statement to make regarding the Patterson decision, following its announcement in Washington, Atty. Gen. Carmichael said: "The decision speaks for itself. I do not feel that any statement from this office is necessary." The Attorney General declined to comment on a statement issued in New York by Samuel S. Leibowitz, principal defense counsel.

What, if any effect yesterday's decision will have on the appeals filed in the State Supreme Court on behalf of three of Patterson's co-defendants, Clarence Norris, Andy Wright and Charlie Weems, was not clear last night. Their withdrawal, however, appeared unlikely in view of the announcement by Liebowitz of a new plan of defense action. Norris is under sentence of death, and Wright and Weems 99 and 75 years imprisonment, respectively. Another defendant, Ozie Powell, is serving a prison sentence of 20 years, imposed when he pleaded guilty to a charge of assaulting to murder a deputy sheriff.

Before accepting the decision just rendered as final Liebowitz may, if he so desires, it was learned, file application for rehearing with the U. S. Supreme Court in the Patterson case.

If, on the other hand, defense counsel should elect to accept the Patterson decision as final and decide to withdraw the appeals pending in the State Supreme Court in the three companion cases, it is believed Gov. Graves would, in view of the fact that Norris is the only one of the defendants convicted at the last trials to be sentenced to death, commute the death sentence to life imprisonment.

A "Travesty"

THE DECISION of the Supreme Court in refusing to review Heywood Patterson's case with Justice Black abstaining is another blot upon the "Nine Old Men." There is no way for any court upon the basis of law, let alone liberty and justice, to render such a decision. Therefore, by this decision our highest tribunal has disregarded law, mocked liberty and made a travesty of justice.

A man is entitled to a fair trial in America, but no man could receive a fair trial after the charge to the jury made by Judge Callahan in Decatur. Furthermore, how could Patterson and the other boys be judged guilty when after several trials the state has just released four of them, claiming that they were innocent. The testimony of the state's star witness, Virginia Price, must be accepted or refused for all nine. The Supreme Court has gone back into its reactionary past. Justice Black has made a sad beginning and this decision proves him for what he is. It was an easy job for Mr. Black to find a robe for the Supreme Court. All he had to do was to dye his white one black. Why did he abstain in the Patterson decision? The law says that a judge may abstain when he is liable to any type of prejudice that will influence the decision. The only prejudice that Mr. Black possessed was that prejudice we have always accused him of: That of belonging to an organization whose avowed purpose is keeping the Negro down. This purpose was proven by Mr. Black in abstaining in the Patterson decision.

The fundamental reason for this latest development of the Scottsboro Case was due to one thing: The protest of the American masses were not vocal enough to make that Court realize that the Scottsboro boys must go free. Setting free four of the boys has flimflammed the average man of the streets. It behooves us, however, to realize that this was nothing more than a deal. We must not rest until all of the boys are free. Our only hope is that we can free them before the terrors of prison and warden have sent them to a premature death. If our protests become vocal enough the Supreme Court will review the case and Justice Black will vote. We must free the remaining Scottsboro boys.

50 HARLEM LEADERS BACK PARLEY FOR SCOTTSBORO BOYS

NEW YORK, Oct.--(CNA)- Endorsed by more than fifty Harlem leaders and organizations, a Call was issued here this week for a Harlem Scottsboro Defense Conference to be held Monday evening, October 25, at the St Philips Parish House, 213 West 133rd Street, this city.

Crusader News Agency —

The Call points out that "five innocent Scottsboro boys still languish in Alabama prison cells, their health broken by six and a half torturous years in the shadow of the electric chair. Despite their broken healthy, they are now being subjected to a fierce regime which menaces their very lives."

10-18-37 New York, Mg

Appeals for the boys, now before the United States Supreme Court, were opposed last week by the State of Alabama. In a brief filed with the court in connection with the appeal of Heywood Patterson, Alabama's Attorney General, A. A. Carmichael, contended that Patterson's rights were not jeopardized by refusal of Judge Callahan to permit a change of venue from prejudice-ridden Decatur, Ala.

The call for the Harlem conference decalres that the release several months ago of four of the Scottsboro defendants "is a clear admission by the state of Alabama of the innocence of ALL these boys and of the monstrous injustice perpetrated against them, beginning with the first frame-up, lynch-dominated trial at Scottsboro. For the testimony against all these boys is the same - only the perjured testimony of Victoria Price, herself convicted by the state of Alabama for 'public lewdness.'"

The call makes an appeal to "all justice loving organizations and persons to take an active part in this vital defense struggle" to free the remaining five imprisoned lads. "A powerful, united Scottsboro defense movement in Harlem will inspire like action throughout the country," it says.

Quickening the efforts of friends of the boys is the revelation, made by Mrs. Ada Wright, mother of Andy Wright, that the five imprisoned boys are still beingg terrorized in Alabama. Mrs. Wright was recently forced to make two hurried trips to Alabama to protest the ill-treatment of Andy and the other boys.

Many rallies are being held in Harlem and throughout the city in preparation for the Oct. 25 conference. A recent mass meeting at the Manhattan Opera House, 8th Avenue and 34th Street, was addressed by Mrs. Wright, Roy Wilkins, editor of The Crisis., the Rev. Knight Chalmers, chairman of the Scottsboro Defense Committee; Richard B. Moore of the International Labor Defense., and Ruby Bates, chief defense witness.

Endorsers of the Oct. 25 conference include A. Philip Randolph, of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters., James E. Allen of the N. A. A. C. P., James H. Hubert, New York Urban League., Frank R. Crosswaith, Harlem Negro Labor Committee., Dr. Catherine B. Lealtad, National Negro Congress., Dr. P. M. H. Savory, United Aid for Peoples of African Descent., Donelan J. Phillips, Consolidated Tenants League., James N. Lynch, Hamilton Lodge G.U.O.O.F., Louise Thompson, International Workers Order., Naomi Davis, Harlem Cultural Ass'n., the Rev. Hale Bishop, St Philips P. E. Church., the Rev. J. K. Humphreys, Seventh Day Adventist Church, and many others.

Justice From Scottsboro

Negroes in the United States ought to be slow and careful in statements made by them regarding Mr. Justice Black, recently elevated to the Supreme Court of the United States. After listening to his radio talk last Friday evening we are inclined to believe that hereafter in his attitude and conduct towards submerged and minority groups, the new justice is going to lean over backwards to help them.

In Saturday night's forced confession of his previous Klan membership, the new supreme court justice unquestionably cut himself adrift from his blundering contacts of the past. His presence on the Supreme Court may prove an asset rather than a liability so far as Negroes are concerned.

We have read some of the comments made by critics of Justice Black's radio statement in which it is charged that he made no positive denunciation of the Klan, but if anyone familiar with the principles of the Klan can read Justice Black's utterance regarding intolerance and still say Justice Black has not publicly renounced the principles of the hooded empire, we are unable to understand them.

Here is what Justice Black said:

"During my recent absence on a short vacation abroad, a planned and concerted campaign was begun which fants the flames of prejudice and is calculated to create racil nd religious htred. If continued, the inevitable result will be the projection of religious beliefs into a position of prime importance in political campaigns and to reinfect our social and business life with the poison of religious bigotry.

It will bring the political religionist back into undeserved and perilous influence in affairs of government. It will elevate the least worthy to political positions because religion or race bars others from a password. It will resurrect practices and arguments from which this country suffered solely in the nineteen-twenties. It will revive the spirit which, in 1928, caused a national campaign to be waged largely upon issues unworthy of a free people. It will bankrupt many business men whose sole offense is that they have religious beliefs which do not accord with the prevailing religion in their communities.

"It will punish the professional man whose patients and clients boycott him, not because of lack of professional ability, but because there are in his locality few members of his faith or his race. It will again set neighbor against neighbor, and turn old friends into new enemies.

"To contribute my part in averting such a catastrophe in this land dedicated to tolerance and freedom, I break with precenedts of the past to talk with you tonight.

"An effort is being made to convince the people of America that I am intolerant, and that I am prejudiced against people of the Jewish and Catholic faiths, and against members of the Negro race. These insinuations are advanced despite the fact that, for the last 11 years, I have served in the Senate of the United States under constant and microscopic public scrutiny.

"My words and acts are a matter of public record. I believe that my record as a senator refutes every implication of racial or religious intolerance. It shows that I was of that group of liberal senators who have consistently fought for the civil, economic and religious rights of all Americans, without regard to race or creed."

There is some inconsistency to be discovered in this statement of the Alabamian. For instance, he is himself intolerant when he rebels against the pitiless publicity which forced the confession of his Klan membership. His statement Friday night is not to be identified as "honest" confession, which we understand is good for the soul, but "forced" confession, which we understand proves the good and value in a free press.

What we wish to point out is that in this forced confession, Justice Black has been compelled to take certain unquestionable and definite ground against bigotry and intolerance. His open, stated viewpoint regarding Jews Negroes and Catholics tags him in a way that he himself cannot forget, when in the silent temple of justice communing with his own soul.

While the statement lacked the courage and candor we would have written into it, we think it registers high, when we remember that it is the utterance of a man who comes from the valley of Scottsboro. If we have prepared the statement we would have perhaps more definitely defined the rights of Negro citizens than did Justice Black.

For instance, Justice Black says:

"I number among my friends many members of the colored race. I have watched the progress of its members with sympathy and admiration. Certainly they are entitled to the full measure of protection accorded to the citizenship of our country by our Constitution and our laws."

Now that is quite a general statement. Justice Black may or may not have meant this or that. It somewhat reminds us of the fellow who makes a political speech and says "Elect me and I'll do the right thing." But what is the right thing? It takes two persons to decide that. What does Justice Black mean when he refers to "the full measure of protection"?

Down in Alabama Negroes do not vote, and Negroes would have felt so much more secure had Justice Black said:

"Certainly Negroes are entitled to the full measure of protection in the political, social and economic rights, accorded to the citizenship of our country by our constitution and our laws."

Such interpolations in Justice Black's statement would have convinced the most skeptical black man in America that the new chief justice intended to give "full protection" in social, political and economic rights. As it is we are not so sure that what Justice Black calls "full protection" is the same thing black folk are thinking about. We wish the man from Scottsboro could have had the moral courage to recede from a realm of reasoning vague and indefinite.

But even so, we are willing to go far enough with him to feel that he has actually grown in social outlook since the evil days when he joined the Klan. Perhaps the language employed means what we would like for it to mean. Walter White and others who labored in Washington during the hearings on the Harrison-Black educational bill, state that the then Senator Black was flexible and showed a willingness to make changes in the proposed measure calculated to safeguard the educational interests of Negroes. Although then in reach of public sentiment, here was an Alabamian who was willing to go part the way on an educational program for Negroes.

Get the Congressional Record. Read Senator Black's speech in opposition to the anti-lynching bill. He opposed it, but read his remarks to see whether he stooped to the gutter of the average race-baiter. His argument was directed towards the constitutionality of the proposed act, and while he supported the Southern viewpoint, never once did he resortt o ugly, prejudiced statements regarding the Negro race.

The Black Dispatch hates to think that today on the Supreme Court of the United States there is a man who once knelt and took the Klan oath. But regardless to our likes or dislikes, such a man does sit in that august tribunal. He is there clothed with all of the power and influence of any other justice. Friday night, as he stood beyond the reach of public sentiment, we heard him dedicate his life to freedom and tolerance? Is there such a thing as growth? Is there anything to be gotten out of that passage of scripture that reads, "Though your sins be as scarlet, I will make them white as snow"? If a man does wrong, is there any way or method by which he can correct that wrong?

Forgetting his former Klan membership for a moment, Negroes should recall that President Roosevelt placed Hugo Lafayette Black on the Supreme Court bench because of his economic views. Negroes have for 70-odd years been here is a man who comes from Alabama, who if allowed to interpret his views on labor into our fundamental instrument, will lay the foundation for economic growth and stability among black laborers such as they have never known.

One Cduse of Lynchings

Never mind the sensational history of the Scottsboro case. But remember this:

It took Alabama six and one-half years to dispose of a case which involved one of the gravest offenses listed on the calendars of crime in the Southern states.

The whole nation continues to ask the question, "Why is there so much lynching in the South?"

There are divers answers to this question. But one of them very definitely is Scottsboro.

When, by due process of law, society can be protected promptly and properly against its enemies, there may be some lynching still in Dixie. But assuredly there will be less of it than there is today.

THE SCOTTSBORO

The noted "Scottsboro" case has already gone down in history and in the records of our highest court.

During the depression of the early thirties of this decade, two women, Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates left their homes in Alabama, going to Chattanooga to hunt work. Failing in that they were returning on a freight train when they were assaulted by nine negroes who admitted their guilt when arrested.

They were indicted and tried by an unprejudiced judge and jury, convicted and sentenced to death. They appealed to the Supreme Court of Alabama and the verdict was upheld. The case was further appealed to the Supreme court of the United States which set aside the verdict on the grounds that the case was tried contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

The evidence was to the effect that these women were shabbily dressed and were of the poorest class and made poorer by the depression. They were also of doubtful character according to the evidence of the defense.

At the second trial of Haywood Patterson, Ruby Bates suddenly disappeared and did not turn up as a witness for the State at the time of the development of the case for the State. However, like a thunderbolt from a cloudless sky she unexpectedly appeared in the courtroom, dolled, powdered, fitted, and dressed in the finest garments ever seen on Fifth Avenue. She took the witness stand and as a witness for the defense she repudiated all the evidence she had given in the former trial.

When the great secret had unfolded itself it turned out that she had been taken on a trip to the city of New York, visiting Mr. Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside Drive church which is claimed to be the wealthiest church in America. After having been in contact with Mr. Fosdick she was placed aboard the "Birmingham Special" and forwarded to Birmingham, Alabama there to make another confession to the pastor of the finest church in Birmingham.

This all happened in 1932 when the depression had waxed greater than it was in 1931 at the time the crime was committed. Now will some one tell me just where Ruby Bates got all these fine clothes? Where she got the money to ride the Birmingham Special?

When the trial opened in February 1932 asking for the life of Haywood Patterson this Ruby Bates was in the courtroom shabbily dressed ready to testify for the State. All of a sudden she disappeared and did not show up until the defense began to put on its evidence. Now we must concede that if Ruby Bates and Mrs. Price were the low class that ride the rods at the time of the crime then how could Ruby Bates have time to make enough money to purchase all these fine clothes from the time that the trial opened until the State rested which was four days? How would she have time to make enough money to ride the Birmingham Special in four days? Why did she have to go all the way to New York to make this confession? If some one will answer these questions favorably for the defense, I shall apply the 'Reasonable Certainty Rule", tell you who made God.

Two lawyers employed by the defense tried to bribe Mrs. Price but they failed and landed in jail in Chattanooga.

The defense tried to get the service of Clarence Darrow but what did Mr. Darrow tell them? He came out boldly and told them that he would not appear for a defense that was trying to buy the courts of Alabama or any other State.

On the second trial these defendants were convicted and again sentenced to death. They appealed their case to the Supreme court of Alabama which upheld the verdict. They then appealed to the Supreme court of the United States which set aside the verdict.

Although Mrs. Price was not what she should have been according to the evidence of the defense, there is one thing to the everlasting glory of the women, she did not accept a free trip to New York, and she thought more of her honor and her oath than she did of all the fine clothes Fifth Avenue affords.

There should be a monument in Alamaba for Mrs. Price high enough to gild the granite shaft erected to the memory of Washington in the Nation's capitol.

Mr. Josiah William Bailey, in glowing eloquence thanks God for the Supreme court of the United States and its decision in the Scottsboro case, although he admitted they may be guilty.

And oh, my God, I voted in the primary of 1932 for Bailey and against Mr. Simmons. That shows when a fellow gets mad he has no more sense than a turtle with its head cut off. I shall never vote again when I am mad.

Today the four negroes freed in the Scottsboro case are on the stage in New York, a living monument to the Supreme court of the United States, the Constitution thereof, a trip on the Birmingham Special, a visit to Riverside church and wardrobe of the finest clothes ever seen on Fifth Avenue.

I am holding no hatred for the negro and I will be friend a negro who is down an out, through no cause of his own, as quickly as any other member of the human race, and I know that is the sentiment of the white people in the South.

But gentlemen, the Supreme Court of the United States has dealt a blow that will give us many years of trouble. The anti-lynching bill is soon to follow and that will finish the friendly relations between the negro races in South.

Now Leibowitz?

The Scottsboro defense committee makes a statement:

"The Scottsboro defense committee and its constituent organizations have joined with Samuel Leibowitz in urging that these theatrical appearances may do more harm than good to the fight in which we are still engaged for justice for the remaining defendants. On this point the boys have listened to contrary and, we believe, mistaken advice from other sources."

The statement refers to the appearance of the four released defendants in the Scottsboro case in New York, where they were received as heroes by Harlem and as characters out of a book by blase Broadway.

Business of agreeing with the committee that such theatrical ventures may do more harm than good to the fight in which it is engaged. And there is much doubt as to the benefits befalling the released defendants themselves from ballyhoo demonstrations. But the point which intrigues is the statement of the committee that it "joins" Samuel Leibowitz, defense counsel, in urging that the young Negroes be led to desist from theatrical exhibitionism.

Mr. Leibowitz started the exhibition business himself, apparently, when he carried the young Negroes with him to New York. Is he now in effect confessing that his proteges have grown out of hand, and are about to embarrass him as much as his act embarrassed the state of Alabama?

Feasting On Alabama

New York will surely create so much interest in Alabama that the noise will result in greater advertising of the state than could be bought for millions of dollars.

New Yorkers now have a picture of Alabama from the "Scottsboro Case" that they believe, and while they would not like to stop in Alabama overnight, they will at least summons sufficient courage to come into this state, but our gasoline and our hot dogs, sleep in trailers with guns at their sides, and spend some money in this state.

Now that the Scottsboro publicity has about played out, the New Yorkers open up again on Alabama. This time the target is Hugo Black, Justice of the Supreme Court, in which the gentlemen in the mayoralty scramble in New York City are again playing Alabama for a fare-ye-well.

Without an issue, the New York campaign would go to the doldrums where it belongs anyway. So they have found an issue, the Klan issue, in which the life of Hugo Black is paraded. Justice Black, meanwhile, is in Europe, just to show New Yorkers how much he cares for their mouthings and intellectual meanderings.

The South is rapidly coming to the fore in this nation, getting some of those material things denied since the War Between the States. President Roosevelt has been and is a friend of the South. He knows of the natural wealth of the South. He knows that the genuine American lives in the South. He knows that the hope of the United States lies in the sound thought of the South.

Is it any wonder that New York half breeds raise the deuce, they can see the beginning of the wealth of the South and they hate it quite as fervently as the men who tried to throw Andrew Johnson out of the presidency.

THE SCOTTSBORO PLAYERS

To many of the thousands who have sympathized with them, the news that four of the "Scottsboro boys" will go on the stage comes with a distinct accompaniment of repungance.

It would be more odd, perhaps, if they didn't take advantage of the fame that freedom will soon dull. After nine years in jail while the ponderous American judicial system performed several most undignified flip-flops, the four Negroes are turned loose upon a world that must seem wide and glamorous.

They assume heroic proportions to others of their race. For a while the quartet can capitalize on the headlines of their case. Then, when their drawing power at the box office dies, they can go back to the jobs they normally would have held, and life will go on as usual.

3 Scottsboro Negroes Enter Appeals Here

Formal certificates of appeal have been filed in the office of Gen. Robert F. Ligon, clerk of the Alabama Supreme Court, in the cases of Clarence Norris, Andy Wright and Charlie Weems, three of the remaining nine Negro Scottsboro case defendants. The appeals are from judgments of conviction rendered at retrial of the cases in the Morgan Circuit Court at Decatur last July, when Norris was sentenced to death, and Wright and Weems to 99 and 75 years imprisonment, respectively.

A third petition for appeal, filed by defense counsel on behalf of Haywood Patterson, another defendant in the same case, is now pending in the U. S. Supreme Court and is expected to be acted on within the next few weeks. Patterson's two previous appeals resulted in reversals of the Alabama court. It is understood the defense will also take an appeal to the Court of Appeals of Alabama in the case of Ozie Powell, convicted of assaulting to murder a deputy sheriff and sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary.

FREEDOM OF ALL SCOTTSBORO BOYS URGED BY FEDERATION OF LABOR

Convention Also Takes Stand for Independence of Ethiopia After Speech by Colored Delegate

Denver, Oct. 21—(CNA)— The annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, meeting in this city, went on record this week for freedom for "the remaining defendants in the Scottsboro case" and denounced the rape of Ethiopia by Fascist Italy.

It was the first time that a convention of the A. F. of L. took favorable action on a resolution in behalf of the Scottsboro boys, although it did this in a cautious way by urging "the public authorities to bring the case to a close." Observers interpreted the belated action as a result of pressure arising from the drive of the CIO to organize the unorganized, Negro and white, neglected for decades by the A. F. of L.

A. Philip Randolph, international president of the Brotherhood of Pullman Porters, earnestly urged the convention to "boycott Mussolini for his rape of Ethiopia," in a speech on his resolution for aid to the Ethiopian people.

"The winning of independence for Ethiopia is fundamental to world peace," Randolph emphasized, as he

A. Philip Randolph, international president of the Brotherhood of Pullman Porters, earnestly urged the convention to "boycott Mussolini for his rape of Ethiopia," in a speech on his resolution for aid to the Ethiopian people.

In asking the court to review his conviction, Patterson contended it was impossible to obtain a fair trial in Morgan county, Ala. He was found guilty of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, a white woman, in a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., in 1931.

Justice Hugo L. Black did not participate in the decision. There has been some talk among observers that, if he did participate, the decision might be challenged because of his former membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

Previous Conviction Set Aside

Patterson and the others escaped the death penalty in 1932 when the high tribunal ruled they had not been adequately represented by counsel and set aside their conviction. Subsequently, in 1935, the court ordered a new trial because Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from juries which had indicted and convicted Patterson and the other Negroes. At the next trial, Patterson was sentenced to prison.

Of the other defendants, one had been sentenced to death, four spent six years in prison and then had charges against them dropped and the remainder were sentenced to prison.

Before adjourning for two weeks, the court also agreed to review a lower court decision upholding a PWA loan and grant of $2,852,000 for construction of a power plant at Buzzard Roost, South Carolina. The Duke Power Company challenged the constitutionality of federal financing of electric projects.

PATTERSON CASE VERDICT STANDS

Supreme Court Refuses to Interfere With Sentence in Scottsboro Trial

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25 (AP)—The supreme court, after twice saving him from death, refused today to interfere with a 75-year prison term imposed in 1936 upon Haywood Patterson, one of nine Negroes who figured in the Scottsboro case.

On the Lynch Decision—No Opinion

The Tory press—which howled most about Klanism during the Black controversy—has taken a "breathing spell" on the brazen Ku Klux Klan decision handed down by the Supreme Court in the case of Heywood Patterson, Scottsboro boy, three days ago.

Where are the Liberty League Herald Tribune, the Tory Sun, the yellow rags of the fascist Hearst, the pseudo-liberal World-Telegram? Where are the reactionaries, who less than two months ago suddenly blossomed forth as the champions of Negro rights, as the defenders of the Bill of Rights, religious freedom and civil liberties?

But the New York Times is Johnny-on-the-spot; it's never disturbed. So after a day of conspicuous silence, it said in part yesterday:

"The spectacle of a justice of our highest court disqualifying himself from sitting in judgment on a case involving a fundamental question of civil liberties is a humiliating spectacle, which this country should never have been forced to witness."

The Times expresses no opinion whatever on this open lynch decision of the Supreme Court. It is only concerned because Justice Black failed to participate in a ruling which reeks of Klanism and jungle law.

In other words, the spectacle of the Supreme Court upholding a living death sentence on a Negro boy whose case has been condemned by the whole enlightened world as a monstrous frame-up, is not even worth mentioning.

Justice Black added fuel to the fire of the reactionaries when he again retreated and sat silently by while the court callously brushed aside the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments.

Faced with Supreme Court Klanism in practice, the Tories maintain a dead silence. They have nothing to say about the reactionary Hughes, Sutherlands, Butlers and McReynolds, who are the cornerstone of the Supreme Court clique against the Negroes and against democracy and progress in America.

Meanwhile, the Harlem Scottsboro Committee, organized under the auspices of the Scottsboro Defense Committee, shows the way to a broader and more intensified fight to free the five Scottsboro boys.

The Harlem Committee has a program of "Scottsboro Sundays," tag days, petition campaigns, united front delegations to city, state and national officials, and a deluge of protests to Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama, calling for the immediate release of the five imprisoned boys.

What To Do With "This Body Of Death?" Alabama Editors Answer

Editor's Note: Recently The Advertiser proposed a "decent compromise" of the Scottsboro cases, to the end that Alabama might be spared further humiliation and expense in connection with these outworn cases, now 6 years old. We present, herewith, the reaction of a number of influential Alabama editors to this suggestion:

VINDICATED!

Elsewhere on this page will be found an editorial from The Montgomery Advertiser of the past Friday in which Editor Grover Hall advocates compromise of the Scottsboro attack cases, in order to rid the State of an infamous that has done more to sully her fair name than any other development in recent history.

This editorial was strongly endorsed in the Sunday editions of The Birmingham News and The Huntsville Times, both of which agreed that there is more to be gained by compromise than there is by "exacting the final pound of flesh."

It is a pleasurable duty for The Times-Journal to reproduce this editorial, as it offers full vindication and endorsement of the far-seeing judgment of the late F. T. Raiford, publisher of The Times-Journal, which prompted his attitude toward the entire early course of the litigation.

In his argument, Mr. Hall uses almost the exact words of a Times-Journal editorial of June 16, 1931, in which Mr. Raiford declared "only God knows" the guilt or innocence of the defendants.

We quote Mr. Raiford's editorial as follows: "As before stated in these columns we are unable to say if the immutable standards of right and wrong were effective in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused in the Scottsboro trial, or whether the scales were made to vibrate by the extraneous influences against the unfortunate defendants. Whether the eight negroes are guilty of the crimes alleged, only God knows, but we do know the environment in which they were subjected to the ordeal of life or death left much to be desired."

In an editorial appearing on Friday, March 25, 1932, Mr. Raiford predicted the storm of abuse that the State was to suffer because of the conditions under which the trials were conducted, and dared the wrath of fiery-tempered Alabamians by predicting the overthrow by the Supreme Court at Washington of the ruling by the Alabama Supreme justices affirming the death sentences in the case.

This prediction was made without equivocation, as follows:

"The action of the Alabama Supreme Court in affirming the sentences of seven out of eight of the Scottsboro negroes will be denounced as the culmination of a miscarriage of justice in many parts of the world.

"The storm of protest and objurgation will not be the outgrowth of a conviction that the negroes are innocent so much as that they did not have a fair and impartial trial. The trial took place under the menace of armed militia and frowning machine guns, with public feeling running high and a milling mob of thousands on the outside of the courtroom, whose emotions were whipped into a frenzy by a brass band and fervid oratory. A court proceeding of even-handed justice could not have taken place in such a hostile environment. Appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court on the grounds that the constitutional guarantee of a fair and impartial trial to all accused persons was violated and if the high court should sustain its own decision given in a similar case appealed from Arkansas, the cases will be remanded to the Alabama courts for retrial."

Thus it becomes apparent that Mr. Hall takes a position that is directly in line with The Times-Journal policy established by Mr. Raiford toward the Scottsboro cases and the endorsement of this paper of the suggestion of the compromise is a matter that requires no deliberation.—Selma Times-Journal.

AN APPEAL TO REASON

Reprinted on this page this morning is an exceptionally able editorial from The Montgomery Advertiser, in which Editor Grover Cleveland Hall advocates a "decent, dignified compromise" in the Scottsboro case, in order that the State of Alabama may "throw away this body of death."

With The Advertiser's conclusion The News and Age-Herald are in full sympathy. The Scottsboro case has been an Old Man of the Sea to Alabama for too many years. For one reason or another, almost irreparable damage has been done the good name of the State. If State officials can find their way clear to get rid of it, for the reasons Judge Hall mentions, if for no other reasons, they will have done a fine day's work for the people of the State.

With The Advertiser's premise that the people of Jackson County deserve the highest commendation for their attitude and actions over the years in connection with this case thrust upon them through no fault and no desire of their own, these papers are in full sympathy. With The Advertiser's further premise that it was revolted from the beginning by the Communist agitation seeking to make party and political capital out of the case, without regard to the welfare of the defendants, these newspapers agree fully.

The News and Age-Herald probably go a good deal further in their reasoning about the desirability of an effective compromise that will remove the Scottsboro case from the dockets of our courts than does The Advertiser. Nevertheless, and no matter what the particular reason assigned for the conclusion, there is no question in the mind of these newspapers that the suggestion made by Editor Hall is wise and worthy of the careful consideration of all officials concerned.

The heart of The Advertiser's appeal is contained in the following paragraph:

"Since there is ground for reasonable doubt of the positive guilt of all of the men now in jail, since all of them, in any event, have been in prison for six years, and since they are doing more than all other citizens of Alabama combined to injure the whole people of Alabama before the world, since nothing worth while can be gained by the State in pressing its prosecutions to the bitter end, The Advertiser herewith takes it upon itself to suggest and urge that the State now move for a decent, dignified compromise."

By all means, let us "throw away this body of death" that has encumbered us all too long—Birmingham News.

THE TENNESSEE VALLEY ANSWERS

For more than six long years, the "Scottsboro cases" have been bruited to the ends of the earth. They have been the cause of apparently endless, and expensive, litigation.

These cases are set for another trial next month at Decatur.

If they go to trial, there will be a repetition of the sordid, revolting story that has been told and retold, until it has become sickening.

The time has come, it seems to us, to clean the slate of this sorry mess, and for the State to wipe it off, if a decent compromise can be worked out between its representatives and those of the defendants.

There is enough of an element of doubt about the facts of the case to justify an attempt by both sides, with the consent of the court, to effect an agreement that will clean this dirty mess off the docket, and to call it a day on this long, foul affair.

Public interest in the suits is all but dead. There is little active, vigorous demand for the State to demand the final pound of flesh. It is doubtful that a jury would give the death sentence, for one of the defendants, who had twice been given the extreme penalty, received only 75 years on his third trial.

A powerful argument for a just and honorable compromise, to spare the people of this State further in these nauseous trials, was made in The Montgomery Advertiser Saturday morning, by its distinguished editor, Judge Grover Hall.

Judge Hall calls for "cease firing" if a compromise can be reached.

His logic is so convincing that we reproduce here his editorial in full.—Huntsville Times.

SOUR NOTE FROM TUSCALOOSA

The Advertiser spoke on Saturday morning, The Post chimed in with its usual whoop for the dear little Scottsboro boys Saturday afternoon and the great social-minded Birmingham News joined the chorus on Sunday morning. And on Monday the Alabama Supreme Court affirmed the 75-year sentence of Haywood Patterson. Haywood is one of the "boys" and the action by the court makes either the newspapers or the court look a little ridiculous.

We believe in the value of a compromise, but we for one do not intend to scream like a parrot for it just because The Advertiser, The News and The Post regard it as a good idea. An honorable compromise is a noble thing. But the day of an honorable compromise in the Scottsboro case is past. The gauntlet has been thrown down to us, and we may show leniency, but we cannot compromise.

In the first place, if the Scottsboro boys were guilty in March, 1931, they are still guilty today. The Jackson County jury, the vast majority of Alabama people and The Montgomery Advertiser believed that they were guilty in 1931. The Advertiser even admits that it gave editorial support to Tom Knight solely because of his prosecution of the Scottsboro negroes.

We do not think that either the guilt or the innocence of the "boys" has been affected just because Ruby Bates turned defense witness. She committed perjury at one time or the other—and just judging from human nature and all the finery which she had on her back when she returned to Alabama to change her testimony, we guess that she committed perjury the second time. Ruby Bates, if anything, makes it even more imperative that the State proceed with its prosecution. Even some of the members of the Attorney General's staff have well-grounded suspicions that Ruby Bates was bribed by the International Labor Defense and other radicals in the East who think that it's all right for them to tamper with our courts, but awful for us to prosecute a rapist.

The Scottsboro defense will interpret any sentence short of 25 years a "victory." And any compromise by our prosecuting officers will be the signal to the world that Alabama has surrendered. It will be our official notification that we were wrong all the time. It will tell every radical in New York City and Moscow that Alabama might imprison or even electrocute a negro rapist if too much fuss is not made about it—but that we will always crawl back into our shells when outside lawyers and outside agitators find out about the case and enter it.

We will be inviting more trouble than the Scottsboro case ever dreamed of causing us.

As far as The Tuscaloosa News is concerned, we have no desire to persecute anyone, but we do believe that if the grand jury had sufficient evidence to indict them, these negroes ought to be placed on trial.—Tuscaloosa News.

SENSIBLE SUGGESTION

In the well known Third Column of this page today is an editorial from The Montgomery Advertiser which records a rather unique procedure for that paper, i.e., a reversal of policy.

From the beginning of the "Scottsboro case" The Advertiser demanded, as practically every other Alabama paper demanded—prosecution to the limit of the accused Negroes. But now, six years after their arrest, The Advertiser says: "Since there is ground for reasonable doubt of the positive guilt of all of the men now in jail, since all of them, in any event, have been in prison for six years, and since they are doing more than all other citizens of Alabama combined to injure the whole people of Alabama before the world, since nothing worthwhile can be gained by the State in pressing its prosecutions to the bitter end, The Advertiser herewith takes it upon itself to suggest and urge that the State now move for a decent, dignified compromise."

To this suggestion The Birmingham News agrees. And to it The Eagle agrees. And for the reason of Judge Horton's lengthy statement in setting aside the verdict of the jury in the first trial. Judge Horton said that, from the testimony given in court, the Negroes were not guilty. His statement is too long to be given in this place, but it was a fearless, fair and convincing dissertation. Incidentally it cost the Judge his seat, but he discharged his plain duty as he saw it.

The Eagle is well aware that the years these Negroes have been in jail without their cases being disposed of has contributed to the mob spirit in other sections of the country.

And it is past time the cases were removed forever from the docket.—Dothan Eagle.

APPARENTLY FAVORABLE

Last week The Montgomery Advertiser, breaking a two-year silence, considered again the Scottsboro case and in an inspired editorial asked for a decent compromise in the case which has done more to blacken the name of Alabama at home and abroad than the good works of hundreds of Alabamians have been able to do to enhance it. Throwing no sop to the pseudo liberals of the east who have attempted to make political capital of the trials and asking that Alabamians shake off, for the time, for the good it will do, their traditional attitude, The Advertiser appeals for speedy compromise settlement of the affair which has cost so much in money, time and good will.

Stating that it has consistently supported the State and the city of Scottsboro during the six years that the case has dragged through the courts, The Advertiser continues to give its opinion of the case.—Eufaula Tribune.

Throw Away This Body Of Death

(Montgomery Advertiser)

The Advertiser has from the beginning taken the side of the state and its attorneys in the prosecution of the Scottsboro cases. It has praised the officers and citizens of Jackson County that prevented a lynching in the first instance. It has commiserated with Jackson County for its peculiar misfortunes in connection with this saga of crime, prejudice, politics and stupidity. Jackson County, you see, had no original interest in this matter. The women concerned were not citizens of that county. The men who are charged with outraging them were not citizens of that county. The two sets of parties to this issue happened to be riding through Jackson County on a freight train, and the men now charged with rape on that occasion happened to be arrested in Jackson. Nevertheless, Jackson had to bear the heavy cost of the first trial and the even heavier cost in notoriety which the name of "Scottsboro" has imposed. Thus Scottsboro, a pleasant little town of the mountains, has been libeled throughout the reaches of civilization, and so, for another reason, The Advertiser has been on Scottsboro's side.

The Advertiser was revolted from the first by the Communistic vermin that swarmed into the picture without invitation, not to serve justice, that pure and serene lady of mythology, but to make political capital.

When at last the Supreme Court of the United States reversed an Alabama court that had found one of the defendants guilty, reversing Alabama on the ground that the Alabama jury that was trying a negro had no negro in the panel, The Advertiser jeered the Supreme Court and intimated that its opinion was suspect due to the fact that no negro was on the nation's highest bench when the opinion was written.

In the meantime, it has been the duty, and the privilege, of The Advertiser to defend the good name of Alabama against the stupid slanders of a heathen world.

In 1934 The Advertiser departed from its custom and urged the people of Alabama to elect a certain candidate for lieutenant governor. Ordinarily this paper does not concern itself with the ambitions of candidates for any office other than governor and United States senator. That year, however, The Advertiser asked the people of Alabama to elect the late lamented Thomas E. Knight, then attorney general, to the lieutenant governorship, notwithstanding that at that time he had able and honorable opposition for the office. The Advertiser argued that Tommy Knight should be elected lieutenant governor as a rebu e by Alabama to the outer world for the contumaly and slander tha. it had heaped upon our state because of the Scottsboro cases. Mr. Knight was elected lieutenant governor.

In 1935, when Albert A. Carmichael, Knight's successor as attorney general, announced that he had retained Mr. Knight to press the prosecution of the "Scottsboro boys," The Advertiser commended his wisdom and patriotism, and urged the attorney general to see the prosecution through to the bitter end. That was the last comment, until now, that The Advertiser made upon the ugly affair.

The Advertiser, in other words, is a hold-out. It has been deeply incensed by the conduct of the more vociferous "friends" of the Scottsboro boys and has had little sympathy with their antics. Today marks the first release from its original mood.

Today, however, without any apology for what has been said before in these columns or done by the officers of Alabama's courts, The Advertiser ventures to make this suggestion to the officers of the state, including the attorney general, the judge and the circuit solicitor who now face the grim business of retrying these revolting cases: Why not collaborate in effecting a decent compromise?

The Advertiser realizes that rape is a capital offense under the laws of Alabama, however lightly the lawmakers of England may have taken the same offense. The Advertiser realizes that in Alabama the rape of a white woman by a negro is commonly regarded as the worst of all possible crimes, however culpable the victim may sometimes be. The Advertiser is well aware of the essentially Southern point of view with regard to this question which controls the thought of Alabamians.

But The Advertiser also knows that the "Scottsboro boys"—now approaching middle age—committed whatever crime they may have committed in extraordinary circumstances, and against two women who by all accounts never before had put a high premium upon their virtue, one of whom even went the length upon one occasion of turning state's evidence.

The Advertiser knows, all of its readers know, the whole of this sordid, sickening story. What a nightmare it has been!

What we are trying to get at is this: "Scottsboro" has stigmatized Alabama throughout the civilized world, and every informed person knows it. "Scottsboro" has injured Alabama incalculably.

Since there is ground for reasonable doubt of the positive guilt of all of the men now in jail, since all of them, in any event, have been in prison for six years, and since they are doing more than all other citizens of Alabama combined to injure the whole people of Alabama before the world, since nothing worth while can be gained by the state in pressing its prosecutions to the bitter end, The Advertiser herewith takes it upon itself to suggest and urge that the state now move for a decent, dignified compromise.

The Advertiser confesses that it is sensitive to the question of public policy involved as well as the question of personal human justice. Let Alabama be true to the principle of justice for even the lowliest human being. Let Alabama be very just, especially for the friendless and underprivileged; but let Alabama also be true to itself—let it think and act according to the dictates of enlightened public policy and public service.

Nothing can be gained by demanding the final pound of flesh, and The Advertiser has reason to believe, even to know, that it is not the wish of the state to exact the final pound of flesh.

On the other hand, Alabama has nothing to apologize for in the premises. Thus far the state has done nothing but its simple, plain duty.

But what of the future? What should we now do to shake this body of death that is "Scottsboro?" Enlightened public opinion in Alabama will, in The Advertiser's opinion, applaud any official concerned who now strikes out for an honorable, fair and just settlement of these messy cases.

Scottsboro Appeal Dismissal Is Asked

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—(AP)—The State of Alabama asked the Supreme Court today to dismiss the appeal of Heywood Patterson, one of the nine negroes involved in the famous Scottsboro case.

Patterson has asked the high court to review his conviction in the State courts where he was sentenced to serve a 75-year prison term for an alleged attack upon a white woman. The high court twice has saved Patterson from the death penalty.

The State's brief, filed by Attorney General A. A. Carmichael, asserted that "the record does not disclose that Patterson's conviction was the result of anything other than legal evidence."

Patterson's contention was that his trial should have been transferred from the Morgan County court to the Northern Alabama Federal District Court because of the "utter impossibility of obtaining a fair trial in Morgan County."

To this Carmichael's brief replied: "The State of Alabama undoubtedly has the right to prescribe the place where a criminal is to be tried. There is nothing in the Federal constitution which gives the Federal government the right to dictate to the States where the venue of an action is to be placed."

Charges against four of the nine negroes were dropped recently after they had spent six years in prisons. Another, Clarence Norris, faces the death penalty. The others have received prison terms.

SCOTTSBORO SOLUTION NEAR

FIVE NEGRO YOUTHS who three times have been sentenced to die were given their outright freedom Saturday, both from execution of the death sentence and from fear of further prosecution, in the world-famous "Scottsboro case" which has stigmatized Alabama justice for several years. Of the other four Negro defendants accused in that sordid complexity of either fact or fiction relating to the raping of two white women on a freight train at Painted Rock, Alabama, one is under a sentence of death for the third consecutive time, two are under sentences so prolonged as to constitute life imprisonment, and one faces a jail term of 20 years not because of the alleged fact of the rape but because he stabbed an officer who was leading him back to jail after one of the innumerable and interminable trials.

Taken up instantly by liberals in this country and abroad with a prejudice and an insistence almost as savage as that displayed, conversely, by race-bitter Alabamans, the case almost immediately developed into a cause celebre on which the whole sociological framework of justice for the Negro in the South was draped. Three times the defendants were found guilty of criminal assault in the first degree, three times were they sentenced to death, two times did the Supreme Court of Alabama uphold the convictions—and each time did the Supreme Court of the United States send the cases back for retrial.

The apparent facts of the case were almost completely lost sight of in the welter of racial and sectional animosities that bubbled each time the Scottsboro cases came up. Although it was brought out each time that the two alleged victims of assault were women whose reputations could be submitted to rough handling on cross-examination, although they admitted earlier relations with some white hoboes riding the rails of the same freight, although the women about-faced on their stories repeatedly—what, apparently, was the core of the case to Alabamans was simply this: Negroes had had relations with white women; they therefore must die. Whether the relations were forced on the women or not, whether the word of two women of damaged reputation could be accepted over the denials of nine men had nothing to do with the case to the jurors.

Alabama must at last have become as sick of her celebrated case as has the rest of the world, and weary of the fingers of scorn pointed endlessly at her. She has now gone more than halfway with Leibowitz; she has freed five of the defendants outright, and it is seemingly evident that three of the other four will not serve their sentences. In fact, it looks as though the only defendant who will go to prison as a result of the Scottsboro case will be Ozie Powell. His is a rich dose of irony. Freed as he probably will be along with the others on the original indictment of criminal assault, he yet must serve 20 years in the penitentiary for assault with intent to kill upon an officer. Small comfort to him will be the ultimate disposition of the Scottsboro case, for fate has indeed played him shabbily.

Augusta, Ga., Chronicle
July 31, 1937

AT LAST WE ARE RID OF THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The Scottsboro case is ended. The state has dropped all charges against four of the nine defendants. In reality, the charge of assault on Victoria Price and Ruby Bates has been nol prossed in five of the cases, for while the fifth Negro is under sentence, it is for a charge of assault with intent to murder growing out of an attack on a deputy sheriff. The other four Negroes remain under conviction on the charges of rape, with varying sentences imposed on them.

The dropping of five of these cases and the reported agreements concerning the other cases in which convictions have been secured represent a triumph of common sense and moderation. These cases, dragging on for more than six years in an atmosphere of doubt and dispute, with all the unsavory elements that have entered into them, have been a perennial nightmare to Alabama. The great majority of the people of this state, The News-Age-Herald is convinced, will rejoice to be rid of them.

At most, the truth of these charges has been extremely doubtful. There has been evidence and testimony to indicate that the Negroes actually were not guilty as charged. One of the accusers, Ruby Bates, repudiated her original testimony that she was assaulted, and denied that there were any assaults on either her or Victoria Price. The latter testified throughout the numerous trials that she was assaulted, though her testimony, in its conflicting statements, and in its discrepancies with the testimony of others, was of such a nature that it was never conclusive.

Grave doubt therefore surrounded these charges. In view of this doubt, and in view of all the other circumstances, no one could be certain of where truth and justice lay. In this uncertainly, the sensible thing from every standpoint was to do just what the state has done—end the sorry mess in the most convenient way.

Apparently there has been an agreement between the state and the defense that the most convenient way to end the cases was to drop the remaining charges and let the convictions stand, together with an understanding, according to reports credited as authoritative, that clemency would be granted in the case of the death sentence imposed on one of the defendants.

The status of the five Negroes under conviction is varied. In the case of Ozie Powell, the charge of rape has been dropped, but he has pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder in connection with his attack on Deputy Sheriff Edgar Blalock in January, 1936, when he was being transported to the Jefferson County Jail. For this he has been sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary. There is no question that this was a criminal act and that he was guilty as charged. Accordingly, in whatever adjustments might be made concerning these cases in the future, his should be considered separately from the rest.

As for the other four under conviction, the varied sentences imposed and the fact that the rape charges were dropped against the other five defendants clearly call for adjustments. Either all nine Negroes were guilty, or none was. Since there was so much doubt of their guilt that the assault charges were nol prossed in five of the cases, it would hardly be fair to let the sentences stand as they are.

In the case of Clarence Norris, sentenced to be executed, there is assurance, apparently, that the death sentence will be commuted. Another defendant, Andy Wright, is under sentence of 99 years. Two others, Heywood Patterson and Charlie Weems, are under sentence of 75 years.

Thus, while the Scottsboro trials are ended, there remain further questions for consideration. The responsibility for the adjustment and disposition of the case under conviction rests on the governor. Since the governor doubtless knew of the disposition that was to be made of the cases in court, whether or not he gave his own sanction to the arrangement, he must surely be contemplating an exercise of clemency powers which as nearly as possible will prevent undue punishment of some while others go free. This paper believes that the governor can be trusted to deal wisely with these convictions.

What the state officials in charge of the prosecution have done should be accepted by all Alabamians, and the state's course upheld by public opinion, regardless of individual feelings concerning the question of guilt or innocence. For let everyone remember that whatever may have been his opinion about the Scottsboro case, he could not be sure that there was any foundation for his opinion.

And whatever the governor may do in adjusting the sentences of those under conviction, it should likewise be accepted by all Alabamians. The final responsibility in this will be solely the governor's. The public should realize that, in the circumstances, the governor will be closer to the subject and will have a fuller knowledge of all its aspects than any other person. Whatever he sees fit to do, we may all be sure, will be done in accordance with the best dictates of his judgment and conscience. Let us all trust the governor's conscience and judgment in this matter. Let us all abide by any decision he reaches in making adjustments.—Birmingham News.

EXTRADITION

The constant tirade against Georgia penal conditions in Northern states has finally made its appearance in Massachusetts where Governor Hurley refused to honor extradition for a negro escape on the grounds that the penal conditions in Georgia forbade the return of this thrice convicted criminal. The constitution distinctly makes it the duty of the several states to honor extradition proceedings, and the flimsy excuses offered show that the Governors of northern states are yielding more to public sentiment in those states than to the law that they are sworn to obey.

The lessons from these acts of reprisals in the North show that the movie picture "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain-Grang," and the Scottsboro episode has done their deadly damage, and that the Governors are yielding to the sentiment in their States rather than to the law. A movie magazine published a few days ago disclosed that another picture depicting a lynching scene in the South is about to be released, and of course this nationally disturbed movie will only tend to increase the already inflamed feeling prevalent in Northern states.

It behooves Georgia to take steps to remove this feeling. Reprisals by this State will not solve the criminal conditions. Of course Georgia could in turn retaliate by refusing to cooperate with police officials in other sections, but this would not benefit the campaign against crime. Georgia should improve her penal condition and rectify conditions in Georgia so that this feeling that is militating against her can be removed. Acrimonious exchange of letters by our Governor may be spectacular but they accomplish no good except to give more publicity to a condition that is injuring Georgia. This unfavorable advertisement although unwarranted to a large extent is keeping industries and people away from Georgia. Georgia must remove this feeling by constructive work and not be engaging in letter writing with tart and pithy insinuations to the chief executives of other states.

The Leibowitz Exhibition

Samuel Leibowitz may feel that he did the wise thing in carting off the freed Scottsboro Negroes to New York and allowing them to parade Harlem amid the hilarious shouts of the Harlemites. But there is reason to doubt that wisdom.

Back of this venture could be the suspicion that hot-headed Southern hoodlums would try to harm the Scottsboro defendants. But it is dubious logic which foresees mob passion aroused in this case after six years, especially when the reputation of the involved white women is considered.

Apparently the itinerary was arranged for other purposes. Leibowitz contends that he wants to help the young principals in the Scottsboro drama, and the American Civil Liberities Union, which employed the attorney, is actively interested in providing a new opportunity and start in life for the youngsters, according to reports. This ambition is laudable.

Leibowitz, too, would insist that the spotlight should be turned in this manner upon "Alabama justice," which he evidently regards with a baleful eye of contempt. Many other critics of the procedure followed in the Scottsboro case will agree with him on the proposition that the scales of equity might be balanced better in the trial of friendless, illiterate Negroes, not only in Alabama, but in other states, North and South. But it is doubtful that Mr. Leibowitz is speeding improvements upon Alabama justice by an act which is bound to cause embarrassment and resentment in that state.

The possibility exists that, at bottom, the scheme is designed to afford wider publicity for Leibowitz and the organization he represents. It was unnecessary, uncalled for, and in the final analysis, may add nothing of personal advantage either to the fortunes of the sensation-loving lawyer or his proteges whom he has figuratively mounted and marked "Scottsboro—Exhibit A."

DEGENERATES

The Scottsboro case in Alabama was bad, bad in many ways, but South Carolina needs to hang her head in shame at the alleged crime of six white boys over in Cheraw—charged with criminal assault on a young girl they had never seen before, picked her up for a ride.

Regardless of the color of their skin, society cannot tolerate such brutish degenerates.

BREAK AT SCOTTSBORO.

July 26 1937

That break which has more recently been anticipated in the longstanding Scottsboro cases has at last come with dismissal, on a state's motion, of criminal assault charges against five of the nine negroes who have figured in this apparently endless and now become internationally famous litigation.

Three of the group had previously been convicted, for the third time, one being under death sentence and the other two having prison terms of 99 and 75 years respectively hanging over them. Appeal, however, has been noted in each instance, and the indications are that the judicial shuttle which has been operating for six years now will resume its schedule unless there is some definite understanding, reflected in part by the five dismissals, not as yet divulged by either state or defense counsel. Immediately before the state's motion to nol pros, another defendant, Charlie Weems, had been found guilty and sentenced to 75 years, while among the five against whom capital charges were dismissed, one, Ozie Powell, had pleaded guilty on an assault charge in connection with the shooting of an officer more than a year ago and drawn a 20 years term in prison.

It is the Daily News' idea that Alabama, in taking this step, has done far more than it would ever do by a bull-headed misadministration of justice to maintain its good name and vindicate its honor. Public opinion, so far as the outside is concerned, has apparently been strongly on the side of the Scottsboro defendants and the state and the south have been criticised and condemned accordingly. While the case has probably been magnified out of proportions, the taking of nine lives for one crime is rather large judicial business, particularly when the evidence has been as questionable as in these trials.

With the present turn of events it cannot be overlooked that the defendants who are at last to go free have been in the toils of the law for six years and during that interval have experienced the agony of the shadow of death. Alabama has thus inflicted a punishment, upon defendants ultimately freed, which can never be requited. Thus there is recorded another one of those situations in which justice goes its steely way with nothing apparently to be done for those whom the state ultimately admits its inability to convict.

Scottsboro Comment Causes Speaker To Lose Radio Program

C. L. Spelman Arouses Indignation of Whites In Broadcast In Wilson; Discrimination Against Colored Programs Recently

(Special to Journal and Guide)

WILSON, N. C.—C. L. Spellman, Wilson County farm agent, was a news commentator over Radio Station WGTM in this city until last week. Mr. Spellman commented especially on activities of interest to farmers and dispensed very valuable information in regard to crops calculated to improve farming among colored farmers in that section.

Now Mr. Spellman's broadcast is no longer heard on the local station. The cause: the Scottsboro case.

It seems that Mr. Spellman brought up the famous case during a recent broadcast and called attention to the fact that four of the Scottsboro defendants had been freed. He made some other observations about the widely known case and the next day he found himself without his program all because a few white people had called up the station in righteous wrath and indignation over the things Mr. Spellman had said.

But this was not the beginning of trouble between local colored people and the station. Some time ago, when the station was in its infancy, colored people had been invited to present program over the ether via the local transmitter. And they had apparently been welcomed.

But recently the policy had undergone some radical revisions. The first performers to feel it were the members of Laddie Springs orchestra, who had been broadcasting in the main studio for a half hour on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Recently the band was directed to the much smaller Studio B, which would hardly accommodate a quartet comfortably, and rather than suffer further indignities, the band severed relationships with the station.

Shortly after this effort at segregation, the Handel Chorus, widely known local singing group, was instructed to confine their programs to old spirituals and to refrain from singing any classical numbers or presenting any solo stars. Jack Sherrod, president of the group, announced that the chorus favored a variety program and so they had to give up their program.

Then came the Spellman case. At this point a group of business men decided that something must be done. Daniel McKeither, William F. Potts, C. L. Spellman, and Jack Sherrod, have begun preparation of a fifteen week radio program, to be broadcast for one half hour every week beginning the second week in September.

NEGROES GIVEN HEARING AUG. 28

Scottsboro Defense Counsel Asks New Trials For Three Defendants

DECATUR, Aug. 12—(Special.)—Defense counsel today was making final preparations to resume arguments in the Scottsboro case, after a motion for new trials was filed yesterday in the Morgan County Circuit Court.

Judge W. W. Callahan set Aug. 28 as the date for hearing the motion.

Clarence Watts, defense attorney, asked new trials for three of the five Negroes under sentence. They are Clarence Norris, under death sentence; Charles Weems, given 75 years and Andy Wright, 99 years.

The other two Negroes, Heywood Patterson, serving a 75-year term, and Ozie Powell, sentenced to 20 years, were not affected by the new motion. Powell pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder in connection with an alleged escape attempt in which an officer was slain, and was given the 20-year sentence. The rape charge was nol prossed.

Four Of Five Scottsboro Cases Appealed

Seek Reduction In Sentence Given Ozie Powell

(Another Story, Picture on pp. 4)

NEW YORK CITY — Definite legal steps toward the freedom of the five imprisoned Scottsboro boys began this week when appeals from the recent convictions were dispatched to the Alabama Circuit Courts, the Scottsboro Defense Committee announced.

Osmond K. Fraenkel, noted constitutional attorney, retained by the Committee, sent the appeals forward. They will ask for a new trial in the following cases: Andy Wright, sentenced to 99 years; Clarence Norris, sentenced to death; Charlie Weems, sentenced to 75 years; and Heywood Patterson, sentenced to 75 years in January, 1936.

In making the announcement at the committee's office, 112 East 19th Street, Morris Shapiro, secretary of the committee, stated that the committee "would also use every legal recourse to also obtain the release" of Ozie Powell, the fifth imprisoned Scottsboro youth.

Powell pleaded "guilty" to a charge of "attacking" a deputy sheriff and received a sentence of 20 years at the Morgan County Circuit court three weeks ago. Every effort will be made to have Powell's sentence reduced as low as possible, Shapiro explained.

In the case of Patterson, Fraenkel moved for a writ of certiorari taking the case for its third journey to the United States Supreme Court. The writ is discretionary with the Supreme Court. The Alabama Supreme Court has already upheld Patterson's 75-year sentence.

ALABAMA COURTS

Censured For 6 Years Of Blind Justice

Editor, Journal and Guide: Finally we may say, "It is over," and breathe more fully and easily since the business of the Scottsboro affair is about to blow over. All papers everywhere on Monday, July 26, carried the story of the four freed Scottsboro boys arriving in New York City. We are glad they are there. We are more than glad that the whole sordid mess is now about to be forever ended.

As my concluding remarks on this nationally famous case, I wish to say that it is very true that the alleged crime of which these boys were accused cannot be condoned in this country. It is also true that if such crimes are committed, the offender must be dealt with by due process of the law and in such measure as to bring justice to the offended. In handling the case from the beginning, the courts and officers of Alabama are to be commended for protecting the boys from mob violence, as may have happened in many places in the south. Still the courts and officers of Alabama are to be severely criticised for taking six years to free or condemn the accused.

In this country we stand on the full principle of justice for all people before the law. But a bungling justice as exhibited by the state of Alabama shakes our basic belief in the principle. Now that we have seen it take six years to complete a case as familiar to Alabama as a rape charge is, we wonder at the sincerity of Alabama officers and the efficiency of Alabama courts. Since it is true that on more than one occasion the highest courts have found fallacies in the activities of the general Alabama courts handling the Scottsboro cases, we more than hint that Alabama courts may have been more zealous to legally satisfy a design in the culture pattern of the deep South than in finding the solid ground of truth on which the unfailing wheels of justice really turn.

Now that four of the Scottsboro boys have been returned to that freedom from which they were snatched six years ago, it strikes me that they should not be used to satisfy the gaze of the morbidly curious. But, instead, all agencies should strive to rehabilitate them and help them find a place in life where they may earn an honest living unobserved.

—C. L. SPELLMAN

More Scottsboro Mail Passes Into Archives

Miss Kate Thompson, stenographic secretary in the office of Gov. Graves, yesterday closed the "Scottsboro Cases" at least temporarily, so far as the State Executive Department is concerned, when she turned over to the Department of Archives and History 64 large letter-file folders, stuffed to capacity with telegrams, letters, posta' cards and circulars received by the Governor, recording the cases.

Most of these communications represent protests against further trial of the defendants, or demand their unconditional release. They ceased to arrive soon after trial of the cases was concluded at Decatur last month.

The Archives and History Department already has stored away in the Capitol basement four large steel filing cabinets full of Scottsboro case correspondence of every kind and character, that has accumulated during the past six years.

THE I.L.D. FIGHTS ON

From the moment the Scottsboro boys were tied with ropes, put on a truck, and taken to the Jackson County jail in Scottsboro until Alabama decided that its judicial thinking was at variance with even the most bias of legal postulates, the International Labor Defense stepped into the case and fought it out.

When Clarence Darrow, retained by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People withdrew from the case because he was not given a free rein in handling it, there were many who felt that the boys were doomed. After accusing the I. L. D. of using the case merely for Communist propaganda, many organizations washed their hands of the whole affair.

Darrow's withdrawal was adjudged a blow to the defense which had hoped to associate itself with America's most eminent criminal lawyer and gain the benefit of his wide experience and prestige. When on March 25, 1932, the case was appealed to the Alabama Supreme Court, Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., now dead, argued it for the state before a Supreme Court that included in its roster his own father, Justice Thomas E. Knight. These were serious handicaps considering the temper of the provincial South and the peculiar circumstances surrounding the case. But the I. L. D. went ahead appealing twice before the Alabama Supreme Court, and twice before the United States Supreme Court. It took money, it took time, it required legal ingenuity and social perspective to mobilize and educate public opinion as to the implications involved.

The question of systematic exclusion of Race men from jury service, an issue that was never raised before, and, which formed the basis for appeal, was one of the historic points of the Scottsboro trial. Though men like Professor Albert E. Einstein, Theodore Dreiser, John Dos Passos, and women from such colleges as Radcliffe and Wellesly added their names to the long roster of those who had issued personal appeals demanding the release of the prisoners, many either through ignorance or through natural inertia registered little, if indeed any concern at all about the whole affair.

The I. L. D. had to fight not only sectional bigotry and deep rooted racial apathy, but also the clandestine opposition and indifference of a number of our so-called Christian and fraternal societies which, with mixed interests, watched from the sidelines the struggle for the triumph of elementary human rights over prejudice and ignorance.

While Samuel S. Leibowitz has scored a major victory for the Scottsboro boys and for the International Labor Defense, the implications of this victory transcend the lives of the nine boys, and the prestige of the I. L. D., for it should teach a great deal to the South, teach it to respect human rights, to reform its anti-social and anti-racial concepts and to salvage its reputation out of the malodorous and muddy waters of prejudice, discrimination and lynchings; and at the same time it should remind us forever that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

THE WRONG MOVE

ANYONE WHO championed the cause of the Negroes known as "the Scottsboro boys," and who felt elated with the liberal campaigners for their cause when four of the nine won complete freedom, must now feel compelled to criticize the quartet for their decision to appear in a Harlem theatre in re-enactment of the court scene at the hour of their release.

Such an anti-climax—for remuneration—following so closely the sultry bitterness, the resentment, hate and prejudice that beclouded the whole case of alleged rape against the negroes, is in the very worst of taste. It is bad enough to see a channel swimmer, or an aviator hero, or anyone precipitated into headlines overnight, make haste to capitalize on his brief hour of glory via the vaudeville stage; it is worst to see a Dr. Condon, who acted as "intermediary" for a harrassed Lindberg during the tragic kidnaping of the flier's son, pose in store windows and on the stage—for money—in exploitation of his cheap glory. But it is something else again to see these four Scottsboro boys seek to capitalize on their particularly "glory."

These Negroes represent an abortion of justice that after long last was partially righted; as a unit the nine of them were the piece de resistance in a case which focused international attention on the South's bungling of racial relations. Freed at last, they stand now for the triumph of justice, through earnest and unremunerated activity on the part of liberals, over prejudice and passion.

And in tawdry anti-climax they will pose on the stage for nickels—admittedly against the advice of their lawyer, Samuel Leibowitz. They will perhaps find that a lot of enthusiasm for their cause will quickly cool at this decidedly unmeritorious performance.

Spartanburg, S. C., Herald
August 17, 1937

The four Alabama negroes who were released in the trial of the Scottsboro case are giving their friends and sympathizers in the East something to think about. Contrary to the advice of their attorney, Samuel Liebowitz, who wanted them to go to work, they have gone on the stage and are presenting the Scottsboro court scene the day they were released. They have slicked their hair, dress in loud clothing and are strutting their stuff in Harlem. New York state will have more to say about those youngsters and New York courts will handle them with more despatch than those of Alabama.

SCOTTSBORO CASE AGAIN IN HIGH COURT

Third Appeal, Made by Patterson, Asks That He Be Spared From 75-Year Term

VENUE DENIAL IS CITED

Leibowitz Says Record Showed 'Utter Impossibility' of Fair Trial in Morgan County

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11 (AP).—The Scottsboro case came to the Supreme Court for the third time today.

Haywood Patterson, who twice escaped the death penalty by intervention of the high tribunal, asked it to save him this time from a seventy-five-year prison sentence.

He and eight other Negroes were accused of attacking two white women, Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, on a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., in March, 1931.

Patterson's petition, prepared by Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York lawyer, and others, contended that the Morgan County court should have transferred Patterson's most recent trial to the Northern Alabama Federal District Court.

"The petition for removal was supported by affidavits setting forth the state of public mind throughout Morgan County with respect to the trial," the Supreme Court was told. "The allegations of th ptition and the statements of the affiants were in no respect denied by the State.

"Accepting such allegations and statements as true, the record shows the utter impossibility of petitioner obtaining a fair trial in Morgan County."

Patterson contended also that, while the indictment charged him only with "rape," the trial judge "instructed the jury at length on the subject of conspiracy."

"The consequence of the judge's charge was that the defendant might have been found guilty even though no rape ever took place on the theory that there was a conspiracy to commit rape, if it existed by the Negroes when they discovered that there were white girls on the train," the petition added.

"It is petitioner's contention that to permit a conviction upon a charge such as this, under the circumstances of this case, is a denial of due process."

The Supreme Court is expected to announce in October whether it will review the conviction.

Five years ago it set aside the conviction of Patterson and the other defendants on the ground that adequate counsel had not been provided for them during the trial.

Two years ago it ordered a new trial for Patterson and Clarence Norris, holdng that Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from the juries that indicted and convicted them.

At the subsequent trial Patterson received a prison sentence instead of death.

Norris, who may also appeal later to the Supreme Court, again received the death sentence.

Charges aaginst four of the Negroes were dropped recently after they had spent six years in prison. The others have been sentenced to prison.

Scottsboro Boy Sent to Chain Gang

Haywood Patterson Put on Gang Despite Foot Infection

Haywood Patterson, Scottsboro defendant, has been put on a chain-gang at Atmore in the Southern Alabama swampland, and, in spite of an operation less than a month ago for a chronic infection of the left leg, is being forced to work on the gang.

This information was received yesterday by the Scottsboro Defense Committee which is continuing its action to save Patterson's life.

A petition and brief for a writ of certiorari in Patterson's case was filed with the United States Supreme Court last Saturday by Osmond K. Fraenkel, retained by the Scottsboro Defense Committee. Patterson was sentenced to 75 years imprisonment 18 months ago.

Two years ago, Alf White, one of the imprisoned leaders of the Alabama Sharecroppers Union, was murdered in Atmore Prison Campcians, is in charge of the camp.

"This obvious attempt on the part of the Alabama authorities to get away with Haywood Patterson, while his case is pending for the third time before the Supreme Court is already wired to the officials must be transferred back to the county jail in Birmingham pending the appeal to the United States Supreme Court has been denied.

Threats are reported to have been made against Patterson's life in Kilby Prison, at Montgomery, where he was sentenced twice before he was his sentence.

MURDER AT CAMP

Vito Marcantonio, president of the International Labor Defense, Alabama, demanding his immediate transfer to a hospital in Birmingham, Ala., and holding them responsible for the life and safety of the Haywood Patterson. Alabama authorities must be shown, by a nation-wide protest, that millions of Americans are more than ever before in a very serious condition of the Kilby Prison physicians in charge vitally interested in the well-being and particularly to one whereafter of the Scottsboro Boys.

Two years ago another political "Three of the boys, Andy Wright, Charlie Weems, and Ozie Powell, was killed while serving in calling for nation-wide protest against this latest outrage in the Kilby Prison facing the same fate. "Alabama must be shown that the lives and freedom of the remaining five Scottsboro Boys has just begun. And only mass pressure of the most vigorous kind can show them."

SCOTTSBORO APPEAL DENIED IN ALABAMA

Highest State Judges Affirm Patterson's Sentence of 75 Years

TO SUPREME COURT AGAIN

Case Going to Washington for Third Time—Montgomery Group Presses for Compromise

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 14.—The Seventy-five-year sentence imposed in January, 1936, by the Morgan County Circuit Court on Heyward Patterson, one of the nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case, was affirmed today by the Alabama Supreme Court. Four of the seven justices sat on the appeal and decided unanimously.

"When the record is examined, as has been done, we find no reversible error," the decision read.

Patterson's lawyers announced in New York that appeal would again be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

Trial of the other defendants, who are jailed in Birmingham, is to be resumed July 6 at Decatur.

Negotiations for a compromise of all nine cases, despite denials in official sources, are nevertheless receiving careful consideration and it is expected that when the time appears ripe a disposition will be sought satisfactory to the State and the defense.

Newspapers Support Effort

A group of citizens of Alabama, including Forney Johnston, Birmingham lawyer who has figured prominently recently in anti-New Deal appeals in the United States Supreme Court, are endeavoring to mold public opinion to the point where a compromise would appear expedient to those State officials who would assume the responsibility.

The Montgomery Advertiser lent itself to the movement on June 12 with an editorial, which said:

"Nothing can be gained by demanding the final pound of flesh, and The Advertiser has reason to believe, even to know, that it is not the wish of the State to exact the final pound of flesh."

The Editorial was reproduced with sympathetic comment in The Birmingham News, The Huntsville Times and other papers.

Patterson and the other Negroes were taken from a feright train in March, 1931, near Scottsboro and accused of assaulting Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, white women, who had been riding the train. The Bates girl later repudiated the charge and has been a defense witness.

Leibowitz Declares Plans

Samuel Leibowitz, chief of Scottsboro defense counsel, said yesterday, when informed of the Alabama Supreme Court decision, that "the only comment is that we're going to the United States Supreme Court."

He said he believed it would be the first time in American history that a criminal case was brought to the highest court for the third time. He did not expect it to come up in Washington before November.

As to the trial of the other eight defendants, opening July 6 in Alabama, he remarked that "we'll be there."

Patterson's first conviction at Scottsboro in 1931 was set aside by the Federal Supreme Court. He was convicted for the second time at Decatur on April 9, 1933, and again sentenced to death. Two months later, Circuit Judge James E. Horton set aside the verdict as against the weight of the evidence and ordered a new trial.

Before Judge W. W. Callahan, he was condemned again on Dec. 1, 1933, the jury deliberating twenty-five hours. Five days later Clarence Norris was convicted and also sentenced to die.

The sentences were upheld by the Alabama Supreme Court on June 28, 1934. An indefinite stay of execution was granted, however, and on April 1, 1935, the Supreme Court in Washington ordered new trials. Chief Justice Hughes held that Negroes had been arbitrarily and systematically excluded from jury duty.

Patterson's third conviction resulted, on Jan. 23, 1936, in the prison sentence fixed by the jury at seventy-five years. The defendant, who at 23 had already spent six years in jail, said he'd rather die.

IN THE MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA, ADVERTISER of June 12 there was published an editorial which in its first half defended the newspaper's unyielding support of the state's past conduct of the Scottsboro case and in the second half suggested that a "decent compromise" be made, ". . . since nothing worth while can be gained by the state in pressing its prosecutions to the bitter end." The Advertiser, to be sure, makes no specific recommendations, and "compromise" is an ugly word in connection with the Scottsboro defendants whose lives have been placed in jeopardy, practically if not legally, over and over again for the same unproved crime. The Advertiser does note the fact that the boys "committed whatever crime they may have committed in extraordinary circumstances and against two women who by all accounts never before had put a high premium upon their virtue." And the editorial concludes, "Enlightened public opinion in Alabama will, in the Advertiser's opinion, applaud any official concerned who now strikes out for an honorable, fair, and just settlement of these messy cases." In our opinion an honorable, fair, and just settlement is the one set forth in the petition we have mentioned—that the boys be set free. Such a settlement would, among other things, immensely increase the prestige of Alabama throughout this country and in the far corners of the world where the fate of the Scottsboro boys has come to be the touchstone of American justice.

A NEGRO boy who already has spent six of his twenty-three years in jail for a crime that in all probability he did not commit now faces a sentence of seventy-five years in prison. The Alabama Supreme Court has upheld the conviction of Haywood Patterson, first of the nine defendants to go on trial when the Scottsboro cases were resumed for the fourth time in the Alabama state courts in January, 1936. Of the preceding three convictions, all of which had carried death sentences for Patterson, two were set aside by the United States Supreme Court and one by a courageous decision of Circuit Judge James E. Horton of Alabama. Defense counsel announces that Patterson's case will be taken to the United States Supreme Court for the third time, which is believed to be the first instance in history that a criminal case was brought that many times to the Court. Meanwhile, the other defendants in Alabama are scheduled to go on trial on July 6, and there are persistent and authoritative rumors of efforts being made to work out a compromise settlement between the state and the defense. Alabama desires this because of the unfavorable publicity the trials have brought, but it is difficult to see what kind of "compromise," short of exoneration and complete freedom, could be accepted.

A MASS PETITION TO THE GOVERNOR OF Alabama and to the state prosecutor is about to be circulated by the Scottsboro Defense Committee asking that the boys be set free, and the week of July 1 to July 6 has been designated as national Scottsboro week. We hope every organization and individual interested in common justice will get behind this move and roll up a list of signatures that the state of Alabama cannot ignore, for there is at least a chance that the mass pressure which has kept the boys alive for six years can now actually bring about that much-to-be-desired ending to the case. Haywood Patterson's fourth conviction has just been upheld by the Alabama Supreme Court; the other eight defendants go on trial again in Decatur on July 6. It is clear to those who have watched this dreary spinning out of race prejudice that the cases will continue to go from state court to federal court and back again until all constitutional issues have been exhausted and the local court has at last found ways to make its convictions stick. Yet even in Alabama it is admitted that the case against the boys has been shown to be highly doubtful. There is the further fact that Jackson County, where the cases have been tried, has exhausted its resources in the attempt to send the boys to the electric chair. In general Alabama is said to be "tired" of the Scottsboro case.

SCOTTSBORO DEFENSE.,
TRIALS OPEN JULY 6

WASHINGTON, June-- (CNA)- The broadening of the nation-wide campaign to free the Scottsboro boys, in connection with the appeal of the Haywood Patterson case to the United States Supreme Court, and the trials which are to open in Decatur, Ala., July 6, was planned this week at the National Conference of the International Labor Defense, held in this city June 19, 20 and 21. Many liberals attended, including three members of the Progressive bloc in Congress.

Crusader News Agency, 6-21-37, New York, N.Y.

The Alabama Supreme Court last week affirmed the 75-year sentence given Patterson, one of the nine youths in the celebrated six-year-old Scottsboro case.

The Scottsboro Defense Committee announced in New York that appeal would agair be taken to the Federal Supreme Court. The committee made the following comment on the latest ruling:

"The decision of the Alabama Supreme Court upholding the conviction of Haywood Patterson and his sentence of 75 years in the penitentiary indicates plainly that the state of Alabama is adamant in its determination to punish the Scottsboro defendants regardless of the overwhelming evidence of their innocence on the charges preferred against them.

"It was in this same Patterson case in 1933, on the identical evidence used when the 75-year sentence was imposed in January, 1936, that Judge James E. Horton, of the Alabama Circuit court, set aside the verdict of guilty and granted a new trial stating: 'The evidence greatly preponderates in favor of the defendant.'

"Of course the case will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court and all the other cases will be fought to the end, for this committee reaffirms its belief in the innocence of the defendants and the necessity of an unrelenting fight for their freedom."

Mrs. Ada Wright, mother of two of the boys, was one of the principal speakers at the I. L. D. conference. Other speakers included John P. Davis, secretary of the National Negro Congress., Ben Davis, Jr., head of the Harlem Bureau of the Daily Worker., Angelo Herndon, whose sentence of 20 years on a Georgia chain gang was recently reversed by the high court.

The conference was opened by Anna Damon, as acting national secretary of the I. L. D.

LET JUSTICE RULE

Alabama's notorious Scottsboro case has made its third trip to the Supreme Court of the United States.

HAYWOOD PATTERSON, who twice escaped the death penalty by intervention of the high tribunal, filed a petition asking it to save him this time from a 75-year prison sentence. He is one of the nine Negroes accused of attacking two white women, RUBY BATES and Mrs. VICTORIA PRICE, on a moving freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., in March, 1931.

The court will announce in October whether it will review the conviction or permit the sentence of Alabama courts to stand. Five years ago it set aside the conviction of PATTERSON and the other defendants on the ground that they had not been provided with adequate counsel during the trial.

Two years ago it ordered a new trial for PATTERSON and CLARENCE NORRIS, holding that Negroes had been "systematically excluded" from the juries which indicted and convicted them. At the subsequent trial PATTERSON was given a prison sentence instead of death. NORRIS, who may also appeal later to the Supreme Court, again received the death sentence.

Charges against four of the Negroes were dropped recently after they had passed six years in prison. The others have been sentenced to prison terms.

PATTERSON'S petition, prepared by SAMUEL S. LEIBOWITZ, New York attorney, and others, contend the Morgan county (Alabama) court should have transferred his latest trial to the Northern Alabama Federal District Court.

It is to be devoutedly hoped that the Scottsboro case will be closed at an early date and that even-handed justice will be meted out to all concerned. There are many angles to the case. Counsel for the Negroes have claimed that they are being persecuted because they are Negroes, and the authorities of Alabama bitterly resent the interference of what they term the uplifters and the Communists.

Recent developments in the case indicate that an attempt has been made at a compromise. But there should be no compromise in a case of this kind. Either the Negroes are guilty as charged, or they are innocent. It should not be impossible for an impartial court to get at the truth.

A Good Meal, New Suits, Dental Care Mark Scottsboro Boys' 1st Day Here

Daily Worker 7-27-37 New York, N.Y.

Joseph R. Brodsky, One of Original Attorneys, Meets Four Youths

By Harry Raymond

"The fresh air is wonderful," Roy Wright, youngest of the four freed Scottsboro boys, said yesterday when asked how it felt to be out from under the shadow of the Alabama electric chair.

Olin Montgomery, Eugene Williams and Willie Roberson—his three companions—agreed that Wright expressed their feelings too.

The four Scottsboro boys smiled broadly as members of the Scottsboro Defense Commitee and prominent Negro citizens greeted them in the office of Samuel Leibowitz, chief Scottsboro defense attorney.

ATTORNEYS GREET THEM

When the boys arrived in Mr. Leibowitz's office following a shopping tour, they were met by Joseph R. Brodsky, International Labor Defense lawyer and one of the original Scottsboro attorneys; Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Morris Shapiro, attorney connected with the early Scottsboro trials.

"The first thing the boys did after they landed here was to go out and get a good meal," said John Terry, an assistant to Mr. Leibowitz.

They were driven to the restaurant of Mrs. Mrs. Laura Trilli, 230 Columbia St., Brooklyn, where they had soup, chicken, watermelon and coffee. Mrs. Trilli donated the meal.

Then Roy Wright and Willie Roberson were taken to the office of Dr. Nicoli Vellardi, 1276 71st St., for dental treatment. The Alabama jailers had denied dental care to these innocent youths. Two fillings by Dr. Vellardi for Roy and one for Willie—that was the first dental treatment the Scottsboro boys had ever received.

The boys were then driven to the Red Hook section of Brooklyn in an automobile donated by Samuel Triorti where suits of clothes, shirts, shoes, socks and underwear were bought for them.

Olin Montgomery, Eugene Williams and Willie Roberson picked brown suits. Wright chose a blue suit and a blue shirt.

RECOGNIZED IN STORES

The Morgan County, Alabama, Sheriff turned the boys out of jail in overalls and old jail clothes. Olin Montgomery was turned loose without a pair of socks on his feet.

Everywhere the boys went people recognized them and gathered in crowds to greet them.

A white girl in the Brooklyn restaurant, where the boys ate dinner, noticed them and said: "Gee, I'm glad you're out. I knew all the time you were innocent."

Prominent Negroes Are Present in Office of Attorney

In the Red Hook stores people ran over to them and asked if they were the Scottsboro boys.

PROMINENT NEGROES

A couple of cops spied them in an automobile and came over and wished them luck.

The telephones in the Leibowitz office were ringing all afternoon inquiring about the boys. Several radio stations wanted to put them on the air.

Among the prominent Negroes who greeted the youths in the attorney's office were the Rev. Thomas S. Harten, of the Holy Trinity Baptist Church; Pope B. Billups, assemblyman for the 23rd District; Dr. L. A. King, of St. Marks Episcopal Church; J. Finely Wilson, grand exhalted ruler of the Negro Elks; William C. Hueston, commissioner of education of the Negro Elks, and Mark Cooper, head of the Junior Order of the Negro Elks.

Scottsboro Boys Thank I.L.D. for Help in Long Battle

7-27-37

Tired and sleepy after two days and nights on a train, four happy Scottsboro boys looked out of a skyscraper office in downtown Manhattan yesterday morning at the Statue of Liberty in the bay below.

"It's good to see it," said Eugene Williams, one of the boys. And the other three swallowed hard.

"I'm as happy as I can be to be in New York," he said. "But I sure would like to see my mother." Mrs. Williams is sick in Chattanooga.

"What about the five boys who are still in prison?" they were asked.

WILL CARRY ON

"We are going to carry on to see that the other boys are free. We certainly are."

Olen Montgomery, who was 18 when they arrested him and who is today almost blind as a result of his treatment in the Birmingham jail, answered: "All of us want to thank our friends for the help they have given in setting us free. We want to thank the I.L.D. and all our other friends."

Willie Roberson was 17 and so sick that they had to carry him to jail. He's still sick, he explained, and he's going to see a doctor right away. Because of his illness, it was pointed out at the trial, he was incapable of committing the alleged crime.

TEETH ACHE

Roy Wright, the youngest of the four was only 13 when they accused him of rape, and yesterday while he spoke, his teeth were aching and he wanted to see a dentist just as soon as he could. He hasn't been able to eat in two days because his teeth hurt him so badly.

"I've never been afraid," he said. "I wasn't afraid in 1931 when they arrested us and I ain't afraid now."

They want to go to school, they said. That's what they're going to do right away.

Roy said he wants to be a teacher. Eugene's going to become a musician if they give him half a chance; Willie's going to learn to be a mechanic and Olin wants to be a tailor.

NO LET UP

They wore their prison clothes yesterday because they have no other, but the Scottsboro Defense Committee immediately contributed a hundred dollars to buy the boys suitable clothing.

"The back of the Scottsboro case has been broken," Samuel Leibowitz, attorney for the Scottsboro Defense Committee, said. "There'll be no let up on our part. We'll keep on fighting till all of them have been given justice—justice according to the American standard.

"That statement of the prosecution that four of these nine boys are innocent is illogical. It took them six and a half years to make up their minds after that Price woman testified that she was 'raped' by all nine of the boys."

The Scottsboro Defense Committee's next legal steps, it was pointed out, will be the filing of a motion to set the verdict aside on the grounds that the evidence was insufficient and that the boys were convicted by perjured testimony. If that move fails, the case will be taken to the Alabama Supreme Court, and if the State court refuses to free the boys, the case will be taken to the United States Supreme Court for a third time

Committee Statement Calls Their Freedom Partial Victory

Hailing the freedom of the four Scottsboro boys as a "tremendous partial victory," the Scottsboro Defense Committee yesterday stated that "every legal recourse will be exhausted" in pressing the appeals of the Negro youths still imprisoned.

Simultaneously, it was announced that a huge "victory celebration" on the release of the four boys will be held at the Hoppidrome, Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, under the auspices of the Scottsboro Defense Committee. The meeting will also spur the fight for the freedom of the five remaining imprisoned boys.

The announcement was made during a press conference yesterday afternoon at the Committee's headquarters, 112 E. 19th St. Roy Wilkins, prominent Negro editor of the Crisis and head of the Committee's publicity bureau, was spokesman.

BOYS TO ATTEND

The four released boys—Olin Montgomery, Willie Roberson, Roy Wright and Eugene Williams—will make their first public appearance at the meeting Thursday night.

Mrs. Wright, mother of Andy and Roy, and Mrs. Viola Montgomery, mother of Olin, are expected to arrive here tomorrow from Chattanooga and Atlanta, respectively.

"World-wide disapproval of this unjust persecution has moved Alabama to free four defendants," Wilkins said.

Vigorously assailing all talk that the developments in the Scottsboro case were due to any "deal or compromise," Wilkins stated:

FUNDS NEEDED NOW

"The developments in the Scottsboro case to date are not the result of any deal or compromise. The defense of Norris, Weems and Wright was pressed with complete vigor: not a step backward was taken in exposing the persecution of these innocent boys."

He urged all "friends of justice to give moral and financial support to the fight to free the remaining Scottsboro boys in prison." Contributions to the defense funds in behalf of the boys should be sent to the Committee's headquarters at 112 E. 19th St., Wilkins pointed out.

COMMITTEE STATEMENT

The full statement of the Scottsboro Defense Committee issued yesterday said:

"The Scottsboro Defense Committee hails the tremendous partial victory which has been scored in the Scottsboro case, as evidenced by the unconditional release of four of the defendants.

"It does not view this victory, however, as the end of the struggle; on the other hand it considers that the right for the unconditional release of the other five defendants must be waged by all justice-loving people in the country and to this task it dedicates itself. For years the defense has demonstrated the character of the prosecution, and the complete innocence of the boys. The statement of the prosecution issued upon the release of the four defendants bears out completely the contention of the defense committee that all of the boys are innocent.

"Victoria Price time and time again charged that all nine of the defendants were equally guilty of the charge of rape; at trial after trial she would point to each of the defendants as equally guilty. Today the prosecution admits that five were not guilty. This admission emphasizes the falsity of the entire charge.

NO DEAL OR COMPROMISE

"The belated admission and freedom does not excuse the outrage of having kept these boys for 6½ years confined to jail.

"We welcome the unanimous statement of the freed defendants that they will devote their lives to the securing of the freedom of their fellow defendants.

"Any impression that the Scottsboro case is ended is wholly without foundation. The death sentence against Clarence Norris, and the vindictive long - term prison sentences given the other defendants make it imperative that the struggle for the release of the remaining defendants be continued until they are free.

"The developments in the Scottsboro case to date are not the result of any deal or compromise. The defense of Norris, Weems and Wright was pressed with complete vigor; not a step backward was taken in exposing the persecution of these innocent boys.

MANY GROUPS UNITED

"World-wide disapproval of this unjust persecution has moved Alabama to free four defendants.

"Every legal recourse will be exhausted in pressing the appeals from the conviction of the imprisoned youths, looking to their acquittal and release."

The Scottsboro Defense Committee, is composed of the following organizations: the International Labor Defense; the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters; the Church League for Industrial Democracy; the Fellowship for Reconciliation; the League for Industrial Democracy; the Methodist Federation for Social Service; the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; and the American Civil Liberties Union. The Rev. Allan Knight Chalmers, Col. Wm. Jay Schieffelin, and Morris Shapiro are respectively chairman, treasurer and secretary of the Committee.

Nearly 4,000 Greet Them on Arrival at Penn. Station—Traffic Tied Up As Crowd Accompanies Them to Car

The four newly-freed Scottsboro boys stepped off a train yesterday into the arms of 4,500 cheering, shouting New Yorkers who broke through hastily established police lines and swept the boys out of Pennsylvania Station into the streets. Although the cops managed to maintain a cordon of police around the four boys they were unable to control the enthusiasm of the crowd which surged out of the terminal, through the taxi alley and out into the middle of Seventh Ave. and 31st St., sweeping the four boys along with them.

See page 3 for more news and pictures of the four freed Scottsboro Boys.

Policemen who attempted to hold the cheering men and women in line were brushed aside as thousands of them cried "Welcome to New York," and "Hurray for the Scottsboro boys."

ANSWER TO ILD CALL

Negro and white women, tears of joy streaming down their faces, pushed and pulled in attempts to get close to the boys. Taxi stanchions were overturned and traffic was halted as police struggled to push the boys into a cab.

Anna Damon, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, and Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary of the National Association of Colored People, boarded the train in Newark and accompanied the boys to New York.

BOYS APPEAR

The large crowd milled about in the station for half an hour before the train from Cincinnati arrived at 9:25 A.M. Word spread that the train would arrive at the North end of the station, and the crowd moved into that section. Then police were seen congregating around a track at the Southern end of the station. Quickly the crowd surged back.

The police were able to hold the crowd in check until the Scottsboro boys were led up the escalator. Then the police lines broke.

As the train pulled into the station at 9:25 A.M., Samuel Leibowitz, attorney for the Scottsboro Defense Committee, was seen on the platform of a Pullman car.

Station officials refused to open the doors until the press photographers had cleared a passage way.

Then he walked onto the platform, followed by the four boys, Olin Montgomery, Eugene Williams, Willie Roberson and Roy Wright.

Several dozen redcaps surrounded the boys.

The police cordon formed around the boys and they were escorted in double-quick time up an escalator into the joyous crowd which broke lines and for the next five minutes claimed the boys as their very own.

Jailed Scottsboro Boys Are Menaced By Prison Sickness

Andy Wright to Undergo Serious Operation, Mother Declares—Charlie Weems Found Tubercular—Powell 'Dying on His Feet'

By Ben Davis, Jr.

A new menace—serious illness—brought on by almost seven years of harried and continuous confinement in the Alabama jails now threatens the lives of four of the five imprisoned Scottsboro boys, it was revealed yesterday.

Mrs. Ada Wright, who has just returned from a trip to Kilby prison in Montgomery, Ala., said yesterday that two of the boys were now confined in the prison hospital. Mrs. Wright's hurried trip was due to a request from her son Andy, who was recently operated on for acute hemorrhoids.

"Andy is going to have to be operated on again in a few days I'm afraid," she said.

OTHERS ARE ILL

Charlie Weems, sentenced to 75 years, has tuberculosis, while Haywood Patterson, also sentenced to 75 years, is suffering from a dangerous infection in his leg, Mrs. Wright stated. Patterson underwent an emergency operation about ten days ago.

"Ozie Powell," Mrs. Wright explained, "is hardly more than skin and bones. The boys say he is dying on his feet." Powell who is partially paralyzed in one side as a result of being shot in the head by a deputy sheriff in 1936, was sentenced to 20 years after a plea of guilty to an "attack" on the sheriff.

Simultaneously, Mrs. Wright urged all "friends of my son and the other Scottsboro boys to give all support to the Scottsboro Defense Committee in its efforts to free the remaining five boys. We must all work fast and hard—and together, for their long stay in prison is slowly sapping their lives."

FEARS LOSS OF ARM

Mrs. Wright, also the mother of Roy, one of the four freed Negro youths, visited Andy last Sunday With her were her two daughters Beatrice Maddox and Lucile, who also reside in Chattanooga, Tenn.

"Andy said that he was to lose the use of his right arm from work about the prison which requires him to stand on his feet from six in the morning until six at night. He told me 'Mother, I'm sick and I can't stand this very long. Tell my friends to hurry and do all they can to get us out of here'."

Andy, she stated, informed her of the condition of all the boys. "They don't allow any one to see the boys unless they are relatives. I tried to see Haywood Patterson, who stayed right around the block from me in Chattanooga, but they wouldn't let me because I wasn't any kin to him," Mrs. Wright continued.

Mrs. Janie Patterson, Haywood's mother, is unable to visit her son since suffering a stroke of paralysis at her home in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Clarence Norris, the fifth imprisoned youth, is confined in the Jefferson County jail. Norris is under a sentence of death.

APPEALS FILED

Osmond K. Fraenkel, eminent constitutional attorney who handled two previous Scottsboro appeals, has already filed appeals in the cases of the imprisoned boys. Fraenkel was retained by the Scottsboro Defense Committee, 112 E. 19th St.

An application for a writ of certiorari in the case of Haywood Patterson, who was sentenced in January 1936, has been made to the United States Supreme Court by Fraenkel.

Meanwhile the Scottsboro Defense Commitee, composed of eight national labor and progressive organizations, is in the midst of a campaign to secure defense funds and ten million signatures to a petition to Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama urging immediate release of all five of the boys.

Not Helpful to Negroes.

Four of the "Scottsboro boys," against whom charges were dropped are now, says the news, completely "Harlemized." Further, they're going into vaudeville; their skit will be an alleged reproduction of court scenes from their trials in Alabama.

Samuel Leibowitz, the lawyer who defended them and who had a great part in finally securing the freedom of these Negroes, is a smart man. He has a remarkable record for saving his clients from conviction, and up to now, has not lost one to the electric chair. He worked hard to save these from what he was probably sincere in believing to be blind prejudice of the people of Alabama in particular and of the South in general. He was clever enough to have these four released, but he made a mistake when he took them straight to New York to become popular idols of the excitable population of Harlem. He sees now that the "boys," free in the big Northern city, where sensationalism reaches its highest worship are about to undo anything he may have done to increase respect for the Negro race.

These men got into trouble originally from being idle and vagrant. They have been more or less in the public eye ever since. Nothing could be worse for them than this continuance of the opportunity for exhibitionism. What they need, of course, for their own sakes, as well as in the hope of laying the bitterness which "outside interference" arousned over this case, is to get steady jobs, and to live quiet, self-respecting and respectable lives, as millions of their race are doing.

If the promoters of the vaudeville skit with the Scottsboro boys as the heroes are Negroes, they are unwise friends of their own race. If they are white men, they are cruel exploiters of the Negroes.

Will Take to the Stage

The pendulumn is swinging naturally to the other extreme with the four Scottsboro negro youths Samuel Leibowitz, their courthouse champion, carried to New York City in triumph after they were released from the clutches of the law and the threat of the electric chair. Accustomed to solitary confinement behind prison walls save when brought into court at intervals for trial they are beginning to get the real meaning of freedom. Not content with their Roman holiday reception from the denizens of Harlem when they reached New York City and the rounds of feasting and revelry subsequent thereto, these four youths, says a Times news story, have decided to go on the stage and re-enact the court scene at the time of their release. This action they take, so they say, against the advice of their counsellor, Leibowitz. But anyway the four are transformed completely from the type of men they were when they first reached the big town. The news story describes them as blossoming out in new clothes, with their hair slicked to a bright polish, and two of them even sporting walking canes. Says the story: "It seems they have tasted the wine of high living and feel they could stand lots more of it. They have been to Coney Island and to the big movie houses and have been lionized in various negro homes in Brooklyn and in Harlem." Well, as long as the hospitality and good time continues these Scottsboro boys will enjoy their newly found freedom. Meanwhile in the deep South there is lots of cotton to be picked, and a scarcity of field hands.

Statesville, N. C., Record

Scottsboro Negroes on the Stage

Not satisfied with the big reception and the celebration given to the Scottsboro case negroes in New York, they now are being lionized to the absurd extent of being given roles to enact on the stage. It is said that they are going to re-enact the court scene in their trial when they were freed.

In fairness, however, it might be mentioned that this is against the advice of their lawyer, Leibowitz. He wants them to learn trades.

It seems, however, that in this instance, they are not taking his advice for the present at least.

This has the appearance of contempt of court to some who have noted the proceedings of this group since they went to New York. It is said that the group has been transformed since they were taken to the big city. They went there in overalls, but now, it is said, they are nattily dressed, wear their hair slicked to a bright polish, and two of the four even sport canes.

We have no objection to seeing any person progress or rise to a higher plane of living; but, in this particular case, it undoubtedly has had a bad influence upon the minds of many negroes to see the treatment accorded these members of their race after their conviction of participation in an unspeakable crime against some white women.

Judge Denies New Trials In Assault Cases

Scottsboro Agreement Given As Reason For Refusal

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., Aug. 28.—(AP)—New trials for three "Scottsboro" defendants were denied today by Judge W. W. Callahan, who revealed an "agreement" by which the 6-year-old assault case was to have ended "for good" in July with freeing of four of the nine accused negroes.

Callahan's ruling laid the groundwork for continuation of the long legal battle and poised the case for a third journey to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The first official revelation of the July "agreement" between State and defense counsel brought a statement from Clarence Watts, associated with Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, in the defense, that he will withdraw from the case "if such an agreement was entered into."

New trials had been asked for Clarence Norris, under death sentence; Andy Wright, given 99 years, and Charlie Weems, under 75-year sentence. All were convicted in the July trials.

Callahan Cites Compact

In ruling on the petitions, Callahan cited a "hard and fast agreement" which, he said, provided if the State would waive capital punishment in remaining cases and release four of the nine original defendants, no appeals would be taken of the other cases, except in that of Norris.

"The whole case was closed under the agreement I just stated," the judge said, "I know of no way to enforce it, however. They can throw their agreement to the winds if they so desire."

Watts, whose home is Huntsville, Ala., argued for the new trial petitions. He was absent due to illness in July when the latest series of "Scottsboro" trials ended under the "agreement," and the four defendants were freed. In a statement after Callahan ruled, Watts declared:

"The first information I had of an agreement not to appeal the cases tried last month at Decatur, came to me today after my arrival here. I am taking steps to get all of the facts relating to the matter. If such an agreement was entered into, I feel morally bound by it, though I was not a party to it, and my firm will withdraw from any further connection with these cases."

Watts Gives Reasons

In asking new trials, Watts cited four grounds:

1. The trial judge was prejudiced against the defendants.
2. The judge's charge relating to conspiracy to rape was in error, since the defndants were not indicted for conspiracy.
3. The State threw doubt on the testimony of Victoria Price, one of the alleged rape victims, against all defendants by contending her evidence against Willie Roberson and Olen Montgomery, two of the four negroes released, was erroneous.
4. The verdicts were against the weight of the evidence.

New trials were asked only for the three negroes convicted at the July trails. Heywood Patterson and Ozie Powell are the others of the five still held.

Patterson was convicted and given 75 years last year. Powell pleaded guilty in July to assaulting an officer in an escape attempt and was given 20 years. Assault charges against Powell were dropped, as they were against the four freed.

Freed Negroes In Harlem

The four negroes given their liberty after six years' imprisonment were Willie Roberson, Olen Montgomery, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright. They are now celebrities in Harlem where it has been announced they will go on the stage.

The U. S. Supreme Court twice saved the defendants from doom, once reversing the Alabama courts on a defense contention they were without adequate counsel at their original trials in Scottsboro, Ala., and a second time remanding the case to Alabama on upholding a defense point that negroes were excluded from jury service in the State. On the latter decision, Alabama revised its jury system.

Appeal Seen In Scottsboro Assault Cases

New Hearing Scheduled Before Trial Judge W. W. Callahan

DECATUR, ALA., Aug. 27.—(AP)—The first step in what may be the third appeal to the United States Supreme Court in the "Scottsboro" case, is scheduled before Judge W. W. Callahan here tomorrow.

Clarence L. Watts, Huntsville, Ala., defense attorney, will ask new trials for Clarence Norris, Charlie Weems and Andy Wright, all convicted of assault here last month in the alleged mass molestation of Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train March 25, 1931.

If Judge Callahan overrules the motion, an appeal to the State Supreme Court is customary under the usual procedure. If the State Supreme Court upholds the convictions, as it has done twice previously, an appeal to the United States Supreme Court is likely.

Norris is under death sentence. Wright was given 99 years and Weems 75 when the prosecution did not ask capital punishment in their cases.

Four of the nine original "Scottsboro" defendants were released here July 24. Another, Ozie Powell, entered a guilty plea to assult with intent to murder in connection with the wounding of a deputy during an escape attempt.

The fifth, Heywood Patterson, was sentenced to 75 years imprisonment here in January, 1936. His conviction has been affirmed by the Alabama Supreme Court but has not been before the United States Supreme Court at Washington.

Watt's motion will be based partially on Judge Callahan's charge to the jury concerning a conviction in the event the jurors believed the defendants involved in a "conspiracy to rape."

The defense contends the negroes were not under indictment for conspiracy and the charge was pre-was to have ended "for good" in July with freeing of four of the nine accused negroes "by agreement."

Callahan's ruling postponed the case for a third journey to the United States supreme court, which twice reversed Alabama convictions.

The first official disclosure of the July arrangement between counsel brought a statement from Clarence Watts, associated with Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, in the defense, that he will withdraw "if such an agreement was entered into."

New trials have been asked for Clarence Norris, under death sentence; Andry Wright, given 99 years, and Charlie Weems, under 75-year sentence. All were convicted in July of rape for an attack upon Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, white women, aboard a freight train March 25, 1931, near Scottsboro, Ala.

The judge cited a "hard and fast agreement" which, he said, provided if the state would waive capital punishment in remaining cases and release four men, only Norris' death sentence would be appealed.

"The whole case was closed under the agreement I just stated," the judge said, "I know of no way to enforce it, however. They can throw their agreement to the winds if they so desire."

Atty. Samuel A. Leibowitz Scores Those Seeking To Commercialize On Four Freed Scottsboro Boys

Expressing contempt for "those persons who would seek to prostitute for commercial purposes, pecuniary gain and personal aggrandizement the four freed Scottsboro boys", Attorney Samuel Leibowitz, in an official interview granted the press at his offices, 225 Broadway, on Monday, August 23, declared that "the colored people of Harlem should heap condemnation and ridicule on any person or persons, organizations or corporations that exploit the services of these boys because of the world-wide publicity attached to them."

Mr. Leibowitz was referring to the appearance on the stage of the Apollo Theatre on 125th street, of the four boys, Roy Wright, Olin Montgomery, Eugene Williams and Willie Roberson, during the week beginning August 20.

When questioned as to the apparent lack of proper supervision over the boys, Leibowitz said: "They are free agents. They are entitled to do anything they please. I have already done my part; and I should not be expected to look after them now that they are out. I hold my duty to be to those other five who remain in prison and who should also be enjoying the freedom that the others now enjoy."

"I shall bend every effort to bring that about. Soon I shall leave for Alabama to argue a motion for a new trial and to perfect appeals in the cases now pending."

Deep concern was shown by Leibowitz over the present and future actions of the four "for what they do will react favorably or unfavorably on the other cases, dependent on the type of conduct shown."

The Age was unable to learn just what person or persons were responsible for their stage, appearance, but it was disclosed that control over them became lax when John Terry, assistant to Leibowitz and in whose custody they were placed after their arrival in New York, left the city for a much needed vacation; he had given four years of service to the Scottsboro case. Since that time, according to information, they have been looked after by the Rev. Thomas S. Harten, president of the National Afro-Protective League, and pastor of the Holy Trinity Baptist Church, Brooklyn.

SCOTTSBORO CASE' DEFENSE MAY SPLIT

Alabama Member Threatens Withdrawal Over Alleged 'Agreement'

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 29.—(AP)—With Alabama's "Scottsboro case" apparently headed for a third United States supreme court appearance, attention was thrown today to the threat of the Alabama member of the defense committee to withdraw from the case.

Judge W. W. Callahan at Decatur yesterday denied defense motions for new trials for Clarence Norris, under death sentence; and Wright, under 99-year sentence; and Charlie Weems, given 75 years, all for the alleged rape of Mrs. Victoria Price aboard a freight train March, 1931.

When Callahan revealed what he said was a "hard and fast agreement between defense and prosecution," Clarence L. Watts, of Huntsville, Ala., attorney associated with Samuel L. Leibowitz, of New York, in the defense, said:

"If such an agreement was entered into, . . . my firm will withdraw from any further connection with these cases."

Callahan's assertion that the agreement provided that if the state waived capital punishment in certain cases and released four of the nine defendants, no appeals would be taken, except in the case of Norris, brought a statement from Leibowitz.

Attorney General A. A. Carmichael, of Alabama, left him "holding the bag," the New York attorney charged and in Montgomery Carmichael said: "Mr. Leibowitz is an unscrupulous bearer of false witness."

presume that there was an "ironclad agreement" after all.

When the four negroes were freed, Leibowitz hustled them off to New York to the tune of a declaration that he would not tolerate "exploitation." He said that the negroes would be put into vocational schools to learn a trade, and that they would not be allowed to capitalize on their Alabama imprisonment. Despite what Leibowitz said, the reception which he and his wards received in New York smacked strongly of staged ballyhoo and within the week, the negroes were the center attractions on the stage of the Hippodrome at a big mass meeting. Then they began to swing canes, sport spats, and make the Harlem night spots. Now George Ross, New York columnist, comes forth to report that the negroes have really "been taken in hand." "An opportunist agent," he adds, "booked them into vaudeville last week, with an act which strikes bottom for bad taste."

These are just two more chapters in that case which saw Alabama vilified before the nation, and left its courts to emerge as the laughing-stock of the world.

Two More Scottsboro Chapters

CLARENCE WATTS of Huntsville, who has served the Scottsboro "boys" so long and faithfully, has ended his connections with the defense. Judge Callahan, when appeals were asked in the cases of some of the negroes now under sentence, revealed that an "ironclad agreement" had been made in July to end the case "for good", and Watts announced that he would withdraw if such an agreement was entered into. There followed a bristling exchange of statements between Sam Leibowitz and Attorney General Carmichael over this "ironclad agreement," in which they called each other little short of bare-faced liars. And now that Watts has resigned, we are forced to

Trial Date Set At Scottsboro For 2 Negroes

7-7-37

Trade Is Repudiated Judge Will Clear Entire Docket

BY LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 6.—(AP)—Rumors of "compromise" dissipated today as the stage was set for another series of trials in the widely publicized "Scottsboro case" involving charges of mass rape of two white women by nine negroes.

The alleged assaults occurred six years ago aboard a freight train on which the women had caught a ride to their Huntsville, Ala., home after seeking work in Chattanooga.

Eight of the accused negroes were brought here from a Birmingham, Ala., jail today. Two were arraigned, their trials being set for next week, and Judge W. W. Callahan, the colorful jurist, outlined plans for trials within the next four weeks, of all the remaining defendants.

"God willing," Judge Callahan said "the cases will be cleared from the Morgan Circuit docket."

The judge thus spiked "compromise" reports.

Persons and newspapers interested in ending the six-year-old case had proposed a settlement.

One unofficial report said that under one suggested compromise the negroes would plead guilty to assault, not involving a sex crime, and receive prison sentences.

Death sentences in the case, which has attracted wide interest of persons and organizations outside the State, twice have been overturned by the United States Supreme Court, once, on a defense contention of inadequate counsel, and the second time, on a ruling that negroes had been "systematically excluded" from the jury which indicted the defendants.

The latter decision brought revision in jury selection in several southern States.

Leibowitz On Defense

Agencies outside the State have contributed to the defense.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York attorney, who is chief of defense counsel, was not here today, but will come to Decatur next week when the trials get under way.

Today's proceedings attracted virtually no interest in Decatur and the courtroom was less than one-third filled. Deputies searched all spectators for weapons, however, and Judge Callahan did not allow any person to leave the courtroom until the defendants had been led to their waiting prison truck for transportation back to Birmingham.

Cameras Confiscated

Before the arraignments began, the judge confiscated cameras of press photographers and instructed Sheriff J. Street Sandlin to arrest "anyone found with a camera about this courthouse and bring them before me."

"I don't want any soldiers around any case I am trying," declared the Judge. "And I don't want any cameras either."

The cameras were returned to the newspapermen later.

Seven of the nine negroes have not been before an Alabama jury since April, 1931, when the original trials were held at Scottsboro, Ala., on the charges of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates.

Norris Faces Trial Again

Clarence Norris, whose trial will start Monday, was convicted a second time here in December, 1934, but the other seven brought here today were kept in jail as the cases of Norris and the ninth defendant, Heywood Patterson, were fought through the courts.

Patterson now is under a 75-year sentence, imposed last year after the two Supreme Court reversals of death sentences. He remained in the jail at Birmingham, 90 miles south of here.

Charlie Weems was the second of the negroes arraigned today. His trial was set for Thursday, July 15. Jury venires were drawn in each case, and Callahan announced he would arraign two additional defendants next week, and set two trials each week until the docket was cleared.

Clarence Watts, attorney for the negroes, entered pleas of innocent today for Norris and Weems, further erasing talk of a "compromise."

Watts filed a motion to move the trials to Federal Court, but this promptly was overruled by Callahan. Watts then gave notice of a motion for a change of venue, on which arguments will be heard later. The case already has been moved from Scottsboro to Decatur on change of venue.

Thomas S. Lawson, Alabama assistant attorney general, headed the prosecution staff.

Florida Supreme Court Gets Little Scottsboro Case Again

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., July 9.—The eyes of the world are now focused upon the famous case which originated in Scottsboro, Ala.

But of no less importance to the people of Florida is the famous case which originated at Pampafa, Fla., in May, 1933, when 20 young boys were picked up over night upon suspicion that some of them were guilty of the murder of Robert M. Darsey, a white fish dealer.

A week later Izell Chambers, Charlie Davis, Walter Woodard and Jack Williamson were indicted for murder in the first degree. The grand jury's indictment was based solely upon the alleged confessions of the accused.

These men were sentenced to death in spite of the fact that they denied their guilt and stated that the confessions were forced out of them by Broward county officers after they were in prison.

Atty. McGill Assigned To Case

Atty. S. D. McGill was asked to take the case and he appealed the decision of the lower court to the Supreme Court of Florida. The men already were confined in the death house at Raiford, their heads shaved and their bodies otherwise prepared to take the final walk to the electric chair. But the brilliant appeal to the Supreme Court by Attorney McGill caused Florida's highest court to intervene.

It is interesting to note a few of the comparisons between the Alabama case and Florida's Little Scottsboro case. In both cases the prisoners are members of the Race sentenced to death for an assault upon a white person. Both cases have been tried at one time or another under great fear of mob violence. Both have been before the Supreme Court of their respective states four times.

All Decisions Favorable

But here are the differences: In the Alabama case every judgment that has been rendered by the Supreme Court of Alabama has been against the accused while every judgment that has been rendered by the Supreme Court of Florida has been in favor of the accused.

In the Alabama case the defendants have been represented by white counsel, one of whom received a fee of $10,000 at one of the trials, while the Florida case has been handled entirely by Race counsel until last September and it has been necessary for the attorney of this case to pay the cost out of his own money, to say nothing of the absence of a fee.

The Florida case is now in the Supreme Court for its fifth time in an effort to reverse the sentences of death. Briefs were filed in the courts over a month ago by Atty. McGill who is handling the case. Atty. General Cary D. Landis has just filed his brief in offense and it is now that the lawyers will be called upon to make oral arguments within the next few days.

Throw Away This Body Of Death!

The Advertiser has from the beginning taken the side of the state and its attorneys in the prosecution of the Scottsboro case. It has praised the officers and citizens of Jackson county that prevented a lynching in the first instance. It has commiserated with Jackson county for its peculiar misfortunes in connection with this saga of crime, prejudice, politics and stupidity. Jackson county, you see, had no original interest in this matter. The women concerned were not citizens of that county. The men who are charged with outraging them were not citizens of that county. The two sets of parties to this issue happened to be riding through Jackson county on a freight train, and the men now charged with rape on that occasion happened to be arrested in Jackson. Nevertheless, Jackson had to bear the heavy cost of the first trial and the even heavier cost in notoriety which the name of "Scottsboro" has imposed. Thus Scottsboro, a pleasant little town of the mountains, has been libelled throughout the reaches of civilization, and so, for another reason, The Advertiser has been on Scottsboro's side.

The Advertiser was revolted from the first by the Communistic vermin that swarmed into the picture, without invitation, not to serve justice, that pure and serene lady of mythology, but to make political capital.

When at last the supreme court of the United States reversed an Alabama court that had found one of the defendants guilty, reversing Alabama on the ground that the Alabama jury that was trying a negro had no negro in the panel, The Advertiser jeered the supreme court and intimated that its opinion was suspect due to the fact that no negro was on the nation's highest bench when the opinion was written.

In the meantime, it has been the duty, and the privilege of The Advertiser to defend the good name of Alabama against the stupid slanders of a heathen world.

In 1934 The Advertiser departed from its custom and urged the people of Alabama to elect a certain candidate for lieutenant-governor. Ordinarily this paper does not concern itself with the ambitions of candidates for any office other than governor and United States senator. That year, however, The Advertiser asked the people of Alabama to elect the late lamented Thomas E. Knight, then attorney-general, to the lieutenant-governorship, nowithstanding that at that time he had able and honorable opposition for the office.

Today, however, without any apology for what has been said before in these columns or done by the officers of Alabama's courts, The Advertiser ventures to make this suggestion to the officers of the state, including the attorney-general, the judge and the circuit solicitor who now face the grim business of retrying these revolting cases: Why not collaborate in effecting a decent compromise?

The Advertiser realizes that rape is a capital offense under the laws of Alabama, however lightly the law-makers of England may have taken the same offense. The Advertiser realizes that in Alabama the rape of a white woman by a negro is commonly regarded as the worst of all possible crimes however culpable the victim may sometimes be. The Advertiser is well aware of the essentially Southern point of view with regard to this question, which controls the thought of Alabamians.

But The Advertiser also knows that the "Scottsboro boys"—now approaching middle-age—committed whatever crime they may have committed, in extraordinary circumstances, and against two women who by all accounts never before had put a high premium upon their virtue, one of whom even went the length upon one occasion of turning state's evidence.

The Advertiser knows, all of its readers know, the whole of this sordid, sickening story. What a nightmare it has been!

What we are trying to get at is this: "Scottsboro" has stigmatized Alabama throughout the civilized world, and every informed person knows it. "Scottsboro" has injured Alabama incalculably.

Since there is ground for reasonable doubt of the positive guilt of all of the men now in jail, since all of them, in any event, have been in prison for six years, and since they are doing more than all other citizens of Alabama combined to injure the whole people of Alabama before the world, since nothing worth while can be gained by the state in pressing its prosecutions to the bitter end, The Advertiser herewith takes it upon itself to suggest and urge that the state now move for a decent, dignified compromise.

The Advertiser confesses that it is sensitive to the question of public policy involved as well as the question of personal human justice. Let Alabama be true to the principle of justice for even the lowliest human being. Let Alabama be very just, especially for the friendless and underprivileged; but let Alabama also be true to itself—let it think and act according to the dictates of enlightened public policy and public service.

Nothing can be gained by demanding the final pound of [illegible] and The Advertiser has begun to believe, even to know, that it is not the wish of the state to exact the final pound of flesh.

On the other hand, Alabama has nothing to apologize for in the premises. Thus far the state has done nothing but its simple, plain duty.

But what of the future? What should we now do to shake this body of death that is "Scottsboro?" Enlightened public opinion in Alabama will, in The Advertiser's opinion, applaud any official concerned, who now strikes out for an honorable, fair and just settlement of these messy cases.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Revolt Against a Body of Death

The news that the Scottsboro case is coming up for a new phase of legal combat cannot be pleasing to anybody. But there promises to be a change in an atmosphere of truculence when a newspaper so influential as the Montgomery Advertiser, which hitherto has favored punishment for the Negroes involved, declares there is room for reasonable doubt concerning the guilt of all the Negroes and calls for a compromise that will rid the State of Alabama of the case forever.

The Advertiser makes this declaration in an editorial captioned "This Body of Death." It is a striking caption, and one that many persons will deem appropriate. Alabama cannot take any pride in the fact that the case has dragged itself through so many courts and has been accompanied by episodes that must have grated upon the conscience of all its people.

What is disquieting about this turn in affairs, however, is the demand from certain Alabama citizens, reflected in letters to the newspapers, that the prosecution fight the case to the end and bring the Negroes to the gallows. The ground of this demand is that any hesitancy in prosecution now will invite a return to lynch law. "Any person asking for a compromise now," says one letter in the Advertiser, "will be responsible for the people of this State resorting to the methods of lynching as a means of obtaining justice in like cases in the future."

Such appeals raise an old bogey which is in itself a body of death. The spectre of possible lynching has many times been invoked as a device for influencing court decisions. It is a death's-head that those States afflicted by lynching mobs will eventually have to bury, and it would be better for all concerned if it were buried now. The suggestion as to a compromise settlement indicates that the blind emotion surrounding the Scottsboro case has begun to abate. But is there no way to determine once and for all the complete innocence or the complete guilt of the defendants? A compromise may rid Alabama of a case that has often disturbed its thoughts, but is a compromise a substitute for justice?

Justice Lynched

The defense and the prosecution frequently agree upon the charge brought against an accused person. But it is something new to "swap" the rights of one prisoner for another as Alabama's Judge Callahan says was done with the Scottsboro boys. He bluntly refused the convicted ones a new hearing on the ground that conviction for some and acquittal for others was the agreement.

It is very evident that Alabama is eager to have done with the Scottsboro case which brought nothing but expense and a blemished reputation. It should have turned them all loose. It chose to convict part of them, though the evidence it offered at previous trials was against all. By so doing, it confesses lack of good faith from the beginning.

The Scottsboro case will continue to haunt Alabama like Banquo's ghost. It was conceived in hate, prosecuted on perjured testimony and won when 12 men under oath to judge impartially reflected the mob so absolutely that the supreme court of the United States sent the case back time and again for retrial.

This paper believes that the doer of injustice is worse hurt by it than is its victim. For the moment these poor boys in prison are examples of abject misery, and their persecutors seem both happy and successful. But the means by which the state secured conviction fly in the face of the principles and practices which the founders of this country said were the safeguards of human liberty. Alabama and Thomas Jefferson cannot both be right.

The citizen is subject to the state by American law. Therefore Alabama has been free to deal with the Scottsboro boys without interference. But the state's authority is only a legal figment. In actual living all men are neighbors. No state line saves the rest of the country from the effect of what goes on in Alabama. The proof of men's interdependence is the associate supreme court justice recently appointed. The habits of thought of Judge Hugo L. Black are Alabama made, but from this time on will be national in their influence.

The Scottsboro case is important not so much for what it means in human lives, as for the precedent it sets in court procedure. A motor car accident takes lives, but deliberate sabotage of the courts kills America.

Four Freed Scottsboro Boys Greeted on Arrival Here

Thousands of New Yorkers thronged Pennsylvania Station yesterday to greet the arrival here of the four freed Scottsboro Boys. Friends and admirers of the boys surged past police lines to get near the four brave young Negroes who have spent six and one-half years in the shadow of Alabama's electric chair. Part of the crowd is shown below. James W. Ford, Negro leader and member of the Communst Party's Central Committee, can be seen on the left. An Unfortunate Sequel

IT is to be generally regretted that the racial and interracial forces responsible for the freedom of the four Scottsboro boys could not rescue them from the channels of exploitation into which they seemed to have fallen.

It is hard to believe that they, of their own choice—even though inexperienced in the methods of unscrupulous persons and opportunists who thrive on human suffering—would have turned their backs upon their benefactors to seek an uncertain future on the stage.

From this distance, it appears that they have fallen under influences inimical to their own interests and are headed for some bitter experiences.

Immediate concern should be for the boys' character, health, and education. Besides, they have a moral responsibility to those guardians of liberty and justice who stood watch with them in their Gethsemane.

It will hurt this generation of underprivileged people, and the next, if the forces of exploitation and opportunism are permitted to turn the significant victory won over intolerance and injustice in Alabama to be converted into a fiasco.

It is yet to be hoped that reason and morality will triumph in the end, and that, for the good of their comrades still lingering on the cross of prejudice in Alabama, a truce can be effected in the battle royal for exclusive rights to order their lives in their new found freedom.

The Advertiser argued that Tommy Knight should be elected Lieutenant-Governor as a rebuke by Alabama to the outer world for the contumely and slander that it had heaped upon our State because of the Scottsboro cases. Mr. Knight was elected Lieutenant-Governor.

In 1935 when Albert A. Carmichael, Knight's successor as Attorney-General announced that he had retained Mr. Knight to press the prosecution of the "Scottsboro boys", The Advertiser commended his wisdom and patriotism, and urged the Attorney-General to see the prosecution through to the bitter end. That was the last comment, until now, that The Advertiser made upon this ugly affair.

The Advertiser, in other words, is a holdout. It has been deeply incensed by the conduct of the more vociferous "friends" of the Scottsboro boys and has had little sympathy with their antics. Today marks the first release from its original mood.

Today, however, without any apology for what has been said before in these columns or done by the officers of Alabama's courts, The Advertiser ventures to make this suggestion to the officers of the State, including the Attorney-General, the judge and the circuit solicitor who now face the grim business of re-trying these revolting cases: Why not collaborate in effecting a decent compromise?

Letters To The Editor

Please be brief. We reserve the right to cut letters more than 300 words long

PROTEST!

Editor The Advertiser:

After reading your editorial concerning the Scottsboro case in The Advertiser of June 12th, I would like to ask what you suggest as a "decent compromise?" Just because the State's name has been stigmatized by the affair is the crime any less a capital offense than it was? And do you think by a weak and entirely unwarranted compromise now it would in any way help the situation? That would be playing right into the hands of the "belled buzzards" who have swarmed into our State to meddle and obstruct justice—just the move they would like to see us make.

I, too, am sensitive as you claim to be to a question of public policy involved, but no policy we adopt should be swayed by the false doctrines of our enemies, and Alabama must at all times be true to herself. We as a State cannot afford to compromise with a wrong that has been committed. Our laws must be upheld, and no matter if the prisoners remain in jail 6 years, 12 years, 40 years, the case should be prosecuted to a just conclusion. There can be no "decent, dignified compromise".

You said in your editorial "The Advertiser has reason to believe, even to know, that it is not the wish of the State to exact the final pound of flesh." May I ask just whom you mean by the State? Could you by any chance mean the Attorney-General? It would be unthinkable to have any officer of the State unwilling to prosecute this case to the end, or make any gesture of compromise to placate the enemies of our State. Any officer who would be willing to compromise this case now would be unworthy to serve the State any longer, and should resign, or be impeached.

Any compromise would simply make lynching a necessity for like crimes, if justice is to be simply side-stepped as you suggest. If any officer in the State should be unwilling to prosecute this case vigorously to the end he is simply inviting a return to lynch law. And any person asking for a compromise now will be responsible for the people of this State resorting to the methods of lynching as a means of obtaining justice in like cases in the future if justice cannot be obtained by the usual methods of State prosecution.

I doubt your opinion advanced that the public will applaud any official who seeks to compromise this case. I think the public demonstrated how it felt in the whole-hearted election of the late Thomas Knight to the office of Lieutenant-Governor, and I believe had he lived he could have had any public office in the State, reflecting the public's approval of his vigorous prosecution of the Scottsboro case.

Your editorial said further, "The State has thus far done nothing but its simple, plain duty". As thinking citizens of the State we have every right to expect the State to continue to do its simple, plain duty.

SCOTTSBORO COMPROMISE IS ADVOCATED

The Montgomery Advertiser Asks State To Effect 'A Decent Finish'

'INJURY INCALCULABLE'

'Cases Have Stigmatized Alabama Throughout Civilized World'

MONTGOMERY, June 12.—(Special.)—The Montgomery Advertiser which from the beginning has taken the side of the state and its attorneys in the prosecution of the nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro attack cases, today advocated editorially a compromise to end the controversy.

The Advertiser, the largest newspaper in Alabama outside of Birmingham, and generally regarded as reflecting conservative opinion of South Alabama, declared that the Scottsboro cases "have stigmatized Alabama throughout the civilized world and every informed person knows it. 'Scottsboro' has injured Alabama incalculably."

Held Six Years

"Without any apology for what has been said in these columns before or done by the officers of Alabama's courts," the editorial continues, "The Advertiser ventures to make this suggestion to the officers of the state, who now face the grim business of retrying these revolting cases: Why not collaborate in effecting a decent compromise?"

Convictions in the Scottsboro cases have twice been reversed by the United States Supreme Court and a death sentence against Heywood Patterson, the Negro against whom the state is generally assumed to have its strongest case, was set aside by former Circuit Judge James E. Horton of Athens. Judge Horton was subsequently defeated for re-election, his defeat being attributed to his action in this trial.

Compromise Outlined

The Negroes were arrested on March 24, 1931, on charges preferred by two white women hoboes who asserted the Negroes had attacked them on a moving freight train near Stevenson. Miss Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims, subsequently reversed herself in court and said she had not been assaulted. The other woman, Mrs. Victoria Price, repeated the charges.

The Negroes have been held in Alabama jails, principally at Birmingham, where they are now confined, since their arrest six years ago.

A group of Alabama citizens for the last two years has been cooperating with liberal elements in the North in trying to effect a compromise. Prominent church leaders head the Alabama group working for a compromise.

The compromise most often suggested has been a reduction of the attack charges to assault and battery, with retroactive sentences to be satisfied by the six years' imprisonment the Negroes already have undergone.

The Advertiser's editorial today is entitled "Throw Away This Body of Death!" Veteran editor of The Advertiser is Grover Cleveland Hall, a native South Alabamian who won the Pulitzer Prize several years ago for his paper's brilliant fight against the Ku Klux Klan.

The editorial says, in part:

"The Advertiser was revolted from the first by the Communistic vermin that swarmed into the picture, without invitation, not to serve justice, that pure and serene lady of mythology, but to make political capital . . .

Defended State's Honor

"In the meantime, it has been the duty, and the privilege of The Advertiser to defend the good name of Alabama against the stupid slanders of a heathen world . . .

"The Advertiser realizes that rape is a capital offense under the laws of Alabama, however lightly the lawmakers of England may have taken the same offense. The Advertiser realizes that in Alabama the rape of a white woman by a Negro is commonly regarded as the worst of all possible crimes, however culpable the victim may sometimes be.

But The Advertiser also knows that the "Scottsboro boys'—now approaching middle-age — committed whatever crime they may have committed, in extraordinary circumstances, and against two women, who by all accounts never before had put a high premium upon their virtue, one of whom even went the length upon one occasion of turning state's evidence.

SCOTTSBORO 'COMPROMISE.'

The reported "compromise" in the notorious Scottsboro cases is not one calculated to arouse enthusiasm on the part of the prisoners. On the eve of submitting the cases to the tenth jury to pass upon them in the past six years, two of the leading newspapers in Alabama, the Montgomery Advertiser, and the Birmingham Age-Herald, urged that the State agree to a compromise and eliminate from its record "this body of death." It develops that the compromise involves a demand for the slow death of the defendants through long prison sentences instead of quick death by electrocution.

There is not a sadder story in the annals of American jurisprudence than that of the Negroes who for the past six years have lived in the shadow of the electric chair. Twice they have been saved from the electric chair by the Supreme Court, which has overturned death sentences imposed by Alabama courts. The only compromise worthy of the name would be a decision on the part of the State to drop the charges against the defendants and give them their liberty.

It is not profitable at this late date to go over the dreary record of the case. It seems many more than six years ago since the nine Negroes were charged with having criminally molested two young white women aboard a freight train. To the Negroes, the intervening period must seem a lifetime. Persons who have read the court records of the convictions and the appeals and the reversals have every reason to believe either that the Negroes are not guilty of the crime with which they are charged or that the doubt is too great to warrant conviction.

Let-Up in the Scottsboro Cases

The decision of the prosecution in the Scottsboro cases not to ask for the death penalty in the trial of Andy Wright, the third of the nine defendants, marks the first time in six and a half years that the slightest official sign of a let-up by the State of Alabama has been visible.

Even now doubt remains as to the full meaning of this change of tactics. One defendant, Clarence Norris, has been convicted and sentenced to be executed. Another, Heywood Patterson, who has been convicted and sentenced to death three times previously, has now been convicted and sentenced to 75 years' imprisonment. Presumably the State of Alabama, having been satisfied in some degree by these two results, will not try for the extreme penalty in the six remaining cases. All that is visible now is this slight lessening of the fury of the prosecution in the Wright case.

But at least little doubt exists as to what has thus moved the prosecution. It is weary of the whole job of continuing this struggle. The orginal ferocity has gone, to be succeeded by a determination to keep up the fight, but without the confidence which marked the earlier years. How otherwise is this abandonment of the death plea to be explained? On a clear-cut issue of a criminal assault by a Negro on a white woman there can be no question of what Alabama would do. The point now is that the issue, in a growing number of Alabama minds, is no longer clear-cut. To much of the remainder of the country, it never was. The whole situation was covered with doubt. It was clouded over by contradictory statements, strange questions of personal character, and the poisonous atmosphere of racial hatreds.

Something of this unavoidable truth has penetrated into regions and mentalities which hitherto have resisted all suggestions of uncertainty. What eventually will come out of this long struggle is still too far off to be defined with confidence. But the signs of a slowly changing attitude are unmistakable. If they continue, the hope of approximating justice is brighter than it has ever been.

OBSERVERS WATCH LEIBOWITZ MOVES

Mrs. Bates Given Call; White Jurors Selected

(Special to the AFRO)

DECATUR, Ala. — The Scottsboro trials got underway again here this week with Clarence Norris facing a possible death verdict while court observers awaited a new dramatic development promised by Samuel Leibowitz, chief defense counsel.

The New York attorney has summoned Mrs. Emma Bates, white mother of Ruby Bates, who recanted the attack story to aid in fighting to free the nine boys in the case.

Goes on Mission

Before the trial of Norris was started Monday before Judge W. W. Callahan, Leibowitz left suddenly for Birmingham during the selection of jurors. He said that a major development would follow, although there was no evidence that a compromise would be reached.

Clarence Watts of Huntsville, Ala., and William Richter of New York were left in charge of the defense while Mr. Leibowitz went on his mission. An all-white jury was selected Monday when two colored men who qualified for service were rejected by the State.

Victoria Price Testified

Victoria Price, former hobo girl, who has stuck to her accusations against the boys, took the stand Tuesday and charged that Norris was the first of six youths to assault her.

She said that one boy held a knife at her throat while the others took part in the attack. This, she said, followed their expulsion of a group of white youths riding a freight train near Scottsboro six years ago.

The Price woman insisted that twelve colored boys were in the group which she accused of invading the gondola where she and Ruby Bates rode.

Leibowitz Traps Her

Leibowitz succeeded in trapping the Bates woman in a contradiction when he cross-questioned her on details of the alleged attack. There she said that she had fifty cents in her purse at the time. The attorney produced the transcript of the 1931 trial in Scottsboro in which she stated that she had $1.50.

The defense counsel's regard for minute detail brought down the wrath of Judge Callahan, who wants to dispose of eight defendants in four weeks.

Judge Reprimands Him

"If you keep up this argument," the jurist said, "you won't have anything to tell the jury. I'm going to excuse you this time because I realize you are young and inexperienced."

Charlie Weems is scheduled to go on trial as soon as Norris's case is concluded.

Ruby Bates is not present.

Norris Goes On Trial Minus Race Juror

Ruby Bates' Mother Is Surprise Witness At Hearing

DECATUR, Ala. — Clarence Norris, one of the nine defendants in the Scottsboro cases, went on trial for his life in Morgan County Circuit Court here Monday without a member of his race on the jury.

A jury of twelve white men was chosen late in the afternoon after two Negroes in the final group to be challenged had been struck off by the State. Only three members of Norris' race however were included in the special venire of 100 which were sworn in shortly after court convened at nine a. m.

Judge W. W. "Speed" Callahan, presiding, called prospective jurymen to the bar in groups of six for detailed questioning. Each was asked: "Could you give the evidence in this case the same consideration if the defendant were a white man?"

Questioning of the first six jurors required 45 minutes. Only two were excused because of a "fixed opinion." Norris and seven of his companions were brought here from the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham under a heavy guard of Alabama State Highway patrolmen.

100 MEMBERS ON PANEL

Of the 100 members of the jury panel Judge Callahan drew a regular panel of 35 and a special venire of 65, the maximum permitted under Alabama law, to try Norris and Charlie Weems who, according to the scheduled mapped out by the court, will go to trial on Thursday of this week.

At least twenty witnesses have been summmoned by the State in its effort to find the eight defendants guilty of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price aboard a freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock, Alabama in March, 1931.

Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, fired the first guns in his campaign Monday by summoning as a surprise witness, Mrs. Emma Bates, mother of Ruby Bates, one of the original complainants in the case who has since repudiated her charges that she was attacked along with Mrs. Price.

Leibowitz forcast "a major development" as he left hurriedly for Birmingham even while the jury to try Norris was being selected. The task of challenging each prospective juror for the defense fell to Clarence Watts of Huntsville, and William Richter of New York, associate of Leibowitz.

VICTORIA PRICE PRESENT

The famed New York attorney gave no hint of the reason for his trip to Birmingham other than to deny that it concerned any compromise settlement of the cases.

Mrs. Price was present and ready to tell the story which has three times condemned Heywood Patterson to the electric chair, and which at his last trial here in December, 1936 resulted in a 75-year prison sentence.

Patterson's appeal to the Alabama State Supreme Court has been denied and he is now in the Jefferson County jail awaiting an appeal to the United States Supreme Court which has saved him from the death chair three times already.

A POLITICAL FOOTBALL'

The now famous Scottsboro case has been re-opened in Decatur, Alabama, with eight youths facing a judge who, they know in advance, has no respect for their black faces. In the parlance of baseball, they go to bat with two strikes already called.

This case is a six-year-old legal battle that has gradually become the political football of Alabama "statesmen." The late Thomas Knight, once Alabama attorney-general, was kited into the office of Lieutenant Governor through his activity in it as prosecutor, and there are others today in public life in Alabama who want the Scottsboro case to linger in the courts until they have gained their political objectives.

Through the Scottsboro case all of the inherent prejudices of the lowly southern white man have been given free expression and national airing. He has taken a mole-hill and created a mountain; he has made it strictly a battle between North and South, stooping to every cunning and illegal trick to carry his point; stopping just short of murdering one of the defendants.

Since it became a legal issue it has bankrupted a county; it has permitted nine young boys to grow to manhood behind prison bars; it has made political careers for some, and ruined others; it has annoyed the U. S. Supreme Court and lifted the black man from a seat as spectator of trials in the South into the jury box in the class of the "peers." And all of this has become a part of the legal and political history of Alabama and the nation-at-large because a common, jungle-camp, itinerant prostitute continues to maintain that her already defiled body was "violated" by a group of hoboing black boys.

Victoria Price, the state's main witness, has been repudiated by her former companion of the scarlet path, Ruby Bates, who seeing the error of her way, confessed her part in the frame-up and seeks today to live a better life among new-found friends and wholesome environments. Ruby came North; Victoria stayed South—that explains another phase of the case and the issues involved.

The whole thing reeks with insincerity on the part of Alabama law-makers, and is dripping wet with crocodile tears. In no other state, save a backward one where race prejudice is always the paramount issue, would the legal machinery throw its full strength behind the sole testimony of a self-confessed harlot against counter-denials of ten other witnesses, one of whom was a party to creating the unsavory problem.

But anything may happen in Alabama. It was one of the first states to shoot bullet holes through the Stars and Stripes, and ever since the reign of Jeff Davis has had difficulty in defining the word JUSTICE.

Scottsboro 'Hobo Girl' Grows Hazy

(Special to The Amsterdam News—by Wire.)

DECATUR, Ala., July 14.—Mrs. Victoria Price, allegedly attacked by nine Negro boys on a freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock, Ala., on March 25, 1931, made conflicting statements under oath at the trial of Clarence Norris, which got under way here Monday. Ruby Bates, who allegedly was also attacked by the nine Scottsboro boys along with Mrs. Price, but who later denied it in the witness chair, was not present in court.

Victoria Price testified yesterday that she and Ruby Bates were alone when they boarded a freight train in Chattanooga on their return trip to Alabama. The statement was wrung out of her by Samuel Leibowitz, attorney for the Scottsboro boys. At the first trial, which was held in Scottsboro, Mrs. Price testified that she and Ruby Bates were with two men when they boarded the freight train on which they were supposedly raped.

She also testified yesterday that she had fifty cents and a pocket knife when she was attacked; in the first hearing she swore that she had $1.50. The two men who were said by Mrs. Price to have been with her and Ruby Bates on the train were "unable to attend the trial" yesterday.

Mr. Leibowitz, in a masterful cross-examination, was able to cause Mrs. Price to change her testimony in what may be a vital point—that concerning the two men on the freight train with her and Ruby Bates. Since the latter has long since sworn under oath that the Scottsboro boys were framed, any important changes in the testimony made by Mrs. Price in the present trial of Norris will, it was predicted, injure the case of the prosecution.

All of Monday was used in the selection of twelve jurors out of the sixty-six men who qualified. Eleven of them were excused because of fixed opinions about the case. Five were excused because they did not believe in capital punishment.

Three Negroes were included in the sixty-six. One was excused because he did not believe in capital punishment; the other two were struck by the state from the time court opened until noon recess.

Using the words of a dead man to refute the charges of Victoria Price, Leibowitz brought into the testimony again the statements under oath of Dr. R. R. Bridges of Scottsboro, who testified that neither Ruby Bates nor Victoria Price had been raped at the time they said. Dr. Bridges died soon after Haywood Patterson, one of the defendants, was convicted and sentenced to seventy-five years' imprisonment a year and a half ago, after he had been saved from the electric chair twice by the United States Supreme Court and once by a local judge who since has been retired from the bench.

Dr. Bridges was called in the original Scottsboro case, but has been ignored, except by the defense, since Patterson's last conviction.

In spite of her conflicting testimony, mannishly attired Victoria Price, who, when she was allegedly attacked, was dressed in rags and was a female hobo, told the jury yesterday that "half a dozen Negroes raped her aboard the freight train six years ago. Determined to send Clarence Norris to the electric chair, she said that he was one of twelve Negroes who "jumped into the gondola" in which she and Ruby Bates were riding and that several white men in the car were ordered to "unload."

"What did the Negroes do then?" asked Assistant Attorney-General Thomas S. Lawson.

"They raped me," she said—her thin, pale lips [illegible] her testimony.

Contrary to the story of Mrs. Price that she was brutally beaten, Dr. Bridges had testified that he found only a few small scratches on her forearms and a bruise the "size of a pecan nut in the small of her back." Her pulse and respiration were normal—a condition most unusual for a woman who had been allegedly raped.

Victoria was the first witness today. Mr. Leibowitz had Mrs. Bates, mother of the missing boy, brought in to be identified by the complainant. Mrs. Bates stood before the angry, scowling witness. It was her first appearance in any trial as a future witness for the defense.

"Is it not true that you took Ruby Bates across the Alabama state line for immoral purposes?" Mr. Leibowitz asked.

"Ruby Bates asked me to go with her," Victoria answered angrily.

How Much Longer Will It Last?

ONE Scottsboro defendant is sentenced to death, another to 99 years imprisonment. Others will be duly sentenced again and the nauseous case will drag itself on, to shame the South and the North and to prove in glaring fashion how badly Americans can muddle things when they get a cause celebre to play with.

Ten juries in six years have acted on the Scottsboro case.

If the publicity-loving Mr. Liebowitz would withdraw from the case a compromise might be reached. But he insists upon looking on Alabama as a State filled with Jeeter Lesters and hookworms, and he periodically parades his Broadway "main stem" legal tactics before the South.

"See," he seems to shout, "I, Liebowitz, will prevent these Southern morons from 'lynching' these boys. I, the great Liebowitz, the great Liberal."

"The death penalty alone will suffice," answer hot-headed Alabamans. "Southern womanhood, chivalry, black fiends and what other adjectives have you——?"

"What a horrible mess that Scottsboro case is," says Mrs. So-andSo, from an old Southern family. "And yet, if that Painted Rock flatcar outrage were to go unpunished, what safety would Southern women have? And that horrible Liebowitz!"

"The rights of the Negro must be protected with gestures and with national fund-raising campaigns," say the Societies for the Advancement of This and That.

And we have all forgotten the circumstances which placed the nine ignorant Negro roustabouts in prison, and caused the white glare to beat upon their heads from a world which loves a sordid sensation and which would rather argue than settle a point.

And nobody seems to know where the two white women are who were bumming a ride on a freight when the outrage occurred, though at last accounts one of them was being used as a dummy by a radical group.

The Scottsboro case—that shabby, two-bit cause celebre—how much longer—how much longer!

LET'S WASH UP THE SCOTTSBORO LINEN

For six years the enemies of Alabama have been making capital out of the Scottsboro case. A play, based on the case and depicting the people of Alabama as tobacco-chewing bigots incapable of dispensing justice, has been written and produced throughout the North. Impassioned speeches have been made, even in Europe, for funds to "save these innocent children from being thrown to the lions of Southern bigotry."

Books have been written about the case, and all of them have been to the discredit of the state. Most of the reams of news copy have pictured the negroes as martyrs fighting against a cruel and unjust fate.

These charges have, in the main, been false. And against them we might be justified in adopting a relentless, "burn 'em or bust" attitude. But such is no longer the course of wisdom.

The Scottsboro Case, paraded before the Supreme Court, is a poor advertisement for Alabama. It has bankrupted one county and has laid a tremendous cost burden on the state. The prosecution is now in the position of prosecuting half the negroes for attacking a woman who denies that the attack occurred.

At whatever reasonable cost, let's be rid of the whole mess. Judge Callahan and the Attorney-General can render the state a real service by taking whatever steps are necessary to wash the Scottsboro case off the court docket of Alabama.

Two Race Men Are Turned Down By The State

DECATUR, Ala., July 16—(Special)—An all white jury will hear the evidence of the first defendant, Clarence Norris, in the famous Scottsboro case which got under way here this week.

The twelve white men were chosen late Monday. Two members of the Race who qualified as jurors were flatly refused by the state, Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel said he planned a surprise attack which he hopes will cause the boys to win their freedom. It has been hinted that Victoria Price, one of the two girls who was supposedly attacked by the nine youths, will aid the defense along with Ruby Bates.

DECATUR, Ala., July 16—Alabama's headache, the "Scottsboro case" was resumed briskly here Tuesday morning [illegible] the support of an important section of Alabama [illegible] opinion, which had come to believe the defendants not guilty, on the side of the defense. For seven long, tortuous years, the defendants, now reduced to eight, have clung tenaciously to hope and a belief that God will see justice done.

The arraignment in Circuit court last week marked a new episode in the lengthy legal drama based on the story of two white girls, Ruby Bates and Victoria Price that they were raped by nine Race youths while aboard a freight car on March 25, 1931. Haywood Patterson, the ninth defendant, is under a 75-year sentence which is expected to be appealed to the United States Supreme court, which has set aside two previous death verdicts in the case.

"Ace in Hole"

One main "ace in the hole" that the defense will have is the likelihood of Victoria Price refuting her early statements that the boys raped her, since the recent death of Thomas Knight, Alabama attorney general. It has been generally believed that Knight coaxed the girls into signing a statement to the effect that the boys had raped them. As attorney general he wanted their prosecution and demanded death in the electric chair for the nine youths.

Each trial in the seven years of the case's duration, while resulting in a formal conviction in the Alabama courts, has served only to strengthen the belief of millions throughout the world in the innocense of the defandants and unite world opinion in a battle for their freedom.

State Ready to Drop Case

The case has dragged out eighteen months without a move on the part of the prosecution and recent observations point to the fact that the state of Alabama has hoped the public would forget the Scottsboro boys and leave them to their fate. The element of finance has influenced the state's desire to rid itself of the case which has produced a dark blotch upon Alabama's character.

In speedily disposing of the cases, Judge W. W. Calahan has scheduled the eight trials to be called at the rate of two a week.

Atty. Samuel S. Leibowitz, widely known criminal lawyer and head of the defense boards of strategy in the Scottsboro case, is on hand for the trials. Leibowitz promises that the defense will accept no compromise. "The fight," he declared, "will go on until freedom is won for the nine victims of Alabama justice."

BACK IN THE NEWS

The Scottsboro case is back in the news. It first popped into the headlines several years ago when a number of negroes were convicted of attacking two white women. But the Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the American Civil Liberties Union and several other organizations were attracted to the case in order to gain publicity, and as a result it has gone clear through the courts to the Supreme Court and back again.

It shows, if nothing else, that any case can be prolonged indefinitely if the defendants are supported by closely-knit organizations, even if they are in the minority.

Another Convicted In Decatur Court

DECATUR, Ala., July 21 (AP)—Imprisonment of 99 years was decreed today for Andy Wright by the tenth jury in six years to return a guilty verdict in the "Scottsboro case," on charges that nine Negroes committed a gang rape of two white women.

Shortly after the tribunal reported, Clarence Norris, convicted last week, was brought before the bar and sentenced to die September 24.

The defense filed notice of appeal, staying Norris' execution.

STATE WON'T ASK CHAIR FOR WRIGHT

Jury Picking Begun For Trial Of Third Negro In "Scottsboro" Attack Case

BY LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, Ala.—(AP)—The stage was set today for the opening of a third trial in the new series of "Scottsboro case" trials. A jury to try Andy Wright on a charge of participating in a mass rape of Mrs. Victoria Price was to be selected and taking of testimony started today.

Wright is the first of the nine defendants to go on trial without threat of a death sentence. After a conference yesterday, the state agreed not to ask the electric chair for Wright.

In two earlier trials of this latest series in the six-year-old court drama, Clarence Norris was sentenced to die and Heywood Patterson was given 75 years for the rape of Mrs. Price.

The trial of a fourth defendant, Charlie Weems, is set for Thursday and date for still others is to be announced by the court this week. A source close to the prosecution yesterday said "all these cases may be settled by next week."

Asst. Atty. Gen. Thomas Lawson has not said if the agreement reached in the Wright case yesterday would be applied to other cases. Samuel Leibowitz, of defense counsel, has declared his intention of appealing sentences on Patterson and Norris to the United States Supreme Court.

The federal tribunal twice has reversed death sentences in the case, once when it decided the defendants had not been given adequate defense and again when a defense contention of an unfair trial was upheld by the court because Negroes had been excluded from service on juries trying the Negroes.

This is Wright's first trial since April, 1931. The second high court reversal was in other convictions against Norris and Patterson. The Negroes are accused of attacking Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates on a freight train in North Alabama. The women said they were returning to Huntsville after being unable to find work in Chattanooga.

Freeing of 4 Boys Victory for Negro People, Foster Says

Daily Worker 7-16-37

Fight Goes on Until Other 5 Are Freed, Declares Communist Party Leader—Release Demonstrates Power of Forces United in Scottsboro Defense

The freeing of the four Scottsboro boys explodes the entire brutal frame-up by Alabama's politicians and courts in this case, William Z. Foster, national chairman of the Communist Party, declared to the Daily Worker yesterday.

It is a victory for the Negro people and a demonstration of the power of those progressive forces which united around the Scottsboro defense, Foster emphasized. The freeing of the four boys, he added, must be the signal for a renewed fight for the freedom of the five remaining defendants, "victims of this legal lynching."

Foster's statement on the Scottsboro victory is in full as follows:

VICTORY FOR NEGRO PEOPLE

"The freeing of the four Scottsboro boys explodes completely the entire brutal frame-up in this case, attempted by the courts and politicians of Alabama.

"The defeat of these lynchers is a striking victory for the Negro people. It is a demonstration of the power of the progressive forces which have united in the Scottsboro Defense Committee, 112 East 19th Street, with Samuel Liebowitz as chief counsel.

"The release of the four boys is another blow at lynch law and at the frame-up system of the corrupt politicians and big industrialists. It gives encouragement to further united efforts for the release of Tom Mooney and other victims of this frame-up system.

"The Communist Party and the International Labor Defense can well be proud of the part they played in the fight for the Scottsboro boys. By entering the struggle against this frame-up at the very start, before other groups had interested themselves in the case, the Party and the I.L.D. saved these boys from the electric chair. That is to their everlasting credit."

FIGHT MUST GO ON

"The release of the four boys does not end the fight. Every progressive group must now rally for the release of the others. Every intelligent person will know that these five are not guilty—that they have been railroaded to death sentence and to jail merely to save the face of Alabama's corrupt courts and politicians.

"Now, more than ever, we are called upon to fight for the freedom of ALL the boys, ALL victims of this legal lynching.

"These young Negroes, through this brutal terror and persecution, showed themselves to be true heroes. Despite terrific pressure at the hands of the lynchers, not one of them betrayed the others. Through six and a half long years, they have stood solidly in their innocence, loyal to themselves and to their people.

"They serve as a real inspiration today to all the workers of this country, to stand up firmly against the terror of the employing interests and their tools, the courts.

"Those who are guilty of directing this atrocious frame-up cannot be allowed to escape. Among them are some of the biggest politicians and judges of Alabama. These men stand indicted today of the crassest and most brutal misuse of the so-called machinery of justice. They, who would have sent these boys to death in their degenerate fury against the Negro people, should be exposed and punished for their guilt.

"There can be no let-up in this fight while this remains undone. There can be no let-up while one of the Scottsboro boys remains in jail."

CHAMLEE ASSERTS CASES A DISGRACE

Former Defense Counsel Hails Release of Four Negroes.

Declares 'Scottsboro' Trials Greatest Miscarriage of Justice in Century.

"The Scottsboro cases comprised the greatest miscarriage of justic that has disgraced a great state in 100 years," former Attorney-General George W. Chamlee declared here yesterday when he learned of the action taken in the four remaining cases. Chamlee was associated in the defense of the Negroes in two of the trials.

Soon after the Negroes took their fatal ride through Paint Rock, Ala., on March 25, 1931, Gen. Chamlee was associated with the case. The attorney fought vigorously for his nine clients and assisted in taking the cases to the United States supreme court where the Alabama supreme court was reversed.

Bitter days followed Chamlee's association with the Scottsboro cases. He was harassed and once or twice drawn into street brawls, but the attorney kept fighting for his clients. Then the International Labor Defense came into the trial and Chamlee continued as a counsel in the cases. Last night the former Hamilton county attorney-general said the "International Labor Defense is due the credit for saving the lives of eight of these boys." Chamlee suggested that the other boys should be pardoned by the governor of Alabama and that the state should pay them for the six years they stayed in jail "as innocent men."

Chattanooga Figures in Case.

Chattanooga figuerd conspicuously in the Scottsboro case. The first general counsel for the Negro boys was a Chattanoogan—Chamlee. The late Steve Roddy also was retained as an attorney in the cases. Four of the Negroes were Chattanoogans. Two of them were released yesterday — Roy Wright and Eugene Williams. The other two, Andy Wright ad Heywood Patterson, are still under sentence.

Ada Wright, Chattanoogan and mother of Andy and Roy Wright, toured Europe to arouse sympathy and raise cash for her boys. Her trip abroad was sponsored by the International Labor Defense and according to Gen. Chamlee, was a success.

During the bitter days of the first legal skirmishes Gen. Chamlee was often denounced as a "red" and a "communist."

"The Scottsboro cases were the greatest miscarriages of justice that ever disgrace a great state in 100 years," Gen. Chamlee said. "The Price woman swore in Scottsboro that 14-year-old Eugene Williams was guilty, and also that Olen Montgomery was guilty, and today the attorney-general admits that both of them are not guilty. Roy Wright has been in jail six years and he was 14 years old and never was convicted, and the attorney-general admits that he was innocent.

"Even Ozie Powell, who tried to escape and attempted to kill or injure a sheriff, in an effort to escape, was admittedly innocent of the charges against him.

"The reputation of the Price woman was exceedingly bad in Huntsville, where she served a jail sentence.

"Atty.-Gen. Lawson has rendered the state of Alabama a real service in his action by dismissing four of these nine colored boys, and now Gov Graves ought to pardon all the other five and release them from prison.

"If these cases had been in Tennessee they would have been acquitted a long time ago.

"Arville Gilley, one of the state's chief witnesses down there came to Chattanooga, robbed two ladies here and was sent to our penitentiary in 1935 for stealing. He passed through under the name of Luther Hiney to conceal his identity.

"The state of Alabama ought to pay these innocent men for the time they have been illegally kept in prison.

Placed in Same Jail.

"When these colored boys were arrested, the officers arrested the two women and put them in the same jail that they held the colored boys in without any justification for that, but one of them, Ruby Bates, swore it was done to make her stand by the false statement that the Price woman had framed up.

"This was the first time in the history of the world, as far as I know, when a white woman ever volunteered to go to court to testify that a black man was innocent after having once accused him. Ruby Bates said these boys were all innocent.

"Scottsboro is a nice little town, but she got the hard end of this mess. The ending of it all will be welcomed by the good people of that little neighboring town of ours and let it be forgotten.

"To the International Labor Defense

Pink Is The Color!

LAST week we pointed out that The Nation, a weekly magazine published in New York and one of the country's foremost "liberal" journals, had joined hands with several members of the Alabama press in advocating an out-of-court settlement of the Scottsboro case — provided, of course, that such a settlement means the outright release of the negroes.

We have always maintained that The Nation was nothing more than the mouth-piece for the parlor pink crowd in America, and that the only thing liberal about it has been the criticism which, in behalf of the arty crowd to which it caters, it heaps upon those who might possess a little money, or those who hope through the dint of hard labor to possess a little money. In other words, The Nation holds up its hands in holy hórror when somebody hints that he is old-fashioned enough to believe in property rights.

Thumbing through this latest issue of The Nation—a journal which a few years ago inferred that the Scottsboro negroes were more intelligent and more civilized than the white people in North Alabama who attended their trials—we were intrigued by the advertisements, and so we set out upon a little survey of our own.

We found that the June 19 issue of The Nation carried 53 display advertisements and 23 classified advertisements.

Of the display ads—

2 were for book publishers, advertising books of a radical nature.

6 were for political and economic money-collecting agencies, and for left-wing mass meetings and conferences.

1 was for phonograph records—and

FORTY-FOUR were for lodges, camps, country clubs, hotels, lakeside cottages and the like!

In other words, The Nation, which directs its appeal to the proletariat, the Socialists and the Communists of the country, derives practically all of its advertising revenue from luxurious resorts high in the mountains and along the sea coasts!

It is The Nation's privilege to accept whatever advertising it sees fit, so long as these advertisements stand the test of decency and the United States mails, and we have no criticism of the fact that approximately 80 per cent of the display advertising is devoted to summer resorts.

We must observe, however, that even in a magazine allegedly designed for the proletariat, the advertisers want to get their money's worth, and the advertisers in The Nation know what they are doing. They know, in spite of the fierce editorial pronouncements of The Nation, that its readers consist for the most part of parlor pinks and college "liberals" who like to spend their summer's high in the mountains or down by the sea far from this madding world.

Of course, the steel worker can bend over the hot hearth, and the farmer can plod beneath a searing sun, but the champion of the proletariat must be intellectually and physically soothed so that he can ponder upon the problems of his brother toiler. The parlor pink may rant and rave when the members of the Supreme Court have a long summer vacation—taking their work with them, by the way—but it is just too, too terrible when the intelligentsia cannot be physically free for a few months. Even those magazines which cater to the rich have SOME hint of hard work in their advertising columns—but not The Nation! The clients of The Nation are too busy resting and thinking up new ways of stirring a revolution to indulge in a bit of toil for themselves.

We might close our little survey by pointing out that more than half of the classified ads in that issue of The Nation dealt with the same problem of how to pick a summer resort, while other classified ads concerned such things as a young gentleman ballet dancer who needs a job for the summer and a young lady who wishes to join a radical group for a tour of Mexico.

We mention these things not in an effort to discredit The Nation with those of this section who might read the magazine, but merely to point out that a rag of this type is the leading journalistic advocate in the East of the new Alabama movement to settle the Scottsboro case out of court, and of course The Nation can imagine no "decent" settlement except outright release.

From 1931 to 1937, The Nation has been packed with statements about the Scottsboro case which run all the way from mild prejudice to rank lies, and time after time this magazine has deliberately distorted the truth in an effort to show that Alabama has maliciously persecuted nine innocent negroes.

In Southern Eyes

(The Charleston News & Courier)

The Nation, New York quotes, with implied approval, from The Montgomery Advertiser: "The Scottsboro negroes (The Nation always tenderly alludes to them as "boys") committed whatever crime they have committed . . against two women who by all accounts never before had put a high premium upon their virtue."

The Nation and, one regrets to say, most Northern newspapers, are incapable of entering into the Southern point of view of the crime of which the nine negroes were convicted.

That the women were bad or good has nothing to do with the case. They were white women. To emphasize that distinction will shock The Nation and the fellows of its cult, but emphasize it we do.

In the South are two races, the one white and the other black, and the Southern white people are and ought to be sensitive to the last degree when a white woman, however low, is violated by a black man.

There are eight million negroes in these Southern states, nearly all of them well behaved men and women, but the fact of their presence in great numbers imposes upon the Southern whites a duty of protecting their race of which the North is innocently ignorant.

The English and the Dutch people of the South African Union would understand.

This crime of which the black men stand convicted in Scottsboro is a capital crime by reason of the cruel situation in which the facts of history have placed us Southerners. It is not a capital crime in New York, and there its commission, where the racial element seldom aggravates it, is much commoner than in Southern states.

The punishment of the crime in the South, whether the perpetrator be black or white, should be as swift and severe (always by legal process), when the victim is a loose woman as when she is a good woman. These things we do not say without awareness of the inconsistencies of the South in racial sex-relations of which decent Southerners are ashamed, and which, however, we believe have greatly decreased and are steadily decreasing.

Still Going Strong

An old unfavorite melodrama will be revived in Alabama next month when the Scottsboro Boys go on trial again. The crime charged against them — rape — was committed six years ago, but has been about lost sight of in the welter of perjury, racial antipathy, professional liberalism, convictions, appeals, new trials and retrials. Only this week, the Alabama Supreme Court upheld the latest conviction of one of the boys, but promptly an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States was announced by defense counsel Leibowitz.

And in Wise, Virginia, Edith Maxwell, the "curfew girl" twice found guilty of having crowned her father with a "slipper" or other blunt implement, has received the cheering news that the State Supreme Court has agreed to review her second conviction. Edith is thus assured of at least a few more months of liberty.

We were about to say that if somebody could just arrange for Tom Mooney's case to be reopened, we would have three serial causes celebres going in full blast at the same time — when, lo and behold! the mail brought an announcement from the Tom Mooney Defense Committee that a Senate subcommittee has been appointed to hold hearings on a resolution calling upon the Governor of California to grant Tom an unconditional pardon.

Poor Sacco and Vanzetti! They will never know what they missed by having been executed and put out of the marathon a mere six years after their conviction.

Alabama Lynch-Law Grinds On

Observing the niceties of the law, Alabama justice is making a mockery of the decision that Negroes are not called for jury service.

The guiding maxim of the prosecution and Judge Callahan in the Scottsboro trial seems to be: Call few and let none serve.

Out of a venire of 100 three Negroes were summoned only to be sent home again without the slightest chance of serving on the jury to try Clarence Norris, one of the eight Scotttsboro boys, now being railroaded through another framed-up travesty of justice.

In such manner, the Alabama authorities have been "carrying out" the rights of Negroes under the U. S. Constitution. The formalities are preserved in pantomime, but the lynch-law machinery grinds mercilessly on.

An all-white jury has been carefully handpicked, after the three Negroes were paraded near the court room, a concession that the Nine Old Men of the U. S. Supreme Court are apt to wink at and accept.

Were it not for an aroused people protesting against the original intentions of a mass lynching of the eight Negro Scottsboro boys by the Alabama authorities the Alabama prosecution would not now even be resorting to this farcical procedure. The boys are alive, but they still face the gravest dangers, the craftiness and desperation of a thwarted lynch-craving Southern ruling clique.

Rumored talk of a "compromise" is scouted by the attorneys for the National Scottsboro Committee, which calls on all the savage persecution of the eight innocent who would fight for Negro rights and against Scottsboro boys to continue and intensify the campaign of protest and the work to save their lives and effect their liberty.

Wisdom Gets a Break at Scottsboro

Wisdom wins a partial victory at Scottsboro, if not a complete triumph. Convicted of criminally attacking white women of questionable reputation while the women and the Negroes were riding an Alabama freight train as "hoboes," Andy Wright, facing his tenth trial, drew a prison term of 99 years.

Which is to say he drew a term of life imprisonment. That is a long time to serve for any kind of crime short of murder. But the sailent advantage to the prisoner is the preservation of his life. In years to come he may prove himself entitled to the reconsideration and the mercy of the state.

Alabama has received much unfavorable notices apropos the notorious Scottsboro case. In previous trials the state insisted upon the death verdict for the Negroes, a stand that was widely criticized because of the reputation of the women involved and the fact that they were engaged in "hoboing freights" when allegedly attacked by the defendants. Their character was held up by the defense as a reason why the jury should cast the shadow of doubt upon the whole story of attack.

However, convictions resulted in all the previous trials and the judgment of death imposed. The United States Supreme Court granted the defendants new trials on the ground that Negro jurors were not summoned or impaneled for the trial of the cases. When the present trials began the state decided not to ask for the death penalty. This was the essence of wisdom in the light of the circumstances, for not only would the outside world look askance at Alabama justice if these men were required to die upon the testimony of nymphs du pave, but the possibility remains that the United States Supreme Court would again raise some embarrassing points on the issue.

End Of The "Scottsboro Case?"

More than six years ago nine Negroes were taken from a freight train and placed under arrest when the train pulled into Scottsboro, Alabama. They were riding in a box car with Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, two white girls who stated that they had been to Chattanooga looking for work and who charged that the negroes boarded the car along the route and assaulted them after compelling some white boys who had been riding with them to leave the car.

That was the beginning of the famous "Scottsboro Case," which since has been fought through the Alabama Courts and to the United States Supreme Court and back. All of the Negroes were young when arrested, two of them being only twelve and thirteen years old, respectively. Some of the older ones among them have been tried several times, found guilty and sentenced to death. The Supreme Court twice has ordered new trials for convicted defendants, once on the ground that Negroes were barred from jury service in Alabama.

The eleventh trial in connection with this case ended last Saturday and resulted in the conviction of Ozie Powell and Charlie Weems, two of the six defendants who were arraigned. The rape charge against Powell was erased but he was given twenty years in prison when he pleaded guilty to charges of assault with intent to kill an officer in an alleged attempt to escape last year. Weems was given seventy-five years on the charge of rape, making the fifth of the nine Negroes to be placed under sentence. Previously Clarence Norris had been sentenced to death, Heywood Patterson to seventy-five years, and Andy Wright to ninety-nine years. Patterson and perhaps Wright had been tried two or three times and given death sentences.

Four of the defendants tried last week were set free. These included the two who were classed as juveniles at the time the alleged crime was committed. The cases against these four—Olen Montgomery, Willie Robertson, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright—were dropped. The latter two were the juveniles, and the prosecution staff announced it was convinced that the former two were not guilty. The four freed Negroes were turned over to their attorney, Samuel Leibowitz of New York, and immediately left Decatur, where the trial was held. They were driven north toward Nashville, Tennessee by a fifth Negro, Mr. Leibowitz following.

A dispatch from Decatur quotes "a source usually reliable" as saying "This ends the Scottsboro Case." This source forecast that Clarence Norris's death sentence will be commuted to life imprisonment and that appeals in the other cases will be dropped. The public would welcome the end of that case, but whether justice has been done is another question. There has always been a question as to whether the Negroes attacked the two white girls in the box car. One of the girls repudiated her story after one or two of the Negroes had been convicted and testified in court that they had not been assaulted. A friend of the other girl stated in court last week that she had told him no assault had been committed.

Possibly, after a time, the five Negroes now under sentence will be given their freedom. Their guilt of a crime for which they have spent six and a half years in the shadow of the electric chair, for which one still is in the shadow of the chair and the others have been sentenced to long prison terms, has never been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Indeed, there is serious doubt of their guilt. To many it will seem that if the Scottsboro Case is ended it has not ended to the credit of Alabama or of Alabama justice.

HARLEM GREETS 4 FREED NEGROES

Thunderous Applause Given Leibowitz, 4 Youths

NEW YORK, July 26.—(AP)—What looked like most of Harlem all but raised the roof of Pennsylvania station today in hailing a thunderous welcome to four bewildered negro youths freed in the latest chapter of the Scottsboro mass rape case.

Several elbowed and half-mauled spectators were trampled under foot when hundreds of cheering, shoving negroes stormed heavy police lines to shout a lusty salutation to the dusky quartet and to their chief defense counsel, Samuel Leibowitz, as they arrived from the south.

The negro youths, freed at Decatur, Ala., Saturday at the conclusion of 11 trials that resulted in five of their companions receiving sentences ranging from 20 years to the death penalty in an alleged mass attack upon two white girls on a freight train in 1931, were goggle-eyed at the enthusiasm of the welcome.

Some jumped and others fidgeted nervously as flashlight bulbs blinked and popped while photographers took their pictures as they emerged from their coach in the dimly lighted train shed two stories under ground.

Taking rank with such "causes celebre" as that of Tom Mooney and Sacco-Vanzetti, the Scottsboro case, in which nine Negro boys were charged with attacks on two white women, has engaged the attention of the world for six years. Principals in the case as it dragged through the years are shown here. Upper left, the Scottsboro boys with their attorney, Samuel Leibowitz. The boys: Heywood Patterson, Charlie Weems, Clarence Norris, Andy Wright, Ocie Powell, Eugene Williams, Roy Wright, Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson. Upper right, left to right: Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel; Heywood Patterson, Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., who was the chief prosecutor of the boys in all the early trials. He died two months ago. Judge Thomas E. Horton, who sacrificed his political life when he reversed the conviction in the second trial of Heywood Patterson. Bottom, left: Ruby Bates, one of the white girls the Scottsboro boys were charged with having attacked. She denied the boys were guilty. Center: Victoria Price, the other girl, who stuck to her story until the end. Right: Ocie Powell being treated in prison hospital last year after he had been shot by the sheriff. He was accused of stabbing a deputy sheriff. For this crime, to which he pleaded guilty, he was sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary.

Date By Date History Of Scottsboro

Chropological Story Discloses Various Steps Between Arrest of Nine Boys and Freedom of Five.

Although the Scottsboro cases cannot be regarded as closed as long as four of the boys face penitentiary sentences totaling 280 years, and one a death sentence, an abrupt shift in future defense plans was caused Saturday when the State of Alabama withdrew charges against five of the boys, holding that the evidence against them was not conclusive.

Chief of Defense Counsel Samuel Leibowitz has given his pledge not to give up the fight until all the boys are freed. Most important steps in case follow:

March 25—Nine Negroes arrested at Paint Rock, Ala., charged with attacking two white girls on a freight train.

March 31—Jackson County Grand jury indicts all on rape charge.

April 6—Clarence Norris and Charlie Weems convicted with death penalty at Scottsboro.

April 7—Heywood Patterson convicted, death penalty.

April 8—Andy Wright, Eugene Williams, Willie Roberson, Ozie Powell and Olen Montgomery, convicted with death penalty.

April 9—Jury disagrees in trial of Roy Wright. Judge A. E. Hawkins pronounces death sentences on eight.

1933

March 25—Alabama Supreme Court affirms sentence of all but Eugene Williams, whose death sentence was set aside on grounds that he was a juvenile.

November 8 — United States Supreme Court sets aside death sentence, holding Negroes were without benefit of adequate counsel.

1935

March 7—Judge Hawkins grants a change of venue from Jackson County (Scottsboro) to Morgan County (Decatur).

March 20—Defense seeks to set aside indictments and venire because no Negroes were on jury rolls.

April 3—Heywood Patterson goes on trial at Decatur.

April 5—Ruby Bates, one of the prosecuting witnesses, repudiates account of attacks, charging Victoria Price "framed" story.

April 9—Patterson convicted and sentenced to death.

June 22—At Athens, Ala., Judge James E. Houston sets aside Patterson sentence and orders new trial, holding evidence insufficient to warrant verdict.

Dec. 1—Patterson convicted with death penalty for third time, before Judge W. W. Callahan at Decatur.

Dec. 6—Clarence Norris convicted with death sentence.

June 28, 1934 — Death sentences confirmed by Alabama Supreme Court.

Sept. 29—Man arrested at Huntsville, Ala., charged with attempting to bribe Mrs. Price. The next day two New York attorneys arrested in Nashville, Tenn., on bribe attempt charges.

Oct. 3—Samuel Leibowitz, defense attorney, in New York statement, threatens to withdraw from case if "all Communists are not removed from defense."

Oct. 4—Alabama Supreme Court denies rehearing of appeals.

1935

April 1 — United States Supreme Court holds constitutional rights of defendants violated in exclusion of Negroes from jury service.

1936

Jan. 22—Heywood Patterson, convicted a fourth time, gets a seventy-five-year sentence. Ozie Powell shot after allegedly slashing throat of deputy sheriff in escape attempt. Deputy and Powell recovered.

1937

June 14—State Supreme Court confirms Patterson sentence.

July 13—Clarence Norris convicted, death sentence.

July 22—Andy Wright convicted and gets ninety-nine years.

July 24—Charlie Weems convicted and is sentenced to seventy-five years. Ozie Powell pleads guilty to assault with intent to murder and is sentenced to twenty years. Rape charges against Powell and the four remaining Negroes are dropped. Four freed.

Reduced Prison Sentences For Scottsboro Negroes Are Predicted

Birmingham, Ala.

THAT WOULD END CASE

Precedent For Clemency Is Believed Set In Giving One 20 Years

By James C. Hutto

Unless future developments alter the picture, the internationally notorious Scottsboro case probably will end with reduced prison sentences for the five Negro defendants who remain in jail.

Immediately after the four other defendants were freed in Decatur Saturday, when the state nol-prossed the charges against them, a usually well-informed source declared that development virtually ended the "body of death" that for more than six years has stood as an ugly blotch on Alabama's legal history.

This source predicted executive clemency will be extended Clarence Norris, the only defendant now facing the death penalty, and that the defense will then drop appeals in his and the other cases.

Likelihood that all of the sentences eventually will be reduced by executive action was emphasized by the solution reached in the case of Ozie Powell, fifth defendant against whom rape charges were dropped Saturday.

Powell pleaded guilty then to assault with intent to murder for stabbing a deputy sheriff last year while being transferred from Decatur to Birmingham's County Jail, and was sentenced by Judge W. W. Callahan to 20 years in prison.

The prosecution staff issued a lengthy statement explaining that two of the Negroes freed—Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson—were released because the state believes they are not guilty, and the other two—Eugene Williams and Roy Wright—because they were juveniles at the time of the alleged attack on two white women with which all nine Negroes were charged.

In Powell's case, the state cited no mitigating circumstances in dropping the rape charge against him. It was merely announced that an agreement had been reached whereby Powell would pead guilty to the knife attack on Morgan County Deputy Sheriff Ed Blalock.

The momentus climax to the six-year-old case came suddenly but undramatically Saturday just after the 11th jury to sit in judgment of a Scottsboro defendant returned a verdict of guilty against Charlie Weems, and fixed his punishment at 75 years imprisonment.

Only a handful of spectators were in the Morgan County courtroom when the verdict was read.

Then, in a series of swift moves, Judge Callahan heard Powell's plea of guilty to attack and, on motion of the prosecution, nol prossed the rape charges against him and the four Negroes who subsequently were freed.

Thirty minutes later the courtroom was empty but for an aged Negro janitor who was sweeping the place out—a symbol, perhaps, that the court was rid of the Scottsboro case for all time.

The four Negroes who were freed were never brought into court. A few minutes after the charges against them were dropped they scampered, laughing and chirping like schoolboys starting vacation, out a side door of Morgan County's red brick jail.

Four Go To New York

"Ah ain't felt so happy since ah was two years old," half-blind Olen Montgomery told Chief Defense Counsel Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York.

With the four Negroes bundled into one automobile and Mr. Leibowitz and his associates in another, the party sped away—accompanied to the Tennessee Line by two state highway police in a third car.

The party arrived in New York last night and were greeted by a crowd of between 2000 and 3000 persons, United Press reported.

Meanwhile, all of the remaining defendants except Norris were in Kilby Prison today. Norris, whose death sentence was suspended last week by notice of appeal, remained in Jefferson County Jail.

Four In Kilby

Those in Kilby are Heywood Patterson, who was given a 75-year sentence in January, 1936; Andy Wright, sentenced to 99 years last week in Decatur; Weems, who drew 75 years Saturday, and Powell.

Only Norris, Weems and Andy Wright—brother of the freed Roy Wright—were tried at the term of court just ended at Decatur.

None of the four Negroes who were released had been tried since their original trials at Scottsboro shortly after the nine Negroes were taken off a freight train at Paint Rock, in Jackson County, and charged with assaulting Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, Huntsville cotton mill workers, who were returning from a hoboing trip to Chattanooga.

The speedy Scottsboro trials resulted in death stences for all of the Negroes but Roy Wright. The jury disagreed in his case and he later was adjudged a juvenile by Trial Judge A. E. Hawkins.

Long Battle Begins

Then began the long legal battle that rang around the world and eventually brought a sweeping change in Alabama's jury system.

The International Labor Defense, a Communist organization, took over the defense and appealed the case to the Alabama Supreme Court where the death verdicts were upheld in all but the case of Williams, who was adjudged a juvenile.

Appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court, the cases were reversed on the ground the defendants were not adequately defendd at the Scottsboro trials.

Later a change of venue was granted to Morgan County, and in 1933 Patterson, considered the "key" defendant by the state, had his first retrial before Judge James E. Horton. Another death verdict resulted, but Judge Horton set it aside and ordered a new trial.

Callahan Takes Over

Then Patterson and Norris were tried before Judge Callahan who, before Judge Horton was defeated for re-election in 1934, shared the Morgan County circuit bench with the latter.

Death verdicts were again returned in the Patterson and Norris trials before Judge Callahan, and the cases again were taken to the U. S. Supreme Court—this time on the ground Negroes weer systematically excluded from jury service in Alabama. The high court upheld the defense contention in a sweeping decision that resulted in the names of Negroes being placed in the jury boxes of virtually every county in the state.

Patterson was then tried before Judge Callahan—in January, 1936—and was given the 75-year sentence now against him. It was the first "break" in the long case. There were no further trials until two weeks ago, when there began the episode that is believed to be the opening paragraphs in the final chapter to "Scottsboro."

Powell, Cleared on Woman's Charge, Admits a Stabbing —Leibowitz Is Elated

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., July 24.—Four Negro youths, who for six and one-half years have lived in the shadow of the electric chair, were set free here today in a dramatic finale of the famous Scottsboro case.

The State, in the person of Thomas S. Lawson, Assistant Attorney General, nolle prossed all the indictments against five of the nine Negroes accused of attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on a freight train bound from Chattanooga to Memphis on March 25, 1931.

Four of the Negro youths, three of whom were convicted and sentenced to death in the original trials at Scottsboro which the Federal Supreme Court reversed, were set free immediately to start for New York under guard with Samuel Leibowitz, their attorney.

The fifth Negro saved from trial by the State's action was sentenced to imprisonment for twenty years by Judge W. W. Callahan after he had pleaded guilty to a charge of assault with intent to murder. It was he who, a year and a half ago, drew a knife and attacked Edgar Blalock, a Morgan County deputy who was taking him to Birmingham.

The dropping of the charge against five of the Negroes accused of the mass attack on Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates came immediately after a jury returned a guilty verdict against Charlie Weems and ordered him to imprisonment for seventy-five years.

One Death Sentence Imposed

It was the second seventy-five-year sentence to be handed up against the Negro defendants. Heywood Patterson, who according to the State was the ringleader of the alleged attack on the two women, received the other such sentence.

One of the Negroes, Clarence Norris, the first to face a jury in the series of trials just concluded, was convicted and sentenced to death in the electric chair. On the heels of that verdict, another jury, in whose hands the Alabama law places the power to determine punishment, sentenced Andy Wright to prison for ninety-nine years.

The four who were set free here this morning are Eugene Williams, Roy Wright, Andy's brother; Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson. A Jackson County jury at Scottsboro disagreed on Roy Wright's guilt when he was tried there with the death penalty ruled out. He was 13 years old then. Williams also was under 16 years of age at the time, but he was sentenced to death with the other eight at Scottsboro.

One Woman Charged a Frame-up

Montgomery was ill and Roberson was almost blind at the time the alleged crime was committed. Testimonoy at earlier trials had indicated that these two did not even participate in the often-recounted fight with white hoboes on the train, but Mrs. Price has been just as insistent that they took part in the attack on her and Ruby Bates, who, during Patterson's trial before Judge James E. Horton, said the whole case was a frame-up by Mrs. Price.

Both Roy Wright and Eugene Williams come from Chattanooga and were members of Patterson's the Pennsylvania Station about 4:30 P. M. tomorrow.

It was just 10:55 o'clock this morning when the jury in the Weems case knocked on the door of the court room, indicating its readiness to report. It had begun its deliberations at 2:28 P. M. yesterday and was locked up for the night at 8 o'clock, resuming at 8:30 o'clock this morning.

As soon as Weems, the defendant, could be brought from the jail, the jurors filed into court and handed up their verdict to John Green, the court clerk, who read it.

"We the jury find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment and fix his punishment at seventy-five years in the penitentiary," the finding read.

Weems Charges Injustice

Thanking the jurors and dismissing them, Judge Callahan remarked that "this ends the business of the court for this week."

Weems was brought around before the bench. Before sentence was pronounced by Judge Callahan, who pointed out that he had "nothing to do with the jury's verdict," Weems said he had not had "a fair and impartial trial."

"I didn't get justice here," he declared.

Mr. Leibowitz moved for an arrest of judgment, charging that the Court had no jurisdiction. This was a technical move to protect the record for future appeal from the conviction.

Ozie Powell then was brought into court. Mr. Leibowitz talked briefly with him. Then Powell was marched before the bench to hear the indictment charging him with assaulting Deputy Blaock read by the court clerk. Judge Callahan explained that he could plead guilty or not as he chose.

"Don't plead guilty unless you are guilty," said Mr. Leibowitz.

"I'm guilty of cutting the Deputy," the Negro said.

In consideration of the fact that the State had consented to nolle prosse the attack indictment against Powell in the Victoria Price case, Melvin C. Hutson, the circuit solicitor of Morgan County, told the court that the prosecution would insist on the maximum penalty for Powell. Mr. Leibowitz pleaded with the judge to take into consideration the six and a half years that the Negro has been in jail awaiting trial, but Judge Callahan said:

"If it had not been that the State had dropped the other charge of rape against him I would have given him fifteen years. As it is, I will have to sentence him to twenty years in the penitentiary. The State insists upon it."

The oter four Negroes were not brought into court. Mr. Lawson stepped before the bench and, in a quiet voice, moved to nolle prosse all the indictments charging them with attacking the two white women.

Thus, in a tangle of inconsistencies, ended the famous Scottsboro case.

In Washington With GEORGE MORRIS

The Scottsboro Case

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The acclaim of milling thousands who greeted the "Scottsboro boys" on arrival in New York would be unfortunate in its consequences if the demonstration should be misinterpreted. Leaders among the colored race, ministers and others, should warn against accepting the isolated instance as typical. The reward of a negro for raping a white woman in the South is not always a free trip to New York in company with the distinguished Mr. Liebowitz and a welcome at Grand Central Station rivaling that of transoceanic fliers.

THE SOUTH may be entirely wrong in its revulsion against rape. Perhaps Northern newspapers and Northern people are correct in assuming what the South regards as a major crime is only a social error. But right or wrong, most of the crimes are perpetrated in the South, and so long as the South feels about the crime as it does it will probably handle the situation in its own peculiar way. A short cut to a solution would be for Northern advisers to the colored race to concentrate for a time on discouraging rape among negroes instead of attempting to discourage lynching among the whites.

IN THE CASE of most heinous crimes the country feels that the ends of justice have been obtained only if the guilty are convicted. In the "Scottsboro case" the attitude of some seemed to be that the only mistake the able Mr. Liebowitz made in his defense was, instead of fighting the case out on a plea of not guilty, he should have had his clients plead justification.

Papers in the North made much of the fact that the victims were "women tramps," that is, they were beating their way on a freight train from one town to another, and being low in the social scale were in no position to demand application of the law against their attackers. That is another instance of the difference between the Northern and Southern conception of race relations.

THERE SEEMS to be a feeling throughout the North that the dismissal of the charges against some of the "Scottsboro boys" was a triumph of something or other, and the only blot against the name of Alabama is that others were convicted. It was not a case of the triumph of justice in the legal sense. Apparently all were guilty of what the South considers a crime, and from the viewpoint of the South one might as well celebrate the defeat of justice in any other criminal prosecution. Lynching is as revolting to one section of the country as it is to another, but the South has decreed that rape is a crime punishable by death. The South has laws, written and unwritten, against it.

PUNISHMENT for the crime in the South is so inevitable, so barbaric and revolting, that the very ruthlessness and unrestrained fury with which punishment is administered has served as the greatest restraint against commission of the crime. The Scottsboro case is calculated to result in conclusions that are not conducive to the future of law and order.

One conviction after another was reversed by the higher courts, always on a technicality and never on the question of guilt or innocence of the accused. One conclusion might be that there is no recourse to be had in the courts. If the guilty are to escape as a result of Northern prejudice against Southern whites, when cases run the course of all the courts, there are some localities in which the feeling will be that it is better to handle such issues in their own way and without recourse to the courts.

THERE IS never any lack of money with which to defend a Southern negro charged with raping a white woman. The nature of the crime is all that is needed to bring the Liebowitzes hurrying to the defense of the accused.

That is not a wholesome attitude. It is provocative of race prejudice which does not actually exist in the South, unless stirred by outside influences. The Northern assumption is that the South punishes only negro rapists, when as a matter of fact no distinction is made between races or colors when it comes to applying punishment. If negroes are principally the victims of prosecution and lynching, it is because they are the principal offenders.

AT THIS TIME there is pending in Congress an anti-lynching bill, which has already passed the House. The Senate has the votes to pass it if the bill is reached this session. As amended by the Senate a group of strikers may lynch a person who insists upon working, a mob of gangsters may lynch a rival gangster, or any other citizen for that matter, and still be subject only to the state courts. But if a rapist is taken from an officer or removed from jail and lynched, the officer charged with the custody of the prisoner may be sent to prison and the county made liable for pecuniary damages to the family of the victim.

The proposed bill is an invitation to officers to be somewhere else when a mob approaches. The law affords no protection to the officer who fails to protect his prisoner, no matter how desperately he tries. Those who earnestly hope for an end to lynching find no encouragement in the Scottsboro case or in the proposed Federal anti-lynching law.

LEIBOWITZ MAKES SCOTTSBORO PLEA

Release of All Accused Negroes Is Asked in Mass Meeting in New York

NEW YORK, July 29 (AP)—Samuel Leibowitz called upon Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael of Alabama tonight to use his influence to free "all the Scottsboro boys."

Introduced as the "uncrowned king of liberty," the lawyer who defended the nine Negroes in the case addressed a mass meeting called to celebrate the liberation of four of the defendants.

"We shall give you no rest until the innocent are free," Norman Thomas, oftimes candidates for president on the Socialist ticket, warned "the Alabama politicians, time servers, slaves to racial prejudice."

A promise to "continue to fight for the boys until the finish" was made by Ruby Yates, one-time prosecuting witness against them.

The four who were freed, Roy Wright, Olen Montgomery, Willie Roberson and Eugene Williams, were given a long ovation. Montgomery's and Roberson's mothers stood with them.

Leibowitz Tells of Conference

Leibowitz described a conference which he had here early this year with the late Lieut.-Gov. Tom Knight of Alabama, who first prosecuted the Scottsboro defendants, and his successor as attorney general, Albert A. Carmichael.

They both agreed, he said, "that they would be satisfied with a plea of guilty by four of the boys to a charge of assault not involving the crime of rape, and that for the four who pleaded to assault the state would recommend a sentence of five years . . ."

But Judge William Washington Callahan of Decatur, said Leibowitz, "wouldn't budge from his determination to convict everyone of these boys on a charge of rape and demanded terms of years in the penitentiary that would be tantamount to life imprisonment."

Direct Appeal Made

The result, he declared, was that Clarence Norris was sentenced to death and Heywood Patterson, Charlie Weems and Andy Norris were "doomed to rot for what may be the rest of their natural lives."

Freeing of the four defendants now in New York was an admission that the state's case was weak, Leibowitz asserted.

Recalling the inscription on the Birmingham (Ala.) court house, "equal and even-handed justice to each regardless of race, creed or color," Leibowitz ended his address with a plea directly to the attorney general:

"Albert Carmichael, I call upon you to make those words live for the Scottsboro boys."

3 Scottsboro Negroes Put In Kilby Cell

Fourth in Birmingham Pending An Appeal To U. S. Court

Andy Wright, Charlie Weems and Ozie Powell, three of the four negro Scottsboro case defendants convicted during the recent trials at Decatur that were concluded with release Saturday of the four remaining defendants on withdrawal by the State of charges pending against them — were committed to Kilby Prison yesterday morning to begin serving their respective sentences, by Sheriff J. Street Sandlin, of Morgan County.

Clarence Norris, the fourth to be convicted and the only one to receive the death penalty, was transferred back to the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham, pending another appeal his attorney, Samuel S. Liebowitz, of New York, will take to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Long Sentences Given

Of the three committed to Kilby yesterday, Weems is under sentence of 75 years and Wright 99 years' imprisonment, for complicity in a mass attack on two white women on board a moving freight train, near Scottsboro, in March, 1931.

Powell, who pleaded guilty to a charge of assaulting with intent to murder Deputy Sheriff Edgar Blalock, of Morgan County, was sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary. Powell slashed the officer's throat with a knife, while being taken from Decatur to Birmingham with other defendants in the Scottsboro case, in January, 1936.

Patterson Already There

When the trio arrived yesterday morning, the quota of Scottsboro prisoners at Kilby was increased from one to four. Heywood Patterson, "star" defendant of them all, who has been four times convicted and three times condemned to death, was already there—in the prison hospital.

He was brought there last week to be treated for a bone infection in one of his legs. An operation which surgeons believe will correct the trouble, is soon to be performed. Patterson, under sentence of 75 years in the penitentiary, has a third appeal pending before the U. S. Supreme Court. It is not his first visit to Kilby. He spent one Winter in a death cell there.

WEEMS CASE GIVEN TO ALABAMA JURY

Another Scottsboro Trial Ends After Leibowitz Charges a Mockery of Justice

HITS COURT 'HYPOCRISY'

Prosecutor, in Reply, Accuses New Yorker of Jeopardizing Own Plea for Publicity

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., July 23.—A jury which heard Samuel Leibowitz of New York attack the State's case in the Scottsboro trials as a frame-up, and ridicule the proceedings before Judge W. W. Callahan as a mockery of justice, retired this afternoon to weigh the guilt or innocence of Charlie Weems, one of nine Negroes accused of attacking Victoria Price, a white woman.

The jury, drawn from a regular panel after a special venire of sixty-five was waived by the defense in consideration of a waiver of capital punishment by the State, was barred from ordering death for the Negro, who is being tried now for the first time since his original conviction at Scottsboro was set aside by the United States Supreme Court. Another jury condemned Clarence Norris to die after a trial last week.

The Weems case jurymen were ordered to their hotel for the night when they failed to reach a verdict after three and a half hours of deliberation.

Answers Leibowitz's Attack

Melvin C. Hutson, Morgan County solicitor, in summing up the State's case against Weems before it went to the jury, declared that Mr. Leibowitz had insulted not only the members of the jury but the citizenry of this county and declared that Mr. Leibowitz's talk was aimed not at the jury box but at the press row behind it.

Mr. Hutson accused the New York attorney of deliberately seeking a conviction for publicity purposes, and told the jurors that they could give Weems up to 1,000 years.

In his address, Mr. Leibowitz declared his belief that it was hopeless even to try to convince a white jury here that a Negro accused by a white woman might be innocent of the charge.

Says He Is Tired of Hypocrisy

"I'm sick and tired of this sanctimonious hypocrisy," he shouted. "It isn't Charlie Weems on trial in this case. It's a Jew lawyer and New York State put on trial here by the inflammatory remarks of Mr. Bailey."

H. G. Bailey, of Jackson County, who prosecuted the original trials at Scottsboro, in summing up for the State yesterday afternoon, dwelt at length on the fact that counsel in this case came from New York.

Mr. Leibowitz referred to the string of farmers called by the State to bolster up the testimony of Mrs. Price as "trained seals" and "performers in a flea circus." He accused Mr. Bailey flatly of suppressing evidence favorable to the defense, declaring that this was a further reason to suspect that the whole case against the Negroes was manufactured in Mrs. Price's head to save herself and her hobo companions from vagrancy arrests.

The assertion of lawyers for the State that Negroes fare the same as white men in the courts of Northern Alabama was so much "poppycock," said Mr. Leibowitz, calling the formalities of the trial a mere travesty of justice.

Since taking charge of the defense he had examined more than 1,000 prospective jurors from Morgan County without yet finding one who would admit that he harbored the least bit of prejudice against the Negroes or would treat them any differently that he would white defendants in a court of law, said Mr. Leibowitz.

Yet, he continued, outside the court room on the streets of Decatur white men had told him privately that a Negro did not have a chance and that his life was as worthless as a burned match stick.

Judge Callahan strode back and forth on the bench, while Mr. Leibowitz continued his accusations against Alabama courts and juries. Mr. Lawson left the courtroom, but Mr. Hutson, the local solicitor, busily took notes and bided his time to have the final word.

Plan to Influence Jury Charged

When that time came Mr. Hutson, in a booming voice, charged that for some reason best known to Mr. Leibowitz the defense lawyer was seeking deliberately to inflame the jury against his client to make an acquittal impossible.

Once, during Mr. Hutson's closing argument, he asked the jurors how they would have liked to have their own daughters or women folk upon the freight train with the Negroes. At this point, Mr. Liebowitz asked for a mistrial but Judge Callahan denied his motion.

When the oratory of the lawyers ended Judge Callahan recessed court for lunch and began charging the jury when court reconvened.

Judge Callahan charged, as he has done before, that where a white woman accused a Negro of rape the jury should regard that as presumptive evidence that there was no consent.

Mr. Leibowitz noted an exception to this part of the charge, holding that the question of consent never had been raised in this case or any other involving the nine Negroes.

Judge Callahan told the jurors that he should have used the word "may" instead of "should" in this part of his charge. Then he proceeded to read written charges requested by the defense. The jury retired at 2:28 P. M.

SILENT ON NORRIS

Governor Is Non-Committal on Commutation Report.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 27. (AP)—Governor Bibb Graves was non-committal today on reports Clarance Norris, a "Scottsboro case" defendant, would receive commutation of his death sentence.

Asked about reports from Decatur, Ala., that Norris' death sentence would be commuted under an "agreement" whereby four of the nine negro defendants were freed of mass rape charges Saturday, Governor Graves said:

"There is nothing on my desk regarding the Scottsboro case. I never cross a bridge until I get to it."

Four defendants were at Kilby prison.

Norris remained in Jefferson county jail at Birmingham, while four others, freed Saturday, were in New York.

Third Negro Found Guilty At This Term Of Morgan Circuit Court; Jury Fixes His Punishment At 75 Years In Prison

FOUR OTHER DEFENDANTS GO FREE

Criminal Attack Count Against Fifth Lifted, But He Faces Trial In Knife Assault Made On Deputy Sheriff In 1936

BULLETIN

DECATUR, July 24.—(Special.)—Ozie Powell, although freed of the Scottsboro assault case, today pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder in the stabbing of a deputy sheriff and was sentenced to 20 years in prison in that case by Judge W. W. Callahan. The disposition of this case leaves only four of the original Scottsboro defendants to go free.

DECATUR, July 24.—The State of Alabama today dropped criminal assault charges against the five remaining Scottsboro Negro defendants who have not been tried at the present term of court.

Announcement of the long-rumored "compromise" came today immediately after a jury returned a vedict of guilty against Charlie Weems and decreed his punishment at 75 years in prison.

The five Negroes whose cases were nol-prossed are Olen Montgomery, Willie Roberson, Eugene Williams, Roy Wright and Ozie Powell. Powell, also under indictment for assault with intent to kill in the stabbing of a deputy last year, will be prosecuted on the assault charge, it was announced.

Score In The Case

The score in the notorious Scottsboro cases stood today, therefore, as follows:

Haywood Patterson, convicted and sentenced to 75 years.

Clarence Norris, convicted and sentenced to death.

Andy Wright, convicted and sentenced to 99 years.

Charlie Weems, convicted and sentenced to 75 years.

Norris, Wright and Weems were tried at the present term of court while Patterson was convicted at the last term.

The five remaining Negroes also were to have been tried at the current term before Judge W. W. Callahan, but the compromise agreed upon by both state and defense will obviate the necessity of such trials.

Under the agreement, it was noted that all of the freed Negroes have already served six years in jail while awaiting final disposition of the cases.

Trio Held Ringleaders

The state has considered Patterson, Norris, Wright and Weems, the four now under sentence, as ringleaders in the alleged attack on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates and reports of a compromise to free the other five Negroes have been circulated repeatedly.

Roberson, who is 21, was 15 years old at the time of the alleged attacks. Montgomery, 24, is in frail health and half blind. Roy Wright, brother of the defendant sentenced to 99 years, is only 21. Williams is 21 and Powell 22.

None of the five defendants whose cases were nol-prossed have been tried since their original conviction at Scottsboro in 1931. The others, the accused ringleaders, have been used as the trial horses in the long legal war.

Four of the Negroes will now go free after their six years in jail. Powell must face the penalty for the stabbing of Deputy Sheriff Ed Blalock in 1936.

SCOTTSBORO GROUP IS DUE HERE TODAY

Leibowitz and Four Freed Negroes Are Scheduled to Arrive at 9:25 A. M.

PLANE-TRIP PLAN DROPPED

Youths Released in Alabama After 6½ Years Go Sight-Seeing in Cincinnati

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, July 25.—The four Negro boys freed by Alabama in the Scottsboro case will arrive at Pennsylvania Station, New York, at 9:25 o'clock (Eastern daylight time) tomorrow aboard the Cincinnati Limited with their lawyer, Samuel Leibowitz, who after a four-year court battle, has been credited with saving all but one of nine Negro prisoners from death. The ninth Negro, sentenced to death a few days ago, may receive a commutation of this penalty, Mr. Leibowitz believes.

In all, five Negroes remain in jail, one to serve a twenty-year sentence for stabbing a deputy sheriff; two under seventy-five-year sentences and one condemned to a ninety-nine year imprisonment for allegedly attacking Ruby Bates and Victoria Price on a Southern Railway freight train six and a half years ago. The fifth is the Negro sentenced to die in the electric chair.

Mr. Leibowitz and his four clients arrived here at 7:05 o'clock this morning after an overnight train trip from Nashville, Tenn., which they reached by automobile from the Morgan County jail in Decatur, Ala., after a hasty departure under guard of State highway patrolmen. Efforts were made to continue the rest of the way to New York by plane, but finally Mr. Leibowitz decided to complete the journey by train.

Hits "Illogic" of Alabama

The New York attorney today criticized the "illogic" of the State of Alabama in releasing four of the Negroes while imprisoning four others on attack charges when all were accused by the same complaining witness. Mr. Leibowitz said that he could not understand by what reasoning the prosecution had decided to believe Mrs. Price in one instance and not in the other when she testified at eleven successive trials that all the defendants had attacked her and Ruby Bates.

Describing his charges as "problem children," Mr. Leibowitz charged that the State had held the four youths in prison unjustly for six and a half years awaiting trial for their lives, only to release them in the end with the statement that it believed two of them were innocent and that the others were too young at the time of the alleged crime to pay the full penalty for their act. He demanded that the State make restitution to them for their ruined adolescence.

"The State would indemnify a farmer by an act of the Legislature for damages he sustained if a State truck ran down and killed his mule," he said. "Here Alabama confesses that, for nearly seven years, it caged four innocent Negro boys without any evidence against them. Doesn't it seem only fair and wouldn't it be but a small gesture toward justice, if Alabama awarded these boys some measure of compensation for the injuries it has inflicted upon them?"

The four freed defendants, still overjoyed at their unexpected good fortune, spent the day here, resting, bathing and seeing the sights, escorted by a Decatur Negro who accompanied them north, and by self-appointed local welcoming committees of Negroes.

Charge Soap Was Denied Them

Jail officials at Decatur, the four said, had denied them soap or towels in the two weeks that they spent in the Morgan County jail while their fellow defendants were being tried before Judge W. W. Callahan.

The four, Roy Wright, Eugene Williams, Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson, sat up all night in a day coach to get here but they didn't mind that. One said that all he wanted to was to "keep traveling away from Alabama," and the other three chorused their agreement.

Dresesd in the prison overalls in which they have been photographed many times, the young Negroes, who ranged in age from 13 to 17 years at the time of their arrest, attracted crowds everywhere they went. At one Negro restaurant, where they stopped for food, a purse of $4.20 was collected for them in less than ten minutes.

What is to be done with the four Negroes suddenly set free after spending their adolescence in jail, without even the correctional machinery of a reform school, is the immediate problem before Mr. Leibowitz, who hopes through the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to place them in vocational schools which may give them some opportunity for rehabilitation. He declared today that he would fight any effort to exploit them for political or commercial purposes.

Crowd Waits at Station

More than 1,000 Negroes gathered at Pennsylvania Station yesterday hoping to welcome the four freed defendants in the Scottsboro case. They were disappointed when it was announced that Mr. Leibowitz and his party would not arrive until today, but most of them indicated their intention to return this morning.

The confusion came about through a series of telegrams from Mr. Leibowitz to clergymen and civic leaders in Harlem, requesting them to serve as a reception committee for the four Negroes.

Mr. Leibowitz wired his wife at about 11 A. M. yesterday saying he would arrive on the Cincinnati Limited tomorrow, but apparently was unable to notify the Negroes of the change until the clergymen had announced the earlier time to their congregations yesterday morning.

There was little evidence of a radical element in the welcoming throng, the crowd for the most part resembling a church group in its Sunday best. One church, the St. James Presbyterian of 409 West 141st Street, was represented by a purple ba nner.

The Negroes milled around the incoming-train board so enthusiastically that at about 3 o'clock the trainma n on duty had to, call through his megaphone:

"A little quiet, please, a little quiet. Y'can't hear the telephone here."

Shortly before the 5:05 train, on which the party was expected, was due, a spokesman summoned the crowd to the upper level of the station, promising an announcement. There the Rev. Thomas S. Harten, minister of the Holy Trinity Baptist Church of Brooklyn, started to speak, but his voice was drowned out by the sputter behind him of a loudspeaker hooked up from another part of the terminal. When he realized he was not to be heard, however, Mr. Harten said quickly: "They won't be in. They're coming at 9 in the morning."

Imprisoned Scottsboro Boy's Mother Hails Victory for 4 Who Were Freed

'As Long as There's Breath in I.L.D. and C. P. They'll Never Die,' She Says

In a warm, moving letter received here yesterday, Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood, Scottsboro boy imprisoned under a 75-year sentence, stated that "as long as there is breath in the I. L. D. and the Communist Party" the five Scottsboro boys still in Alabama's jails "will never die."

The letter was addressed to Anna Damon, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, 80 E. 11 st., one of the organizations comprising the Scottsboro Defense Committee, 112 E. 19th St. Mrs. Patterson wrote from Cincinnati, Ohio, where she is living following the death of her husband, Claude, early this year. She formerly lived in Chattanooga, Tenn.

SURE 5 WILL BE FREED

Feeling that the release of four of the Scottsboro boys would aid the campaign to free the remaining boys, Mrs. Patterson sent her "best wishes" to the Scottsboro Defense Committee and to Defense Counsel Samuel Leibowitz.

MRS. JANIE PATTERSON

"I hope every one is as happy as we are just now. I am happy for I know just as sure as the sun rises in the East and sets in the West, the other five boys will be set free," the letter went on.

The boys still in Alabama's prisons are: Charlie Weems, under a 75-year sentence; Andy Wright, sentenced to 99 years; Clarence Norris, sentenced to die, and Ozie Powell, sentenced to 20 years on a charge of assaulting an Alabama Deputy Sheriff. All were tried and sentenced at the Decatur, Ala. Court during the last two weeks.

Patterson, also imprisoned, received a 75-year sentence at a trial in January, 1936. Appeals in the cases are being pressed by the Scottsboro Defense Committee.

MOTHER'S LETTER

Mrs. Patterson's letter in full follows:

"We have read of the great victory which has been partially won. Hooray for the I. L. D. and the great lawyer Mr. Leibowitz. Hooray for the freedom of the four boys! I hope every one is just as happy as we are just now. I am happy for I know that just as sure as the sun rises in the East and sets in the West, the other five boys will be set free.

"For as long as there is breath in the I. L. D. and the Communist Party, they will never die. I wish I was there to congratulate the great victory which has been won. I am sure the four mothers are in great happiness. I certainly feel fine over the freedom of the boys and can hardly express my wishes to you and the other comrades.

THANK ALL WHO HELPED

"All my children send their best wishes to the Scottsboro Defense Committee, Mr. Leibowitz and all who have helped us in the Scottsboro cases."

There are four other "Scottsboro mothers" all of whom are known throughout the world. They are: Mrs. Mamie Williams, Chattanooga, Tenn., mother of Eugene, one of the freed boys; Mrs. Viola Montgomery, Atlanta, Ga., mother of Olen, another of the freed boys; Mrs. Ada Wright, Chattanooga, Tenn., mother of Andy and Roy, also freed; Mrs. Josephine Powell, Atlanta, Ga., mother of Ozie and Mrs. Ida Norris, mother of Clarence.

The parents of Weems and Roberson, who was also released, are dead.

SCOTTSBORO MESS GOES ON

One of the nine boys Heyward Patterson was convicted last year for the third time and sentenced to 75 years. Last week Clarence Norris was for the third time tried and convicted, but received a death sentence. This week Andy Wright was tried but the State did not demand the death penalty for him, giving some weak reasons for its leniency. What inconsistency. If these boys were guilty of the charges made and sworn to by the woman of the case, then why one, so far, gets 75 years, another death and the third a term in the work house? Maybe, by the time the 9th boy is reached an acquittal may happen. But why talk about consistency in this Alabama mess? About the only thing that can bear that tag is the grim determination of that State to show to the world that it doesn't give a hoot for its opinion, nor does it agree with its idea of justice.

Outstanding Negro And White Leaders On Speakers' List

Boys Go Sightseeing Around New York After Rest—All Will Appear at Meeting—Lehman, Wagner, Van Nuys Invited

A group of distinguished civic and progressive leaders will address the huge "victory celebration" in behalf of the four freed Scottsboro boys at the Hippodrome tomorrow, it was announced yesterday. The meeting will begin at 8:30 P.M. The announcement was made by the Scottsboro Defense Committee, 112 E. 19th St., under whose auspices the meeting will be held. Expecting an overflow crowd Morris Shapiro, secretary of the Committee, said that the doors of the spacious hall would be open at 7 P.M. Admission is free.

Heading the list of speakers will be: Joseph R. Brodsky, head of the I.L.D. legal staff; Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief Scottsboro defense attorney; Roy Wilkins, prominent Negro member of the Scottsboro Committee; and Roger Baldwin, of the American Civil Liberties Union and acting chairman of the committee.

BOYS GO SIGHTSEEING

Meanwhile the four released Scottsboro boys—Olen Montgomery, Willie Roberson, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright—yesterday were busy "seeing the town." They went on a sightseeing tour of downtown New York and the lower East Side. Last night they attended Radio City Music Hall. All are anxious "to visit Harlem."

The Negro youths will make their first public appearance at the Hippodrome meeting tomorrow night.

Other speakers at the meeting will be: Norman Thomas, Socialist leader and representative of the League for Industrial Democracy on the Scottsboro Committee; the Rev. Thomas S. Harten, Brooklyn Negro minister.

The Rev. Lorenzo King, pastor of St. Marks Church in Harlem; J. Finley Wilson, Negro head of the Elks organization, and Paul Brissenden, of the Columbia University faculty, and Dr. John Paul Jones, Brooklyn clergyman.

Shapiro stated that the "meeting tomorrow night will also rally support to the fight to free the other Scottsboro boys who are still imprisoned."

Gov. Herbert Lehman has been invited to address the meeting together with Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora and Charles Poletti, also Senators Wagner and Van Nuys, sponsors of the Wagner-Van Nuys federal anti-lynching bill.

Due Process of Law

DEBATE upon fundamental issues involving the liberty, rights and privileges of all Americans, invariably provides opportunities to review the position of liberty [illegible] is affected by the law.

In the course of his able speech to the Senate on [illegible] 12, against the Bill to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, Senator Josiah W. Bailey (D., N. C.) made these pertinent observations:

"Probably there may be people in the South who will not quite like the case I am about to mention, but I like it—that of the Negro boy tried down in Scottsboro, tried for the most offensive crime known to our people, without a friend on earth, and with much of evidence to convict him.

"The mighty power of a State tried him, and sentenced that his life be taken; but that humble Negro boy, with only the Constitution of the United States to defend him, finds his way to the Supreme Court, still independent, and the Supreme Court says to the great State of Alabama, 'You did not try him according to due process of law. You must try him again. You can not take his life.'

"He is living now, and being tried again. Perhaps he is guilty. I do not know. Thank God, innocent or guilty, there is due process of law in this country at this time! I am saying that the moment political power lays its hands upon the courts and the Constitution, due process of law will be in jeopardy."

Senator Bailey spoke of the feelings of minority groups who fled the tyranny and persecution of European regimes to find their liberty and rights justly protected here under the Constitution.

"The Negroes of the South," said he, "feel secure tonight because they know there is a Constitution and an independent Court. The religious peoples of this land feel secure tonight because they know there is a Constitution and an independent Court. The Jews in America feel secure tonight because they know there is a Constitution and an independent Court to guard it. Strike down the Court and you will see this civilization of ours shaken to its foundation."

While the Negroes of the South and other sections can never feel as secure as Senator Bailey presumes, until 'due process of law' becomes a reality for them, and the States cease converting the Constitution into a scrap of paper; it is heartening to note how certain New Deal legislation has changed the concepts of right and wrong, making the 'due process of law' the concern of all classes, and reminding the strong that the insecurity of the weak imperils the whole social and political structure.

Lawyers Swap Verbal Barbs In Assault Case

'Hypocrisy,' 'Perjury' Shouted By Counsel In Decatur Trial

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 23.—(AP)—Accusations of "hypocrisy" and "perjury," shouted by the "Scottsboro" defense, and a ringing State retort, echoed through the Morgan County courthouse today as another jury sifted the evidence in the famous mass attack case.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, the defense chief, flung the charges after he startled the court crowd by predicting conviction of Charlie Weems, the negro on trial.

Given the case at 2:28 p.m., the jury of 12 white men was unable to reach a verdict in three and a half hours deliberation, and Judge W. W. Callahan ordered the jurymen to their hotel until 9:30 a.m.

The impassioned address to the jury by the noted New York criminal lawyer, whirling about a denunciation of "sanctimonious hypocrisy" in the case, brought from a State solicitor a quick counter charge that "Leibowitz has apparently tried to prejudice his client's case—an amazing performance."

Clipping his words, Melvin Hutson, Decatur solicitor, said:

"If he (Leibowitz) hasn't premeditatedly tried to convict that negro for publicity purposes, then I don't know what I'm talking about."

Severest In Six Years

It was one of the severest exchanges of defense and State in the six-year-old history of the case, in which ten juries previously have returned as many guilt verdicts against various ones of the nine negroes charged with attacking two young white women aboard a rolling freight near Scottsboro, Ala.

Pleading before the 11th tribunal, Leibowitz said:

"I don't expect an acquittal. I don't expect a low term of years. If Melvin Hutson will ask for 50 years, the verdict will be 99 or something like that." He added:

"I'm sick and tired of the sanctimonious hypocrisy. Don't pay any attention when the solicitor gets up here and asks you to convict this negro because his attorneys comes from New York."

"It isn't Charlie Weems on trial in this case," he declared. "It's the State of New York, put on trial by Mr. Bailey (Solicitor H. G. Bailey, who argued for the State yesterday).

"That mob at Paint Rock (where the negroes were taken from the freight March 25, 1931) smelt something fishy. That's the reason these negroes weren't lynched when they were taken off that train."

Hudson Charges "Headline Hunting"

Hudson, taking up the State's case, declared:

"It's headlines in the newspapers that have caused all this trouble down here. It's not the purpose of this court to play for publicity in the newspapers."

Leibowitz earlier had made a perjury charge against the testimony of Mrs. Victoria Price, one of the victims of the alleged mass attack and the State's key witness. His move to strike her testimony was denied by the court.

The State did not ask the death verdict for Weems. Hutson suggested "a term of years equivalent to life imprisonment," and said to the jury: "You can give him any term from 10 to 1,000 years."

Weems was the fourth of the nine negroes to go to trial since the United States Supreme Court the second time reversed the State courts in the case, thus nullifying death sentences. Clarence Norris again has been sentenced to death; Andy Wright given 99 years, and Heywood Patterson, 75 years.

Scottsboro Boy Given 99 Years

Judge Sentences Another To Die On Sept. 24; Leibowitz Appeals

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 21.—(AP)—Imprisonment of 99 years was decreed today for Andy Wright by the 10th jury in six years to return a guilt verdict in the "Scottsboro case," on charges that nine negroes committed a gang assault of two white women.

Shortly after the tribunal reported, Clarence Norris, convicted last week, was brought before the bar and sentenced to die September 24.

As Judge W. W. Callahan looked down on Norris, the negro said:

"The jury didn't find me guilty—they just thought they did. I was convicted of a crime I never thought of committing."

The defense filed notice of appeal, staying Norris's execution.

"Scottsboro" defendants twice have been saved from doom by the United States Supreme Court's overturning death sentences imposed by Alabama courts. Wright was among those snatched from the electric chair, having been sentenced to death at Scottsboro, Ala., in April, 1931.

The term imposed on Wright was longer than the State asked. Solicitor Melvin Hutson, of Morgan County, in his summation, demanded the negro be given a term equivalent to life. He mentioned 50 to 75 years.

Leibowitz Offers Objections

Samuel S. Leibowitz, as the jury reported, moved to arrest the judgment, contending the Morgan Circuit Court was "without jurisdiction." He argued Wright was "deprived of his constitutional rights to a fair and impartial trial," because the court had denied a transfer of the case to the Federal District Court at Birmingham. Judge Callahan overruled him. Previously Leibowitz had filed exceptions to the charge of Judge Callahan to the jury, setting forth it "accented unduly" the State's evidence, and did not summarize evidence presented by the defense.

The jury which convicted Wright today was the first ever to receive the "Scottsboro" case without a State demand for death of the negro on trial. It took the case at 10:35 a.m. and reported two and a half hours later.

Wright Unmoved at Verdict

Wright sat, unmoved, as the jury reported. From the witness stand he had denied guilt.

Conviction was asked by H. G. Bailey, solicitor of the Scottsboro circuit, under a law "designed to protect the virtue of our women, regardless of their reputation or station."

In addressing the jury, Leibowitz pleaded for acquittal of Wright, "because Victoria Price was not raped."

Mrs. Price, from the witness stand yesterday looked at Wright and in answer to a question by a State attorney said: "Yes, he was one."

The State charges the nine negroes criminally molested Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates March 25, 1931, aboard a freight train after the two young women caught a ride to return to their Huntsville, Ala., homes from Chattanooga where they went to seek work.

The negroes first were tried at Scottsboro. The death sentences decreed there were reversed by the United States Supreme Court, which held the defendants were without adequate counsel. Agencies outside Alabama hired new legal talent for the defense.

But again, at trials in Decatur, death verdicts were returned. This time, the Supreme Court held that negroes were excluded from juries handling the case.

In the new series of trials, since the last death sentence was nullified, Norris has been sentenced again to death, Weems given 99 years and Heywood Patterson sentenced to 75 years. Patterson was tried last in January, 1936.

Leibowitz already has expressed a determination to take the case to the Supreme Court "20 times if necessary."

Another Trial Set

The trial of another "Scottsboro" defendant was set for 8:30 a.m. tomorrow. He is Charlie Weems.

Members of the prosecution declined to say whether capital punishment will be waived in his or any of the remaining cases. At the time the State announced the death demand would be waived in Wright's case, Alabama Assistant Attorney General Thomas Lawson said the negro was "one of the younger negroes" and "not regarded by the State as a leader of the attacks."

It was expected that the remaining defendants preparatory to their successive trials, will be arraigned tomorrow. They are Ozie Powell, Olen Montgomery, Eugene Williams, Willie Roberson and Roy Wright.

SCOTTSBORO COMPROMISE TALK

Of all the disreputable schemes that have been suggested as a means of getting rid of the Scottsboro trials, the one which has come to notice in the last few days is the most reprehensible.

According to newspaper reports, a proposition has been made to have the nine boys confess that they did assault the "Scottsboro girls" but the extent of their crime was "felonious" and not "criminal." This done, so the story goes, arrangements can be made to find the boys guilty as confessed and some short prison sentences will be assessed. As a further act of grace, these short prison sentences will be made retroactive to 1931.

The very fact that the Alabama prosecution will sit down and discuss such a compromise is as strong a proof of the innocence of the boys as was the forceful repudiation of her charge of rape as was made by Ruby Bates.

What you are witnessing in this weird compromise proposal is a frantic effort upon the part of the Alabama prosecution to have the record of this case show that the Scottsboro boys were guilty of some sort of crime. The prosecution should not be allowed to get away with such a piece of skullduggery.

Of course it is hard, after so many weary years of diabolical campaigning to send these boys to the electric chair, to find that it can not be done because public sentiment of America's righteous majority and the Supreme Court of the United States stand athwart the path of the Scottsboro prosecution. But the decent thing for the prosecution to do is to confess its guilt and assume the virtue of good sportsmanship.

Abler prosecutors than those in Alabama, in the past have moved to dismiss cases when they found themselves unable to meet the requirement of proving a defendant guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt." Alabama officials can do the same in this celebrated case, and in this way rescue something from the wreck of their official reputations. Nobody who is intelligent enough to follow the evidence in the Scottsboro cases and who is unbiased enough to weigh that evidence without thinking of the races of the parties involved can reach any other conclusion than that these boys are absolutely innocent of the crime with which they have been charged and shamefully persecuted over a period of six long years. It is nothing less than futile and foolhardy for the Alabama officials to keep holding out for a conviction or a "confession" of guilt. Any decent respect for the fact that their madness already has strengthened the communist forces throughout the world, brought shame to the American people in general and embarrassment to the Christian church, will cause the prosecution to drop the Scottsboro cases and let the outraged boys go free.

The Scottsboro Cases

More than a year ago The Commercial Appeal, in a spirit of utter frankness, urged that the state of Alabama owed it to the south to make some reasonable and speedy disposition of the Scottsboro cases.

The Supreme Court of the United States had just reversed the judgment of the Alabama courts in a far-reaching opinion which went far towards threatening the common practice of excluding negroes from southern juries. Competent lawyers saw in the opinion a broad intimation that the severe punishment the state of Alabama sought would not be permitted to stand. This being true, the assumption was proper that regardless of the merits of the cases, further efforts to push them would only serve to bait the higher courts and at the same time keep alive an agitation that was detrimental to the best interests of the people of Alabama and of the south.

It is refreshing to observe that the Birmingham News has joined with the Montgomery Advertiser in advocating that these cases be compromised. The defendants have been in jail for six years, the case has been to the Supreme Court of the United States twice, and only one of the six is under any sort of sentence now. Recalling that it has sided with the state and the prosecution, the Advertiser admits that "Scottsboro has injured Alabama incalculably." It adds, "let us throw away this body of death that has encumbered us all so long."

The News is even more emphatic. Pointing out that Scottsboro has been an Old Man of the Sea, the News calls upon the state to move for a decent, dignified compromise, concluding that if state officials can find their way to bring about a compromise, "they will have done a fine day's work for the people of the state."

It is to be hoped that this counsel will prevail. Not only would it be a relief to the people of Alabama, but it would be a good thing for the south as a whole.

Tragic Story of Scottsboro

Jackson county, Alabama, has been in the limelight because its officers arrested six years ago some hoboing Negroes accused of raping some hoboing white women.

Scottsboro is in Jackson county, and the case has been advertised all over the civilized world as the "Scottsboro case." Because the arrested men were hobo Negroes, Communist lawyers and agitators have sought to make political capital out of it. Alabama has had a great deal of expense, notoriety, and trouble, because of the ambition of the Communists. One of the Negroes was found guilty in Alabama and the Supreme Court of the United States declared the verdict of guilty could not stand because Negroes had not served, or were not serving, on the state's trial juries.

The Montgomery Advertiser immediately asked if the Supreme Court's finding could hold, inasmuch as no Negro presided on the Supreme Court bench at the time the case was considered. Now the Advertiser urges the state of Alabama to ease out of its trouble. The paper is tired of the long nightmare. The Negroes have been in prison six years, and the Communist ballyhoo squad have gotten about all the good they can hope to get out of the case; the state jury system has been liberalized so that in future Negroes who are fit to serve as jurors will be allowed to serve along with white people under the same qualifications, and the Advertiser thinks the state authorities should at this stage compromise the matter.

Jackson county happened to be the place where the arrests occurred. The prisoners now in jail were riding through on a freight train, stealing a ride. The white women themselves were stealing a ride, and were supposed to have been rather careless with their reputation. The more the Communists tore their hair and raved about the downtrodden hobos the more pugnacious became the state's officers.

The Advertiser, representing a high type of journalism in the South, believes it is time to get rid of the "body of death," and to make some compromise that will bring about a settlement.

Of course this will mean some concession to the intermeddlers, but the editor thinks no harm can come from that, in view of the miserable circumstances in the case.

ALABAMA WEARY OF SCOTTSBORO

The Montgomery Advertiser declares editorially that it is sick and tired of the Scottsboro case; and that just about makes it unanimous. Our Montgomery contemporary was for several years so bitterly resentful of outside activities in the Scottsboro affair that it lost its usual poise. We did not much blame it for doing so.

Alabama felt as did The Advertiser that the self-constituted champions of the Scottsboro defendants were not so much concerned about securing justice for them as about making political capital for other purposes. There was a great deal to support this view; and nothing is truer in the history of the South than that pressure from without always breeds resistance from within. The resistance is sometimes blind, not infrequently hurtful to those who exert it.

What has disturbed some of us throughout in this Scottsboro business, however, has been the feeling that no case warranting either the death penalty or life imprisonment had been made out against the defendants. The Advertiser, which vigorously supported the prosecution in the heat of the battle, now confesses that the circumstances of the crime with which the Scottsboro negroes were charged were "extraordinary" and that "there is ground for reasonable doubt of the positive guilt of all of the men now in jail."

How Alabama can now move, as The Advertiser urges, for "a decent, dignified compromise" in the Scottsboro cases we do not know. The heat engendered by the activities of outsiders and by outside criticism seems to have died down in Alabama but the feeling persists that whatever is done now must be reconcilable with what the state has done heretofore. The fact, however, that a newspaper of the standing of our Montgomery contemporary wants those in authority to "strike out for an honorable, fair and just settlement of these messy cases" is in itself genuine progress.

"Scottsboro" has become, as The Advertiser says, a "body of death" for all concerned. It should be shaken off. The Advertiser, in having the courge boldly to reverse its own position, has in this instance set a good example for others.

A Good Suggestion

After six years' legal bickering and more or less futile effort and embarrassment to the State and the whole South for that matter, the so called Scotsboro case is no nearer solved than when the case was started. And now comes a suggestion for the only sensible solution, as it appears, to the whole disgusting muddle, namely, "a decent compromise" by the courts, as suggested by The Montgomery Advertiser.

The whole mess was a collossal mistake it appears to start with, for there was almost a complete absence of decent evidence sufficient to convict, with the white hobo girls contradicting their sworn testimony. To begin with who can deny that a whole lot of political motivation was mixed up with what any sensible person could see would turn out to be one of the nastiest racial and political controversies that could possibly be evolved.

It would be a good day's work if some way could consistently be evolved to rid Alabama of this stench in the nostrils of the state, the South and the nation.

"Drive Taxis—Dig Ditches?" Promoter Of Scottsboro Boys Hits Back At Public Critics

"We Intend To Make Some Money For Them, To Make It Properly And Honestly", He Says

NEW YORK, August—In answer to rumors of the "exploitation" of the Scottsboro Boys, Ben Bart, president of the Paramount Orchestra Bureau snapped, "What more honorable or expeditious career would the Negro press and public have the boys engage in? Would they rather have the boys drive taxis or dig ditches? Nobody has even offered them a ditch to dig in."

"We are specialists in the business of making money for people and procuring for them the price they are worth," stated Bart, head of the organization which handles the personal-appearance tour of the Scottsboro Boys. "We are not going to pretend that we are doing the thing out of great love for the boys. It is our business—booking engagements. But on the other hand, we will not allow the boys to be mistreated insofar as our jurisdiction goes."

"We intend to make money for them, to make it properly and honestly," continued Bart. "And every nickel these boys earn under our management has been and will be turned over to them. We have receipts to show where every penny that these boys have earned has gone."

"Real exploitation," concluded Bart, "is bringing out the best there is. We are exploiting the Scottsboro Boys, it is true. But we are exploiting them for their own benefit. Any statement to the contrary is a damnable, vicious [illegible]"

Court Conduct Gets Leibowitz Stiff Warning

Perjury Charge Hurled At Mrs. Price In Assault Trial

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 22.—(AP)—Perjury charges were hurled by the "Scottsboro" defense today at the testimony of Mrs. Victoria Price, accuser of the negro defendants, and a witness testified the young white woman once told him she was not assaulted.

The latest surprise came during the trial of Charlie Weems, one of nine negroes accused of a mass assault of Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates.

After Samuel Leibowitz, defense chief, had motioned for exclusion of testimony by Mrs. Price, the star State witness, on the ground her statements were "perjured," he placed Lester Carter on the stand.

Carter said he was a hobo on the freight train aboard which the State contends Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates were assaulted by a gang of negroes on March 25, 1931, near Scottsboro, Ala.

"There was no rape," Carter said Mrs. Price told him in Scottsboro jail after the train was stopped by a posse at Paint Rock, Ala. Mrs. Price asked him to support her attack story to prevent "trouble over riding a train," Carter testified.

Only closing appeals to the jury remained when court adjourned until tomorrow. Leibowitz' offer to make his summation in five minutes if Solicitor Melvin Hutson would restrict his to ten minutes was rejected by the court when Hutson declined.

Leibowitz' motion for exclusion of Mrs. Price's testimony came at the end of a two-hour furious cross examination.

Judge Warns Leibowitz

"I don't see any occasion for a grand stand play like that," interrupted trial Judge W. W. Callahan and he overruled the motion midway in the noted lawyer's plea.

A court room already tense because Callahan had warned Leibowitz to change his manner or "get ready for trouble," heard the stocky little lawyer rip into Mrs. Price's statements.

"The evidence is so rampant it (Victoria's testimony) is filled with perjury," said Leibowitz as the woman descended from the stand where she identified Charlie Weems, now on trial, as one of her attackers aboard a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., in 1931.

Mrs. Price has been "given money for clothes" by State counsel, Leibowitz stated during his two-hour cross examination. The New York attorney sought to discredit Mrs. Price's story of a gang attack by nine negroes.

Judge W. W. Callahan, noted for his rigid court discipline, faced the noted lawyer.

"It's not too late for me to enforce orders of this court," he said in a stern voice, "and I am warning you now your mannerism is going to lead to trouble and you might as well get ready for it."

Electric Chair Waived

Earlier, the State removed the shadow of the electric chair from Weems, by waiving capital punishment. A precedent of death demands for all the nine defendants was broken by the State last week, as capital punishment was waived in the case of Andy Wright.

Meanwhile, another "Scottsboro" defendant, Heywood Patterson, was moved from a Birmingham jail to the State's Kilby Prison Hospital at Montgomery. A Birmingham jail physician said he was suffering from a diseased leg bone. The condition, the doctor said, apparently was caused by an injury suffered before the negroes were taken from the freight train at Paint Rock, Ala., March 25, 1931.

The jury that tried Weems today was the 11th to weigh "Scottsboro" evidence in six years. All the 10 previous tribunals returned guilty verdicts.

Notwithstanding, Leibowitz contends "Victoria Price was not raped." Ruby Bates, a complaining witness in the first trials, later repudiated her story. Mrs. Price, however, has maintained steadfastly that the negroes attacked her on the moving train after she and Ruby Bates had caught a ride home to Huntsville, Ala., from a job-seeking trip to Tennessee.

The 10th jury to sit in judgment of one of the negroes returned a guilty verdict yesterday against Andy Wright and prescribed 99 years imprisonment, although the State asked a sentence equivalent to life and mentioned 50 to 75 years.

Another death sentence was imposed on Clarence Norris, after his conviction last week.

The new series of trials opened after the United States Supreme Court last nullified electric chair verdicts in Alabama courts. Weems is the fourth to face judgment. Heywood Patterson, the first tried, was given 75 years upon conviction in January, 1936.

NORRIS FOUND GUILTY

DECATUR, Ala.—Changing its front for the first time in the six-year-old history of the Scottsboro cases, the state of Alabama waived the death penalty in the case of Andy Wright whose trial began Monday, July 19, before Judge W. W. Callahan.

For the tenth time, Mrs. Victoria Price, chief state's witness in the case, repeated to the jury Tuesday, July 20, her story of being attacked by the youths aboard the freight train.

She identified Wright as one of her attackers. Her oft-repeated testimony has been repudiated by her companion, Ruby Bates, who turned defense witness, and by the physician who examined the girls after the alleged attack. He said there was no evidence of attack.

Wright's trial began four days after his co-defendant, Clarence Norris, was found guilty and sentenced to death by an all-white Alabama jury in Judge Callahan's courtroom Thursday afternoon, July [illegible].

It was the ninth all-white jury to sit in judgement on the celebrated Scottsboro case, following the arrest of the nine boys in March, 1931, on a charge of "raping" two white girls who were hoboing on a freight train.

A few minutes after the jurors returned the death verdict against Norris they were laughing uproariously before they were out of earshot of the courtroom as they started toward the clerk's office to get their pay.

Norris Unemotional

Norris, who sat deadly calm and still during the short, rushed trial, showed the first sign of emotion when he leaned forward as soon as the words, "We find the defendant guilty and fix his punishment at death," were read by John H. Green, clerk of the court. Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, announced immediately that an appeal would be taken.

The case of Charlie Weems which, in accordance with the time-table schedule set by Judge Callahan, was to come up the same day that Norris' trial ended, July 15, was postponed for a week because of the illness of Clarence Watts, Huntsville, Ala., attorney aiding the defense.

Watts told the court that the long, hard hours fixed by Callahan and the sultry weather had been more than his constitution could stand.

Quick Verdict

The Norris jury began its "deliberations" at 11 a. m., taking an hour out for lunch, and reported its verdict at 2:48. It was the "quickest verdict since the original 'country fair trials" at Scottsboro, which the United States supreme court reversed because the defendants were not permitted adequate representation by counsel.

Judge Callahan charged the jury in a two-hour speech in which he labeled himself the best lawyer on the side of the prosecution. He closely paralleled the prejudiced charges he has delivered to the juries in the three other Scottsboro cases over which he has presided. He actually convicted Norris on every count, no matter on which part of the train he was or what he did. He covered all possibilities of excluding any testimony that would free the boy. In legal terminology he accused any of the boys of rape who took part in the fight with a group of white boys on the train.

Appeal Patterson Verdict

Wright is the first Scottsboro boy to undergo trial without having his life in jeopardy. He showed no emotion when the state agreed to drop the death plea.

Ninety miles away in Birmingham jail, another co-defendant, Heywood Patterson, the first youth to [illegible] a 75-year sentence which his lawyers are appealing.

Asked whether the death penalty also would be waived in the six Scottsboro cases yet to come up, attorneys for the state refused to say.

The selection of the jury to try Andy Wright proceeded Monday as carefully as if it were a capital case.

Leibowitz agreed to dismiss a special venire of 65 Morgan county citizens called to augment the regular panel of 35. Many of the 35 were out in court because of heavy thunderstorms [illegible] required 30 veniremen were absent and it was too late for the sheriff to get additional men, court was adjourned until Tuesday morning.

Powell to Institution

Judge Callahan expressed the desire to conduct the trial "within the letter of the law." He feared that "some one searching through this record might seize upon a technicality" and get another reversal in the court of appeals.

Melvin C. Hutson, circuit solicitor of the judicial district under whose jurisdiction the Scottsboro cases come, said he wants to speed up the cases to get them off the docket.

He said that it would be unnecessary to try Ozie Powell who, he said, would be entered in a state institution for the insane as soon as the defense submits affidavits of two reputable physicians.

Attorney Leibowitz also expressed the desire to speed up the cases.

"The sooner we wind up here, the sooner we can get to the supreme court if it is necessary to appeal from future verdicts."

Leibowitz said he plans to appeal the verdicts of the juries which sentenced Patterson to 75 years in prison and condemned Norris to the electric chair.

More Scottsboro Delays Looming

DECATUR, ALA., July 18—(AP)—Further postponement of the "Scottsboro" trials loomed today as Clarence Watts, defense attorney announced he could not attend court sessions tomorrow.

Andy Wright and Charlie Weems, two of the nine negroes accused of attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train more than six years ago, are scheduled for trial this week.

Wright's case is set for tomorrow, and Weems's for Thursday. Weems's trial was postponed last Thursday when Watts became ill.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of the defense counsel, today worked over plans for an appeal from the death verdict rendered last week against Clarence Norris, first of the defendants tried in this series.

Judge W. W. Callahan has not sentenced Norris [illegible] will file the usual motions preliminary to an appeal after the trial judge fixed the execution date. Filing of the appeal will stay execution.

Two previous death sentences for Norris have been set aside by the United States Supreme Court.

Another possibility this week is an insanity hearing for Ozie Powell, the negro who slashed Deputy Sheriff Edgar Blalock in an escape attempt in January, 1936.

Leibowitz contends Powell has become insane since his arrest March 25, 1931.

Wright and Weems, the two negroes who will be tried next, have not faced an Alabama jury since April, 1931, when they were given death sentences at Scottsboro. Those convictions were set aside by the United States Supreme Court.

OUR GIFT TO TENNESSEE

Yesterday Alabama sent four Scottsboro "boys" [illegible] by Sam Liebowitz, into Tennessee, with our prayers and blessings upon each and everyone of them. Since Tennessee will receive these Solons [illegible] The Cross hospitably, we think that Alabama ought to pass a resolution of thanks to by the Tennessee Legislature.

REPORTS of several weeks ago that a compromise settlement of the Scottsboro case had been agreed on, denied then by the Alabama state's attorney and further discredited last week by the death sentence pronounced upon Clarence Norris, are again revived with the news that only a prison sentence will be asked for Andy Wright, the second of the eight Negroes to face the court in the new series of trials, which the state devoutly hopes will finally dispose of this costly and notorious affair. It is apparent that Alabama is sick of the case and is ready to get rid of it at almost any price, although Norris' sentence indicates that it is not willing to lose face entirely. The trial of Norris marks the first activity in the case since Patterson was condemned to life imprisonment more than a year ago. The proceedings in the Decatur courtroom were for the most part unexciting, like a play given for the tenth time before the same audience. Victoria Price stuck to her old story and, except that Ruby Bates did not appear, the defense presented the same evidence to discredit it. Judge Callahan for the third time presided and as on the other occasions virtually instructed the jury to find guilty, by telling the twelve white jurors that when a woman charging assault was a white woman they should disregard the possibility of consent on her part and should accept her unsupported word as sufficient warrant for conviction. The defense, if one may judge from press reports, seemed a bit half-hearted—which is not a matter for surprise when the outcome of the trial was so clearly indicated from the start. The worst of it is that there seems no clear basis this time for appeal to the federal courts, although it has already been announced that appeal will be made.

New Scottsboro Trials Get Under Way

LEIBOWITZ DENIES SCOTTSBORO ATTACK

Late Physician Is Quoted; Defendant Reiterates Innocence of Charge.

DECATUR, Ala., July 20.—(AP) Basing his plea largely on testimony of Dr. R. Bridges, late Scottsboro physician, Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the "Scottsboro" defendants, asked a Morgan county jury today to acquit Andy Wright, negro, because "Victoria Price was not raped."

His argument came after a crowded day, in which testimony followed closely that given in nine previous Scottsboro trials. Mrs. Price identified Wright as one of the nine negroes who she said attacked her aboard a freight train March 25, 1931, near Scottsboro, Ala.

Judge W. W. Callahan will charge the jury tomorrow morning.

Wright denied the attack, and Leibowitz read from the transcript of a previous trial testimony in which Dr. Bridges said he examined Mrs. Price two hours after the alleged crime and found her pulse "within the bounds of normal."

Alabama Is Stubborn!

It is nip and tuck between the liberal and tolerant forces in Alabama and the prejudiced and die-hard forces, in the case of the Scottsboro boys. One week it looks like Justice may finally be served, and the next it looks like the Legion of Hate, so ably marshaled and led by the late Mr. Knight, may not be outdone. But, all in all, it is clear that the liberals are gaining ground for this week in spite of the blunt announcement by the State that it had twenty witnesses ready to take the stand in a last determined effort to electrocute the boys, the movement for "fair play" has spread to the neighboring state of Tennessee.

The Commercial Appeal of Memphis, published in a center of poor-white concentration from three poverty-stricken areas—Arkansas, Tennessee, and Mississippi—in the midst of a public opinion so backward reactionary that Negroes have been all these years developing a school of higher learning—has come out within Alabama to seek a compromise.

Floyd J. Calvin

Says the Appeal: "It is refreshing to observe that the Birmingham News has joined with the Montgomery Advertiser in advocating that these cases be compromised. The defendants have been in jail for six years, the case has been to the Supreme Court of the United States twice, and only one of the six is under any sort of sentence now. Recalling that it has sided with the state and the prosecution, the Advertiser admits that 'Scottsboro has injured Alabama incalculably.' "The News is even more emphatic. Pointing out that Scottsboro has been an Old Man of the Sea, the News calls upon the state to move for a decent, dignified compromise, concluding that if state officials can find their way to bring about a compromise, 'they will have done a fine day's work for the people of the state.'

"It is to be hoped that this counsel will prevail. Not only would it be a relief to the people of Alabama, but it would be a good thing for the south as a whole."

Of course, Negroes don't want a compromise; they want freedom of the Scottsboro boys. But it is a step toward that freedom for the State to seek a compromise.

H. G. Bailey, Scottsboro solicitor, asked the jury to convict under a law "designed to protect the virtue of our women, regardless of their reputation or station."

'Jury 10' Hears Scottsboro Case

Oft-Repeated Attack Tale Told At Decatur In New Trial

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 20.—(AP)—The story of the "Scottsboro Case"—an alleged attack of two white women by a negro gang—was told again today by Mrs. Victoria Price and she looked at Andy Wright, saying: "Yes, he was one."

Wright, on trial before the 10th jury to sit in judgment of the case, mounted the stand and denied guilt. He said he did not see "any girls" on the freight train.

The negro was the first defense witness, following C. F. Simmons, Scottsboro deputy sheriff, who testified Wright accused the other eight defendants of the rape in a statement given in Scottsboro jail.

Wright said he and his brother, Roy Wright, Heywood Patterson and Eugene Williams were with him on the hobo trip which ended with their arrest at Paint Rock.

Fight Details Given

He gave details of a fight between negroes and whites aboard the train and estimated that "12 or 14" negroes were engaged in the combat.

Nine negroes are accused of attacking Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates on a rolling freight train six years ago. In the new series of trials, opened since the U. S. Supreme Court reversed death sentences a second time, the electric chair has been decreed again for one defendant, and another has been sentenced to 75 years imprisonment.

Wright's life, however, was not in jeopardy, the State having agreed to waive a death demand.

Mrs. Price told the jury, completed early today, that she was molested criminally by members of the negro gang aboard the freight on which she and Ruby Bates had caught a ride to their Huntsville, Ala., homes, from Chattanooga, Tenn.

Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief of the defense, questioned Mrs. Price in an effort to show discrepancies in her story, as compared with testimony she gave in previous trials. Mrs. Price replied to one question: "If I testified that, it's true."

State Mum On Compromise

State attorneys did not indicate whether the agreement in Wright's case, waiving capital punishment, might be followed in the trials still impending for six negroes. A source close to the prosecution, however, said "all the cases may be settled by next week."

In reversing death sentences in the "Scottsboro" case, the Supreme Court once held the negroes were without adequate counsel, in the first trials at Scottsboro; and on the second occasion, that negroes were excluded from the Alabama juries handling the case.

Leibowitz has announced he will appeal the new convictions—"twenty times, if necessary."

Scottsboro Case Negroes 'Dazed' by New Freedom

Four Destined to Become Subjects of Experiment in Social Rehabilitation; 'Not Through With Other Five Boys', Defense Attorney Leibowitz Declares

CINCINNATI, July 25 (AP)—Breathing the air of freedom for the first time in more than six years, four 'teen age Negro "survivors" of the famous "Scottsboro case" left for New York tonight, destined to become subjects in an unique experiment in social rehabilitation.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer who was chief of defense counsel for nine youths originally accused, traveled with them and paused to condemn what he termed "Alabama justice," that resulted in convictions for the other five.

"Just why they were convicted is a question for Alabama to decide," he declared. "Justice has not been done and we're not through with this case so far as it involves those other five boys. Justice? Huh! Call it that if you want to."

He declined to divulge his plans.

The four in his party, however, enjoyed baths "with the first soap we're had in more'n two weeks," one said, and with something more than prison fare under their belts, whiled away two hours in a Negro neighborhood motion picture theater.

The four, Eugene Williams, Roy Wright, light-skinned Willie Roberson and bespectacled Olen Montgomery, were "too dazed," they said, to say much about their new-found freedom.

Leibowitz said "the boys just can't be turned loose," after nearly six and a half years in jail, and declared he hoped they would be "placed in some vocational school where they could learn a trade."

Another member of the party said they probably would become "wards of some sort" of the American Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"It's certain to be a most unique experiment," he said. "The boys, two of them only 12 or 13 years old when they went to jail, have been away from everything for more than six years. Three of them," (Montgomery, Wright and Williams) were sentenced to death. Now, they're free."

Leibowitz said no effort would be made to "capitalize" on them or commercialize the case.

The party left Decatur "within three minutes after the boys were freed," announcing plans to go to Chattanooga, headed instead for Nashville, under police protection, Liebowitz said.

There, they were unable to arrange for air transportation to New York, and came on here by train. Inability to arrange a flight from here similarly caused a change in plan.

Scottsboro Boy Blasts Perjured Tale

Victoria Price Lies Are Shattered by Wright in Second Trial

DECATUR, Ala., July 20.—Andy Wright, one of the nine Negro youths accused in the Scottsboro frame-up cases, testified in his own behalf today, blasting to bits the perjured story of Victoria Price, alleged attack victim.

Denying that he had taken part in an alleged assault upon Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, the tall, slender Negro youth told the all-white jury that he did not even know the women were on the train until it reached Paint Rock, Ala., where he and the other eight Negro boys were seized by a posse in 1931.

Wright also denied that he had ever accused any of the other Scottsboro defendants of "rape," thus offsetting a trick used by Alabama officials to force "confessions" out of the boys by making them falsely accuse each other.

NO TRIAL SINCE '31

It was the first time Wright, the brother of Roy Wright, another of the accused boys, has been tried since 1931. For almost seven years, the defendant, along with six other of the young Negroes, has been confined under torturous conditions in Alabama prisons without a trial.

Testimony in the trial of Wright began after the State had agreed not to ask for the death penalty for the Negro youth and the defense had waived the calling of venire of 65 jurors.

The agreement not to request the death penalty for Wright was one of the first significant admissions by the state indicating the crass frame-up nature of its case. However, the jury which tries Wright may still find him "guilty" and fix his punishment at death.

Announcement of the agreement came yesterday from Assistant Attorney General Thomas F. Lawson, chief prosecutor of the boys. No comment on the announcement came from Samuel S. Leibowitz, head defense counsel. Judge W. W. (Speed) Callahan, notorious for his anti-Negro remarks during the trials, is on the bench.

Present in the court today was Lester Carter, one of the two white boys, in whose presence Victoria Price said the alleged attacks occurred. Carter will testify for the defense. Both Carter and Ruby Bates, the other white woman involved, have since the trial in 1931, declared that none of the boys "touched either of the women."

As the first witness for the state, the Price woman was again enmeshed in a maze of contradictions by Leibowitz who cross-examined her. She suffered many lapses in memory.

At one point she stated brazenly: "If I said that, then it's true," seeking to create the impression that whatever she said was "true" because she said it.

STATE WITNESSES

Other witnesses for the State included: W. H. Hill, station agent at Paint Rock, Ala., where the nine Negro youths were first threatened with lynching in 1931; Hill's two sons, H. C. and Lester; Luther Morris; and Lee Adams, who claimed he was driving his automobile near the freight train when a fight took place between the Negro boys and the white boys in one of the cars.

Following the trial of Andy Wright, Charlie Weems is scheduled to go on trial. The other Negro youths will be tried at the rate of "two a week" according to a previous announcement of Judge Callahan.

The ninth defendant, Haywood Patterson, is in the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham under a sentence of seventy-five years.

The defense caught W. H. Hill, Paint Rock station agent, in a flat lie. Hill testified that he had seen Andy Wright get off the train in Paint Rock.

Leibowitz, during cross examination, walked in front of Wright and stood between him and the witness. He then asked Hill to identify Wright. Hill was unable to do so, stating that Andy, who is over six feet tall, was of average height.

COMMITTEE ISSUES STATEMENT

The Scottsboro Committee issued the following statement yesterday.

"Because of repeated rumors that the cases of the Scottsboro boys may be settled by compromise, the Scottsbro Defense Committee affirms that it is not party to any compromise agreement whatsoever. The committee under no circumstances will surrender the rights of the defendants. It will continue the legal battle in the courts until every recourse is exhausted. The committee is wholly convinced of the complete innocence of all the nine boys on the basis of the original evidence and the opinion of the trial Judge James E. Horton. Whether the present trials in Decatur result in long-prison sentences or death sentences the committee will prosecute appeals at once with vigor. The basis for appeal to the Federal courts has already been laid."

ASSAULT CASE COMPROMISED; NEGRO SAVED

State Agrees That It Won't Seek Death Penalty In Wright's Trial

LAWYERS IN CONCLAVE

Alleged Victim Of Attack Attends Conference At Decatur

By James C. Hutto
Post Staff Correspondent

DECATUR, July 19.—Alabama's Asst. Atty.-Gen. Thomas F. Lawson today announced that defense and prosecution had reached a compromise in the case of Andy Wright, one of the Scottsboro Negroes, under which the state will not ask for the death penalty.

Lawson said that under the terms of the agreement defense counsel in turn would waive the calling of a special venire of prospective jurymen and would accept a jury drawn from the regular panel of 35 names.

The compromise, first in the six-year history of the Scottsboro cases, was reached after a three-hour conference between members of defense and prosecution staffs, at which Mrs. Victoria Price, alleged victim of the Scottsboro attack, was present.

Lawson declined to say whether the compromise would affect the trials of six other Scottsboro defendants scheduled to face juries at this term of Morgan Circuit Court.

Under Alabama law, the defense has the right to demand a special panel of 65 names in addition to the regular venire of 35 in capital cases.

Lawson's announcement was taken to indicate that the court will proceed with the trial of Wright, scheduled to begin today, despite the illness of Defense Atty. Clarence Watts.

Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, had no comment on the compromise.

Scottsboro Cases Closed With Four Defendants Freed

Negro, Still Under Death Sentence, May Fight

Others Will Not

Defense Expected To Let 4 Serve Sentences

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 24.—(AP)—Freedom for four "Scottsboro" negroes, and penitentiary terms for two others, came in swift succession here today, and a source competent to speak of the famous ... case said "this is the end of these trials."

After more than six years in Alabama jails, four defendants were released here at noon.

Laughing and smiling, Olen Montgomery, Willie Roberson, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright ran out of the Morgan County jail and were driven out a highway leading to Nashville. They were accompanied by two State Highway Patrolmen and by the Scottsboro defense chief, Samuel S. Leibowitz.

A few minutes earlier a jury returned a guilty verdict and fixed punishment at 75 years imprisonment for Charlie Weems. Ozie Powell pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder, and was sentenced to 20 years.

The rape charges were dropped in Powell's case, as they were against the four freed. Powell was sentenced for an attack on Deputy Sheriff Edgar Blalock in January, 1936, made while the negroes were being transferred from Decatur to Birmingham.

One Still In Death Cell

A death decree still is on the record against one "Scottsboro" defendant, Clarence Norris; and two others are under prison sentences, Andy Wright, 99 years, and Heywood Patterson, 75 years.

It was predicted by a high source the defense "will drop the appeals in the Heywood Patterson and Andy Wright cases, and the Governor will extend clemency to Clarence Norris."

Thus, the source which declined to be quoted directly, foresaw the end of the case, which began March 25, 1931, when the nine negroes were taken from a freight train at Paint Rock, Ala.

Prosecution of the case during the six intervening years has cost the State between $50,000 and $75,000, according to Alabama Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael.

A prepared statement, issued by Asst. Atty. Gen. Thomas S. Lawson, Solicitor Melvin Hutson, of Decatur, and Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of the Scottsboro circuit, said the prosecution staff considered Roberson and Montgomery innocent and would release Williams and Roy Wright, brother of Andy Wright, because they were juveniles at the time of the alleged crime and "in view of the fact they have been in jail for six and one-half years."

In vivid contrast with the original trials at Scottsboro in 1931, the courtroom was virtually empty when the Weems jury came in at 11 a.m. to begin the most eventful 30 minutes of the six-year history of the case.

At Scottsboro, troops guarded the courtroom and hundreds tried vainly for seats.

The Weems jury was the 11th to hear the evidence in the "Scottsboro" case. All but one returned verdicts of guilty, and that, the Roy Wright jury at Scottsboro in 1931, failed to agree.

Set Aside Two Times

Twice the U. S. Supreme Court set aside death sentences, first because the defendants were "without benefit of adequate counsel" in the original trials, and later holding negroes were systematically excluded from the juries which handled the case.

The latter ruling brought changes in jury methods in many deep South states.

Negroes were drawn in the jury panel for each of the last series of trials, but none served.

Leibowitz, worn by the strain of nearly two weeks in a sweltering courtroom, was jubilant after the cases were dropped. "No statement," he told newspapermen as he left Decatur.

There was no demonstration in Decatur as the cases were dropped. The negroes were gone within 25 minutes. No crowd gathered either at the courthouse or jail.

The prosecution's prepared statement said Williams and Roy Wright were released on the "condition they leave the State, never to return." Their jail terms were such prosecution thought "the ends of justice would be met at this time by releasing these two juveniles."

The escape attempt which resulted in Powell's sentence was one of the most sensational developments in the long court history of the case.

On Jan. 24, 1936, he cut Blalock acting as a guard, at the top of Lacon Mountain in northern Alabama. Powell was shot by Sheriff Street Sandlin, of Morgan County, the driver of the car in which Blalock, Powell and two other defendants in the case were riding.

For days Powell hovered near death, but was saved when the best medical attention in Alabama was accorded him at the order of Gov. Graves. Since that attempt, the negroes have been carried between here and Birmingham—where they were held between trials—by highway patrolmen in a specially constructed prisoner transfer truck. Birmingham is 90 miles away.

Negroes Under Sentence

Of the negroes under sentence, Wright and Norris are in jail at Birmingham. Heywood Patterson is under medical care at Montgomery. Doctors are treating an infected leg, caused by an injury received prior to his arrest at Paint Rock, Ala.

Weems and Powell probably will be returned from Decatur to the Birmingham jail, or moved directly to Kilby. Leibowitz entered the case shortly after the original trials at Scottsboro. The defendants were parties to many law suits attempting to determine who should represent them.

First proposals for a compromise of the cases were launched before the death of Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr. Knight was special prosecutor in the cases, having been attorney general at the time of the alleged assault.

Knight died before the present series of trials began, and Lawson, his assistant during the many court sessions, succeeded him. It was Knight who carried the wounded Blalock to medical aid after the deputy had been ripped by Powell's knife.

The last few days of the trial had seen Leibowitz hurl charges of "hypocrisy" in the case, and "perjury" at Mrs. Price's testimony. He was warned by Judge W. W. Callahan to change his tactics or "get ready for trouble" during the Weems trial.

Another dramatic moment in the trial was the appearance of Ruby Bates in 1933 to take the stand and repudiate her story of the alleged attack. This was one of the things that caused Trial Judge James E. Horton to set aside Patterson's second death conviction on the grounds of "insufficient evidence."

SCOTTSBORO TRIAL DROPS DEATH PLEA

State Changes Front for the First Time in 6½-Year History of Cases

LENIENCY FOR ALL HINTED

But No Assurance Is Given That It Will Go Beyond Present Defendants

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., July 19—The first sign of a let-up in the prosecution of nine Negroes arrested six and a half years ago on a charge of attacking two white girls on a Southern railway freight train came today in Morgan County Court, when the State agreed to waive the death penalty in the case of Andy Wright.

Thus Wright, being retried a sequel to the United States Supreme Court order setting aside the verdict of a Jackson County jury condemning him to death, became the first of the nine defendants to face a jury without having his life placed in jeopardy under the Alabama statute which permits juries to determine whether the penalty for the type of crime involved in these cases be prison for ten years or the electric chair.

Wright, sitting with his back against the wall behind the table at which sat his chief counsel, Samuel Leibowitz of New York, heard the news of the State's change of front without a flicker of expression. Only last week a fellow-defendant, Clarence Norris, was convicted and sentenced to death. Ninety miles away in Birmingham, Heywood Patterson, saved from death three time by reversals of jury verdicts, waits in jail for his lawyers to appeal from his most recent sentence of seventy-five years' imprisonment.

Quest for Jury Is Begun

Mr. Leibowitz and the attorneys for the State, Thomas S. Lawson, Assistant Attorney General; Melvin C. Hutson, the circuit solicitor here, and H. C. Bailey, prosecutor of the original trials at Scottsboro, in Jackson County, refused to comment when asked if the attitude taken today should be considered as precedent for the six cases still awaiting trial.

They proceeded with the selection of a jury, with the defense exercising the same meticulous care as if this were still a capital case.

Once the State had consented to waive the death penalty in Wright's case, however, Mr. Leibowitz agreed to the dismissal of a special venire of sixty-five Morgan County citizens called to supplement the regular panel of thirty-five. Many of this panel of thirty-five were absent today, probably because of the heavy thunderstorms which struck Northern Alabama last night and this morning, turning roads into muddy swamps but lowering the torrid temperatures.

When Judge W. W. Callahan recessed court until 9 A. M. tomorrow, progress in the selection of the jury had been halted by challenges for cause which left the panel of veniremen short of the required thirty. The hour was too late for the Sheriff to round up the additional ten veniremen deemed necessary by Judge Callahan to conform with the letter of the law.

"It's all right with me," Mr. Leibowitz told the court, expressing a readiness to draw the jury from the twenty or more veniremen on hand. "It seems to me that one twelve is about as good as another."

Judge Callahan expressed the fear, however, that "some one searching through this record might seize upon a technicality" and get another reversal in the Appellate Courts. Drawing ten more names from the jury box, he instructed Sheriff J. Street Sandlin to round up the veniremen by tomorrow morning.

The oft-repeated charges of the Negroes, accused by Victoria Price, a white woman, of attacking her and Ruby Bates, who has repudiated the accusation, have made it increasingly difficult to find twelve residents of this community without fixed opinions regarding the guilt or innocence of the defendants.

One talesman examined this afternoon said he frequently had heard his friends say they believed the Negroes guilty, but that he had yet to hear any one in Morgan County express the view that they might be innocent.

The decision of the State to waive the death penalty in Wright's case came after a brief consultation between opposing counsel.

Accuser Clings to Story

It followed a two-and-a-half hour private questioning of Mrs. Price by the three lawyers for the State during which she was given to understand that she could recant the whole charge against the Negroes without fear of prosecution for perjury. She stuck to her story.

Of the five besides Wright who remain to be tried, two were juveniles at the time of the alleged crime and there are circumstances casting special doubt on the guilt of two others. A prosecution lawyer hinted today that an important announcement would be made before the end of the week regarding the disposition of these four cases. This lawyer also predicted that Norris never would be put to death. The Governor has the power to commute the sentence to imprisonment.

DEATH SENTENCE METED TO NORRIS BY ALABAMA JURY

"I Will Appeal That Sentence To Hell and Back," Declares Leibowitz, Defense Attorney in Scottsboro Case.

By J. C. CHUNN
(Staff Correspondent)

DECATUR, Ala., July 22—Impaled once again by the blood-lust of the Alabama rabble, Clarence Norris, one of the nine Scottsboro boys, [illegible] sentenced to death for the third time [illegible] Judge W. W. "Speed" Callahan, the leering Czar of red-necked prejudice, who says that "these imps must be destroyed."

After four hours of deliberation, an all-white jury last Thursday returned a verdict holding Norris guilty of having criminally attacked Victoria Price on a freight train March 25, 1931.

Jurors Laugh

Judge Callahan read the verdict, carrying death by electrocution, discharged the jurors and sent them out—LAUGHING.

The jurors convicted Norris despite the shattering of Victoria Prices testimony in minutest detail by Defense Counsel Samuel Leibowitz and Associate Counsel C. J. Watts.

"We would not believe the testimony of Victoria Price under oath," asserted R. S. Watson and Sol Wallace, deputy sheriffs from Huntsville, home of the Price woman.

This meant nothing to the implacable, baiting Callahan.

White Women Can't Yield

"I also want you to remember," he reminded the jury before it deliberated, "that where the woman is WHITE, there is a strong presumption under the law that she did not yield to the advances of a Negro."

"No white man in Alabama would convict another white man on such testimony as that offered by Victoria Price," Mr. Watts told the jury.

The mother of Ruby Bates, one of the original "Scottsboro girls," told the jurors that Victoria Price had a "bad reputation."

"After the arrest," Mrs. Bates testified, "she and Ruby 'entertained' two boys in their jail cell. The boys were not removed until I complained to the authorities."

But testimony, regardless of its nature, was but as chaff in the wind of the powerful behind-the-scenes forces at work inside and outside of the sweltering courtroom during the trial.

"They Shall Die"

To John Wexley's dramatic challenge, "They shall not die!" the Alabama mob has savagely, flung back the answer, "They shall die!"

Grimly accepting leadership of this mob is Judge W. W. Callahan, nicknamed "Speed" because of the haste with which he rushed through the first trials over which he presided.

It is he who stubbornly employs the legardemain of obscure legal procedure to confound and harrass the defense attorneys. It is he who intercepts their plans and moodily baits them in the courtroom.

Rabble Wants Blood

Liberal, intelligent elements within the State would effect a compromise in the case because of the doubt as to the guilt of the boys and cost of the trials. But the rabble wants blood. Callahan and other politicians have their ears to the ground. They know what the rabble seeks.

Confronted by this monster of prejudice, Attorney Leibowitz, after sentence was pronounced by Judge Callahan Monday, visibly upset, vowed: "I'll appeal this sentence to hell and back."

The factory-like production basis upon which Judge Callahan announced he would run off the trials, was interrupted last Thursday when Mr. Watts was incapacitated by the heat and the strain he had been under. A continuance of a week in the next scheduled trial was granted.

Wright Trial Monday

But, nonetheless, he proceeded with the trial of Andy Wright this Monday. Charlie Weems is to go on trial this Thursday.

Leibowitz is seeking to have Ozie Powell committed to a State institution, claiming that he has gone instane during his six years in jail. Powell was shot last year after he was alleged to have stabbed a deputy sheriff while being escorted between Birmingham and this city.

Judge Callahan denied every motion made in behalf of the boys by Mr. Leibowitz. One of these denied motions, an effort to have the trial of Norris transferred to Federal court, is expected to form the basis for the appeal in behalf of Norris.

Denied Fair Trial

Leibowitz will claim that the allowance of only one change of venue under Alabama law has effectually prevented the boys from getting a fair trial, due to the preserved state of animosity which exists against them in Decatur and Morgan Counties.

Compromise In Scottsboro Case Talked Again

State Waives Demand For Electric Chair In Second Trial

By LeROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 19—(AP)—The shadow of the electric chair which has hovered over the "Scottsboro case" for six years vanished for one defendant today and brought new speculation the famed attack case soon may end by a compromise settlement.

Nine negroes are charged in the case of a gang attack of two white women—Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates.

The state agreed today to waive capital punishment in the case of Andy Wright and 24 veniremen of a necessary panel of 30 was completed when court recessed until tomorrow.

A source close to the prosecution said "all of these cases may be settled by next week," but the officials concerned declined to comment. No such decision has been reached in the case of Charlie Weems, who will go on trial Thursday, the State said.

The State agreed to ask only an imprisonment sentence after conference of attorneys. Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, Assistant Attorney General Thomas L. Lawson prosecution head, and Solicitors Melvin Hutson and H. G. Bailey took part in the conferences.

Wright "was one of the younger negroes" in the case and "is not regarded by the State as a leader of the attacks," Lawson said after the agreement was reached. Prosecution lawyers conferred with Mrs. Price before Leibowitz was called into the conference.

Lawson declined to say whether the agreement in the Wright case would be discussed for other cases. Five negroes are yet to be tried. Two have been convicted in the new series of trials.

A death verdict was returned against Clarence Norris last week by a Morgan County jury after Lawson had asked the electric chair "as a warning to other rapists" and "to protect the womanhood of Alabama." Heywood Patterson has been sentenced 75 years imprisonment asked in the Patterson trial.

Judge W. W. Callahan today dismissed the special venire of 65 after the agreement was reached. The jury was chosen from the regular panel of 35 veniremen, used in non-capital cases.

William Ritcher, of New York, was here to aid Leibowitz. Clarence Watts defense staff member from Huntsville, Ala., was not present. He became ill last week, forcing a postponement of trial of Charlie Weems until Thursday.

This is Wright's first trial since April, 1931. At that time, along with seven other defendants, he was sentenced to the electric chair, but the sentence was reversed by the United States Supreme Court which ruled the negroes had not had adequate defense.

Death sentences for Norris and Patterson later were overturned by the Supreme Court when it held negroes were systematically excluded from jury service in Alabama courts where the negroes were tried.

The negroes are accused of a mass assault on Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates. The state alleges the assault took place on a freight train speeding through North Alabama. The women said they were returning to their Huntsville, Ala., homes after an unsuccessful search for work in Chattanooga, Tenn.

GUILTY AS HELL!

"WHERE THE WOMAN is white, there is a strong presumption under the law that she did not yield to the advances of a Negro."

This pearl of wisdom came from the lips of Judge W. W. Callahan in his "charge" to the Alabama jury which sat in judgement last week in the world-infamous Scottsboro Case. How anyone capable of perpetrating such a statement is allowed to disgrace the bench of justice is more than we can see.

Put before Judge Callahan, the jury and the entire world, were cold-blooded, iron-bound, irresistible facts. That Victoria Price, a woman with a scarlet past, a lost unprincipled soul, accused a group of Negro lads of attacking her and her companion, Ruby Bates. That Ruby Bates, who had at least a conscience, broke down, repudiated her testimony and admitted coercion. And yet Color-hater Callahan says to a jury and to the entire nation something to the effect that the lowest and most despicable white tramp has more principle and more moral standing than the most decent respectable and honorable black man.

THE PASSING OF A PLAGUE

At the time of the "Scottsboro" attack one of the defendants, the State of Alabama now says, was 12 years old and another 13, one was too ill, in the opinion of a physician, to have participated in the attack, another was "practically blind".

The man who was too ill to participate in the crime and the man who was "practically blind" have told "plausible stories" consistently in all of their trials. For these reasons the State yesterday dropped its prosecution of these four and had them escorted to the Tennessee line with Samuel Leibowitz and his associates trailing behind. Tennessee is welcome to all such plunder, so far as Alabama is concerned.

Thus the first break in the long and disastrous deadlock occurs with dramatic swiftness and utter finality. Heaven be praised!

What next? The Advertiser is not privy to the plans of the State with reference to the five remaining defendants, one of whom, Norris, is under death sentence, but the Associated Press quotes an unnamed person as predicting that Norris will be granted executive clemency and that the appeals in other cases will be dropped. Ozie Powell, who in an attempt to escape the custody of officers, stabbed a deputy sheriff, pleaded guilty to an assault charge and was sentenced to 20 years. The rape charge against him was erased.

The State could abandon its remaining cases, or it could ask for the indictment of the principals upon charges of simple assault without reference to rape, which is a capital offense. The principals could then be tried for assault and if convicted given nominal sentences.

The Advertiser is confident that Governor Graves will not let the death sentence against Clarence Norris stand. The Governor can commute a death sentence to a prison term, but cannot reduce a prison sentence, except by parole or pardon.

The Advertiser feels sure that the Governor will in the end put Clarence Norris in the same position before the law as those who received lesser sentences for the same offense face. That would be fair and sensible.

The Attorney-General and his colleagues did a good day's work yesterday and they deserve the thanks of the people of Alabama. But there is other work to be done in the same vineyard of hog weeds, dog fennels and poison ivy. In the sweat of our faces shall we live, so, let us labor mightily in our appointed vineyard! For as matters stand, less than half of "this body of death," of which we have spoken aforetime, has been thrown away!

At Last We Are Rid Of The Scottsboro Case

The Scottsboro case is ended. The state has dropped all charges against four of the nine defendants. In reality, the charge of assault on Victoria Price and Ruby Bates has been nol prossed in five of the cases, for while Clarence Norris Negro is under sentence, it is for a charge of assault with intent to murder growing out of an attack on a deputy sheriff. The other four Negroes remain under conviction on the charges of rape, with varying sentences imposed on them.

The dropping of five of these cases and the reported agreements concerning the other cases in which convictions have been secured represent a triumph of common sense and moderation. These cases, dragging on for more than six years in an atmosphere of doubt and dispute, with all the unsavory elements that have entered into them, have been a perennial nightmare to Alabama. The great majority of the people of this state, The News-Age-Herald is convinced, will rejoice to be rid of them.

At most, the truth of these charges has been extremely doubtful. There has been evidence and testimony to indicate that the Negroes actually were not guilty as charged. One of the accusers, Ruby Bates, repudiated her original testimony that she was assaulted, and denied that there were any assaults on either her or Victoria Price. The latter testified throughout the numerous trials that she was assaulted, though her testimony, in its conflicting statements and in its discrepancies with the testimony of others, was of such a nature that it was never conclusive.

Grave doubt therefore surrounded these charges. In view of this doubt, and in view of all the other circumstances, no one could be certain of where truth and justice lay. In this uncertainty, the sensible thing from every standpoint was to do just what the state has done—end the sorry mess in the most convenient way.

Apparently there has been an agreement between the state and the defense that the most convenient way to end the cases was to drop the remaining charges and let the convictions stand, together with an understanding, according to reports credited as authoritative, that clemency would be granted in the case of the death sentence imposed on one of the defendants.

The status of the five Negroes under conviction is varied. In the case of Ozie Powell, the charge of rape has been dropped, but he has pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder in connection with his attack on Deputy Sheriff Edgar Blalock in January, 1936, when he was being transported to the Jefferson County Jail. For this he has been sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary. There is no question that this was a criminal act and that he was guilty as charged. Accordingly, in whatever adjustments might be made concerning these cases in the future, his should be considered separately from the rest.

As for the other four under conviction, the varied sentences imposed and the fact that the rape charges were dropped against the other five defendants clearly call for adjustments. Either all nine Negroes were guilty, or none was. Since there was so much doubt of their guilt that the assault charges were nol prossed in five of the cases, it would hardly be fair to let the sentences stand as they are.

In the case of Clarence Norris, sentenced to be executed, there is assurance, apparently, that the death sentence will be commuted. Another defendant, Andy Wright, is under sentence of 99 years. Two others, Heywood Patterson and Charlie Weems, are under sentence of 75 years.

Thus, while the Scottsboro trials are ended, there remain further questions for consideration. The responsibility for the adjustment and disposition of the cases under conviction rests on the governor. Since the governor doubtless knew of the disposition that was to be made of the cases in court whether or not he gave his own sanction to the arrangement, he must surely be contemplating an exercise of clemency powers which as nearly as possible will prevent undue punishment of some while others go free. This paper believes that the governor can be trusted to deal wisely with these convictions.

What the state officials in charge of the prosecution have done should be accepted by all Alabamians, and the state's course upheld by public opinion, regardless of individual feelings concerning the question of guilt or innocence. For let everyone remember that whatever may have been his opinion about the Scottsboro case, he could not be sure that there was any foundation for his opinion.

And whatever the governor may do in adjusting the sentences of those under conviction, it should likewise be accepted by all Alabamians. The final responsibility in this will be solely the governor's. The public should realize that, in the circumstances, the governor will be closer to the subject and will have a fuller knowledge of all its aspects than any other person. Whatever he sees fit to do, we may all be sure, will be done in accordance with the best dictates of his judgment and conscience. Let us all trust the governor's conscience and judgment in this matter. Let us all abide by any decision he reaches in making adjustments.

The state's action in dropping these trials was one of high courage as well as of good sense. The officials responsible for the decision and any others who might have had a hand in bringing it about are to be highly commended. And if there are persons to whom this disposition of the Scottsboro case does not give satisfaction, they can at least take comfort in the fact that a great and troublesome burden has been lifted from Alabama.

WE WEREN'T RAPED

SCOTTSBORO'S FRAMING TOLD

"These defendants did not, as much as touch me [illegible] Victoria Price!"—Ruby Bates, ex-mill girl and most central and dramatic figure in the Scottsboro case, swore at the second trial of the nine Negro boys.

In spite of her testimony and that of Dr. Bridges, late white physician of Scottsboro, who declared that Ruby and Victoria had not been raped, the state of Alabama continues to legally lynch the Scottsboro boys or doom them to a horrible death of long prison terms.

Ruby Bates' confession on the witness stand at the second trial did more than anything else to stop the legal lynching of the boys for over a half decade! Here we have her true story about the ill-fated train ride from Chattanooga to Stevenson, Ala.—a ride which turned the spotlight of civilization on the barbarity of Alabama!

By RUBY BATES.

(By permission of The Daily Mirror)

During the night we had started making plans to leave the next day on a hobo trip. The plans we was making up was for all four of us. But Jack Tiller, on account of his wife, said he couldn't go with us but would join us in Chattanooga.

The next day, March 24, 1931, all my folks was away. My mother was to work. Victoria had said that we ought to wear overalls. She had rid on freight trains before and she knew all about it. I put on a pair of my brother's old overalls and went to Victoria's house.

Her and her mother was quarreling when I came in. She told me that Victoria would not stop till she got me in trouble. She tried to get me to go back home and not go with Victoria. Victoria told her mother we was just going for a walk.

We went down to the colored cemetery and there we was joined by Jack and Lester. There were lots of people in the train we boarded. Some of them were Negro and some white.

It was about 8:30 when we arrived at Chattanooga. When we got off the train it was dark. We started down the track and met a boy who said his name was Carolina Slim. His real name was Orville Gilley.

Lester and the Gilley boy builded a fire and then left us in the jungle while they went for food. They were gone about forty minutes before they returned with food. We made some coffee in a tin bucket and then we ate what they got. And then set around and talked for the rest of the night. Gilley, he talked about hoboing ever since he was 12 years old and he knew a lot of poetry about hoboing.

Misses Jack.

Then Victoria said for us to go back to Huntsville in the morning. She said she didn't want to be away from Jack.

The next morning we moved over into another place from where we had been that night, and the boys builded another fire and went out for more food. While they was gone a white man and a colored man came by where we were. They asked us if there was anything they could do for us. We told them there was nothing they could do, so they went off.

Later there was two colored men came along. They spoke to us and asked us if we was alone in the hobo jungle. We said no, that we wasn't there alone. Then they asked if they could get some wood to go on the fire. We told them no, that we was letting the fire go out. I asked them what time the train came in that went west. They said it would be between eleven and twelve. Then they went on away.

Victoria and I went up on the railroad and saw Lester coming. Victoria told him that two Negroes had insulted me, and it made Lester mad. She told him this before I could get a chance to tell him better, and he went down into a swamp where some other Negroes were. He said he asked them if they had said anything to us and they said no, they hadn't. Lester and one of these men almost fought; but, when he came back, I got a chance to tell him that Victoria had told a lie. Lester then said he was sorry he had said what he did to the Negro.

Then the Gilley boy joined us again. We all went down to the railroad yard and sat down on a pile of cross-ties waiting for the train to come on. When it came we walked down looking for a open boxcar, but we couldn't find one. So when the train started to pull out we all grabbed the side of a boxcar and got between that and the one next to it, and stayed there until the train went through the Chattanooga tunnel. Then we got on top of the car. We stayed on top of the car until the train got to Stevenson, where it stopped to take on coal and water.

The sun was strong enough, but the wind was cold and we weren't comfortable at all on top of the car. It was too cold to be comfortable, even though along the way we could see that the trees were beginning to bud a little.

We all got off the train at Stevenson and stood around. Nobody bothered us. You don't have any trouble on freight trains unless you get on Hard Rocks' and Brewers' trains. They're brakemen that everybody knows. They're hard men and they won't let nobody ride.

When the train started again we got into a gondola car to keep out of the wind, anyway. There were about eight gondola cars in a row. We were in about the third or fourth one from the engine.

Later on, there were five other boys came to the car next to ours. They was standing in the car and talking over into our car to Lester and the Gilley boy. Some Negroes came into their car. I don't know what they said, but a fight started.

Decide to Stay Out.

Lester and Gilley started to join the fight, but decided not to, for they was not sure what it was about. Lester and some of the other boys—I guess they got scared—jumped off the train. The Gilley boy started to jump off, too, but one of the Negro boys pulled him back into the car.

The Gilley boy said that the Negro told him they wouldn't touch him, that it was the other white boys they were after. I didn't see any of the Negro boys very good. The fight was in the next car to us.

While the fight was going on, Victoria said to me: "I reckon those boys will tell the law in Stevenson and they will put us off."

I said they had no right to bother us if we had done nothing to them. After the Gilley boy came back to where Victoria and I was, I did not see the Negroes any more until the train was stopped at Paint Rock.

Victoria and I didn't intend to get off. We just looked over the top of the gondola to see what was going on. We seen a mob of about 400 people around the train, so we decided we'd better get off. When we got off we seen them chasing some Negro boys up and down the train.

They got hold of nine boys that wasn't all together in the same car and tied them together with a rope. Then the train done pulled out.

Well, when me and Victoria got off we started walking toward the engine. But we saw people coming along from that way so we started off towards the end of the train, but there was people coming from that side, too, so we turned back.

And then Victoria fell. The people caught up with us and carried her over into a store. They called a doctor and he said it was high blood pressure. She had had them spells many times before. He said she would be all right in a few minutes, which she was.

I was pretty excited, and I couldn't get everything that was going on. The crowd was mostly all armed and kept hollering:

"How many did they get? How many did they get off of the train?"

At first the people around were only talking about the boys being charged with vagrancy and riding on freight trains. I was in the grocery store with Victoria all the time, but I could see the men and the crowd outside. They kept asking me what happened and I only answered that I didn't know. That's what I told them.

Put Them in Truck.

Then I saw them bring the nine Negro boys, all tied up with ropes, over near the store and put them in a truck. Then someone come in the store and started talking about a rape case. I didn't pay them any mind, because I was scared with so many people around and being caught on a freight train, and I didn't know even what they meant with the word "rape."

When they said we was going to be taken to Scottsboro, where they had taken the Negro boys, I was still more scared. I thought they'd get us for riding on freight trains. I didn't want my mother to know I was being put in jail and I had heard about them being tough on people in the Scottsboro court.

I was wondering how I'd get out.

Then they put Victoria and I in a car with five or six men. The Gilley boy and John Gleason, one of the white boys that had been in the fight, was put in another car headed for Scottsboro. There was at least twenty cars altogether went to go to Scottsboro.

Victoria Says "Rape."

One of the men in the car started to ask Victoria what had happened. She started to tell a story with the word "rape" in it. But the driver of the car stopped her. He said he didn't want to be a witness and he didn't want to hear what she said.

The ride only took about twenty minutes. When we arrived at Scottsboro there was a crowd of more than 500 people starting us right in the face.

And then we saw Lester and the other boys from the train. They was standing on the jailhouse steps. The sheriff was standing there with them.

Then they took us out of the car and carried us through the crowd into the jail.

It's a dirty, rotten place. When you go up the stairs on the right of the hospital room there's the Negro cells. They locked the Negroes up in one of these cells.

Victoria and I was taken over two blocks in a car to the doctor's. It was still light and the streets were full of people. There was crowds on the sidewalks and in the roads and everywhere else. All over you could hear the word "lynching."

Some were saying they should have lynched those Negroes right when they took them off the train. Some was saying they'd get them later if only they couldn't get National Gaurds to watch them. Some was saying as soon as they could get ammunition ready they'd go and get them in the jail.

Physical Examination.

The doctor first examined Victoria and then me. He didn't ask no questions about the train. Just about ourselves.

When he got through with us they took us back to that dirty little two-story building and locked us up in a cell right at the end of the hall. All they give us to eat was some turnip greens with a piece of fat meat and a small piece of corn bread. And the bed Victoria and I had to sleep on was a three-inch mattress on the concrete floor. We stayed in this cell during the time before we went before the Grand Jury. After that they let us down to run around, around the cell where the white boys were.

Victoria, she kept on telling me I'd have to tell the same story she did or we'd have to lay out a long sentence for vagrancy. And she said I'd get Lester in trouble, too, if I didn't tell what she did, because it was against the law for a boy to be taking girls across the border from one state to another. She was older than I was—she's over 30—and I thought she knew better than I did about all these things and I believed what she said.

And every time she said "rape" I still did not know what rape was.

I never stopped to think about the Negro boys, for I thought they had us all charged with riding a freight train.

She told me what to tell over and over again. That we had been attacked. She said to tell that six Negroes attacked me and that three of them had jumped off the train. She would identify six of them as having attacked her, and she would also swear to the other three. And she said for me to take the three that was left and remember which ones they were.

So they got those nine boys into the hospital room and we was brought in there, too. They asked me to identify those boys and I said that I couldn't, except that they was the boys that were taken off the train at Paint Rock.

And then they asked Victoria. And she picked out six of them and said they had attacked her. They asked me was the three that was left the ones that attacked me and I said yes. Only they didn't say attacked, they said rape.

The boys only said: "We're not guilty."

Before we were put in the run-around there was one of the boys that Victoria told in jail was her half-brother. She told the sheriff lock him up in the cell with us. His name was Texas Slim. His real name was Odell Caldwell.

That was the day before my mother come to see me in the jail. A friend of mine from Huntsville named Oscar Campbell had a car and brought her to Scottsboro.

My mother made the sheriff take that boy right out of the cell where he was with us. She told the sheriff that he wasn't Victoria's half-brother at all. She knew all Victoria's people and she knew he wasn't any kin to her. She said she'd better not catch that boy in the cell with us again or somebody would sure smoke when she got through with them.

When they called us before the Grand Jury they asked me if I had been attacked on the train. I told them, "Yes."

They asked me to pick out the Negroes on the picture close and see if the ones that were not marked was the ones. I said, "Yes."

Then they let me go. A week from that the trial started.

OTHER PAPERS SAY

CLARENCE NORRIS' THIRD CONVICTION

(From St. Louis Post-Dispatch)

For the third time, Clarence Norris, one of the nine Scottsboro boys, has been sentenced to death by an Alabama jury. For the third time, this ignorant youth faces the premonitory terrors of the electric chair. On two previous occasions, after prolonged litigation, he was saved by the United States Supreme Court, which had some salty things to say about the medieval kind of justice served up by Alabama courts. Six years in jail for this fellow so far and three death sentences.

It seems to us that the actual consummation of the sentence would be merciful compared with the mental anguish Norris has suffered and must now be suffering. What monstrous crime did this youth commit? He and his eight fellow-defendants are charged with attacking two white women who were beating their way back to Huntsville, Ala., their home, in a freight car. They were women of notoriously bad reputation and easy virtue. One of them has long since repudiated her story. A poll of the 13 newspapermen who covered the first trial at Decatur showed 12 of them holding the evidence was too weak to justify a conviction.

At the time of the alleged attack, the Scottsboro defendants were mere boys. They were totally lacking in influential friends, education and money. It seemed like an easy thing to railroad them to the electric chair. But since they were first arrested, the boys have acquired influential friends and funds for their defense; what is more, their case has enlisted the sympathy of vast numbers of people, not only in the United States but abroad.

The issue long since has come to be whether the vindictive spirit of racial hatred can prevail against the forces of justice and tolerance. We like to think there can be only one outcome.

"FROM HELL AND BACK"

Samuel S. Leibowitz, famous New York criminal lawyer and leading counsel for the defense in the case of the State of Alabama vs. Clarence Norris, is credited with saying, when an all-white lynch jury returned a verdict carrying a death sentence in the first of the infamous Scottsboro cases to be heard for the third time:

"I will appeal the sentence to hell and back".

We can appreciate the exasperation of Mr. Leibowitz in such a situation. This probably accounts for the wrong use of prepositions in the reputed statement. We are positive the learned and eminent lawyer meant that he would appeal the shameful contempt from hell and back instead of "to hell and back." Then again, he might have had in mind the recent death of Lieutenant Governor Thos. E. Knight when he made the statement. It will be remembered that Dives in hell on beholding Lazarus in the bosom of Abraham made vain entreaties for mercy on behalf of both himself and his brethren. Mr. Leibowitz might have read the 16th chapter of St. Luke while the jury was faking deliberation and envisioned a pantomime on the narrative given therein in which Knight was Dives, Judge Callahan, the prosecutor, and the lynch jury were his brethren and poor Clarence Norris was Lazarus. This is the only explanation which can be ventured for the Leibowitz statement "to hell and back" instead of from hell and back.

CONVICTION AT SCOTTSBORO

Once more a Scottsboro defendant has been convicted and sentenced to the electric chair, and once more an appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court. Convictions of the other defendants who are to be tried in the coming weeks may be expected.

Clarence Norris, the Negro who was convicted yesterday, was given the maximum penalty, despite glaring discrepancies in the story told by Victoria Price, the chief prosecution witness, one of the two white women he and the other defendants are alleged to have attacked. Ruby Bates, the other white woman, did not appear as a witness. She long ago repudiated Mrs. Price's story, saying that it was untrue, and that neither of them was attacked by the Negroes.

At the trial which has just concluded, it was brought out, among other things, that whereas Victoria Price said she was beaten black and blue, rapped on the head with a pistol butt, smashed in the nose with a fist, and lacerated, Dr. R. R. Bridges, Jackson County physician examined her two hours after the attack was supposed to have taken place, and found no trace of any of these wounds.

Judge James E. Horton, who set aside one of the convictions in 1933, and was defeated for re-election, reviewed the testimony of Victoria Price in great detail in that famous opinion, and showed to the satisfaction of any unbiased person that the Scottsboro defendants are innocent.

Our hope is that the Supreme Court of the United States will reverse the verdict once more, and force the Alabama authorities to go through with another trial, if they are still unwilling to drop these trumped up cases. If this keeps up long enough, perhaps they will have to be reasonable, in order to keep from bankrupting Morgan County, where the recent trials have been held. Jackson County, in which Scottsboro is situated, is said to have been bankrupted years ago by the $50,000 expense of the earlier cases.

"THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS SHALL NOT DIE"

The verdict in the Norris Case occasions no surprise. The RICHMOND PLANET foretold the futility of the farcial trial given this Scottsboro defendant in an editorial published in its issue of July 17th written two days before the trial began. It used the following language:

"It is useless to take any evidence. This will have no bearing on the verdicts. Each of the defendants tried by this lynch court presided over by a lynch judge will be found guilty".

Be not discouraged. The fight will continue in unrelenting fury, until heathen Alabama repents of its cruelty to these oppressed boys and until she is scourged for her iniquities. Regardless of the decisions of the Alabama mock courts put together, millions have sworn and are determined to make good their oaths at all hazards: "The Scottsboro boys shall not die".

Is there no power able and capable of admonishing these Alabama heathens? Is there no voice carrying convictions which can tell them to "flee from the wrath to come", an inevitable result, if they persist in persecuting these innocent victims of southern race hatred, these martyrs to bestial political intrigue?

"The Scottsboro Boys Shall Not Die". This is a warning which should not go unheeded, if a dire reckoning is to be avoided.

A NEW DOUBLE STANDARD

From the Anderson (S. C.) Independent.

In Decatur, Alabama, Judge Callahan warns that he is going to hold "somebody in contempt" if Scottsboro case literature is distributed in and around his courtroom during the present trials—the Communists having made a practice of distributing this literature in the past.

On the same page which carries the Callahan story, we notice that eight Russians have been given the death sentence for treason and for attempting to wreck "national economy" in the Soviet republic of Georgia.

In a few days the Communist magazines will blaze forth with denunciations of Judge Callahan for his "Fascist edict," and in the same issues Stalin will be lauded to the skies for showing, through these latest executions, that he doesn't intend to let any capitalistic propaganda be spread in his land.

In other words, the Communists upbraid America and give us a tongue lashing the moment we curb what they consider their rights of "free speech" while over in Russia the Communists put to death those men who dare to exercise the liberties which the Communists demand in this country as their "constitutional rights." It is nothing more than the old-fashioned double standard of sex carried into government.

SCOTTSBORO JUDGE WARNS LEIBOWITZ

Court Angered by Attorney's Maner in Cross-Examining Mrs. Victoria Price

REJECTS PERJURY MOTION

Inconsistencies Brought Out Between Witness' Testimony Now and Previously

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., July 22.—Victoria Price telling her sordid story of a mass attack by nine Negroes before the eleventh jury to sit in judgment in the Scottsboro cases, spent an uncomfortable morning on the witness stand today under a cross-examination by Samuel Leibowitz, defense attorney.

The duel of wits between the New York criminal lawyer and the defiant mill worker was the highlight of a long court day in which the trial of Charlie Weems began and ended with the State and the defense submitting evidence with record-breaking speed.

This jury, like the one which condemned Andy Wright yesterday to a ninety-nine-year sentence in the penitentiary, is barred by law from sentencing Weems to death. There is no limit, however, to the length of the prison sentence it may impose.

Delivering one of the closing arguments for the State, H. G. Bailey, Jackson County Solicitor who was prosecutor of the original trials at Scottsboro, pressed the thought that this was a case in which a white woman accused a Negro of a crime worse than murder. He declared that when Weems and his companions told Mrs. Price that they were going to take her North and make her their woman" they "hurled a challenge against the laws of Alabama, the sovereignty of the State and the sanctity of white womanhood."

Mrs. Price Is First Witness

He defended his action in failing to call Lester Carter, a defense witness, who testified that in the jail at Scottsboro Mrs. Price asked him to "back up her story" so that she and her friends would not go to jail for hoboing on a freight train, by saying that even six and a half years ago Carter was "a defendant's witness." Carter was one of the white hoboes thrown off the train by the Negroes in a fight.

When Mr. Leibowitz undertook to cross-examine Mrs. Price she shouted defiant answers.

Within three minutes after her cross-examination started, Mr. Leibowitz had her contradicting herself about when she counted the Negroes who attacked her. Today she said it was after they had piled into the gondola car.

At Scottsboro, the record showed, she swore she counted them one by one as they swarmed into the car. Mrs. Price said she did not remember saying anything of the kind at Scottsboro and when Mr. Leibowitz insisted that she tell which version of her story she wanted the jury to believe, Mr. Lawson arose to demand that the court instruct counsel to show some respect for the complaining witness.

Then Mr. Leibowitz asked her to take a good look at the defendant, whom she said she had not seen for the past six years. He asked if she could identify him positively as one of the men who attacked her. She said she certainly could. Mr. Leibowitz then asked if she noted any change in his physical appearance since she last saw him. Mrs. Price studied the features of Weems for several minutes and then said:

"He's looking bigger like all over."

"Anything else?" demanded Mr. Leibowitz.

Mrs. Price studied the Negro carefully again.

"He's lighter," she said, "a little lighter and ashier-looking."

"Take a good look now and see if you can't see any other change in his appearance,'" ordered Mr. Leibowitz.

Questioned About Mustache

"I won't say,' 'said Mrs. Price, settling back in her chair.

"Do you notice his mustache?" asked the defense attorney, "he didnt have that in Scottsboro did he?"

"I don't remember that he did," said Mrs. Price.

Mr. Leibowitz asked Mrs. Price then if she knew Lester Carter, who, according to testimony in earlier trials, accompanied her and Ruby Bates on an overnight hobo trip to Chattanooga the day before she says the negroes attacked her.

"If I did I dont remember," said Mrs. Price.

All subsequent efforts of Mr. Leibowitz to probe that phase of the story were blocked by objections from the State which were sustained by the court.

When Mr. Leibowitz pressed her aggressively on her testimony at other trials on injuries suffered in the attack and other points at which she contradicted herself, Judge W. W. Callahan took a hand in the proceedings without waiting for objections from the State. Finally, when Mr. Leibowitz persisted his attack upon the complaining witness' credibility, the court warned him to desist.

"It is not too late," said the judge, who is 77 years old, "for the court to enforce its orders. Your manner is going to lead to trouble, Mr. Leibowitz and you might as well get ready for it."

The noon recess intervened and nothing happened.

Isn't it a fact that you decided to accuse these Negroes falsely to save yourself from arrest for hoboing?" asked Mr. Leibowitz in the afternoon session.

"No sir," said Mrs. Price.

Leibowitz Motion Denied

Mr. Leibowitz then asked Judge Callahan to excuse the jury in order that he might make a motion. When the door closed behind the jury, Mr. Leibowitz rose and said:

"I move that the testimony of Victoria Price be stricken from the record on the ground that her testimony is so rampant with perjury that the court is constrained——"

Judge Callahan did not let him finish. He denied the motion and ordered the Sheriff to bring back the jurors.

The selection of the jury consumed a large part of the morning session. Mr! Leibwitz aroused the court's ire at the outset by suggesting that the State pick any jury it wished since the outcome would be the same.

DEATH CHAIR DOOM OF ONE; OTHERS, JAIL

Two Who Were 'Juveniles' at Time of Crime Are Cleared of Charges

TWO AILING MEN RELEASED

Rape Accusation Against Powell Dropped When He Pleads Guilty of Assault

DECATUR, Ala., July 24 (AP)—Swift court action in the Scottsboro mass rape case freed two Negroes and left five others under sentences ranging from 20 years imprisonment to death today.

Prosecutors agreed to dismissal of charges against two who were "juveniles," one who was ill and one who was "practically blind" when possemen dragged nine Negroes from a freight train at Paint Rock, Ala., March 25, 1931.

The charges were assault in a gondola car upon two white women mill workers, Ruby Bates and Victoria Price.

Of the five other Negroes, four were under sentence for rape after a series of retrials and one, Ozie Powell, for assault with intent to murder in slashing a deputy sheriff with a knife Jan. 22, 1936.

Twice returned to Alabama by the United States supreme court, the case left the prisoners in this status today:

Clarence Norris, convicted for the third time, death.

Andy Wright, convicted second time, 99 years.

Heywood Patterson, convicted fourth time, 75 years.

Charlie Weems, convicted second time, 75 years.

Ozie Powell, convicted once of rape, who pleaded guilty to assault with intent to murder, 20 years. The original accusation against him was dropped.

Prosecutors Issue Statement

Freed after 6 1-2 years of jail life and court appearances were the following:

Olen Montgomery, once convicted and sentenced to death.

Willie Roberson, once convicted, and sentenced to death.

Eugene Williams, once convicted and sentenced to death.

Roy Wright, whose first trial ended in a jury disagreement.

Prosecutors issued a statement saying they were "convinced beyond any question of doubt, after going through eleven trials of the Scottsboro case, that the defendants that have been tried are "guilty of raping Victoria Price in the gondola car as she recited upon the witness stand."

"No Statement," Says Leibowitz

Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, stocky chief of defense counsel, had challenged her story as "perjured" in the retrial of Charlie Weems which ended in conviction today.

The United States supreme court once set aside death sentences because the defendants were "without benefit of adequate counsel" in the original trials, and later held Negroes were systematically excluded from the juries which handled the case.

Negroes were drawn in the jury panel for each of the last series of trials, but none served.

Leibowitz, worn by the strain of nearly two weeks in a sweltering court room, was jubilent after the cases were dropped. "No statement," he said.

New Agitation Is Urged

NEW YORK, July 24 (AP)—The International Labor Defense tonight urged "nation-wide action on a greater scale than ever" to free the five convicted Scottsboro case defendants.

The organization suggested mass circulation of petitions to Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama, formation of local committees and mass meetings throughout the country.

"The people of the United States have saved these boys' lives for six years," Secretary Amis Hall Jr. said.

"The people of the United States can save them again, through quick, effective mass action."

The International Labor Defense has been sponsoring the defense of the defendants.

TRIAL LAWYERS SWAP EPITHETS

Leibowitz Predicts Conviction of His Client in 'Scottsboro Case'

DECATUR, Ala., July 23 (AP)—Accusation of "hypocrisy," shouted by the "Scottsboro" defense, and a ringing state retort, echoed through the Morgan county courthouse today as another jury sifted the evidence in the mass rape case.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, the defense chief, flung the charges after he startled the court crowd by predicting conviction of Charlie Weems, the Negro on trial.

Given the case at 2:28 p.m., the jury of 12 white men was unable to reach a verdict in two and a half hours deliberation, and Judge W. W. Callahan ordered the jurymen to their hotel until 8:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The impassioned address to the jury by the noted New York criminal lawyer, whirling about a denunciation of "sanctimonious hypocrisy" in the case, brought from a state solicitor a counter charge that "Leibowitz has apparently tried to prejudice his client's case—an amazing performance."

Melvin Hutson, Decatur solicitor, said:

"If he (Leibowitz) hasn't premeditatedly tried to convict that Negro for publicity purposes, then I don't know what I'm talking about."

"Sanctimonious Hypocrisy"

It was one of the severest exchanges of defense and state in the six-year-old history of the case, in which ten juries previously have returned as many guilt verdicts against various ones of the nine Negroes charged with attacking two young white women aboard a rolling freight near Scottsboro.

Pleading before the eleventh tribunal, Leibowitz said:

"I'm sick and tired of the sanctimonious hypocrisy. Don't pay any attention when the solicitor gets up here and asks you to convict this Negro because his attorney comes from New York.

"That mob at Paint Rock (where the Negroes were taken from the freight March 25, 1931) smelt something fishy. That's the reason those Negroes weren't lynched when they were taken off that train."

Hutson, taking up the state's case, declared:

"It's headlines in the newspapers that have caused all this trouble down here. It's not the purpose of this court to play for publicity in the newspapers."

The state did not ask the death verdict for Weems. Hutson suggested "a term of years equivalent to life imprisonment" and said to the jury: "You can give him any term from 10 to 1,000 years."

Weems was the fourth of the nine Negroes to go to trial since the United States supreme court the second time reversed the state courts in the case, thus nullifying death sentences. Clarence Norris again has been sentenced to death; Andy Wright given 99 years, and Heywood Patterson, 75 years.

RUBY BATES IS "GLAD TO AID"

"I am anxious to return to Alabama at any moment to testify against the Scottsboro boys!" Ruby Bates, who now lives in New York, and who was recently dismissed from her job on the WPA, declared Tuesday.

"Neither Clarence Norris nor any of the other boys touched me or Victoria during that freight train ride on March 25, 1931," she said. "I exposed the whole frameup at the Decatur trial in 1933. (See Ruby Bates' confession on page 11.) I would have been glad to testify at Norris' trial this time, but neither side called me. Should the defense ask me to go down there and do so, I'll gladly do it."

Meanwhile, for the tenth time Victoria Price told her tale of rape by nine Negroes on a freight train bound from Chattanooga to Paint Rock, Ala., Monday, in her effort to uphold themamical law of the South and thereby send the Scottsboro boys to the chair. She succeeded in her ninth try, when a jury of white men brought in a verdict of guilty with the death penalty against Clarence Norris last Thursday.

Although the life of Andy Wright was spared when the state waived the death penalty in his case, this boy, who was only twelve years old when he was arrested in March, 1931, and charged with the crime, faces a long term in the penitentiary as a result of the tenth and same tale of Victoria Price.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, the defense lawyer, declared after the jury found Norris guilty: "I'll appeal this case to hell and back!"

In spite of rumors of compromise in the Scottsboro case, which preceded the most recent conviction of Norris, the actors in it came into court last week and repeated their familiar lines with the same gestures. And the expected climax came when the jury brought in its verdict of guilty.

Victoria Price identified Andy Wright Monday as one who raped her. Repeating the same old story, she said that the mass attack came after she and Ruby Bates had caught a ride aboard a freight train from Chattanooga back to their homes in Huntsville, Ala.

New Yorkers Jeer Verdict In Scottsboro Case

Leibowitz Plans Appeal; Defense Committee Shouts 'Prejudice'

DECATUR, ALA., July 16—(AP)—The "Scottsboro" case headed again for the United States Supreme Court today, to accompaniment of a charge "race prejudice" accompanied the new death verdict against one of nine negroes accused of a gang attack on two white women.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York lawyer and chief of defense counsel, announced readiness to appeal—"twenty times if necessary."

Defense Group Quoted

The Scottsboro defense committee, by a statement issued in New York, declared race prejudice and not evidence was responsible for the third electric chair verdict against Clarence Norris, first of the negroes to face judgment in the new series of trials in the six-year-old case.

Declaring "millions of people all over the world are shocked and horrified at the verdict," the committee statement again called upon "all persons to rally to the defense and intensify the fight for liberty of these youths."

The Supreme Court twice has reversed death verdicts of Alabama courts, once on a defense plea the negroes were without adequate counsel at their first trials at Scottsboro, Ala.; and second on a defense contention negroes were excluded from the juries handling the case.

Leibowitz Silent On Plans

Leibowitz did not reveal the plea he will make on the third trip to the high tribunal.

In Decatur, meanwhile, preparations were made to try the second negro defendant beginning Monday, in accordance with Judge W. W. Callahan's desire to clear his docket of the cases.

The second trial was to have begun immediately upon closing of the first yesterday, but illness of Clarence Watts, of Huntsville, defense attorney, caused postponement. Leibowitz said he was near exhaustion from the extreme heat in the courtroom which also was blamed for Watt's illness.

Norris and his eight co-defendants are charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train in 1931 as they returned to their Huntsville homes after seeking work in Chattanooga.

Jury Chosen To Try Negro At Scottsboro

3 Colored Jurors Called; Attorneys Prepare Hot Court Fight

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 12.—(AP)—A jury of 12 white men was chosen late today for the trial of Clarence Norris, negro Scottsboro case defendant, after Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, said he expected a "major development" during a hurried trip to Birmingham.

The jury was not sworn, however, when Clarence Watts, associated with Leibowitz in the defense counsel, said he could not answer "ready" for the defendant.

Leibowitz went to Birmingham at the start of a laborious afternoon session, which lasted until after 6 p.m. concluding a court day of nearly nine hours.

Members of the jury are Oatha Bartlett, Sam R. Brown, Tom D. Hallmark, Herman E. Owen, Lawrence Strain, Bert Childs, Jerry French, Gilbert Kinney, Marvin Martin, N. Brown Owen, B. Chandler Pittman and O'Neal Sharp.

Both Dewitt Harden and Lee Blob, negroes in the final group qualified, were struck by the State.

Farmers On Jury

Seven of those chosen are farmers.

The third negro drawn, Manuel Johnson, was excused because he did not believe in capital punishment.

Of the 66 talesmen who qualified under preliminary tests, 11 were excused for fixed opinions and five because they did not believe in capital punishment.

When striking began, the State had 13 strikes to 25 for the defense.

The defense sprang the first surprise of the proceedings by summoning as a witness Mrs. Emma Bates, mother of Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims of attacks near Scottsboro in 1931.

Mrs. Bates conferred with Samuel S. Leibowitz and Clarence Watts, of Huntsville, during the luncheon recess, after less than half the jury venire had qualified during the morning session.

Norris is one of nine negroes accused of mass attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and the Bates woman aboard a freight train. Mrs. Price was here as the prosecution witness, but the Bates girl, who repudiated her original testimony and said the entire attack story was a "frameup" was not called.

Watts made a painstaking examination of each prospective juror, asking if they had formed opinions, if they read the newspaper accounts of the previous trials, and if they "feared the opinion of your neighbors" in reaching a verdict.

Of the first 30 examined, six were excused because of fixed opinions and two because they did not believe in capital punishment. One negro, Dewitt Harden was in the group of 22 qualified. Watts did not ask him the usual questions, and the State passed him without question or comment.

Two other negroes were in the group which answered jury summons in court today. Several negroes were drawn on the venire for the trial of Heywood Patterson here in January, 1936, but none served.

Assistant In Charge

Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael, expected here this morning, did not appear in the courtroom. His assistant, Thomas S. Lawson, is acting as chief of the prosecution staff, said he was not certain the attorney general would come for the hearings.

Rumors of a compromise settlement, heard often in recent weeks, were not supported by happenings in court today. Spectators and newspapermen were searched as they entered the well-filled courtroom.

Leibowitz said the defense would not be ready without Roscoe Allen, fireman on the freight train on which the alleged attack occurred. Judge W. W. Callahan issued an attachment for Allen, who lives at Sheffield, Ala.

Several other witnesses were missing, but most were expected to be here by tomorrow.

Delay Seen In Scottsboro Case

Watts, Defense Counsel, Sick After Losing Court Battle

DECATUR, ALA., July 17.—(AP)—The second act in a revival of an old court drama, the "Scottsboro" mass attack case—is set for Monday, but court circles foresaw today a possibility of another brief delay.

Judge W. W. Calahan said he would wait until Monday to determine his course in view of continued illness of Clarence Watts, Huntsville, Ala., defense attorney.

Clarence Norris, first to face a jury in resumption of trials in the six-year-old case charging nine negroes with criminally molesting two white women, was convicted Thursday and condemned to die—the third death verdict rendered against him.

Another negro defendant was to have gone to trial Thursday, in Judge Callahan's program to clear his docket of the cases, but illness of Watts, whom the attorney said resulted from fatigue superinduced by the sweltering temperature of the court room, caused postponement to Monday.

May Need More Time

At his Huntsville home today it was stated Watts probably would be unable to work for several days more. Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of the defense, said he had not determined whether he would request further delay.

Norris has been saved from the death penalty twice by the United States Supreme Court—once on a determination of the high tribunal that the nine negroes were without adequate counsel at the first trial at Scottsboro, and second, on confirmation of a defense contention negroes were excluded from the juries which handled the case.

Leibowitz To Appeal

Leibowitz had announced he will appeal to the Supreme Court "twenty times more if necessary."

On continuing rumors a compromise settlement of the case may be reached, the noted New York lawyer only comment was: "The defendants never will plead guilty of rape, because they are not guilty of rape."

Eight Negroes in the Scottsboro case are fighting for their lives and freedom for the fourth time before an Alabama bar of justice. Three times convicted and sentenced to death, and three times saved when their convictions were reversed by higher courts, eight of the nine originally charged with criminally attacking Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price on March 25, 1931, are on trial before Judge W. W. Callahan at Decatur.

NEGROES ARE ON ATTACK VENIRE

First Of Scottsboro Trials Opens Today Before Judge Callahan

By James C. Hutto
Post Staff Correspondent

DECATUR, July 12.—Three Negroes were included in the venire of 100 prospective jurymen sworn in today in the trial of Clarence Norris, one of nine Negro Scottsboro defendants accused of attacks on two white women.

One of the Negroes was in the regular venire of 35 and two more were included in the special venire of 65 which was sworn in before Judge W. W. Callahan in an almost empty Morgan County courtroom.

As Judge Callahan administered the oath to the second panel, one of the Negroes who had been summoned asked to be excused from jury service in the trial because of a "fixed opinion" in the case.

Callahan deferred granting his request "until the proper time for considering the question of opinion."

The judge then began calling the prospective jurymen to the bar in groups of six for detailed questioning.

Each was asked: "Could you give the evidence in this case the same consideration as if the defendant were a white man?"

All six nodded in the affirmative. Two of the six, both white men were excused because they reported they had "a fixed opinion."

As the six-year-old cases were reopened, Norris, first of eight defendants to be tried at the present session of court, was led manacled into the courtroom.

Norris and the seven other Negroes were brought to Decatur early today under heavy guard.

Goaded by Judge Callahan of Morgan Circuit Court, who has announnced that the eight defendants will be tried at the rate of two a week until all are convicted or acquitted, defense and prosecution rushed completion of preliminaries for Norris' trial.

Swearing-in of witnesses followed the impanelling of prospective jurors.

Samuel Leibowitz, New York criminal attorney, and Clarence Watts of Huntsville, Ala., were in court to represent Norris. Alabama's Asst. Atty.-Gen. Thomas E. Lawson and Morgan County Solicitor Melvin Hutson are the state's case.

As preliminaries were completed for the trial of Norris, both defense and prosecution reiterated denials of rumors that the cases might be compromised.

Leibowitz said he had no comment on the compromise reports, but that he might "have something to say later."

Charlie Weems is scheduled to follow Norris on trial about Thursday.

"DEMAND DEATH" FOR THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS

In his summation to the jury, Assistant Attorney General Thomas Lawson has said he would demand death for Clarence Norris, one of the Scottsboro boys, who is now on trial at Decatur, Alabama. This demand we think, is not made in the interest of justice, neither for the purpose of upholding the written statutes of the state of Alabama. As everybody knows by this time race prejudice furnishes the fuel for the "persecution" of these Negro boys. No one knows this better than the prosecutor, Thomas Lawson and Judge W. W. (Speed) Callahan. In fact, we do not see, upon what ground, except that of race prejudice, the Judge or Prosecutor believe these boys to be guilty of the crime of which they are accused, as neither Callahan nor Lawson was present when the alleged crime was committed. Of course, the writer was not present, neither was the attorney for the defense; nor were thousands of others, yes, millions of others, who are interested in this case, present when the alleged crime was committed. But we who believe the boys to be innocent, predicate our belief upon the facts that the evidence is weak, and thin, and that testimonies upon which the evidence is built, are contradictory and false. With these facts in mind, we make the above reference to Judge Callahan and Prosecutor Lawson.

Few people, if any, will believe that Judge Callahan is fit to serve in this case. His rulings and remarks from the bench, and his general attitude as Judge in the case, all tend to show that he is prejudiced; and no prejudiced Judge can give a just decision. As we view the settings and environments in the case, it looks to us as though the boys will have a hard road to go to find anything like justice. Among the things we see in the setting are: the fact that the forefathers of the Scottsboro boys were slaves; their Chief Counsel is from New York (which the South regards as meddling); the present Southern cast system; an all white jury from a prejudiced community; the prosecuting witness, Victoria Price, is a white woman, notwithstanding the fact she has been referred to by Judge Horton, as a woman of "easy virtue," and she has also been referred to as a "hobo." In the face of this setting, in the ring parlance, "the boys are down with nine counts against them."

Of course, an appeal will be taken which may or may not mean six more years behind the grey walls of prison, for nine innocent boys. All because of race prejudice.

COLLECTING FOR SCOTTSBORO CASE

THE famous "Scottsboro Case" once more is in the public eye, the manner in which the case has been strung out for several years illustrating how difficult are the processes of justice when to impede proves profitable.

There is not the slightest doubt that the Scottsboro case would have been disposed of long ago, and disposed of justly, but for the fact that various organizations outside of Alabama found it profitable to take a hand in the case and take up collections, with emphasis on the collections.

It is impossible even to approximate the sums raised by these organizations for the "defense" of the Scottsboro negroes, but it is not improbable that the total reached a million dollars. All sorts of persons and organizations leaped into the situation and began to "pass the hat." Collections were taken all over this country and even foreign lands, and the pan-handling continued vigorously for a number of years.

How much of the money actually went into the defense of the accused and how much found its way into the pockets of volunteer collectors, there is no means of knowing, but it doubtless proved "rich pickings" for many.

Such capitalization of the plight of human beings should not be permitted. There should be a law requiring all persons taking up collections to give a strict accounting, accompanied by regulations that would defeat selfish designs.

Scottsboro Turn Called

(New

The growing opinion among Southern editors that the Negroes involved in the widely publi[illegible] Scottsboro case may be innocent vindicates the position taken as long ago as 1931 by the late F. T. Raiford, editor and publisher of the SELMA TIMES-JOURNAL.

The first of the new trials of the eight defendants in the assault case is scheduled to begin July 12.

Mr. Raiford declared in 1931 that "only God knows" the guilt or innocence of the defendants.

"We are unable to say if the immutable standards of right or wrong were effective in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused in the Scottsboro trial, or whether the scales were made to vibrate by the extraneous influences against the unfortunate defendants," he wrote.

sdom)

"Whether the eight negroes are guilty of the crimes alleged, only God knows, but we do know the environment in which they were subjected to the ordeal of life or death left much to be desired."

He predicted in 1932 that the Supreme Court at Washington would overthrow the Alabama Supreme Court ruling and order a retrial of the case. He said:

"The action of the Alabama Supreme Court in affirming the sentences of seven out of eight of the Scottsboro negroes will be denounced as the culmination of miscarriage in many parts of the world. The storm of protest and objurgation will not be the outgrowth of a conviction that the negroes are innocent so much as that they did not have a fair and impartial trial. The trial took place under the menace of armed militia and frowning machine guns, with public feeling running high and a milling mob of thousands on the outside of the courtroom, whose emotions were whipped into a frenzy by a brass band and fervid oratory. A court proceeding of even-handed justice could not have taken place in such a hostile environment. Appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court on the grounds that the constitutional guarantee of a fair and impartial trial to all accused persons was violated and if the high court should sustain its own decision given in a similar case appealed from Arkansas, the cases will be remanded to the Alabama court for retrial."

Numerous Alabama newspapers, led by the Montgomery ADVERTISER, have recently questioned the guilt of the negroes and have suggested a compromise in the case.

FIRST NEGRO'S TRIAL BEGINS AT DECATUR NEXT MONDAY

At an arraingnment in which the most exciting incidents were the searching of spectaters for weapons and the impounding of two news cameras by the court, Judge W. W. Callahan decided Tuesday to put the Negro defendants in the notorious Scottsboro case on trial two a week beginning next Monday.

The eight remaining defendants after their brief court appearance this morning were bundled into a wire-enclosed truck and taken back to Jefferson county jail at Birmingham — their quarters for the last six years.

Rumors of compromising the cases so as to reach a quick disposal of them appeared definitely spiked with the arraignment.

Clarence Norris and Charlie Weems were formally charged Tuesday with attacking two white women hoboes abroad a freight train near Scottsboro, in March, 1931.

Norris will be the first to go to trial. Weems will follow him, and on succeeding Mondays, the others Negroes will be brought to Decatur in pairs from the county jail at Birmingham for arraignment and trial.

Clarence Watts, Huntsville attorney, entered pleas of not guilty for Norris and Weems.

At the conclusion of the arraignment, he moved for a change of venue to Federal Court, but his motion was overruled by Judge Callahan.

Samuel Leibowitz, New York attorney in charge of the defense, was absent as was Asst Atty.-Gen. Thos. F. Lawson. They will be in Decatur next week for the opening of Norris' trial.

Again, Scottsboro

JUDGE W. W. CALLAHAN, the presiding judge in the Scottsboro Case, asserted in May that he would not "countenance a settlement" of the case, and that the trials would go forward in July. Apparently, the desperate efforts of leading citizens inside and outside Alabama to persuade him to change his attitude, have been unavailing, for he has now set the trials for next week and the succeeding weeks. It would seem that the country and the world is about to be treated to another repetition of this judicial farce.

Every one knows that the Scottsboro Case has become so deeply enmeshed in Alabama politics, and that maintenance of State pride has become so identified in the minds of thousands of Alabamians with the necessity for convicting the Scottsboro defendants, that a fair trial has become virtually impossible.

Even the Montgomery Advertiser, which during all these years has maintained—incomprehensibly, we think—that the defendants are guilty, has at last concluded that the best way out is through a compromise settlement. Various other leading Alabama newspapers agree, as do a large number of the State's leading citizens.

But not JUDGE CALLAHAN, apparently. He announced in May that he would not "countenance a settlement," and he gives no signs of relenting. There is a bare chance that he will do so before the first trial opens on Monday, but it seems far from bright.

Current Opinion

POOR SCOTTSBORO!

(The Baltimore Evening Sun)

Next Monday the Scottsboro cases start again in the courts of Alabama.

On more than one occasion The Evening Sun has expressed the opinion that the real victim of this deadful episode is the town of Scottsboro, which damned itself to world-wide notoriety by resolving to have no lynching. This case was dumped upon Scottsboro. The crime did not occur there. The prosecuting witnesses did not live there, nor did the defendants. Scottsboro had no interest in the matter save to see to it that the accused were tried according to law, and not lynched out of hand. This purpose it accomplished resolutely, and its reward has been to have its very name become a hissing and a by-word among the nations.

Yet, sympathetic as any reasonable man must be with the luckless Alabama town, one must hope—or, rather, wish—that Scottsboro's natural sense of injury will not blind her to the primary fact in the case. This is the fact that, although she is incontestably a victim, she is not the victim of the ill-will and unreasonableness of the rest of the nation. She is the victim of the reputation of the South—a reputation acquired by the perpetration of more than 3,000 lynchings in the past fifty years.

The world ought, indeed, to discriminate and to give Scottsboro credit for its extraordinary course; but, as a practical matter, is it reasonable to expect it to make such fine distinctions? Scottsboro, and every other Southern town that intends to be civilized, may as well face the grim fact that it must for a long time bear unjustly burdens imposed on it by the black record the South has made in the past.

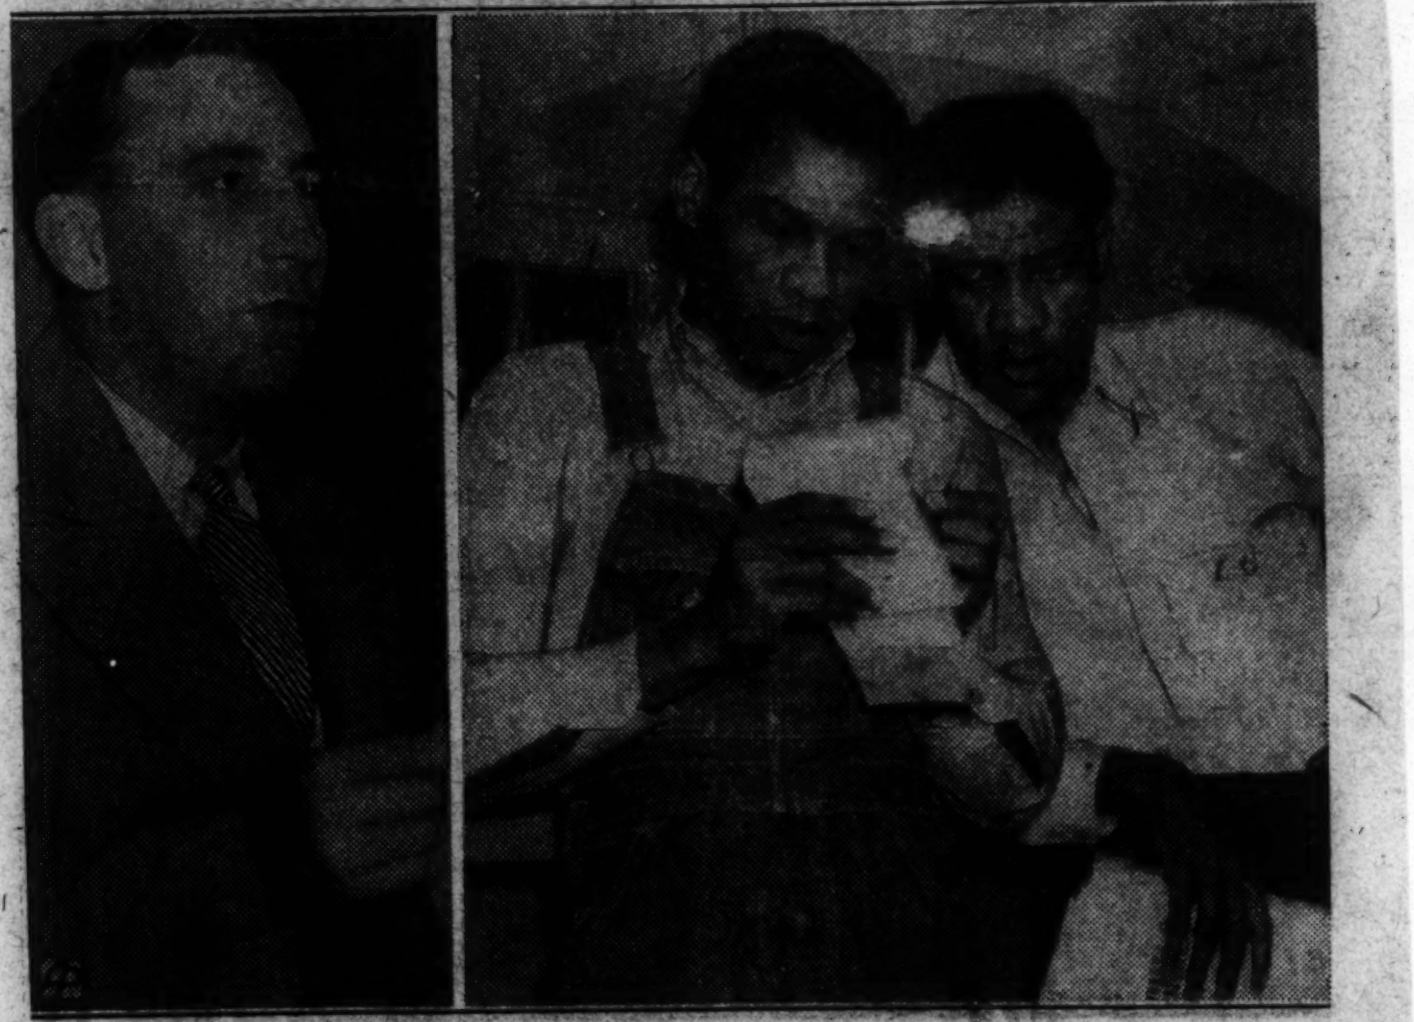
"COMPROMISE" RUMORED IN SCOTTSBORO TRIAL



Talk of a "compromise" in the celebrated "Scottsboro case" was revived at Decatur, Ala., at the beginning of a new trial for Clarence Norris, one of the nine negroes facing another hearing on charges of assaulting two white girls on a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., six years ago. Assistant Attorney General Thomas S. Lawson, who heads the prosecution staff, is shown (left) denying the compromise rumors. Norris (right) and Charlie Weems, another defendant, are seen in the Decatur jail just before court convened.

Mrs. Price Testifies at 4th Trial of Norris; State Rests After Quiz

DECATUR, Ala., July 13.—(UP) Mrs. Victoria Price, alleged victim of mass criminal assault by nine negroes, angrily denied today she had "trumped up" rape charges against the defendants.

Testifying for the state in the case of Clarence Norris, first of eight negroes who will be tried on assault charges, Mrs. Price denied charges of Samuel Leibowitz, defense counsel, that she "framed" charges.

"Isn't it a fact that you trumped up this charge of rape because you yourself had violated the law by taking a minor girl (Ruby Bates) across a state line, from Alabama to Chattanooga, Tenn., for the purpose of starting her on a life of shame?" Leibowitz asked.

"No sir," was the angry reply. "Ruby Bates was the cause of me going to Chattanooga."

Fourth Trial.

Mrs. Price was the first witness for the state as the fourth trial of Norris on the assault charge began.

She repeated her testimony of three previous trials that she and Miss Bates and several white boys were in the gondola of a freight train moving through northern Alabama, near Scottsboro, on March 25, 1931, when Norris and 11 other negroes appeared, fought some white boys and attacked them.

The second state witness, Luther Norris, Jackson county farmer, testified he saw the negroes fighting with the white boys as the train passed his farmhouse near Scottsboro.

He said five white men were thrown off the train and that he saw two women trying to "jump off."

"Was anyone holding them?" asked Circuit Solicitor Hutson.

"Yes, the negroes were," Jackson replied.

Saw No Disorder.

A defense witness, Roscoe Allen, train flagman at Scottsboro, said he saw no disorder when the train arrived there.

"The train had passed several section crews but none of them saw any fight or asked that the train be stopped," Allen said.

On cross-examination, he admitted he found a pistol in the next to last gondola.

The state rested late today and the defense opened by reading testimony given at Norris' second trial in 1933 by the late Dr. R. R. Bridges, Scottsboro physician. Dr. Bridges died last year.

His testimony at the previous trial was that Mrs. Price received "only scratches on wrist and forearm and one small blue spot in the middle of the back." Her pulse and respiration were normal, Dr. Bridges, who examined her shortly after the alleged attack, testified.

Court recessed until tomorrow.

Callahan Delivers Two-Hour Charge Before Turning Case Loose

By James C. Hutt
Post Staff Correspondent

DECATUR, July 15.—A jury of 12 white men—the ninth to sit in judgment in a Scottsboro trial—today pondered the fate of Clarence Norris charged with criminal assault of two white women aboard a freight train in March, 193[illegible].

Birmingham
Herald

After listening to a charge by Trial Judge W. W. Callahan which lasted more than two hours, the jury retired at 10:50 a. m., and was still out early this afternoon.

At the conclusion of Norris' trial, Judge Callahan granted a defense motion that the trial of the second defendant, Charlie Weems, be postponed until next week. Weems had been scheduled to follow Norris.

Wright Next

The illness of Defense Attorney Clarence L. Watts was given as the reason for the continuance. Trial of Andy Wright, third defendant, will proceed on schedule next Monday, Judge Callahan said, and Weems will follow him.

In his charge, Judge Callahan warned the jury that "this suit is not Victoria Price versus Clarence Norris, but the State of Alabama versus Clarence Norris."

The charge followed defense testimony attacking the character of Mrs. Price, one of the alleged victims in the notorious Scottsboro assault case.

"Victoria Price has no more to do with this case than any other witness," Judge Callahan charged. "She was brought here by the state to testify.

Death Is Asked

"The law would authorize conviction on Victoria Price's testimony alone if, after studying all the evidence, you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty. The law does not require corroboration in cases of this sort."

Last night, for the fourth time in six years, the state asked the death sentence for Norris for alleged criminal assault of two white women aboard a freight train in 1931.

"Testimony of state witnesses can leave no doubt in your minds that Victoria Price and Ruby Bates were ravished against their will," Assistant Atty.-Gen. Thomas F. Lawson told the jury.

Samuel Leibowitz, New York criminal attorney and chief defense counsel, entered an insanity plea for a fourth defendant, Ocie Powell, contending that the Negro had become insane during six years in jail. Alabama law holds that insane persons cannot be brought to trial.

Two surprise defense witnesses brought the Norris case to a close. R. S. Watson and Sol Wallace, former Huntsville, Ala., police officers, both testified they had known Mrs. Price for several years and "would not believe her under oath."

Leibowitz Says Attack Story Is 'Frameup'

Effort Made To Discredit Woman's Testimony; Jury Charge Due

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 14.—(AP)—Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of the "Scottsboro case" defense counsel, accused Victoria Price of "framing this rape story," as he pleaded before a jury today in an effort to save Clarence Norris, one of the nine negro defendants, from the electric chair.

The New York criminal lawyer said she "concocted this tale so the authorities would forget to question her about what she and Ruby Bates were doing on that train and what they had been doing in Chattanooga."

Norris is accused of participating in a mass attack with the eight other negroes on Victoria Price aboard a freight train March 25, 1931. He has been sentenced to death twice, and saved as many times by the U. S. Supreme Court reversing Alabama jury convictions.

The two white women, when the alleged assault occurred, said they were returning to their Huntsville, Ala., homes from Chattanooga, Tenn., after an unsuccessful search for work. The train was stopped and the negroes arrested at Paint Rock, Ala.

Leibowitz Hoots Testimony

Mrs. Price's testimony was like "an eggshell—hollow inside and easily broken," Leibowitz said in his summation.

Judge W. W. Callahan said he will charge the jury tomorrow morning, before beginning the trial of Charlie Weems, another of the defendants.

Clarence Watts, defense attorney, said "there's not a white man in Alabama that would convict another white man on this testimony," referring to Mrs. Price's story. Mrs. Price identified Norris as one of the negroes who allegedly assaulted her. Mrs. Price's "general reputation" was attacked today by the defense. R. S. Watson, former deputy sheriff at Huntsville, testified under Watts's questioning, he would not believe Mrs. Price under oath.

Lawson Sums Case

Assistant Attorney General Thomas S. Lawson in his summation urged the chair for Norris as "a warning to other rapists and a protection for the womanhood of this State."

"I submit this is the first time in the history of these cases any witness has dared to sit in the court room and attack her reputation," he snapped in answer to defense introduction of Watson.

Watts asked Watson, speaking of Mrs. Price:

"Is her general reputation good or bad?"

"It's bad," replied Watson.

Sol Wallace, Huntsville deputy sheriff, was called to the stand. He gave similar answers to the same questions asked Watson.

Ruby Bates's mother, Mrs. Emma Bates, was called to the stand on cross-examination testified she did not know where her daughter is. Ruby was a joint complaining witness with Mrs. Price at the original trials in Scottsboro, Ala., but repudiated her attack story as a "frame-up" in a later court appearance.

Two other "Scottsboro" defendants, Andy Wright and Ozie Powell were called into court today for arraignment, preparatory to their trials next week. Wright pleaded "not guilty."

The defense rested its case for Norris as the afternoon court session began and a short recess was granted before the State offered rebuttal testimony.

Charge Due Today

Judge Callahan limited summations to an hour and 45 minutes for each side and announced he would charge the Norris jury tomorrow morning before beginning the trial of Charlie Weems, another of the nine defendants.

Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief of the defense, tried to enter a plea of insanity for Powell at the arraignment, but Judge W. W. Callahan ruled it was not presented properly. The noted criminal lawyer explained he was not contending Powell was insane at the time of the alleged crime, but had become insane during his six-year imprisonment.

Powell was shot in the head last year in what officers described as an escape attempt. An officer was stabbed.

Judge Callahan offered today to consider a motion for a change of venue, but Leibowitz answered that it was his understanding the Alabama Supreme Court had ruled only one change of venue could be given under the State law. The case was moved here from Scottsboro.

"If you present evidence to warrant another change of venue, I'll grant it, the Supreme Court to the contrary notwithstanding," Callahan said.

Leibowitz did not make the motion, the Judge agreed to postpone Powell's arraignment until he could look up the law on the insanity plea.

Electric Chair Is Jury Verdict In Assault Case

Scottsboro Negro Gets Death Sentence For Third Time

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 15.—(AP)—

Death in the electric chair was decreed today for the third time for Clarence Norris, negro defendant in the "Scottsboro" mass assault case who twice previously was saved from doom by the United States Supreme Court.

It was the verdict the State had asked, as "a warning to other rapists and a protection for the womanhood of this State."

The ninth jury to sit in judgment of the case in six years returned the solemn verdict after four hours deliberation.

Defendant Calm

Norris, accused with eight other negroes of criminally molesting two white women aboard a freight train, sat stolidly as the body of 12 white men filed in and the verdict was read. There was no demonstration in the half-filled court room.

Immediately, Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York attorney and chief of defense, announced to newspapermen he would "appeal the sentence to hell and back," indicating the case again may go before the United States Supreme Court.

Judge W. W. Callahan, veteran jurist of the long series of "Scottsboro" trials, announced he would pass sentence on Norris formally next week, probably Thursday, when the case of Charlie Weems, another of the nine defendants, is scheduled for trial.

Leibowitz Disappointed

Leibowitz admittedly was bitterly disappointed at the verdict. Heywood Patterson, another defendant tried here in January, 1936, was sentenced to 75 years imprisonment—after having previous death sentences nullified by the United States Supreme Court.

Talk of a possible compromise settlement of the case had subsided before the death verdict for Norris was returned. Prior to the new series of trials, reliable sources had indicated a compromise might be proposed in court, in which the negroes would plead guilty to assault not involving a sex crime and receive prison sentences.

State attorneys declined to comment on the possibility a compromise proposal still may be presented.

Judge W. W. Callahan charged the jury, just before it took the case at 10:50 a.m. that "this suit is not Victoria Price vs. Clarence Norris, but the State of Alabama vs. Clarence Norris," he added: "Where the woman is white, there is a strong presumption under the law that she did not yield to the advances of a negro."

The defense had presented witnesses in an attack on the "general reputation" of Mrs. Price, after she identified Norris as one who attacked her aboard a freight train when she and Ruby Bates, textile mill workers, caught a ride to their Huntsville, Ala., homes after seeking work in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Defense Attorney Ill

Shortly after the jury took the Norris case, illness of Clarence Watts, of Huntsville, defense attorney, brought postponement of the trial of the second "Scottsboro" defendant, Charlie Weems, which had been scheduled to begin immediately. The attorney told Judge Callahan the fatigue of four days in sweltering court room had made it impossible for him to continue.

Callahan thereupon excused the Weems venire until July 22, but the trial of Andy Wright, third accused negro, will begin next Monday, if Watts's condition permits.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer, in his argument before the jury, accused Mrs. Price of "framing this rape story" and declared she concocted it "so the authorities would forget to question her about what she and Ruby Bates were doing on that train, and what they had been doing in Chattanooga."

Answering the attack, Alabama Assistant Attorney General Thomas S. Lawson said:

"I submit that this is the first time in the history of these cases any witness has dared to sit in this court room and attack her reputation."

The United States Supreme Court overturned death sentences in the case once when it upheld a defense contention the negroes, at their original trials at Scottsboro, Ala., were without adequate defense counsel. The high tribunal reversed the State courts a second time, holding that negroes were "systematically excluded" from juries handling the case.

Case History Given

Six years ago a hastily gathered posse stopped a freight train at Paint Rock, Ala. Two white men alighted, and nine negroes were pulled off.

Thus began the "Scottsboro" case.

Today, for the ninth time, a jury deliberated the fate of one of the negroes accused of gang molestation of the white women—Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates—aboard the train as it roared through the northeast Alabama hills.

State militia was called, to protect the negroes, shortly after they were arrested, but no mob action ever developed.

Taken first to Scottsboro, seat of Jackson County which gave the internationally known case its name, the negroes were indicted, tried and, in all but one case, convicted of attacking Mrs. Price. Death sentences were meted out. Later, one of the defendants, Roy Wright, was held a juvenile.

Outsiders Enter

Promptly, agencies outside the State entered the case. An appeal was taken to the State Supreme Court. On March 25, 1932, the State court affirmed seven of the death sentences, but set aside the verdict against Eugene Williams on the ground he was a juvenile at the time of the alleged crime.

Again an appeal was taken, this time to the United States Supreme Court. The high tribunal, on Nov. 3, 1932, set aside the death sentences, holding the defendants had been without benefit of adequate counsel in their trials at Scottsboro.

Taken to Decatur in Morgan County, on a change of venue, Heywood Patterson, first defendant to be tried again was convicted and sentenced to death on April 9, 1933. During this trial Ruby Bates, one of the original complaining witnesses, repudiated her previous testimony, and charged the "attack" story had been "framed" in the Scottsboro jail.

This sentence of Patterson was set aside on June 22 by Judge James E. Horton, who presided at the Patterson trial, on the ground evidence was not sufficient to justify the verdict.

In November, the cases were called again, this time before Judge W. W. Callahan. Patterson was convicted again and given the death penalty a third time, on Dec. 1, 1933. A similar conviction and sentence for Clarence Norris followed Dec. 6.

State Court Upholds

Both convictions were upheld in the State Supreme Court, but April 1, 1935, were overthrown by the United State Supreme Court, which upheld the defense contention "negroes were systematically excluded from the grand and petit juries" involved in the case.

The decision affected jury systems in several Southern States. In Alabama, a new jury law, providing for refilling of jury boxes to contain names of eligible negroes, was passed, and a negro served on the grand jury at Scottsboro which returned new indictments against the nine defendants.

Patterson's fourth trial opened at Decatur Jan. 20, 1936, and 12 negroes were on the special venire of 100 drawn for the case. All were excused or stricken, however, and an all-white jury returned a fourth guilty verdict January 23. Patterson was sentenced to 75 years imprisonment. The defense termed this a victory.

A third trial for Clarence Norris was under way last year when disagrement over a witness resulted in a postponement.

Escape Foiled

As the negroes were being returned to a jail in Birmingham the following day, Ozie Powell, another of the defendants, was shot in the head and Deputy Sheriff Ed Blalock of Decatur was slashed in the throat, in what officers described as an escape attempt.

Blalock was not seriously injured, but Powell was in critical condition for days. A brain operation proved successful, however, and he returned to his cell in Birmingham.

Alabama Supreme Court in June, this year, upheld the 75-year sentence meted out to Patterson. No further appeal has been taken. Trials of the other negroes, with Clarence Norris the first to face judgment, began at Decatur this week.

DEFENSE TURNS ON MRS. PRICE

Witnesses Attack Character Of Accuser In Trial Of Negroes

By James C. Hutto
Post Staff Correspondent

DECATUR, July 14.—Defense attorneys for Clarence Norris, Negro Scottsboro defendant in a new maneuver today attacked the general reputation of Mrs. Victoria Price, alleged assault victim and star state witness.

The defense put R. E. Watson, former Huntsville deputy, on the stand, to testify that Mrs. Price, who claims she and Ruby Bates were assaulted by nine Negroes aboard a freight train in March, 1931, had a "bad" reputation.

Watson said he had known Mrs. Price since 1924, and that he "would not believe her under oath."

Similar testimony was offered by Sol Wallace, another Huntsville deputy, who said he had known Mrs. Price since 1921.

New Strategy

It was the first time the defense had ever offered a character witness against Mrs. Price in a Scottsboro trial.

Taking the stand for the first time in the six-year-old history of the cases, Mrs. Emma Bates, mother of one of the alleged attack victims, testified she found "two strange boys" in the same cell with Mrs. Price and her daughter when she visited them in their cell at Scottsboro.

"I asked Ruby what those boys were doing in there," Mrs. Bates said.

"Victoria spoke up and said: 'I'll do the talking—they're my half brothers and I wanted them in here for company."

Mrs. Bates said the youths were removed after she complained to authorities.

In New York?

On cross-examination, State's Atty. Thomas F. Lawson asked Mrs. Bates:

"Where is Ruby now?"

"I don't know," she replied. "She is supposed to be somewhere in New York."

Attorney Wins Point

Resumption of the trial of Norris followed a delay caused by the arraignment of another of the defendants, Andy Wright.

The arraignment was marked by a bitter verbal clash between Trial Judge W. W. Callahan and Defense Attorney Samuel Leibowitz.

Leibowitz succeeded in having deferred the arraignment of Ocie Powell, another of the Negroes, after entering a surprise plea that Powell was insane and could not stand trial.

Alabama law holds that a person proved to be insane cannot be brought to trial.

In his plea, Leibowitz contended that Powell had become insane during the six years he has remained in prison. He asked that he be committed to a state institution.

Judge Callahan deferred action on Leibowitz's plea.

As Wright was brought into the courtroom, Leibowitz filed a motion for a change of venue to a Federal court—a customary defense action, in every Scottsboro arraignment.

Ordered To Plead

It was overruled by Judge Callahan.

Leibowitz ordered his client, Wright, to refuse to enter a plea until he was directed to do so by the court, and announced:

"The defendant stands mute to preserve his rights."

Judge Callahan ordered the Negro before him.

"Guilty or not guilty?" he asked.

Wright looked at Leibowitz imploringly, and then murmured:

"Not guilty."

Leibowitz arose.

"I want the record to show that this defendant was directed to plead by the court," he said.

SCOTTSBORO JURY PICKED

Defense Counsel Hints "Major Development" In Case

DECATUR, Ala., July 12.—(AP)—A jury of 12 white men was chosen late today for the trial of Clarence Norris, negro Scottsboro case defendant, after Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, said he expected a "major development" during a hurried trip to Birmingham.

The jury was not sworn, however, when Clarence Watts, of defense counsel, said he could not answer [illegible] the defendant.

Of three negroes drawn on the panel, two were struck by the state and the third was excused because he did not believe in capital punishment.

ALA. SPENDS $50,000 IN 6 YEARS TO KILL SCOTTSBORO BOYS: TO TRY OVER

DECATUR — Alabama, which has spent more than $50,000 in six years' efforts to put to death the nine Scottsboro boys, has prepared for another act in the internationally-known drama of racial conflict, beginning on July 6.

Only eight of the original nine boys will be tried in the musty Morgan County courthouse before Judge W. W. (Speed) Callahan. One, Heywood Patterson, was convicted under a new indictment in January, 1936, and sentenced to seventy-five years in prison.

His appeal from that sentence was recently refused by the Alabama Supreme Court and is being prepared for presentation to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Fighting for Life

The eight youth will be fighting for their lives for the fourth time before an Alabama bar of justice. They have been convicted and sentenced to death three times, and three times their convictions have been reversed by higher courts.

The U.S. Supreme Court intervened twice and ordered the convictions set aside. One reversal was by Circuit Judge James E. Horton, who ruled that the evidence was insufficient.

The eight will face arraignment under indictments returned in 1935, by a grand jury which included a colored juror. One of the previous reversals of the U.S. Supreme Court was because it found that colored persons were systematically excluded from jury rolls in Alabama.

The trials have been delayed since Patterson's conviction for various causes, including the absence of a material witness and the illness and death of Lt.-Governor T. E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor in the cases.

Two Have Added Charge

It was at the end of Patterson's trial while the defendants were being taken to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham that one of them, Ocie Powell, was critically shot by Sheriff J. S. Sandlin in an attempted "break." Powell, who has recovered, along with Roy Wright, face a charge of assault with intent to kill, as well as one of criminal assault.

Compromise Rumored

Persistent rumors have circulated that State and defense attorneys would get together on a compromise before the eight are arraigned. It was said that opposing counsel have conferred for several months seeking an agreement whereby the defendants would plead guilty and accept prison sentences.

However, A. A. Carmichael, attorney general, has announced that he would press the prosecution on the charge punishable by death.

There is little indication at present that Alabama will take special precautions against demonstrations when the trials are reopened other than to send a detachment of highway patrolmen to Decatur to preserve order.

Testimony Repudiated

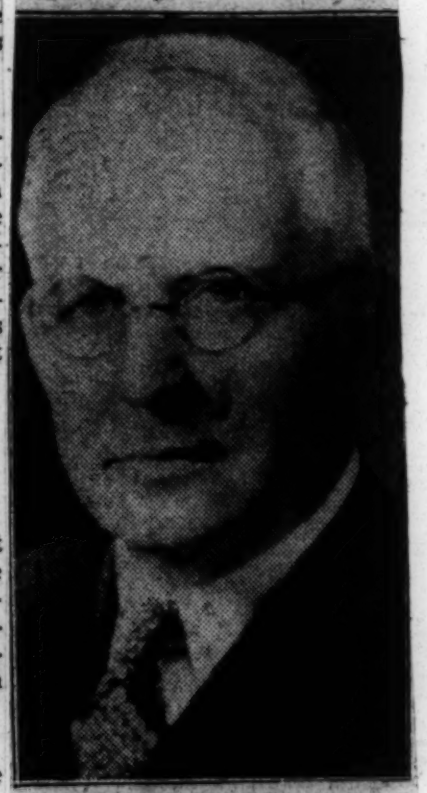
The youth probably will be brought here on July 6, for arraignment and then returned to Birmingham pending the actual opening of the trials. The State will again recount its oft-repeated charge that the eight, together with Patterson, assaulted Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, women hoboes on a freight train near Paint Rock, Ala., in March, 1931.

At the first trial, Mrs. Price identified the defendants. At the second trial of Patterson, Miss Bates repudiated Mrs. Price's testimony, contending that the charges were framed.

Leibowitz Expected

Samuel Leibowitz, New York chief of the Scottsboro defense counsel, plans to return to represent the boys. He will be assisted by Clarence Watts, Huntsville, Ala., attorney, who argued Patterson's appeal before the Alabama Supreme Court in May. Both are white.

It On No Deal



JUDGE W. W. CALLAHAN

Compromises In Scottsboro Cases Denied

Judge Callahan Asserts He's Unaware Of Any Pre-Trial Agreements

DECATUR, ALA., July 4.—(AP)—Circuit Court Judge W. W. Callahan today denied knowledge of a reported possibility of a compromise in the "Scottsboro" cases as the State prepared to arraign eight of the nine negro defendants of the six-year-old attack charge.

Callahan, who will preside over the trials of the negroes, said:

"If there is to be a compromise, it's news to me. I have not discussed the possibility of a compromise with anybody."

Following rumors that the case might be compromised, several Alabama papers editorially endorsed the idea. As yet, no official statement as to the possibility of a compromise has come from either defense or prosecution. Unofficial sources, however, said persons interested in terminating the long legal battle in the cases, have suggested the negroes plead guilty to assault not involving a sex crime, and receive jail sentences.

Trial Set For Tuesday

Callahan said the negroes will be arraigned at 9 a.m. Tuesday but did not make public the time he expects them to arrive here from Birmingham, where they are held in jail.

They will be "amply guarded," Callahan said, but added no extra precautions were deemed necessary. The State Highway Patrol aided the sheriff in handling the prisoners at the last trial in 1936 and this procedure probably will be repeated.

Seven of the negroes who will face Judge Callahan Tuesday have not been tried since they originally were sentenced to death at Scottsboro, Ala. in April, 1931.

The ninth defendant, Heywood Patterson is under sentence of 75 years imprisonment. He was convicted last year on a charge of criminal assault against Mrs. Victoria Price, the charge on which the eight defendants are to be tried at this time.

The circuit clerks order, setting the arraignment, listed the defendants in the following order: Charlie Weems, Clarence Norris, Olen Montgomery, Ozie Powell, Willie Roberson, Roy Wright, Andy Wright and Eugene Williams.

It was pointed out the order of the clerk's writ was not necessarily the order in which the negroes would be tried.

Clarence Watts, defense attorney, said the defense expected Clarence Norris, the only negro tried since the first Scottsboro trial, to be the first negro to go before the court.

Watts will come here from Huntsville, Ala., his home, for the arraignment.

Leibowitz Due

Samuel Leibowitz, of New York, chief defense counsel, was expected to arrive tonight. Thomas S. Lawson, assistant attorney general, will head the prosecution and is to arrive tomorrow.

Lawson was aid to Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor in the cases, who died a few months ago.

'Scottsboro Case' Ready For Trial

DECATUR, ALA., June 18.—(AP) Preparations for the ... Scottsboro attacks ... advanced today ... persistent but unconfirmed reports another delay or compromise impended.

Judge W. W. Callahan set the cases of eight of the nine negro defendants for July 6. They will be arraigned on indictments charging them with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., March 25, 1931.

Under normal court purocedure, the trial judge then will direct calling of a special Grand Jury venire, and individual cases will be set. Actual trials may not start before July 12.

Samuel S. Liebowitz, New York attorney and chief of defense counsel, said he expected to be here July 4 to make local arrangements for the case.

Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael will head the prosecution staff, replacing the late Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., who handled the cases as attorney general in a previous administration, and as special prosecutor after his election to the lieutenant governorship.

Carmichael has denied, repeatedly, reports the State would agree to short sentences for the negroes if they entered guilty pleas. He was absent from his office at Montgomery today, but usually reliable sources said this has "nothing to do with the Scottsboro case."

Several Alabama newspapers have suggested the negroes, now held in jail at Birmingham, be allowed to plead guilty under a compromise agreement.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

THE Nation, a left-wing weekly magazine published in New York and for six years the chief journalistic advocate of the Scottsboro "boys" in this country. It has filled column after column with propaganda about the "boys" and on numerous occasions it has denounced the courts of Alabama as unjust, inefficient and corrupt.

The Nation wants a compromise in the Scottsboro case—but what sort of a compromise?

The Nation, of course, wants a compromise in which the "boys" would be set free, and it is apparent that only a compromise of that nature will be "decent" in the eyes of The Nation.

In its comment, The Nation points out that a petition directed to Bibb Graves and Attorney General Carmichael is to be circulated soon by the "Scottsboro Defense Committee"—a political agency spawned by the get-a-defense-quick boys—asking that the negroes be realeased, and the week of July 1-6 has already been set aside as "National Scottsboro Week." As you will notice, "National Scottsboro Week" coincides neatly with the resumption of the trials on July 6.

The Nation is moved to comment:

"We hope every organization and individual interested in common justice will get behind this move and roll up a list of signatures that the state cannot ignore, for there is at least a chance that the mass pressure which has kept the boys alive for six years can now actually bring about that much-to-be-desired ending." Observe the words "mass pressure." We thought that the courts in this country were supposed to be free from pressure, "mass" or otherwise—and surely The Nation cannot tolerate the "mass pressure" which it believes was exerted in Alabama against these negroes.

The Nation does consent to consider a compromise, concluding that "an honorable, fair, and just settlement is the one set forth in the petition we have mentioned—that the boys be set free."

Outright freedom, as advocated by The Nation, may be the compromise which the prosecuting staff at Montgomery has in mind, or Alabama may even be called on to make financial restitution to the "boys" who have now been in jail six years. We do not know.

But we do know that the whole thing presents a sorry spectacle. It no longer seems to be a matter of justice. It seems to be a matter of what the outside world thinks of Alabama—of what the New Yorker thinks, or what the Muscovite thinks.

We again say that if a duly-organized Alabama jury sees fit to free these negroes of those charges, we will have utterly no objection, but we cannot follow along if the prosecuting authorities of this state agree to join the International Labor Defense in finding an Alabama jury incapable of handling this case, and the courts of Alabama incompetent in an hour of real need.

State Renewing Prosecution Of Assault Cases

8 Negroes Facing Trial In Decatur Today; Compromise Out

By LEROY SIMMS

DECATUR, ALA., July 5. — (AP) — Eight negroes will be arraigned in Circuit Court here tomorrow to begin a new episode in the six-year-old legal drama known to millions as the "Scottsboro case."

Announcement by the local prosecutor that the State was prepared to try all the defendants followed denial of compromise reports.

Judge W. W. Callahan, the trial judge, said he knew "nothing of any compromise." Melvin Hutson, the solicitor, intimated all the negroes will be tried after the hearing tomorrow.

"We will be ready to try them all," Hutson said, "and clear the Morgan circuit docket of the case entirely."

Charged with mass attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train March 25, 1931, the negroes have been in jail since that date as their attorneys battled to save them from the electric chair.

The ninth defendant, Heywood Patterson, is under a 75-year sentence, expected to be appealed to the United States Supreme Court, which has set aside two previous death verdicts in the "Scottsboro case."

Seven of the defendants have not been before an Alabama jury since April, 1931, when the original trials were held at Scottsboro, Ala.

Hutson said he believed the negroes' trials could be completed in "two or three weeks."

Possibility that all negroes would be tried came as a slight surprise, although that would be normal court procedure. Clarence Norris, whom the defense expects to be the first to go before the jury is the only negro beside Patterson to have been tried since the first Scottsboro death verdicts were rendered.

In addition to Norris the defendants are Charlie Weems, Olen Montgomery, Ozie Powell, Willie Roberson, Roy Wright, Andy Wright and Eugene Williams. Williams and Roy Wright were adjudged juveniles at the time of the alleged assault.

Capt. Van Buren Gilbert, of the State patrol said today he had ordered an escort for the negroes on their trip to Decatur from Birmingham, where they have been held for most of the time since their arrest. Judge Callahan declined to make public specific instructions for the negroes' transfer.

Neither Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York attorney and chief of defense counsel, nor Asst. Atty. Gen. Thomas S. Lawson, head of the prosecution staff, had arrived here this afternoon.

Lawson, at Montgomery, said he had "no compromise plan" in mind and added he had not conferred recently with defense attorneys.

State To Push Assault Trials At Scottsboro

Solicitor Gives Statement Repudiating Rumors Of Compromise

DECATUR, ALA., July 7—(AP)—Possibilty of a compromise in the Alabama "Scottsboro cases" faded tonight with an announcement by Circuit Solicitor Melvin Hutson that "the dignity of the State of Alabama" demands the nine negro defendants "should be convicted of rape or nothing."

Two of the defendants who are charged with criminal assault of two white women will be brought into court here next week. The statement by Hutson was issued in regard to reports a compromise settlement in which the negroes would plead guilty to assault not involving a sex crime, and receive jail sentences, had been proposed.

Death sentence convictions in the six-year-old cases have been reversed twice by the United States Supreme Court. One of the defendants, Heywood Patterson, is now under 75-year imprisonment sentence. The other eight defendants are expected to be tried here in the next few weeks.

Hutson's statement said:

"I know nothing about a proposition to settle these cases on a basis of assault as carried by some newspapers. As solicitor for this circuit, I would not consider any such proposition. These defendants are guilty of rape or nothing. If they are guilty of rape, they should be punished as the law directs, and if they are not guilty they should be acquitted by a jury.

"The dignity of the State of Alabama demands that they should be convicted of rape or nothing."

An Appeal To Reason In The Scottsboro Case

Reprinted on this page this morning is an exceptionally able editorial from The Montgomery Advertiser, in which Editor Grover Cleveland Hall advocates a "decent, dignified compromise" in the Scottsboro case, in order that the state of Alabama may "throw away this body of death."

With The Advertiser's conclusion The News and Age-Herald are in full sympathy. The Scottsboro case has been an Old Man of the Sea to Alabama for too many years. For one reason or another, almost irreparable damage has been done the good name of the state. If state officials can find their way clear to get rid of it, for the reasons Judge Hall mentions, if for no other reasons, they will have done a fine day's work for the people of the state.

With The Advertiser's premise that the people of Jackson County deserve the highest commendation for their attitude and actions over the years in connection with this case thrust upon them through no fault and no desire of their own, these papers are in full sympathy. With The Advertiser's further premise that it was revolted from the beginning by the Communist agitation seeking to make party and political capital out of the case, without regard to the welfare of the defendants, these newspapers agree fully.

The News and Age-Herald probably go a good deal further in their reasoning about the desirability of an effective compromise that will remove the Scottsboro case from the dockets of our courts than does The Advertiser. Nevertheless, and no matter what the particular reason assigned for the conclusion, there is no question in the mind of these newspapers that the suggestion made by Editor Hall is wise and worthy of the careful consideration of all officials concerned.

The heart of The Advertiser's appeal is contained in the following paragraph:

"Since there is ground for reasonable doubt of the positive guilt of all of the men now in jail, since all of them, in any event, have been in prison for six years, and since they are doing more than all other citizens of Alabama combined to injure the whole people of Alabama before the world, since nothing worth while can be gained by the state in pressing its prosecutions to the bitter end, The Advertiser herewith takes it upon itself to suggest and urge that the state now move for a decent, dignified compromise."

By all means, let us "throw away this body of death" that has encumbered us all too long.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser

Scottsboro

The Advertiser had not intended to say more than it has already said in an editorial urging a reasonable and decent compromise of the Scottsboro cases. Its recent editorial precipitated a lively discussion in the newspaper press of Alabama. Some of the editorial comments have heretofore been reproduced on this page.. The Advertiser had thought that nothing more should be said now, since this newspaper does not favor undue lay pressure upon oath-bound officials who in criminal cases are charged primarily with the duty of declaring the law and affirming the facts.

But because a delicate issue of public policy is raised by the Scottsboro drama, The Advertiser is sure that it will be forgiven if it adverts once more to this question. The Advertiser is moved to do so in order that it may reproduce and commend to all concerned some excerpts from the leading editorial of the current number of Alabama, "the news magazine of the Deep South", published in Birmingham by Hubert Baughn and William Huie.

The excerpts herewith presented, it seems to The Advertiser, are sober and well-considered. They follow:

The Scottsboro cases furnish a ready illustration—and a sharp test of the courage of the Governor and the Attorney General. It requires no courage and little ability to try these defendants, convict them, sentence them to death or long terms—on and on, and on and on; but it requires courage and statesmanship and a fine and discriminating loyalty to Alabama to look the facts of those cases in the face. The Attorney General can take the easier way for him—try, convict and pension them in Kilby Prison for life. But what of the State, harboring for endless years a festering doubt and a marching song for racial and revolutionary unrest?

This journal neither expresses nor holds any belief as to the actual guilt or innocence of the defendants. There has been irreconcilable conflict in the testimony. Confessions and accusations have been made and withdrawn under circumstances alike challenging belief. If the offense charged had been theft or robbery, the benefit of reasonable doubt of a charge made by a species new to Alabama, the female tramp, against a group of roving Negro bums, would in all probability have resulted in verdicts of not guilty or dismissal of the cases by the State, with warnings to get the hell out of Alabama and stay out. But the charge was rape, in which the doctrine of reasonable doubt gives way, as we all knkow, to a grim determination in the South that this offense must stop. Conviction was and is a foregone conclusion, if the Attorney General drives on.

The original death sentence of nine defendants, including mere brats, dramatized the entire incident beyond any known precedent. The Communists began the exploitation of the defense and deeply offended our people.

It is difficult to deny that this resentment has existed. Control of the defense by the Communists has long since given way to a personnel of high standing, but resentment of the original Communist attitude remains. There is, accordingly, a widespread belief throughout the United States that Alabama juries are not so much trying and convicting these Negro tramps as they are trying and convicting the Communists who exploited them, and that they continue verdicts of guilty in order to demonstrate that the Negroes were not unjustly indicted in the first instance.

There is enough justification in this belief to put our sense of justice to a rigid test. Nor is this the sole, or even the principal factor in the problem confronting the Attorney General. A much more pressing question is involved.

This Scottsboro group is asserted by competent members of the Alabama Bar with whom this case has been discussed to be a bad group of cases in which to submit to the U. S. Supreme Court the question whether our jury system continues, notwithstanding the formal reversal on that ground, systematically to exclude Negroes from the juries.. That Court has twice indicated that it does not like convictions in these cases, and it finds a way out.

Now, where does this lead us? Straight to this frank summary:

(1) Doubt, entertained beyond our borders, whether Alabama is trying these Negroes or is convicting them to avoid the charge of unjust prosecution.

(2) If convicted and given long sentences deemed harsh and coerced, a perpetual Mooney Case to placard the State for a generation.

(3) Grave and immediate doubt whether, on the appeal of Patterson, the Supreme Court of the United State as now constituted, in order to reverse another Scottsboro Case, will not again denounce our jury panels and thus make it difficult for us to try Negroes in Alabama unless, to be sure, the jury lists shall include Negroes in proportion to population. Any such result would be catastrophic. We face it. The Attorney General must determine between "bitter ending" the Scottsboro Cases or jeopardizing white juries in Alabama.

Premature publication of negotiations for disposition of the cases by reasonable sentences, taking into consideration six years' imprisonment awaiting trials, was unfortunate; but the publication was made and its substance has not been questioned. We accept as a fact that there was a near agreement.

Then why not settle the cases? The Attorney General and the Governor would further an immeasurable public interest if they rid the State of this sickening and perennial parade of human degradation—of accuser and accused.

Is the desire to play out to the grim end that sordid drama worth the chance of losing our jury system? This journal believes not.

The Advertiser, for its part, is confident that the State's higher interests in this matter are in good hands. It believes that Governor Graves, Attorney-General Carmichael and Judge Callahan can be trusted by all fair-minded Alabamians to discharge their duties in the premises fairly, wisely and honorably.

It so happens that each of these gentlemen is under oath to observe, not only the letter, but the spirit of the law. It so happens that the final disposition of these nasty cases rests with them. The Advertiser must think of what it itself would do were it in the place of any one of these three gentlemen. The Advertiser does not envy them their responsibility.

At the same time, public policy and common sense sometimes have their day in court. We are sure that no Alabamian, official or otherwise, wishes to see the letter of the law transformed into a monster. Certainly Graves, Carmichael and Callahan are of such quality that they will readily subscribe to this principle. The Advertiser, as a lay newspaper, is glad to assure them of its complete confidence that in their consideration of the Scottsboro problem they will be true to themselves and at the same time true to the higher interests of the State. In this trio there is no lyncher —and no fool.

Too Late for Compromise

A recent suggestion by the Montgomery Advertiser that some compromise be effected in the so-called Scottsboro cases and rid the state of further publicity and expense attached to the effort to get a conviction that will stick against these negroes in the higher courts has met with approval in some quarters but has not been so favorably received in others.

The substance of The Advertiser's argument is that Alabama has already been done enough damage by these cases and, since there is some doubt of the guilt of "the boys," they should be allowed to plead guilty and receive sentences of a few years and be credited with the time they have already spent in jail.

In our opinion, the suggestion of The Advertiser comes about five years too late. If it had been made before any of the defendants had been placed on trial, before the juries which tried them had said they are guilty, and before the manner in which the cases were handled had brought condemnation of the judicial system of Alabama from the outside world—even from the Supreme Court of the United States—it would have been much more timely.

As matters now stand, to make a compromise in the cases after all of the damage has been done would be but to let Samuel Liebowitz and his tribe bluff out the entire state of Alabama and place this state in the further embarrassing position of admitting that the original convictions and sentences were not founded on law and evidence—the very argument that Liebowitz and his associates used in spreading the stench of the Scottsboro affair to the four corners of the globe. Such an admission would be a sweet morsel to the League for the Advancement of Colored People and would lend support to their ill-founded campaign to persuade the rest of the nation that, at best, justice in the South for the negro is a haphazard affair.

Regardless of the unfavorable publicity that Alabama has received from the bungling manner in which the Scottsboro cases were originally handled, the nine defendants are either guilty of rape, as charged, or they are guilty of nothing. We can not see that the somewhat questionable character of their alleged victims makes any difference in the gravity of their offense, if any offense they actually committed. If they are guilty (and several juries have found them so) they should receive such punishment as a jury might feel should be meted in each individual case. On the contrary, if they are innocent they should be found so by juries and discharged by the regular process of law.

There have already been far too many 'dog-fall' convictions in the courts of Alabama brought about by agreements between the state and the accused. In almost every such case a disrespect for law enforcement is created and as pointed out above, such an outcome would reflect no credit on the judicial system of this state.

In view of the extreme friendliness that has existed in recent years between The Advertiser and the office of the Attorney General, we wonder if that newspaper's editorial, strong as it was, was not inspired by a communicated desire on the part of Mr. Carmichael and his force to "get out from under" the Scottsboro cases, and if The Advertiser is not attempting to pave the way for that course to be followed without bringing down upon the Attorney General's department the criticism of the people of Alabama.

THE CASE DRAGS ON

Heywood Patterson, Scottsboro negro, who thrice has been saved from the electric chair lost his appeal to the Alabama supreme court as to a sentence of 75 years in jail which he received at his last trial. Defense attorneys have announced that they will appeal to the supreme court. In this case the laws delay is plainly seen. He will make another appeal to the United States supreme court and may even get another trial.

Had not northern money come to his rescue he would have been electrocuted long ago. Most of the poor negroes without funds get the chair if one such sentence is imposed but the Scottsboro case hangs on. If this case had happened in England the matter would have been settled quickly and finally.

"THIS BODY OF DEATH"

The Sun has never regarded the case of the "Scottsboro Boys" as seriously as some. It has held all the time that this case was terribly over-rated and not entitled to the big noise it was creating throughout the country.

Regardless of its gravity or importance this newspaper joins the Montgomery Advertiser in asking that "this body of death" be soon washed-out and washed-up. Like the disposition of Muscle Shoals the people of this state are about fed-up on this tripe.

STILL GOING STRONG

An old time favorite melodrama will be revived in Alabama next month when the Scottsboro Boys go on trial again. The crime charged against them—rape—was committed six years ago, but has been about lost sight of in the welter of perjury, racial antipathy, professional liberalism, convictions, appeals, new trials and retrials. Only this week, the Alabama Supreme Court upheld the latest conviction of one of the boys, but promptly an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States was announced by defense counsel Leibowitz.

And in Wise, Virginia, Edith Maxwell, the "curfew girl" twice found guilty of having crowned her father with a "slipper" or other blunt implement, has received the cheering news that the State Supreme Court has agreed to review her second conviction. Edith is thus assured of at least a few more months of liberty.

We were about to say that if somebody could just arrange for Tom Mooney's case to be reopened we would have three serial causes celebres going in full blast at the same time—when, lo and behold! the mail brought an announcement from the Tom Mooney Defense Committee that a Senate subcommittee has been appointed to hold hearings on a resolution calling upon the Governor of California to grant Tom an unconditional pardon.

Poor Sacco and Vanzetti. They will never know what they missed by having been executed and put out of the marathon a mere six years after their conviction. — The Charlotte News.

The Scottsboro Case Again

Once again the "Scottsboro case" is headed for the United States Supreme Court. A 75-year sentence of Heywood Patterson, Negro, in connection with an alleged assault he and a group of other Negroes made on a white woman back in 1931 will be appealed to the High Tribunal and may be returned for a fifth trial.

Many questionable things have entered into this notorious case. There have been broad hints of perjury, not to mention undue prejudice. Unless the State of Alabama disposes of the whole case in some measure that is upheld by the Supreme Court, justice will ultimately suffer. Already it has cast reflections upon Alabama and the South and every time the case is remanded for trial and is re-heard it agitates public opinion in the vicinity in which the alleged crime occurred.

The sooner Alabama disposes of and forgets the Scottsboro case the better it will be for the state and for the South.

Memphis, Tenn., Commercial Appeal
June 15, 1937

The Scottsboro Cases

More than a year ago The Commercial Appeal, in a spirit of utter frankness, urged that the state of Alabama owed it to the south to make some reasonable and speedy disposition of the Scottsboro cases.

The Supreme Court of the United States had just reversed the judgment of the Alabama courts in a far-reaching opinion which went far towards threatening the common practice of excluding negroes from southern juries. Competent lawyers saw in the opinion a broad intimation that the severe punishment the state of Alabama sought would not be permitted to stand. This being true, the assumption was proper that regardless of the merits of the cases, further efforts to push them would only serve to bait the higher courts and at the same time keep alive an agitation that was detrimental to the best interests of the people of Alabama and of the south.

It is refreshing to observe that the Birmingham News has joined with the Montgomery Advertiser in advocating that these cases be compromised. The defendants have been in jail for six years, the case has been to the Supreme Court of the United States twice, and only one of the six is under any sort of sentence now. Recalling that it has sided with the state and the prosecution, the Advertiser admits that "Scottsboro has injured Alabama incalculably." It adds, "let us throw away this body of death that has encumbered us all so long."

The News is even more emphatic. Pointing out that Scottsboro has been an Old Man of the Sea, the News calls upon the state to move for a decent, dignified compromise, concluding that if state officials can find their way to bring about a compromise, "they will have done a fine day's work for the people of the state."

It is to be hoped that this counsel will prevail. Not only would it be a relief to the people of Alabama, but it would be a good thing for the south as a whole.

Scottsboro

January 37
Advertiser
Montgomery Ala

The Advertiser had not inteded to say more than it has already said in an editorial urging a reasonable and decent compromise of the Scottsboro cases. Its recent editorial precipitated a lively discussion in the newspaper press of Alabama. Some of the editorial comments have heretofore been reproduced on this page. The Advertiser had thought that nothing more should be said now, since this newspaper does not favor undue law [illegible] oath-bound officials who in criminal cases are charged primarily with the duty of declaring the law and affirming the facts.

But because a delicate issue of public policy is raised by the Scottsboro drama, The Advertiser is sure that it will be forgiven if it adverts once more to this question. The Advertiser is moved to do so in order that it may reproduce and commend to all concerned some excerpts from the leading editorial of the current number of Alabama, "the news magazine of the Deep South", published in Birmingham by Hubert Baughn and William Huie.

The excerpts herewith presented, it seems to The Advertiser, are sober and well-considered. They follow:

The Scottsboro cases furnish a ready illustration—and a sharp test of the courage of the Governor and the Attorney General. It requires no courage and little ability to try these defendants, convict them, sentence them to death or long terms—on and on, and on and on; but it requires courage and statesmanship and a fine and discriminating loyalty to Alabama to look the facts of those cases in the face. The Attorney General can take the easier way for him—try, convict and pension them in Kilby Prison for life. But what of the State, harboring for endless years a festering doubt and a marching song for racial and revolutionary unrest?

This journal neither expresses nor holds any belief as to the actual guilt or innocence of the defendants. There has been irreconcilable conflict in the testimony. Confessions and accusations have been made and withdrawn under circumstances alike challenging belief. If the offense charged had been theft or robbery, the benefit of reasonable doubt of a charge made by a species new to Alabama, the female tramp, against a group of roving Negro bums, would in all probability have resulted in verdicts of not guilty or dismissal of the cases by the State, with warnings to get the hell out of Alabama and stay out. But the charge was rape, in which the doctrine of reasonable doubt gives way, as we all knkow, to a grim determination in the South that this offense must stop. Conviction was and is a foregone conclusion, if the Attorney General drives on.

The original death sentence of nine defendants, including mere brats, dramatized the entire incident beyond any known precedent. The Communists began the exploitation of the defense and deeply offended our people.

It is difficult to deny that this resentment has existed. Control of the defense by the Communists has long since given way to a personnel of high standing, but resentment of the original Communist attitude remains. There is, accordingly, a widespread belief throughout the United States that Alabama juries are not so much trying and convicting these Negro tramps as they are trying and convicting the Communists who exploited them, and that they continue verdicts of guilty in order to demonstrate that the Negroes were not unjustly indicted in the first instance.

There is enough justification in this belief to put our sense of justice to a rigid test. Nor is this the sole, or even the principal factor in the problem confronting the Attorney General. A much more pressing question is involved.

This Scottsboro group is asserted by competent members of the Alabama Bar with whom this case has been discussed to be a bad group of cases in which to submit to the U. S. Supreme Court the question whether our jury system continues, notwithstanding the formal reversal on that ground, systematically to exclude Negroes from the juries.. That Court has twice indicated that it does not like convictions in these cases, and it finds a way out.

Now, where does this lead us? Straight to this frank summary:

(1) Doubt, entertained beyond our borders, whether Alabama is trying these Negroes or is convicting them to avoid the charge of unjust prosecution.

(2) If convicted and given long sentences deemed harsh and coerced, a perpetual Mooney Case to placard the State for a generation.

(3) Grave and immediate doubt whether, on the appeal of Patterson, the Supreme Court of the United State as now constituted, in order to reverse another Scottsboro Case, will not again denounce our jury panels and thus make it difficult for us to try Negroes in Alabama unless, to be sure, the jury lists shall include Negroes in proportion to population. Any such result would be catastrophic. We face it. The Attorney General must determine between "bitter ending" the Scottsboro Cases or jeopardizing white juries in Alabama.

Premature publication of negotiations for disposition of the cases by reasonable sentences, taking into consideration six years' imprisonment awaiting trials, was unfortunate; but the publication was made and its substance has not been questioned. We accept as a fact that there was a near agreement.

Then why not settle the cases? The Attorney General and the Governor would further an immeasurable public interest if they rid the State of this sickening and perennial parade of human degradation—of accuser and accused.

Is the desire to play out to the grim end that sordid drama worth the chance of losing our jury system? This journal believes not.

National Scottsboro Week Opens July 1

NEW YORK, June 20.—(AP)—The Scottsboro Defense Committee tonight set July 1 to 6 as "national Scottsboro week" during which persons [illegible] of nine negro youths held in Alabama on charges of criminal attack will protest the prisoners' treatment.

Eight of the nine await third trials. One was given a 75-year sentence upheld by the State's highest court.

The Advertiser, for its part, is confident that the State's higher interests in this matter are in good hands. It believes that Governor Graves, Attorney-General Carmichael and Judge Callahan can be trusted by all fair-minded Alabamians to discharge their duties in the premises fairly, wisely and honorably.

It so happens that each of these gentlemen is under oath to observe, not only the letter, but the spirit of the law. It so happens that the final disposition of these nasty cases rests with them. The Advertiser must think of what it itself would do were it in the place of any one of these three gentlemen. The Advertiser does not envy them their responsibility.

At the same time, public policy and common sense sometimes have their day in court. We are sure that no Alabamian, official or otherwise, wishes to see the letter of the law transformed into a monster. Certainly Graves, Carmichael and Callahan are of such quality that they will readily subscribe to this principle. The Advertiser, as a lay newspaper, is glad to assure them of its complete confidence that in their consideration of the Scottsboro problem they will be true to themselves and at the same time true to the higher interests of the State. In this trio there is no lyncher —and no fool.

VINDICATED

Elsewhere on this page will be found an editorial from the Montgomery Advertiser of the past Friday, in which Editor Grover Hall advocates compromise of the Scottsboro attack cases, in order to rid the state of an incubus that has done more to sully her fair name than any other development in recent history.

This editorial was strongly endorsed in the Sunday editions of the Birmingham News and the Huntsville Times, both of which agreed that there is more to be gained by compromise than there is by "exacting the final pound of flesh."

It is a pleasurable duty for the Times-Journal to reproduce this editorial, as it offers full vindication and endorsement of the far-seeing judgment of the late F. T. Raiford, publisher of the Times-Journal, which prompted his attitude toward the entire early course of the litigation.

In his argument, Mr. Hall uses almost the exact words of a Times-Journal editorial of June 16, 1931, in which Mr. Raiford declared "only God knows" the guilt or innocence of the defendants.

We quote Mr. Raiford's editorial as follows: "As before stated in these columns we are unable to say if the immutable standards of right and wrong were effective in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused in the Scottsboro trial, or whether the scales were made to vibrate by the extraneous influences against the unfortunate defendants. Whether the eight negroes are guilty of the crimes alleged, only God knows, but we do know the environment in which they were subjected to the ordeal of life or death left much to be desired."

In an editorial appearing on Friday, March 25, 1932, Mr. Raiford predicted the storm of abuse that the state was to suffer because of the conditions under which the trials were conducted, and dared the wrath of fiery-tempered Alabamians by predicting the overthrow by the Supreme Court at Washington of the ruling by the Alabama Supreme justices affirming the death sentences in the case.

This prediction was made without equivocation, as follows:

"The action of the Alabama Supreme Court in affirming the sentences of seven out of eight of the Scottsboro negroes will be denounced as the culmination of miscarriage in many parts of the world. The storm of protest and objurgation will not be the outgrowth of a conviction that the negroes are innocent so much as that they did not have a fair and impartial trial. The trial took place under the menace of armed militia and frowning machine guns, with public feeling running high and a milling mob of thousands on the outside of the courtroom, whose emotions were whipped into a frenzy by a brass band and fervid oratory. A court proceeding of even-handed justice could not have taken place in such a hostile environment. Appeal will be taken to the United State Supreme Court on the grounds that the constitutional guarantee of a fair and impartial trial to all accused persons was violated and if the high court should sustain its own decision given in a similar case appealed from Arkansas, the cases will be remanded to the Alabama courts for retrial."

Thus it becomes apparent that Mr. Hall takes a position that is directly in line with the Times-Journal policy established by Mr. Raiford toward the Scottsboro cases and the endorsement of this paper of the suggestion of compromise is a matter that requires no deliberation.

Better Late Than Never

Another chapter in the now famous Scottsboro trials will begin on July 6 when eight Negro men walk into a court room and stage for the fourth time a legal fight for life and freedom.

More than $50,000 has been spent by the State of Alabama in an effort to convict the defendants—all of whom are accused of assaulting two white women hoboes aboard a freight train in 1931.

Of the nine men, one has been sentenced to 75 years in prison, and his final appeal was last month denied by the supreme court of the southern state.

But the other eight have three times been convicted and sentenced to death; and three times their sentences have been reversed—twice by the United States Supreme Court and once by an Alabama trial judge.

The long story has revolved, of course, around the time-worn racial plot. Cries of persecution from Northern agitators resulted in the retention of Samuel Leibowitz as defense counsel. Leibowitz, known as one of the shrewdest of the nation's criminal lawyers, will defend the mad sculptor, Robert Irwin, when he faces trial this summer for the triple-slaying on Beekman Hill.

Sources close to both prosecution and defense in the Scottsboro cases have admitted that negotiations have been under way for sometime to end the long litigation in the trials.

The whole affair should be ended once and for all. Regardless of final disposition, both defense and prosecution should agree that the next chapter should be the last one in the book. The State of Alabama has suffered irreparable damage in the flood of undesirable publicity that has evolved from the trials.

And the cause of justice has not been helped in the slightest degree. It is well and good to make sure that defendants are given every possible chance under the law to prove their innocence, but when cases drop into an endless rut and like Tennyson's brook tend to go "on and on forever," it is high time for final action.

'SCOTTSBORO' NEGROES WILL PLEAD GUILTY

Post 5-22-37

—To Felonious Assault, But Not To Criminal Attack, It Is Learned

'NO TRIALS NECESSARY'

If Term Is Retroactive, They May Go Free Immediately

Copyright, 1937, By United Press

MONTGOMERY, May 22.—Alabama's notorious Scottsboro attack cases—which have dragged through state and Federal courts for more than six years—will end in a compromise next Fall between defense and prosecution, with the nine Negroes pleading guilty to felonious assault but not to criminal attack, the United Press was told today.

A high state official close to the prosecution stated that conferences tending positively in this direction have been under way alternately in New York and Alabama for several months, with the result that an agreement to conclude the cases without further trials is assured.

This official, who asked that his name be withheld, said the plan provides for the Negroes to plead guilty to felonious assault against Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, white women hoboes, on a freight train in Jackson County on March 24, 1931.

May Go Free

The state in turn is expected to mete out sentences which will be retroactive or satisfied by the six years of close confinement which the Negroes already have undergone, allowing them to go free.

Liberal and radical elements which have come to the Negroes' defense still contend the Negroes were not guilty of attacking the girls, as both charged at first. One of the girls, Ruby Bates, has since testified the charge was unfounded.

The United Press' informant stated that the first move in the proposed compromise will be made next Thursday when a hearing on the appeal of one of the Negroes, Heywood Patterson, is scheduled before the Alabama Supreme Court.

Has Been Costly

At that time, he said, attorneys for both sides will ask that the hearing be continued until October, the beginning of the court's Fall term—thus clearing the way for more compromise discussions.

Patterson is the only one of the nine Negroes tried under an indictment returned by a grand jury that included a member of his own race, in accordance with an order by the United States Supreme Court.

His 75-year sentence was the first "break" in the case. Death sentences had been imposed upon all the Negroes in state courts, only to be reversed by higher tribunals, including the U. S. Supreme Court.

Increasing pressure is being brought to settle the entire Scottsboro affair as soon as possible, reliable sources said.

Jackson County has been embarassed for three years because of the expense of the trials. They have cost more than $50,000 so far.

SCOTTSBORO APPEAL HEARING POSTPONED

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 20. (AP)—The Alabama supreme court postponed today for one week argument on the appeal of Haywood Patterson, negro "Scottsboro case" defendant, under a 75-year sentence on conviction of rape.

The postponement of arguments until next Thursday was asked by the state, due to the death this week of Lieutenant Governor Knight, state's special prosecutor in the internationally known case.

Talk of Compromise Settlement of Celebrated Affair Is Being Revived

DECATUR, Ala., May 25 (AP)—Another revival of an old court drama was heralded today as Judge W. W. Callahan set July 6 for resumption of trials in the "Scottsboro" case.

Nine Negroes are accused of a mass attack of two white girls.

The call for new trials in Morgan county circuit court, in mid-summer, overshadowed quiet efforts underway for months for an agreement for disposal of the six-year-old cases, without further trials.

One agreement proposal, in discussion by members of the Alabama bar and other prominent persons, was that the three youngest of the nine Negroes be discharged, with the others pleading guilty to assault not involving a sex crime, the sentences to be agreed upon.

While nine Negroes are accused of the attacks, only eight were ordered brought here for arraignment. The ninth, Heywood Patterson, is under sentence of 75 years imprisonment, imposed after his fourth conviction here in January, 1936.

Leibowitz is Optimistic

After Judge Callahan issued the trial order in Morgan county circuit court at Decatur, Ala., today, Samuel Leibowitz, chief of the defense counsel, in New York called for a showdown compromise on the fate of the boys.

"I honestly believe that by now the people of Alabama are beginning to realize that an injustice will be done if these Negroes are railroaded," Leibowitz said.

"The Scottsboro committee, including educators and churchmen and leaders of the Alabama state bar, feels that the case should be closed once and for all—that pursuing these Negro boys on the evidence of a white girl, Victoria Price, after her hobo companion, Ruby Bates, recanted her charges and admitted it was all a frame-up, is a deep injustice. It is time for a showdown."

For stating that we think the evidence shows the Scottsboro Negroes not guilty, Mr. R. L. Reynolds, of Birmingham, lets us have his opinion of us. His letter, too long to be reproduced here, ends with the statistical statement that "if it were possible for you to weigh the sentiment in this state and see how you completely stand alone in your viewpoint . . . I believe it would be a revelation to you. I know that you have completely destroyed whatever usefulness your column might have had to the people of this state. I base this on a cross-section of people with whom I come in contact.

SCOTTSBORO CASE AGAIN

Word comes from Decatur, Alabama, that resumption of trials of the Negro defendants in the internationally known "Scottsboro Case" has been ordered for July 6 by a judge in the county circuit court, and those who have followed this almost comedy of errors during the years is has been pending wonder what will come next.

Eight of the nine Negroes charged with attacking two white women aboard a freight train — of all places — will be arraigned. The ninth got 75 years last year and has an appeal before the Alabama supreme court. Those who will go on trial in July are now being held in jail at Birmingham.

As we ponder over this long trial, the question regarding the number of lynchings or other cases of violence that may be laid to this delay of justice arises to haunt us. And by justice we do not mean conviction but delay in action. Twice the Negroes have been convicted by Alabama courts and twice these convictions have been reversed by the United States supreme court.

Witnesses have arisen and vanished since those nine darkies first were placed on trial for their lives for attacking those two white women, whose characters have not been portrayed in a light that was any too brilliant. The state has expended thousands of dollars of public, tax-payers' money in this battle which was heightened by the appearance of northern legal talent and money, which was put into use in behalf of the defendants.

We have serious doubt that a jury could be found anywhere in Alabama unprejudiced enough to deliberate these cases. We also doubt that there exists any agency for social uplift, etc., which also has not become so prejudiced that its influence would turn public opinion from the channels of clarity.

The "Scottsboro Case" has become as complicated as the Mooney Case and regardless of the outcome cannot be terminated satisfactorily for all concerned. If the Negroes go free, then they will have just cause for feeling that they have been terribly wronged by the state and if they are convicted, then it will mean no feather in the cap of American justice for having delayed so long.

LIEUT.-GOV. THOMAS E. KNIGHT

WHILE THE AGE does not rejoice in anyone's misfortune, there are times when we can agree with William James, the great psychologist, when he said that "death is the greatest promoter of progress." In the passing of Thomas E. Knight, Lieut. Governor of Alabama, we think that there is much better chance of settling the case against the nine Negro youths falsely accused of rape at Scottsboro, Ala. over five years ago.

The late Mr. Knight was prosecuting attorney when this case came to trial, and when it was shown that the first hearing had been rushed and all nine sentenced to die in one mass trial that lasted only a few hours, there was insistent and loud protest by fairminded citizens in all parts of the country. The International Labor Defense, jumped into the case, an appeal was taken and a new trial ordered. The defense, headed by Samuel Leibowitz, scored a sensation when it put Ruby Bates, one of the complainants and alleged victims of the rape, on the witness stand and had her repudiate her original testimony.

This repudiation should have caused even the Prosecuting Attorney to pause and realize that there might be a grave miscarriage of justice if these Negroes were convicted under the circumstances. But Mr. Knight seemed more determined than ever to secure a conviction and spurned all efforts of "outsiders" to effect a compromise. The prisoners have had three trials, and all except Heyward Patterson are still awaiting further trial. The vindictiveness of the late Prosecutor (who rose to the second highest office in the state on the fame he got out of this case) was alone responsible for this disgraceful delay in the settling of this case.

In his death we feel that at least the principals in the Scottsboro case will have a better chance for quick and more impartial justice. Although a comparatively young man, he clung to the old traditions of the South in his attitude toward both the Negro and the Jew. He was especially resentful to Attorney Leibowitz for forcing the State of Alabama to put Negroes on jury duty in that state. Prejudice dies hard, but only through the passing of this bitter racial prejudice and those who promote it, can there be a brighter day for the two races of the South and for the country as a whole.

The Digest - -

By FLOYD J. CALVIN

Mr. Knight Ascends

We cannot help but speculate on what kind of a reception was given Thomas E. Knight Jr., Lieutenant Governor of Alabama, on his sudden ascension last week. Just 39 years old, and rapidly forging ahead on what to all intents and purposes was marked as a long and brilliant career, Mr. Knight was abruptly called to account and taken home to his Father.

Floyd J. Calvin

It is my impression that white people, and particularly American officialdom, are more often moved by the uncertainty of the hereafter, in their civil relations with their colored fellow citizens, than by any other factor. After all, there are many places in the Bible where it is clearly indicated that the meek, humble poor and defenseless will be given a handsome reward hereafter and that the haughty, arrogant, cruel and merciless will, too, get their just desserts, which it is hinted broadly may not be so good.

White people wrote the Bible—or at least they take credit for it — and it is sometimes charged that they purposely held out hope for the subject peoples, or individuals, in the hereafter, to lighten their earthly load while the overlords are lolling at ease through their ingenious system of exploitation. But, ever since Pilate allowed Christ to be crucified, even though by default, officialdom has been somewhat wary of being too dogmatic in specific cases.

But not so Mr. Knight. He fought the Scottsboro boys, tooth and nail, to the last, in all probability with his eye on the Governorship of Alabama, and later a seat in the U. S. Senate. As it turned out, he goes to his grave, according to Prof. Pitkin, before his life began.

Leibowitz to Fight Scottsboro Decision

Immediately upon the heels of the upholding of the seventy-five-year prison sentence of Heywood Patterson, Scottsboro defendant, by the Alabama Supreme Court, Monday, The Amsterdam News established contact with Samuel Leibowitz, local attorney defending the nine boys, who issued the following statement to this paper:

"I have just learned that the Alabama Supreme Court has upheld the conviction of Haywood Patterson, one of the nine boys in the Scottsboro case.

"The fourteen million members of the colored race in America need have no fear that the fight to get justice for Patterson and his eight companions will be lessened one single iota by the Alabama court's decision.

"Unless the cases are disposed of in a manner satisfactory to the defense, Patterson's case will be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States for the third time. This establishes a new record in a criminal case for appeals to the highest court of the land in Washington. Twice before the Supreme Court has reversed convictions of the Scottsboro boys and has thrown the case back into the laps of the Alabama authorities. We hope that a third trip will be unnecessary, but in the event that we are forced to take those steps, we are confident that the Supreme Court will once and for all end this relentless pursuit of these nine innocent defendants.

"As for myself, I am ready to give all within me, as I have in the past, to the end that the boys be given their freedom, and that a real blow be struck at race hatred and bigotry.

"There is no place in this land for Scottsboro cases.

Legal Punishment for Rape

Watchtower

By ROY WILKINS

(Ed. Note: The publishers do not necessarily subscribe to the opinions expressed in this column.)

IN HIS CHARGE to the jury in the trial of Clarence Norris, one of the Scottsboro defendants, Judge William Washington (Speed) Callahan made a statement which is legally technically correct and which has far more truth in it than Alabama will admit. Said the judge:

"This case is not Victoria Price against Clarence Norris, but the State of Alabama against Clarence Norris."

Roy Wilkins.

The judge went on to explain that the alleged crime was a violation of state law, that, whereas the alleged rape had been committed upon the person of Victoria Price it had been committed against the statutes of Alabama, that Victoria Price was merely an instrument, a witness, brought in by the state to prove that its laws had been violated by Clarence Norris.

This portion of the judge's statement goes far deeper than the mere legal designation. All along, from the very beginning, this case has been the State of Alabama vs. nine Negro youths. From March 25, 1931, to this day the great state of Alabama has hounded and persecuted these boys. For what? For allegedly raping two white hobo prostitutes? Of course not! For being black. The "crime" for which Alabama has spent a fortune trying to take the lives of these defendants is the color of their skins.

Everyone who knew Alabama knew from the first day that this was so, but for those who did not know, the record of the past six and one-half years has more than proved the point. In what other place in this country of ours (except, perhaps, Mississippi) would the parrot-like fairy tale of Victoria Price be accepted as creditable in a court of law? In what other section would the host of discrepancies be swept aside as nothing? In what other locality would medical testimony, admitted to the record by both sides, be totally disregarded—medical testimony in a case where a woman claims to have been criminally assaulted by six or eight men in succession?

Fairness of Horton Was Bright Spot

The strongest point for these boys and against the State of Alabama was not provided by the reversals of one of the cases by the United States Supreme Court, as important as those reversals were. The clinching point was furnished by the opinion delivered by Judge James E. Horton of the Morgan County Circuit Court, who heard the second trial of Heywood Patterson and granted the motion of his attorneys for a new trial. Judge Horton, in setting aside the conviction of Patterson stated that the story of Victoria Price was improbable on its face and not to be believed, that other evidence was contrary to her story, that her story was uncorroborated, and that the evidence "greatly preponderates in favor of the defendant."

For this honest statement Judge Horton sacrificed his political career; he was not elected a judge again by the white voters of Alabama. There are many heroes in this long Scottsboro case, and Judge Horton takes his place in the forefront. He is too good a judge for Alabama and should be on the Federal bench.

But the point is that Judge Horton's calm analysis of the testimony in this case and his courageous conclusion prove beyond doubt that Alabama is prosecuting these boys because they are black; for, as Judge Horton showed, there is no case against them for raping Victoria Price and, therefore, no case against them for violating the statutes of Alabama. So the crime must be their color.

Judge Callahan has given further weight to the belief that this case is the State of Alabama vs. nine COLORED defendants by his charges to the jury. On two occasions, now, he has told the jury that it may assume that in cases involving white women and Negro men that there was no consent and therefore, if an act was committed, it must have been rape. Callahan has also advised that the jury need not necessarily believe anything else Victoria Price might have said if it believes that part of her story about the rape. In other words, she might tell the most fanciful tale under the sun, but if, in her recital, she said she was raped by one of the defendants, that part can be believed even if the jury could not believe the rest. The jury was told, also, that her story needed no corroboration; if she said a Negro attacked her and the jury believed her, that was sufficient to bring in a guilty verdict.

Color of Principals Becomes Important

All this talk by Judge Callahan means only one thing: color. If all the persons concerned in this case had been white or black it would have been tossed out of court in ten minutes. If the woman had been black and the men white it never would have reached court, because none of the zealous upholders of Alabama's laws against rape would have lifted foot off a desk even to hear a complaint.

So it is color, and for a very good reason. Alabama is afraid. Fear drives her and some of her sister Southern states to these extremes. Alabama is afraid of Negroes. She is afraid that if she for one moment takes her foot off the necks of black people they may advance and show up the whites for the incompetents they have proved themselves to be.

White Alabamans and the professional crusading white Southerners tell the world they have a "peculiar problem" and they bemoan the fact that the world does not seem to appreciate their situation. But you can be sure that when a group, or a whole section, feels called upon to use segregation, discrimination, disfranchisement, economic slavery, the Scottsboro brand of justice, and lynching to solve its "peculiar problem" that the problem is not the Negro, but the Southern whites.

They are afraid—fearfully afraid—that without these methods of control they would not be able to maintain their hysterically asserted superiority. And it must be remembered that, so far, the only record of their superiority is contained in their monotonous repetition of the mere statement.

Fearful Majority Is Organized

Yes, Judge Callahan is as right as rain: the Scottsboro case is the State of Alabama vs. Clarence Norris—and all other Negroes. It is the organized fearful majority against an oppressed minority, desperately determined to prove that, right or wrong, white is always right. The clamor about Northern lawyers and outside agitators has only served to embellish the picture. The essential setting has never changed from 1931 to 1937.

There is hope for a change, however, even if it is based on nothing more than the certain knowledge that things as they are simply cannot go on forever. It is unthinkable that stupidity and ignorance and intolerance and brutality shall be always in the saddle. This is the challenge that the Scottsboro case has for the world's millions who have been shocked and outraged at the conduct of a sovereign state in a civilized nation in the twentieth century.

Victoria Price, said Judge Callahan, is merely a witness for the state. And in the same manner Clarence Norris and his companions are but symbols for the defense, symbols that call for the carrying on of an endless battle, not only for the freedom of these nine boys, but against the monstrous prostitution by the prosecution of all the ideals of human liberty.

Conviction at Scottsboro

ONCE more a Scottsboro defendant has been convicted and sentenced to the electric chair, and once more an appeal will be taken to the United States Supreme Court. Convictions of the other defendants who are to be tried in the coming weeks may be expected.

CLARENCE NORRIS, the Negro who was convicted yesterday, was given the maximum penalty, despite glaring discrepancies in the story told by VICTORIA PRICE, the chief prosecution witness, one of the two white women he and the other defendants are alleged to have attacked. RUBY BATES, the other white woman, did not appear as a witness. She long ago repudiated MRS. PRICE'S story, saying that it was untrue, and that neither of them was attacked by the Negroes.

At the trial which has just concluded, it was brought out, among other things, that whereas VICTORIA PRICE said she was beaten black and blue, rapped on the head with a pistol butt, smashed in the nose with a fist, and lacerated, DR. R. R. BRIDGES, Jackson County physician, examined her two hours after the attack was supposed to have taken place, and found no trace of any of these wounds.

JUDGE JAMES E. HORTON, who set aside one of the convictions in 1933, and was defeated for re-election to the bench in consequence, reviewed the testimony of VICTORIA PRICE in great detail in that famous opinion, and showed to the satisfaction of any unbiased person that the Scottsboro defendants are innocent.

Our hope is that the Supreme Court of the United States will reverse the verdict once more, and force the Alabama authorities to go through with another trial, if they are still unwilling to drop these trumped up cases. If this keeps up long enough, perhaps they will have to be reasonable, in order to keep from bankrupting Morgan County, where the recent trials have been held. Jackson County, in which Scottsboro is situated, is said to have been bankrupted years ago by the $50,000 expense of the earlier cases.

The Scottsboro Case

Clarence Norris, one of the defendants in the noted Scottsboro case, was convicted last week and the jury fixed the death penalty. This is the third time a jury has returned such a sentence against Norris. His case has been appealed twice and remanded for trial. His leading attorney is Samuel Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer who has the reputation of having represented scores of defendants in homicide cases without one execution. Mr. Leibowitz was not pleased with the third verdict against Norris and declared that he would "appeal the sentence to hell and back." The resourcefulness of Mr. Leibowitz is shown by his discovery of this formerly unknown court of appeals.

Kinston, N. C., Free Press
July 17, 1937

The first verdict in the new trials of the notorious Scottsboro cases has resulted in conviction and recommendation of the death sentence. Further complications are expected as a result thereof. The cases have been hanging fire for about six years, and this, we believe, is the third series of trials that the young Negroes have undergone. Each trial has resulted in conviction. Heywood Patterson, one of the key defendants, was convicted last year and sentenced to 75 years. Clarence Norris, latest defendant to be tried, will, in accordance with the jury's verdict, be sentenced to execution. There of course will be an appeal. If the lower court's verdict is sustained ultimately, it probably would not be out of order for the Alabama governor to commute the sentence to 75 years. Justice would seem to demand that all the defendants who are convicted of the same heinous offense should pay a like penalty.

Scottsboro History

Two white women, taken from a freight train near Paint Rock, Ala., in 1931, told police that they had been attacked by a group of Negroes while en route from Chattanooga, Tenn. The famous "Scottsboro case" followed. Trials of the Negroes involved were resumed this week at Decatur, Ala.

The Supreme Court has set aside death sentences twice. It held once that the Negroes had been without benefit of adequate counsel. It ruled later that they had been deprived of constitutional rights by "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from juries.

Alabama and several other southern states have since revised jury laws. Chief defense counsel this time is Samuel Leibowitz, star New York criminal lawyer.

Scottsboro Negro Arrives At Kilby

Brought to Kilby Prison yesterday from Birmingham to be treated for an infection that has developed in one of his legs, Heywood Patterson, negro Scottsboro Case defendant, convicted of participating in a mass attack on two young white women near Scottsboro, in March, 1931, and sentenced to 75 years in the penitentiary —was temporarily lodged in a detention cell where he was made comfortable, and today will be transferred to the prison hospital. Following the transfer, prison physicians said, Patterson will be given a thorough examination and a definite diagnosis made of the infection.

Transfer of Patterson from the Jefferson County jail to Kilby, was on order of Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan of Decatur, who presided at Patterson's last trial and is now presiding at retrial of Patterson's co-defendants in the same case. Patterson is suffering from an infection of the leg bone, suspected, it was learned, of being tuberculosis of the bone, and his removal to the prison hospital here was on recommendation to Judge Callahan by Dr. J. A. Collins, county jail physician at Birmingham.

According to Dr. Collins, the diseased condition of Patterson's leg is due to an old injury that had apparently occurred prior to his arrest in 1931, and it appeared to him that one operation had already been performed on the infected limb.

Mr. Leibowitz Blows Off

IF, as Mr. Samuel Leibowitz charges, the verdict against the Scottsboro boys was stacked even before their trials began, why did he come down there?

That question must have come to the minds of thousands when Mr. Leibowitz, in an adjectival frenzy, charged this state with "sanctimonious hypocrisy" and predicted that his client in the latest case, Charlie Weems, would be convicted. Mr. Leibowitz continued to assure us that he didn't expect an acquittal in any of the cases, and that he feels quite certain that when the solicitor asks for a 50-year sentence, the jury will make it 99 years.

This, of course, is nothing more than an admission on the part of Mr. Leibowitz himself that his chief aim in the Scottsboro case has been the publicity he can get out of it. The word publicity is too mild; notoriety is better.

If he had had the interest of the Scottsboro negroes at heart, and really wished for them to be set free, he would not have been quite so liberal with his legal services. He himself argues that point when he says that the state of New York, and not the negro Charlie Weems, is on trial. In other words, Mr. Leibowitz breaks down with the confession that he is a liability, not an asset, to the negroes, but the notoriety apparently is so valuable to him that he cannot afford to lose it—including the notoriety which he will gain by his latest tirade against the "sanctimonious hypocrisy" of Alabama. His most recent outburst is the best accredited to him since his celebrated description of an Alabama jury as "those creatures, those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy."

If Mr. Leibowitz is disgusted with the whole affair, he is not by himself. The people of Alabama are exceedingly tired of seeing this case used as a sounding board for political bombast in the East, and as a money-raising, tear-jerker for radical elements throughout the world. We are not prepared, however, to yield our courts and principles to the whims of a professional publicity-hound, no matter how much "sanctimonious hypocrisy" he finds in us.

THE PASSING OF A PLAGUE

At the time of the "Scottsboro" attack one of the defendants, the State of Alabama now says, was 12 years old and another 13, one was too ill, in the opinion of a physician, to have participated in the attack, another was "practically blind".

The man who was too ill to participate in the crime and the man who was "practically blind" have told "plausible stories" consistently in all of their trials. For these reasons the State yesterday dropped its prosecution of these four and had them escorted to the Tennessee line with Samuel Leibowitz and his associates trailing behind. Tennessee is welcome to all such plunder, so far as Alabama is concerned.

Thus the first break in the long and disastrous deadlock occurs with dramatic swiftness and utter finality. Heaven be praised!

What next? The Advertiser is not privy to the plans of the State with reference to the five remaining defendants, one of whom, Norris, is under death sentence, but the Associated Press quotes an unnamed person as predicting that Norris will be granted executive clemency and that the appeals in other cases will be dropped. Ozie Powell, who in an attempt to escape the custody of officers, stabbed a deputy sheriff, pleaded guilty to an assault charge and was sentenced to 20 years. The rape charge against him was erased.

The State could abandon its remaining cases, or it could ask for the indictment of the principals upon charges of simple assault without reference to rape, which is a capital offense. The principals could then be tried for assault and if convicted given nominal sentences.

The Advertiser is confident that Governor Graves will not let the death sentence against Clarence Norris stand. The Governor can commute a death sentence to a prison term, but cannot reduce a prison sentence, except by parole or pardon.

The Advertiser feels sure that the Governor will in the end put Clarence Norris in the same position before the law as those who received lesser sentences for the same offense face. That would be fair and sensible.

The Attorney-General and his colleagues did a good day's work yesterday and they deserve the thanks of the people of Alabama. But there is other work to be done in the same vineyard of hog weeds, dog fennels and poison ivy. In the sweat of our faces shall we live, so, let us labor mightily in our appointed vineyard! For as matters stand, less than half of "this body of death," of which we have spoken aforetime, has been thrown away!

Light Dawns on Alabama

Manchester Guardian Weekly 7-23-37

In the spring of 1931 nine Negro lads whose average age was fifteen were charged at Scottsboro, Alabama, with criminal assault on two white girls with whom they had travelled in a train. Eight were sentenced to death, and only a rally of those in the United States who were horrified at the sentences and who know how easily in the South racial prejudice may result in judicial murder saved them from prompt execution. Ever since then the nine Negroes have been on trial in one court or another on the same charge, and their fate has been a matter of concern all the world over. Twice the Supreme Court of Alabama has confirmed the sentences, and twice its decision has been overturned by the Federal Supreme Court. The evidence against the boys was always of the flimsiest, and as early as 1933 one of the girls who had testified for the prosecution confessed to perjury. In any jurisdiction in which the Negro can be sure of fair play the case would have collapsed long ago, but such is the structure of the American judicial system that the Federal Supreme Court could do no more than refer the trials back to Alabama, and until now the Alabama court has seemed quite relentless in its determination to reaffirm conviction. Now, however, it is announced that in the third trial at Decatur the State has withdrawn the charges against four of the accused and they have been freed. One is still under sentence of death, two have been sentenced to life imprisonment and one to twenty years for assaulting the deputy sheriff while travelling in custody. But those both in the United States and in Britain who have provided the means to combat the mockery of Alabaman justice now know that their six years of effort have not been vain, and they will continue that effort until the wrong is righted in all the cases.

NEGROES TO BE PARDONED?

Manchester Guardian Weekly 7-30-37

Scottsboro Case

From our New York Correspondent

The four youthful defendants in the Scottsboro case, who were unexpectedly set free on Saturday by the State of Alabama, arrived here on Tuesday and were given an ovation at the railway station by several thousand New York Negroes, representatives of the city's vast Negro community.

There are unconfirmed rumours in circulation that the sentenee of death passed on one of the other five defendants may be changed to imprisonment and that all five will receive pardons after a few years. The repeated trials of this case have been extremely expensive to the State of Alabama.

American Liberals are bitterly indignant over the solution of the case, under which four of the defendants are freed and the other five sentenced to long terms of imprisonment or, in one case, death. They argue that the testimony against all of them was exactly the same and that if one is innocent all are. They declare that the compromise had a political motive and insist that it constitutes an open admission that injustice is being done.

The United States Supreme Court has twice set aside the verdict of the Alabama Courts and at the third trial the Judge overruled the jury, which found the Negroes guilty, on the ground that its verdict was not in accordance with the evidence. In all these instances no distinction was made regarding the guilt or innocence of one defendant or another.

PAPER FAVORS COMPROMISE IN FAMOUS CASE

N. Y. Herald Tribune Analyzes Situation At Scottsboro

NEW YORK, Aug. 6—Having taken the editorial lead in crystallizing public opinion in New York and the nation in favor of a compromise in the Scottsboro cases, the New York Herald Tribune, in a column long leading editorial Monday, gave a masterful analysis of the dramatic turn on Saturday which freed four of the boys, but concluded the matter is not ended, and that the ends of justice have been only partly served.

Under the caption, "Scottsboro," the paper said:

"The surprising denouement in which the retrial of the Scottsboro cases has ended represents a material victory for the cause of reason and justice in the American community—a victory even though reason must find it difficult to reconcile the contradictions of the settlement and the requirements of an ideal and perfect justice are obviously far from being served by its terms. A state, after holding two men for more than six years in prison and on one occasion condemning both of them to death, abrubtly announces, for reasons available from the beginning, that they were not guilty. It releases two more with a similar implication that they suffered six years' imprisonment and imminent risk of death for a crime of which they were innocent. In the case of a fifth, who had subsequently assaulted one of his guards, the state drops the original charges; but the judge, on account of this crime of which the man must be assumed innocent, increases by five years the fifteen-year sentence he had intended to impose for the assault. Finally, proceedings are dropped against these five defendants only because four others have been convicted and sentenced to death or life imprisonment, though the evidence against the latter group is virtually the same as that against the former, and certainly little if any more substantial.

"Far From Even-Handed Justice"

"All this is very far, indeed, from a picture of even-handed, impersonal justice; and looking only at this aspect of the cases one would have slight reason for comfort. But there is another aspect. Four of the defendants, to begin with, have been released; they are legally free men and their jeopardy is at an end. A generation or so ago they would almost certainly have been lynched with their companions as soon as they had been apprehended. More recently, after being run through the mere form of a trial, such as was accorded them at Scottsboro in 1931, they would have been 'legally murdered,' and that would have been the end of the matter.

"That it was not the end of the matter in their cases was due to many things. If Communist agitation had a hand in it so did the better conscience, the greater enlightenment and restraint of the people of Alabama. If it was due to the defense funds raised to keep up the fight, it was due also to the judicial system in which defense could make itself effective—a system which in the South, as elsewhere, is freeing itself from old traces of lynch law and politics, and which still has at its head the unimpaired arm of the Supreme court of the United States, still powerful to protect the lowliest from denials of justice by mob spirit of whatever character.

"Acquittal Impossible"

"A glance over past history is enough to show how much has been gained; a glance at the more immediate history surrounding these cases puts the 'compromise' itself in a better light. If it does not fulfill the dictates of abstract justice, it does represent an unexpectedly hopeful practical adjustment of the fiercly clashing human elements through which justice here, as always, was compelled to work. The cases were deeply plunged not only in racial passion and sectional jealousy, but in the furious hatreds which radicalism always promotes with its interventions and in the tangle of politics which inevitably grows in such black soils. Every step in the long record seemed only to render an acquittal before a local court and jury more and more humanly impossible, regardless of evidence. If it is not justice, the present solution verges on a statesmanship which is perhaps the nearest approach to justice than can under the circumstances be asked for now.

"We do not think that it is, or ought to be, a final solution. By securing life imprisonment instead of death (the one death sentence will presumably be commuted), the state has left the way open for an ultimate pardon, or, perhaps, some other future and calmer settlement that will stand on firmer ground than does this inconsistent 'compromise.' The Scottsboro cases are not ended. But in reaching this middle position, desipte all the human embarrassments and difficulties with which the problem has been surrounded, the State of Alabama deserves, we think, high commendation. It has given the country new confidence that it will itself find the right end at last; it has shown that the ideals of reason and justice, if sometimes imperfectly expressed—since all men are imperfect—are still in the United States ideals with a living power, which, in several other great modern states, they no longer enjoy."

Aftermath Of Scottsboro.

Over the past week-end, Iredell county has suffered the indignity of two terrible crimes which were perpetrated by negroes. One was a case of criminal assault upon a white woman. The other was a case of breaking into the home of a white person and entering the room where a woman was asleep. When the woman awoke and screamed, the negro fled without carrying out his intentions whatever they happened to be.

It just makes one wonder if the outcome of the Scottsboro case has not had a heavy bearing on the minds of many negroes over the country to make them so bold in their nefarious undertakings. It is recalled that some of the negroes in the famous Alabama criminal assault case were freed and that they were taken to New York, received in a grand demonstration and accorded an immense celebration by Harlem negroes assisted by some white people.

The negroes in the Scottsboro case have had the backing in the courts of a society under the high sounding name of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Such an association might do a lot of good among the colored race if it provided educational advantages and proper teaching; but if it spends its resources in encouraging the negroes in crime by making them think that they will be protected from justice for such deeds against the white people of the South, it is going to do them more harm than good and even may instigate a race war.

It is very creditable to the Iredell county officers headed by Sheriff Moore that no harm was allowed to come to the prisoners in the two cases which were tried here this week when mob violence was threatened. It is bad that Iredell had to suffer such crimes; but a lynching would not have been in any way creditable to the community.

SCOTTSBORO

Johnson Citians, like most people in all parts of the country, are glad the trial of the men who had become known throughout the world as "the Scottsboro negroes" is over. Let us join in hoping there will be no further attempts to reopen the cases.

Nothing in recent years has done more to give the far South a reputation for bigotry and cruelty than the manner in which these cases were handled. In the face of more than a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendants and notwithstanding some admittedly perjured evidence a certain section of the public insisted on the conviction of the accused, not because they were guilty but because they were negroes.

The case against them, always weak enough, was probably strengthened, rather than otherwise, because of the fact that Communistic organizations and individuals with alleged Communistic leanings, came to their rescue. Many observers suspected the concern of these was not so much with the fairness or unfairness of the negroes' trials as with an effort to prove the United States to be the home of prejudice and unfairness of an ugly type which could be overthrown only by Red revolution.

Under the circumstances, we're inclined to think it was a pity one of the negroes was condemned to die and four others were sentenced to what was described as "virtual life imprisonment." It would have been better, in our opinion, to let one or two possibly guilty men escape than to have the charge of "railroading" innocent men hurled throughout the world.

In saying so, we echo the opinion of The Montgomery Advertiser and most of the other leading newspapers of the South. Like them, we have said nothing that should be construed in favor of Southern women's being attacked by either black or white men.

Good Riddance

ALABAMA officials believe and hope that the infamous and notorious "Scottsboro cases" are finally finished and definitely got rid of after six years in the courts.

Other Southerners with the welfare of the South at heart share the hope, even if believing that justice was cheated.

Four of the negroes are under penitentiary sentences ranging up to 75 years, and one again is under the death sentence, although officials predict the Governor will commute it. Four others are free and out of the state.

The four who were freed were wisely and immediately taken north on a train. Alabama was no place for them. Neither was any other Southern state. The news descriptions of the shouting crowds meeting them in New York, mostly negroes, making heroes of them, may have been sickening but are not alarming.

If the example of the "heroes" encourages more vicious crimes and rapes and racial strife, the victims will be in the North, which is just and proper.

The South is glad to get rid of the cases. They have undoubtedly directly inspired many of the crimes reported in recent years in the South, and many of the lynchings of the same period.

New York is welcome to these negroes, and if they have any sense left they will stay there.

Kannapolis, N. C., Independent

DID SCOTTSBORO DO THIS?

A bold negro walked into the home of a white woman near Kannapolis and criminally assaulted her while her two small children looked on helplessly.

A white woman awoke at her home in Iredell county the other night to find a negro in her bedroom.

Other cases similar to these and worst are being recorded nearly every day in the news columns.

Are instances of this kind an aftermath of the famed Scottsboro trial? The Statesville Record, and other southern papers think that case may have something to do with it.

"It just makes one wonder," says the Record in a recent editorial, "if the outcome of the Scottsboro case has not had a heavy bearing on the minds of many negroes over the country to make them so bold in their nefarious undertakings. It is recalled that some of the negroes in the famous Alabama criminal assault case were freed and they were taken to New York, received in a grand demonstration and accorded an immense celebration by Harlem negroes assisted by some white people.

"The negroes in the Scottsboro case have had the backing in the courts of a society under the high sounding name of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Lawyer Samuel Liebowitz, who defended the Scottsboro negroes, has declared the interests he represented will look after the rehabilitation of the five negroes freed by the Alabama courts. It will be interesting to follow the careers of those negroes for the next few years in order to learn whether, after all, the darkies had any real aid in finding themselves after their many years in jail or whether they will be left to shift for themselves after the publicity their lawyers received from the Scottsboro victories has died away.

THE ending of the famous Scottsboro case in Alabama as regards several of the defendants is a striking illustration of the danger and uncertainty of jury trials in certain parts of the South should a Negro happen to be the defendant. Four of the colored men were sentenced to be electrocuted at the first trial, but appeals to the higher courts saved them. Suppose, for the sake of argument, no appeal had been taken, and the men had been executed, who would be guilty of murder, and who would have to answer for it? The men were charged with assaulting white girls, all of whom were hoboes in a box car on a Southern railroad, and except for the color, there was little difference.

THE NEGRO'S BEST FRIEND

Now, more than ever before, the South is in the limelight in every field, including literature, science and the law. The recent disposition of the Scottsboro case, which brought Alabama so much unfavorable publicity and vitriolic diatribes against the South, has again given us the center of the stage.

In contrast to the abuse poured on us by Yankee authors who know nothing about their subjects when it is the South, is the following from Frank Parker Stockbridge, columnist for one of the nation's largest newspaper syndicates:

"A few weeks ago I visited a typical Southern plantation and had a chance to learn how the negro employees were treated. There are thirty families employed the year 'round on this ten-thousand acre tract, with extra help at cotton-picking and harvest times. The head of each family is paid $30 a month. They get living quarters and fuel free, and all they want of the foodstuffs grown on the place. Most of the cabins have gardens and flocks of poultry. The negroes have their own community center or 'jook' where they have their dances and social affairs. In case of illness, they get free medical care.

"How many Northern white workers, I wonder, have $30 a month left after paying rent, food and doctor's bills? Not many. In addition, the women and older children are given first chance on this plantation to earn extra money at picking time. The negro foremen get $50 a month and better quarters.

"I was reminded of what Booker T. Washington, the great negro educator, said to me years ago. 'The best friend of the Southern negro is the Southern white man.'"

Why can't people living north of the Mason-Dixon line who have never seen the South in any but an unbiased light, take the word of Booker T. Washington?

Mr. Leibowitz Purifies Himself

FROM a news story in The New York Times telling of the arrival of four Scottsboro boys in Manhattan:

"Mr. Leibowitz stepped out, punched out the crown of his straw hat and sailed it away, explaining that he did it to get rid of some of the 'grime of Alabama'."

We feel certain that Mr. Leibowitz, upon breathing of New York's untainted air once more, feels purified and sanctified now that he has rid himself of the "grime of Alabama." We suggest that his multitude of admirers in this state—those who helped him to accomplish his end—now take up a collection for a new hat. But don't buy the hat in Alabama; buy it in New York. The World's Greatest Criminal Lawyer cannot afford to be contaminated by a hat which has touched the Land of the Great Unwashed.

The "Scottsboro Boys."

The eleventh trial in connection with the famous "Scottsboro Case" ended last week in the conviction of two more of the nine Negroes accused of assaulting two white women on a freight train more than six years ago, and the dropping of the charges against four of the defendants. One of the Negroes is under sentence of death and four are under prison sentences ranging from twenty to ninety-nine years.

Samuel Leibowitz of New York was chief counsel for the Negroes in most of the trials, and when the cases against four of them were nolle prosequied on condition that they leave Alabama and not return, he left with them immediately for an unknown destination. He took them to New York, where they were met at the Pennsylvania Station by a vast throng and given a rousing ovation. The crowd seems to have been composed largely of colored folks from Harlem, and Harlem has taken the four "Scottsboro Boys" to its bosom.

All New York welcomes these four boys and, naturally, Harlem is making heroes of them. Interest in them may wane after a time, but for the present it is enthusiastic and genuine. While Mr. Leibowitz has not announced what he plans to do with them, and may not have decided that question, he has declared no group will be permitted to exploit them. It is to be hoped New York or Harlem will not carry lionization of the youths to extremes, particularly if part of the idea is to embarrass or offend the South. But even so, Alabama at least should make no complaint. If a large part of the country looks upon the "Scottsboro Boys" as martyrs to injustice born of race prejudice, that State is to blame.

In The Idiom

THE esteemed Tuscaloosa News, noting the swift end of the Scottsboro cases, ribs The Advertiser and some others in an entertaining editorial, and then mars the piece and the occasion by committing a faux pas. Editor Shelton should know that it is no longer polite to say "Civil War." Tchk-tchk!—The Montgomery Advertiser.

We don't mind being taken to task—but not like that! The faux pas to which The Advertiser refers was a faux pas, all right, but not ours. We placed the words "Civil War" in the mouth of an imaginary citizen of Manhattan, not in our own. And if The Advertiser doesn't think that the War Between the States is still the Civil War to about 90 per cent of those who live north of the Mason and Dixon Line, it doesn't know its Yankeedom. And we know that it knows its Yankedom. As for us, we've been Warring Between the States since the U. D. C. first put us on the right track some eight or ten years ago. "Civil War" is as taboo in these columns as Hitler in the Kremlin.

We were merely having our imaginary Manhattan character speak in the idiom, as it were. If he had had occasion to address the editor of The Montgomery Advertiser personally, for instance, he would have said, "You all is, etc." Nor would his "you all" have been an editorial plural. It would have been a Yankee singular—from an unsingular Yankee.

We clinch our argument when we say that it's very much the same thing as Atticus Mullin referring to a turning plow as a turnplow. Atticus, like the Yankee, just doesn't know any better.

This Afternoon

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES II

"Thou canst not say I did it; never shake

Who did this thing to the South? Who made this ugliness, this bitterness, this rotten place in a civilization, this stench in the nostrils of a world, this Scottsboro case? Some say the lust of black men did it, some the lies of white women, but there are more defendants than these, and more plaintiffs. The ghastly, unending mess is chargeable against both the South and the North, against radicals and reactionaries, against politicians, against jurics, against the press, against the bar, against the bench. Sometimes the charge is of pride, of stubbornness, prejudice, hate, ambition, sadism, vanity. Sometimes it is of stupidity, bungling, carelessness, bad psychology, thoughtless sensationalism, unintelligent altruism.

Who that has had any part in this case on either side or as a neutral can say he did not do it, that he did not contribute something to the elements that have made the compound so foul? To admit the mess and confess a part in it is good for all of us now. It may held us all somehow to make an end of a case which has gone so far beyond the gondola car at Paint Rock that the original plaintiffs and defendants are almost forgotten.

There just simply isn't anything for anybody, good or bad, to gain out of the Scottsboro case any more. It is very well to talk of fundamental principles of right and wrong but when those principles are lost in a thousand extraneous considerations and when both sides are joined in holy deadlock, the only thing for sensible men to do is to close the case out, compromise it to death, postpone the vital issues to some other case where they will be less confused, more resolvable.

This summer may go down in history as the one when people in general learned the importance of eating salt to offset perspiration losses. At the same time come rumors of great new salt domes in the South where perspiring is heaviest. Isn't nature wonderful!

In this column's experience the most oppressive heat to be found anywhere in the country is that of Washington, D. C. And the most dangerous is that of New York, N. Y. Southern heat is highly uncomfortable but it is more a thing of perspiration than of prostration. Below the Potomac many swelter but few expire. Above the Potomac it is different—and worse. And now that science is telling us to take salt here in lieu of lost perspiration, it may be that the heat won't even make Southerners lazy any more.

Is there a back-to-the-home movement for women, and are American women holding out against it more successfully than European ones? Miss Gordon Holmes, managing director of the National Securities Corporation, of London, says so. Unemployment, she reports, has caused a "general slide back" in the status of women abroad and brought about the return of many women to their homes. She thinks American women hold the future of the business women in their hands, and wants them to do something about it. Particularly she wants them to put more women in public office.

Since women are the latest-comers to the economic tables it may be natural that they should be asked to retire when the table seems to have thirteen. But against this is the fact that women have proven themselves more capable in certain types of work than men. Against it, too, is the claim that there really aren't too many at the table, that given a proper distribution, the consumption demands of the world are enough to give everybody a job.

• • •

At any rate, the modern American answer to whatever excesses of job-seekers over jobs occur is that elimination shall be on a basis of age, not sex.

CALVIN'S DIGEST

By FLOYD J. CALVIN

VICTORIA PRICE

Victoria Price sat at a second story window and watched four of the Scottsboro boys [illegible] before these same boys had been sentenced to death on her story. Now the state said openly it thought they were innocent, and quashed the indictments against them. This happened in Alabama.

Victoria Price, descendant of white women who have watched Negroes die because they pointed the finger at them, this time suffered own white men who [illegible] it her wild sex [illegible] even though it involved Negroes. Why didn't they believe her? Why didn't they trocute the boys? Why didn't vindicate white womanhood more? Wh didn't they teach groes again that white women acred?

Victoria Price doesn't understand that the world is growing wiser, even in Alabama. She doesn't understand the significance of the word "progress," the meaning of the millions of dollars being spent in education for the masses, and the meaning of the words "interracial relations."

She does not understand these things. She lives in the world of the ignorant, the world of the uninformed, the world of the prejudiced, the world of the cruel and heartless, the world of the hard and the unregenerate. Many white people themselves pity Victoria's type, and are anxious to do something that will make her kind become fewer in this rich country of ours. Opportunity and educational advantages, spread out to where the masses can benefit, will reach Victoria's type, and that is why the New Deal is spending so much of the Federal money, and pulling so hard for "reform." It hopes to make America a better place, socially, for all the people.

For Judge Knight, father of Thomas E. Knight, the late attorney general of Alabama, there is no hope but the hope of death. This old man, as head of the State Supreme Court, would have, like Victoria, relished the death of the Scottsboro boys. But fate decreed otherwise, he was not able to send them to their death ahead of time. There is forgiveness and hope for Victoria Price, because she does not understand; there is neither for Judge Knight, as there was none for his son, for they understood perfectly what they were determined to do. But thank heaven they failed.

NEGRO LEADERSHIP GAINS

Negro leadership received renewed strength upon the naming of Dr. Dwight Oliver Wendell Holmes as president of Morgan College, Baltimore. Another school of ancient and honorable lineage, for the past seventy-odd years administered by a white head, is now in colored hands. Morgan follows Shaw and Bishop in this popular and correct trend of giving the leadership of Negroes to Negroes themselves.

On the other hand, Negroes must become doubly conscious of their increasing power and prestige and conduct themselves as befits leaders of men. Trials and tribulations come to leaders, and they must, in the midst of storm and strife, keep cool, calm and collected. Bon voyage to Morgan under Negro guidance. There is every reason to believe she is in safe hands. The success of her course will be strong argument for additional leadership opportunity for Negroes in this field.

SIGNS OF RECOVERY

Although depressing reports may still be heard, there are signs in different parts of the country of real and substantial recovery. In Savannah, Ga., a new bank has been opened, the first since the depression, and the first colored bank in that city in nine years. In Newport News, the Crown Savings Bank reports the largest percentage of increase in the savings department of any bank in the city. The North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company of Durham reports collections for the first half of the year of $1,035,588.65; in Chicago three colored men, the Jones Brothers, have opened a 5c, 10c, 25c and $1.00 store, giving employment to nearly 100 people; in Oklahoma City, a newspaper, the Black Dispatch, is installing about $40,000 in new equipment; in Louisville, another newspaper, the Leader, is moving into a fine new home this fall; in Durham, colored bankers were invited to attend the meeting of the white bankers at Chapel Hill; in Asheville, N. C., Louis Armstrong was brought in to play for the anniversary ball of a newspaper, the Southern News, and so on. There are many signs of substantial recovery and the return of business confidence.

"AMERICA'S" EDITORIAL STAFF

We are pleased to be advised by Father John LaFarge, associate editor of "America", national Catholic weekly journal of opinions, of New York, that, contrary to reports, he did not write the article, "The Black Cardinal," published in a recent number of the magazine, but that the article was written by Leonard Feeney, the Literary Editor. Father LaFarge makes the correction, he explains, not because it matters so much, but that he would not like the public to get the idea that perhaps he writes all the articles in "America" on the race question. On the contrary, he says, all the staff members feel as the various articles show; they are written by different men—some by Paul L. Blakely, some by Mr. Feeney, and some by Father LaFarge. In other words, the entire editorial staff of "America" is represented by the various articles written and published. The recent long editorials on "No Compromise" on Scottsboro, and on he Anti-Lynching bill were by Mr. Blakely.

Father LaFarge is active in interracial work, and is a zealous promoter of the cause of interracial justice. He admits that the staff of "America" is pleased with the evident popularity of its interracial articles with

No Exploitation

IT is heartening to learn from Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz that there will be no exploitation of the four Scottsboro boys who gained their freedom after six-and-a-half years of martyrdom in Alabama.

First concern will be for their health, education and spiritual rehabilitation. Two of the four were converted Sunday and all four joined church in Brooklyn.

Freedom from any kind of imprisonment invariably brings with it weighty moral responsibilities to those so freed. Unless the proper guidance, counsel and inspiration are placed within their reach such persons can hardly be expected to emerge from the conflict of life victorious.

Because of the moral responsibility to their five comrades in prison: to society—particularly represented in the agencies; at home and abroad—largely responsible for the belated justice which made their freedom possible; and to others of their class in the South upon whom racial prejudice delights to prey, Attorney Leibowitz's assurance of "no exploitation" is comforting.

It is the duty of those fully aware of the significance of the Scottsboro Case to racial life in America, to do what they can to encourage and to assist these boys to become useful citizens of society.

ALABAMA'S ACTION IN FREEING FOUR OF THE nine defendants in the Scottsboro case came as welcome news after six and a half years of seemingly hopeless struggle to obtain elementary justice in the Southern courts. The importance of the victory may be judged from the fact that it has been only a few days since the state announced its determination to demand the death penalty for all but one of the Negroes. But the battle is only half won. One of the defendants, Clarence Norris, is still under sentence of death; another, Andy Wright, is faced by a ninety-nine-year sentence; while two of the others, Haywood Patterson and Andy Weems, face seventy-five years' imprisonment. Ozie Powell was cleared of the charge of rape, but sentenced to twenty years for his attack on Deputy Blalock. From the standpoint of justice, Alabama's position is even less tenable than before. The evidence against the four who were convicted was identical with that against those who were released, consisting solely of the unsupported, and frequently contradictory, testimony of Victoria Price. For some months rumors have been heard of a compromise agreement to free the boys on terms which would save the face of the Alabama authorities. But the final outcome does not appear to have resulted from any such bargain. Justice demands that the fight be continued until the state of Alabama not only frees all of the Negroes but makes some amends for their six and a half years in prison.

Deal With State Strongly Denied By Noted Lawyer

Four Defendants In Scottsboro Case Freed In Surprise Move By State; Weems and Wright Sentenced

POWELL GETS TWENTY-YEAR TERM

Special to Journal and Guide

DECATUR, Ala.—"We have just begun to fight."

Such was the parting salvo of Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel in the Scottsboro cases, as he left here Saturday en route to New York with four of the nine defendants in the case who were freed dramatically by the State as the six-and-a-half year old case ended temporarily in a maze of inconsistencies.

The statement was in the nature of a challenge and in answer to predictions from a "high source" that the defense "will drop the appeals in the Heywood Patterson and Andy Wright cases, and the Governor will extend clemency to Clarence Norris."

Patterson, who was convicted for the fourth time in January 1936 on the basis of testimony of Mrs. Victoria Price that she and Ruby Bates were raped by the nine youths aboard a freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock, Alabama in March 1931, has appealed the 75-year sentence to the United States Supreme Court.

Norris, the first of the defendants to be tried in this last series of trials, was sentenced last week by Judge W. W. Callahan to be executed at Kilby Prison on September 24. His case is also on appeal. A sentence of 99 years was imposed on Wright at the same time in accordance with the jury's recommendations.

Center of the world news spotlight for more than four years, this Northern Alabama community sought a return to normalcy this week after swift court action on Saturday freed four of the defendants who have lived in the valley of the shadow of death for six and a half years, and left the remaining five under sentences ranging from 20 years imprisonment, to death.

Assistant State's Attorney General Thomas S. Lawson, chief of the prosecution staff, agreed to dismissal of charges against Olean Montgomery, Willie Roberson, and Eugene Williams, all of whom were convicted at the original trials at Scottsboro in 1931, and Roy Wright whose first trial also at Scottsboro, ended in a hung jury.

This sudden and unexpected move by the State came Saturday morning, finding him guilty as charged by Mrs. Price and fixing his punishment at 75 years imprisonment.

Ozie Powell, half-crazed from the effects of a bullet wound in his head inflicted by a Morgan County deputy sheriff in January 1936 while the defendants were being returned to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, was sentenced to twenty years imprisonment by Judge Callahan on a charge of assault, with intent to murder.

to save Powell's life at all costs so that he might be brought to trial. The youth is said to have become insane from the effects of his imprisonment and the shooting.

In ordering the release of the four youths Saturday the prosecution staff issued a lengthy statement declaring that they were "convinced beyond any question of doubt, after going through eleven trials of the Scottsboro cases, that the defendants have been tried and are guilty of raping Victoria Price in the gondola car as she recited upon the witness stand."

"Her testimony is corroborated by reputable witnesses so as, in our opinion, to convince any fair-minded man that these defendants did participate in throwing these white boys off of the gondola car and raping Mrs. Victoria Price, the statement reads.

"But after careful consideration of all the testimony, every lawyer connected with the prosecution is convinced that the defendants Willie Roberson and Olen Montgomery are not guilty.

"The doctor that examined Willie Roberson the day after the commission of the crime states that he was sick, suffering with a severe venereal disease, and that in his condition it would have been very painful for him to have committed that crime, and that he would not have had any inclination to commit it. He has told a very plausible story from the beginning: that he was in a box car and knew nothing about the crime.

"Olen Montgomery was practically blind and has also told a plausible story, which has been unshaken all through the litigation, which put him some distance from the commission of the crime. The State is without proof other than the prosecutrix as to his being in the gondola car, and we feel that it is a case of mistaken identity.

ENDS OF JUSTICE MET

"Mr. Bailey, Mr. Lawson and Mr. Hutson all entertain the same view as to these two Negroes, and in view of the doubt generated by the fact that their physical condition was as stated above, the fact that two men were seen in a box car by a disinterested witness, which tends to corroborate Willie Roberson, we feel that the policy of the law and the ends of justice would not justify us in asking a conviction of these two cases.

"Two of the defendants were juveniles at the time this crime was committed. According to a careful investigation by the Attorney General's office, we are convinced that at the time of the actual commission of this crime one of these juveniles was 12 years old and the other one was 13, and while they were in the gondola car; when the rape was committed, counsel for the State think that in view of the fact they have been in jail for six and a half years the ends of justice would be met at this time by releasing these two juveniles, on condition that they leave the State, never to return."

The whole proceeding of the release of the four defendants Saturday was carried out secretly and without any advanced publicity. Even the boys themselves did not know what was happening.

In the belief that they were being returned to jail in Birmingham they came out of the little red brick jail in the rear of the courthouse and were hustled into two cars provided by Dr. Newman Sykes, local physician.

NOT AWARE OF FREEDOM

Until Leibowitz apprised them of the fact, they themselves did not know they were free. State policemen were ordered by Judge Callahan to escort the party to the state line where they left for Chattanooga by way of Pulaski, Tennessee.

The entire party was well on its way before news of the release of the four defendants spread among Decatur's 18,000 citizens. Victoria Price, peering from a court house window saw them leave and sneered.

Local colored citizens, who have virtually been on edge for the more than four years the trials have been centered here, received news of the temporary end of the case with mingled feelings of relief and sorrow.

While the case was widely discussed all up and down West Vine Street, principal colored business thoroughfare, statements regarding the outcome were somewhat guarded and the tension which has been apparent throughout the ordeal was still present.

CASE COST STATE $75,000

It was estimated by Attorney General A. A. Carmichael that prosecution of the cases during the six-year period, has cost the State of Alabama nearly $75,000.

It was charged that the jury in the Wright case did not debate his guilt or innocence but only how much time he should have, after Judge Callahan, in his charge to them, dwelt exclusively on the prosecutions evidence.

Wright was saved from the usual sentence of death only because the state agreed not to ask for execution, but even then the state asked a pen term of only 50 or 75 years.

Immediately after Wright's conviction, the trial of Clarence Weems got under way, and for the second time the state agreed not to ask for capital punishment.

The testimony in the Wright case followed that of all previous cases with Mrs. Price contending the youth was one of those who attacked her on a freight train near Scottsboro in March, 1931.

After Melvin C. Hutson, circuit solicitor of Morgan County, pleaded that the defendant be given a life sentence equaling 50 or 75 years in prison, Leibowitz told the jury he was weary of listening to attacks on lawyers and witnesses from New York. He said that as a lawyer he had a right to try cases in any state in the country, but if juries here were to make up their minds before hearing any evidence that they must "put outsiders in their place," he was just wasting his time and might "just as well go home and let you do what you will with these helpless Negroes."

The New York attorney took exception to Callahan's charge to the jury on the ground of bias. Judge Callahan also denied a defense motion for an arrest of judgment on the ground that the Morgan county court lacked jurisdiction.

MOVED FOR TRANSFER

Despairing of an acquittal in this part of the state, Leibowitz moved to transfer all the cases to federal court on the ground that the Alabama law limiting the defendant to one change of venue deprives him of his constitutional right to a fair and impartial trial.

Asked if he had anything to say before sentence was pronounced, Wright declared:

"I didn't get justice here."

"Well," said Judge Callahan, "that's the finding of the jury, and it's my duty to pronounce sentence upon you."

Norris was also brought in. When Wright told him his trial had come out, both boys laughed.

Judge Callahan asked Norris if there was any reason why the death sentence should not be carried out.

"There is," the prisoner replied. "They didn't find me guilty. They just thought they did. I am accused of a crime I never even thought of committing."

The court set the date of execution for Sept. 24, but the sentence was automatically stayed by notice of appeal.

COURT'S CHARGE TO JURY

The court charged the jurors that, if they believed the defendants conspired to attack the girls, or that the defendant, by his presence at the scene of the crime, aided and abetted in its commission, he was as guilty as though he had ravished the girls himself. He mentioned briefly at the end of his speech that if they did not think Wright guilty, they might turn him loose. He also warned them against returning a verdict of death.

Leibowitz also filed an exception to the part of Judge Calahan's speech dealing with conspiracy, on the ground that no conspiracy was charged in the indictment.

Foreman John T. Cooper said afterward the jury never seriously debated the question of Wright's guilt or innocence. The only delay in reporting a verdict was caused by one man who held out for a sentence of 75 years.

SCOTTSBORO

It is noted with some relief that the famous Scottsboro cases have been liquidated and that, with a generous distribution of seventy-five year prison sentences Alabama justice has relented sufficiently to permit nol prosses in the cases of four of the Negro defendants, three of whom were sentenced to death in the original trials six years ago.

Unable to divest itself immediately of an issue which has assured a comfortable degree of activity and publicity for all these years, the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored Race now sets out on a program of educating the Negroes freed from the peril of death an Alabama. They will be taught trades, according to their attorney.

All this, by way of rehabilitation and reform mught suggest to Alabama a generous gesture toward prevention. Doubtless. after this vindication of Southern chivalry. Alabama might now concede that ordinarily Southern ladies of unimpeachable character don't travel about the country on freight cars, don't mingle promiscuously with chance acquaintances, black or white, in hobo joints, and that, even in Alabama, such practices are frowned upon.

LEIBOWITZ HAILED BY HARLEM BLACKS AS NATIONAL HERO

New York, July 26.—(AP)—Harlem had another hero today, Samuel Leibowitz, the New York lawer who defended the four Scottsboro boys freed by an Alabama court.

"He's the greatest fellow in America," said a bystander at one of the half dozen street-corner meetings called after news of the verdict reached Harlem.

There was talk of a parade and a mass welcome for the four boys, if they come to New York but the conversation also turned to the five who were not freed.

"At any rate" said Roy Wilkins, assistant secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, "the fight for the freedom of the five convicted youths will go on."

His statement was printed in a bulletin distributed by the Harlem International Labor Defense Committee, proclaiming: "Four Scottsboro boys freed. Alabama must free all the Scottsboro boys."

SAMUEL LEIBOWITZ

PERHAPS there is no living man in America today who has wrought more heroically in a cause than did Samuel Leibowitz, justly renowned New York attorney. We will go even further and aver that, for that matter, there is perhaps none living or dead, who ever stood more steadfast to a chosen task or duty, than did this great barrister and advocate of the downtrodden. We have had heroes who have given up their lives for their country's sake; we have had them who have paid the supreme sacrifice for the sake of loved ones or friends; but the number who have espoused the cause of the poor and the despised, the hated, the maligned, the helpless and the ignorant, risking death as did Samuel Leibowitz every time he entered the confines of the state of Alabama, are few, even few indeed.

We cast aside as irrelevant the question of what compensation, from a monetary standpoint, Mr. Leibowitz may have received for his services in a legal way. To us his services were and are without price. He was more than a lawyer defending nine helpless youths in a court before a judge. He was a protector, a shield against the threatening darts of bodily violence. His courage, the courage of the stout of heart, unwavering in its incessant exhibition, not only shielded the boys, but it kept aflame the determination of the friends of justice the country over, and caused them to continue in the fight for the unfortunate Negro boys who had been caught in the vile net of a southern white woman's unmigitated lies.

Scottsboro Case

FAYETTEVILLE OBSERVER

Talk now is of compromising the aged and in many respects infamous Scottsboro case in which nine or ten negroes have been convicted several times and sentenced to die for criminally assaulting two white women hoboes aboard a freight train in Alabama.

The bi-racial situation in the South has a tendency to place a great social emphasis on assaults and attacks of all kinds between members of the different races, not only to protect the individual but to prevent the creation of incidents likely to cause mass ill-feeling and violence between the white and colored people, who are showing the world that two different races can live harmoniously together.

This emphasis undoubtedly enters into the Scottsboro case and influences it.

We think the average Southern white man is torn between two sentiments in the Scottsboro case.

The first sentiment is to punish to the limit of the law the perpetrators of the attack on the two white women if an honest jury is satisfied of the fact of the attack and the identity of the assailants.

The second sentiment is one of disgust with two women who would invite just the type of assault the Scottsboro prosecutrices allege by putting themselves in a position to be abused by using a form of transportation habitually used by the most vicious and depraved members of both races.

Winston-Salem, N. C. Journal

Costs of Scottsboro

Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael states that prosecution of the Scottsboro trials has cost the state of Alabama between $50,000 and $75,000. This includes immediate and incidental expenses. The immediate or direct costs are estimated at about $25,000. Court costs alone aggregated $10,264.19. And these figures do not show the total trial costs because no figures applying to the expenses of the defense have been released.

The extraordinary expenses was due to the 10 trials involved and the appeals filed with state and national supreme courts. The state of Alabama could have avoided the larger proportion of this expense by facing realities several years ago, and abandoning a gesture of perverted chivalry, which gained for it nothing and did hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of injury to the state in the minds of outlanders.

It could have renounced the right to ask for first-degree verdicts in the cases five or six years ago and by doing so attained the same results as have accrued in consequence of the tenth trial this month.

STRANGE SCOTTSBORO PROCEEDINGS

We suppose the public was as much surprised as we at the strange denouement of the so-called "Scottsboro case." All are somewhat confused over the action of the court in deciding not to prosecute four of the men charged with a fiendish crime after having convicted several others in the same court. If they were presumed to be guilty they should have been given a trial and a chance to establish their innocence and the state their guilt, if guilty as charged.

The action of the court in this case is no stranger, however, than the entire proceedings. Of course the juries must have been convinced of the guilt of those convicted. But these men were tried in a hostile atmosphere where it was almost impossible to give them a fair trial. So bitter was the feeling and strong the prejudice that we doubt if a juryman could have continued to live in that community had he voted to acquit the Negroes. So much for the Alabama system.

For that reason and others it is highly doubtful if the verdicts rendered against the accused are permitted to stand unchallenged. In the spirit of justice, the cases should have been removed to another court or a jury outside the vicinage should have been empaneled. The reader will recall that one of the women they are supposed to have criminally attacked repudiated her previous statement, denying that either had been assaulted.

They were convicted on the evidence of the other with vague substantiation by those who first arrested the gang. But the state of Alabama will not be permitted to railroad these persons to the penitentiary simply because of race prejudice. The higher courts will review the evidence and probably will not stand for such proceedings. Dismissal of the other prisoners' cases only heightens the suspicion that the men were unjustly convicted.

Brunswick, Ga., News

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The infamous Scottsboro case, with which most readers are familiar and which comes out of the state courts of Alabama, has gotten to be a sort of nuisance with the right thinking people of the south. When we say right thinking people, we refer to that vast majority of southern white men and women who have only the kindest regard for the negro and who would sincerely wish to aid their race in the progress they are making toward better living conditions, etc.

This case has been tried and re-tried in Alabama and the defendants have been given the benefit of every assistance and technicality that the law provides, but these young negroes have been convicted time and time again and only last week the case was retried before an Alabama jury and on conviction, Samuel S. Leibowitz, a New York lawyer and counsel for the defense, made this unbecoming and altogether reprehensible statement: "I am in this thing until hell freezes over. I will take the case on twenty trips to the supreme court if necessary."

This is the crux of this situation and it is the essence of the attitude of this man Leibowitz, who not for any feeling for the convicted negroes or for the entire race for that matter, but rather for large fees raised by their friends, has sought to make publicity out of the case and we are afraid has taken advantage of the well-meaning negroes who are paying him.

It ought also to be remembered that Leibowitz's clients —or many of them—are not well-meaning southern negroes of the type we contact every day, but rather they come from some association in New York for the prevention of cruelty to colored people, composed of renegade whites, who dominate it. This Leibowitz and his associates are not in the least bit interested in the future of these negro defendants, but they are bent on venting their spleen against the people of the south and against their determination to enforce at all hazards the law against rape, especially when the victim is a white woman and the crime or the attempt at crime is perpetrated by colored man or men!

The truth of the matter is that Leibowitz thinks nothing of this case from the basic point of view, and for that reason if for no other, he is simply unfit to handle it. He merely seems to be bulldozing a way to prevent it from being finally adjudicated, and the chances are he richly deserved the sort of treatment he has received in Alabama.

That Leibowitz is a bad type of lawyer, there can be no question of doubt. He is unfair and unethical and certainly he is a menace to law and order in this section of the country. The case also convinces us that the south is more tolerant in permitting this blatherskite to practice here, than might be the case in other sections of the country.

We think we have had quite enough of Leibowitz here!

LIEBOWITZ' FUTILE ATTEMPT TO HELP THE NEGRO RACE

The judge in the Scottsboro case finally slammed down on this Liebowitz for the manner which he exhibted toward the key witness of the state, the victim of the mass rape that was committed in a boxcar in Alabama some years ago and which has been tried and retried several times. The judge told the New York bully that he would have to take the consequences unless he moderates his language as well as his manner of asking questions.

The presence of this agitator and bullyragger in the case was its chief handicap and he has persisted in the effort to create an impression for use in his campaign to keep alive the organization in the east from which is being drawn the funds of negro citizens, who have no better sense than to expect it to be used to their advantage. They are given wild stories of the effect of the trial and are lured into believing that they can eventually upset all tradition, custom and government if they succeed in carrying on That means if they put up as much of their money as the renegade whites wish, those who are mulcting them at will under the guise of this utopia of racial equality that is impending.

The Scottsboro case continued on and the state of Alabama did not demand the murder of the participants. If they are guilty the state made a grave mistake. If they are not they should not be tried but turned loose. How it can be accomplished without serious harm to the state is a question that is worrying more people in Alabama than needs be known. The Liebowitz angle has been very grievous in their minds and the New York lawyer is liable to find himself the center of a storm of condemnation as well as eventually of abuse.

It is due to this type of lawyer and to the methods that he has adopted that most of the trouble arises in cases where the racial issue is involved and where the citizenry of the states affected are bulldozed and bullyragged until they cannot carry their measure of duty with any degree of satisfaction or even safety. The gentleman from New York might be excluded by state statute from appearing in Alabama, but that probably would be carrying the personal vindicativeness against him too far. As it is he has prejudiced his own race more than he has helped the negroes in Alabama and some other states.

Scottsboro Case Ends At Long Last

IT IS to the everlasting credit of Alabama that the State itself made the dramatic move which ended the Scottsboro case.

Asst. Atty.-Gen. Thomas S. Lawson, Melvin Hutson, of Decatur, and H. G. Bailey of the Scottsboro circuit jointly issued a statement Saturday declaring two of the Negroes innocent and pointing out that two others were juveniles at the time of the alleged crime. Hence these four were released. It is said "on high authority" that the one Negro who is under sentence of death will be given clemency. The defense in the case of two who have been sentenced to life imprisonment will withdraw appeals against the verdict. It is likely that these, and two others sentenced Saturday—one to 77 years for criminal assault and the other to twenty years for an attack on an officer—will serve a few years and then be given clemency.

Six and a half weary years have dragged along while these cases have been buffeted around in the courts. Twice, the United States Supreme Court set aside death sentences, first because the defendants were without "benefit of adequate counsel," and later because Negroes were systematically excluded from the juries which handled the case. Negroes were drawn in the jury panel for each of the last series of trials but none served.

The Scottsboro trial became a celebrated case around the world. It grew out of a hobo trip by two young women who had been to Chattanooga and were riding a freight back to their Alabama home. The group of nine Negro boys were riding the same freight. It was alleged that they attacked the two women. There was talk of wholesale lynching, and immediately propaganda on behalf of the Negroes started in the North.

One of the two women, Ruby Bates, in 1933 took the stand and repudiated her story of the attack.

In this worldwide agitation of the Scottsboro affair and in the horror with which a misunderstanding outside world viewed the possibility of Southern mobs burning the Negroes at the State, Chattanooga, for some strange reason, escaped unfavorable publicity. Yet the original lawyer for the Negroes was a Chattanoogan. Four of the Negro boys were Chattanoogans. The mother of two of the accused Negroes was a Chattanooga woman who was taken abroad and exploited in an effort to arouse sympathy and cash for the defendants. The ride on the freight train started here. And yet, Chattanooga was scarcely mentioned in the storm of agitation over the Scottsboro case.

The case was complicated by the entry as defense counsel of Samuel Leibowitz, successful New York criminal lawyer of circus tendencies. Mr. Leibowitz baited the South, belittled Alabama, abused all and sundry and muddied the waters to such an extent that many observers believed a compromise could never be reached so long as he remained in the case. Even during the last week of the trials, Leibowitz hurled charges of hypocricy in the case, and "perjury" in the testimony of one of the alleged woman victims. He was warned by Judge W. W. Callahan to change his tactics or "get ready for trouble" during the trial.

When the Scottsboro cases started, courtrooms in Alabama were packed. There was serious danger of lynching. But when the end came Saturday, it is said that few were in court. The Negroes departed without molestation. One of the most troublesome and potentially dangerous cases in Alabama history ended quietly as if the courts and the people were tired of a case which was inflated far beyond its importance and which should have ended years ago.

We congratulate Alabama on ending the cause celebre. There will be no Roman holiday, no new "Sacco Vanzetti." The South has ended the bitter, nauseating, humiliating case—in spite of irritations from well-meaning but misguided friends of the Negro defendants in the North and abroad.

Scottsboro Denouement

ACTION of the prosecution in dropping all charges of criminal assault against five of the nine Scottsboro defendants is a gratifying development, and serves as a virtual clincher to the argument we have frequently advanced, namely, that all nine of the Negroes are innocent.

Had it not been for the testimony of Victoria Price, one of the two white women alleged to have been attacked, there would have been no case against any of the defendants. The entire prosecution was built around her allegations. Victoria Price maintained steadfastly throughout all the trials that Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson, who now are admitted by the prosecution to be innocent, participated in the mass criminal assault on her and Ruby Bates.

But if Victoria Price was lying about Montgomery and Roberson, as even the prosecution now admits—although both men were once convicted and sentenced to death—what reason is there to think she was telling the truth about the four other defendants who were convicted on rape charges and who are still in prison? It must be borne in mind that Ruby Bates, the other white woman supposed to have been attacked, repudiated the whole story years ago, and admitted that it was a frame-up from beginning to end. And after contending steadfastly for six years that all the defendants were guilty of rape, the prosecution now sets four of them free and drops the rape charge against another.

The obvious conclusion would seem to be that the four men who have been convicted of rape, and who are under sentences ranging from 75 years to death in the electric chair, have committed no serious crime. The fifth Negro who is still held, admits attacking a deputy sheriff 18 months ago, in an effort to escape, and he should be punished for that offense, but, in our opinion, he should never have faced any serious charge in the first place.

Perhaps executive clemency will be extended by Governor Graves to the five defendants who are still held. Unless that is part of the agreement just made, we doubt if any future Governor will release them, for the Scottsboro case involves so much political dynamite, that Governors who are under no obligation to do anything about the prisoners may be all too prone to let them stay in prison, rather than to parole them and risk reprisals from the electorate.

At any rate, the whole wretched case seems to be drawing to a close, with at least a measure of justice done, and the prospect of further concessions from the prosecution. For that, all of us who believe in fair play can give fervent thanks.

Louisville, Miss. Journal
July 30, 1937

After six years of pure unadulterated indifference, or down right cowardice, or perhaps both, the people of Alabama have finally disposed of the famous negro Scottsboro trial, in which nine young negroes were charged with criminal assault on two white women in a freight train. Four of them were turned loose, and five received sentences from 20 to 99 years in the Pen. The four free negroes, with their crime-loving New York lawyer, left Decatur together for the east. It is hoped he will take them into his home in the big city, where he will soon learn what his criminally inclined colored brothers really are. A good negro, man or woman, is a valuable subject, and should receive protection in every way, and does receive it in the south. But a criminal negro is the lowest brute that walks, and does not deserve protection in any way. Had the four been deserving negroes, they would have prevented the five doing what they were charged with, and found guilty of. We wonder if Alabama will allow this criminally inclined lawyer to return to their state to defend others which his nefarious work will encourage in that State, if not in other southern states.

RUBY BATES REVIEWS HER SIDE OF SCOTTSBORO CASE

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Now that the Scottsboro case has been almost 50 per cent settled, the following review of the six-year-old trials is appropriate.)

By RUBY BATES

I was like asleep until the Scottsboro case happened, because, working in textile mills for 55 hours for $2.75 a week, I never had much chance to think about things.

Ruby Bates

I hardly could read and write because due to the circumstances of my parents I was only able to continue in school as far as the fourth grade.

Whep we were arrested in Paint Rock, Ala., on March 25, 1931. After spending the night before in Chattanooga, when I was 18, the police and officials had been notified of a fight between colored and white boys and that there were white girls near the scene of the fight on the train.

Threatened With Jail

Those Negro boys were the nine Scottsboro boys that have been in the limelight. A report of me because of what I said at the first trial. They were accused of rape attacks on me and Victoria Price.

We were immediately threatened with jail sentences, myself for vagrancy, and Victoria Price for accompanying a girl under 21 across the State line.

This being a serious charge against Victoria Price she quickly answered that we had been raped by the Negro boys. Being that I was under her influence, let her do the talking and kept quiet.

Constantly while in the Scottsboro jail we were interviewed by various officials in which they coached me especially to stick to the story of Victoria Price. And that is what happened throughout the first Scottsboro trial.

Story from Memory

I told the story at the trial as near like Victoria's as I could remember it, about the guns and knives and being attacked.

Then they began to ask me questions.

"Was you on the freight train?"

"I was."

"Did you see or was you with some boys?"

"I saw some boys but I did not know them." That was what I said.

"Did you see the defendants over there?" He pointed at the Negroes.

"I did."

"Can you pick out the exact ones that raped you?"

"I don't know whether I can or not."

They had all the boys stand up.

"Wasn't it the three last ones on the end of the line?"

I looked up and said, "Yes."

Lied Through Fear

I knew that I was telling false on those boys. But I was scared and was afraid to tell anything only what had been told to me by Victoria.

I shall always feel bad about talking like I did down there in Scottsboro. I hope that I will be forgiven for telling those lies on those nine boys. I know now that it is better to die for telling the truth than to get others in danger of losing their lives just because you are scared.

After the trial I worked a little but as soon as the boss found out who I was I lost the job.

Chooses the Truth

So, when the second trial come, in April, 1933, after the Supreme Court had sent the cases back to Alabama, I testified for the boys.

I guess nobody expected to see me there. Everyone stared me in the face. The room was so quiet you could have heard a pin drop.

I told about reading in the papers about the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick of New York and how I went there to tell him my story. I told how I asked for advice, and if he was me would he go back to Alabama.

And how Fosdick told me if I was telling the truth I should go and tell it to the court about how the boys never touched us, and I did.

Then I told the truth about the boys never touched us.

A few days after, when I read about the verdict, I did not know what to say. The jury found Haywood Patterson, the first of the nine Scottsboro boys that was tried, guilty again.

They haven't got no evidence. There isn't any. The boys are innocent.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE. NOW WHAT?—

The papers say that the "Scottsboro case" has ended by four of the Negroes being released and five having been sentenced from 20 to 99 years in the pen.

Let us, here in the South, face a few facts and see if the Scottsboro case has been settled as nicely as our lawyers would have us believe.

Do we accept this 20 to 99 years penalty as the penalty for Negroes raping white girls in the South as one to follow henceforth?

If friend lawyer thinks this, or if the publishers of the big daily papers in Alabama, who cried for a compromise settlement of the Scottsboro case so loud it was probably heard in Harlem, think that this is the price, then the Scottsboro case was settled in vain.

One thing appears certain and that is that there will be few Negroes tried for rape in Alabama from now on, which is unfortunate for we were making progress until the big dailies and their Negro loving lawyers and the northern people who care not whether they be mongrel or white, interested themselves in this case.

The better element of Negroes should rise up and take this matter in hand for it is here in the South that we must settle this Negro question.

It is a moral certainity that any Negro that lays his hands on a white woman in the South is courting death and he should be taught it in his schools. As for Madison County we want no Negroes and no whites to live here that do not believe that this is fair.

LIEBOWITZ' FUTILE ATTEMPT TO HELP THE NEGRO RACE

The judge in the Scottsboro case finally slammed down on this Liebowitz for the manner which he exhiibted toward the key witness of the state, the victim of the mass rape that was committed in a boxcar in Alabama some years ago and which has been tried and retried several times. The judge told the New York bully that he would have to take the consequences unless he moderates his language as well as his manner of asking questions.

The presence of this agitator and bullyragger in the case was its chief handicap and he has persisted in the effort to create an impression for use in his campaign to keep alive the organization in the east from which is being drawn the funds of negro citizens, who have no better sense than to expect it to be used to their advantage. They are given wild stories of the effect of the trial and are lured into believing that they can eventually upset all tradition, custom and government if they succeed in carrying on. That means if they put up as much of their money as the renegade whites wish, those who are mulcting them at will under the guise of this utopia of racial equality that is impending.

The Scottsboro case continued on and the state of Alabama did not demand the murder of the participants. If they are guilty the state made a grave mistake. If they are not they should not be tried but turned loose. How it can be accomplished without serious harm to the state is a question that is worrying more people in Alabama than needs be known. The Liebowitz angle has been very grievous in their minds and the New York lawyer is liable to find himself the center of a storm of condemnation as well as eventually of abuse.

It is due to this type of lawyer and to the methods that he has adopted that most of the trouble arises in cases where the racial issue is involved and where the citizenry of the states affected are bulldozed and bullyragged until they cannot carry their measure of duty with any degree of satisfaction or even safety. The gentleman from New York might be excluded by state statute from appearing in Alabama, but that probably would be carrying the personal vindicativeness against him too far. As it is he has prejudiced his own race more than he has helped the negroes in Alabama and some other states.

While Most Papers Approve the Compromise Freeing Boys, Many Citizens Deplore It

New York

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 30.—Southern reaction to the Scottsboro case compromise is as varied as the fates meted out to the defendants. It is as varied as are present-day social, economic and political opinions in the South.

On Birmingham's downtown streets last Monday a radio interviewer found that every passer-by he halted was strongly convinced that the four Negroes who were released should have been prosecuted. But Birmingham newspapers are unanimous in praise of what was done at Decatur and in sighs of relief that Alabama is rid at last of "this body of death."

Calling of Names

Throughout the State, along with similar expressions of relief, there is a tendency to call names, to describe the case as a horrible example of the evils of outside interference and of Communist efforts to capitalise upon racial and sectional feeling.

There are criticisms, too, of those Alabamans who, some in a belief that the Scottsboro Negroes were not guilty and others in mere conviction that there had not been a fair trial, have for several years interested themselves directly in behalf of the defendants.

Outside the State, Southern comment seems generally to praise the compromise and to expect Gubernatorial clemency for the Negroes left with life or death sentences.

"In the light of its history, its bewildering inconsistencies and extraneous ramifications," says The Asheville (N. C.) Citizen "'finis' at Scottsboro and its appeasement of both sides must be acceptable to those of either faction whose doubts still linger."

Since the death sentence upon Clarence Norris is to be carried out within a few weeks unless Governor Graves commutes it, an early indication of his attitude toward this sentence and toward the life sentences of Patterson, Weems and Andy Wright is to be expected.

Whether it was contemplated in the compromise or not, the prosecution's statement releasing Roberson and Montgomery has weakened its case in public opinion against all the defendants and prepared the way for generous treatment of those remaining under sentence.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch declares that the dropping of the charges against some of the defendants "serves as a virtual clincher to the argument that all nine of the Negroes are innocent."

Interference Resented

Nowhere in the South, apparently, is there praise for the Northern groups and organizations which have interfered in the case, even though there are many here to admit that, without this interference, the defendants would have been dead and buried long ago.

"The people of Alabama," declares The Tuscaloosa (Ala.) News, "are exceedingly tired of seeing this case used as a sounding board for political bombast in the East, and as a money-raising tear-jerker for radical elements throughout the world."

The Judge Gets Photographed

JUDGE W. W. Callahan, of Scottsboro case fame, wants to know the name of the photographer who snapped his picture as he walked from the courthouse to his home in Decatur one day last week.

The judge had issued strict orders against photographers in an effort to keep the trials from being commercialized. A photographer, however, stood near a street intersection and used a tree to shield his movements. As Judge Callahan walked past, the camera clicked and the photographer quickly climbed into a passing automobile and sped away. The judge now wants to know the name of the man.

We're sorry, but we can give no clue. We can, however, assure the judge that the state appreciates the manner in which he has handled both himself and the Scottsboro case since becoming connected with it. Judge Callahan has at all times been fair and firm, and no fault can be found with the way which he has conducted this unsavory affair. He has shown himself to be a real man and a real judge, and we don't blame the photographer for wanting a picture of him.

The Scottsboro Cases

SOMEWHAT feverish welcome by Blacks and whites in New York's Pennsylvania station yesterday for the four freed Scottsboro Negro youths, and the celebration planned for Thursday evening in the Hippodrome are illustrations of what is by no means the best method of hastening the hoped-for release of the five men convicted in the case which has been fought out over the last six years.

For, while from the very first many Southerners feared that the defendants might be victims of racial animosities, the counsels of all moderates in the immediate vicinity were often drowned out by raucous protests from outsiders.

Under such circumstances, there is, as The Baltimore Sun says, all the more reason to commend the Alabama authorities for their realistic and humane re-examination of the case with the result that all charges were withdrawn against four. The original capital charge against a fifth was withdrawn after he pleaded guilty to assaulting an officer with a knife, and was sentenced to 20 years. The other four were convicted, one being sentenced to death, the others to prison terms running as high as 99 years.

The rumored compromise includes these additional terms: It was that defense appeals will be dropped, the death sentence against one will be commuted, and that possibly all the remaining prisoners can expect freedom after a few years.

The settlement inevitably confirms some of the doubts which from the first surrounded the case.

SCOTTSBORO CASES ENDED

The people of Alabama doubtless let a sigh of relief a few days ago at the announcement that the celebrated Scottsboro cases have been disposed of. We will not have to see them on the front pages any more.

These cases have been "glorified" by the intervention of outside influences, and the process has been very expensive to the state and the counties where the trials have been held. In addition, we have received some questionable advertising abroad, where the people had no opportunity to know the facts.

At the conclusion of the trials that New York attorney who has made such a grand stand play during the years these cases have been pending took four of the defendants who were released by the court to New York with him. Of course we do not know what he expects to do with them; but our guess is that he has some plan for capitalizing them to his financial advantage.

The Scottsboro Negroes in New York

Negroes of New York's Harlem district, and a lot of some sort of white people, are making heroes of several of the negroes who were defendants in the notorious Scottsboro case. These negroes were said to have been parties to a criminal assault committed by several negroes upon two white girls while all of them were aboard a freight train. When the trial at last was finished recently, some of the colored men who were freed were taken back to New York from Alabama where the trial took place. They were met at the Pennsylvania station in New York city by a mob which the police could not control. The mob took them in a taxicab and started them on a round of joy making and "rehabilitation" which is to include some sort of training in a vocation.

This frenzied enthusiasm upon their arrival in New York led to plans for a big celebration to be staged in the immense hippodrome. Their lawyer, Leibowitz, who accompanied them on their trip north, is taking a big part in the celebration and several characters who have made themselves conspicuous in different ways will provide the speech making at the celebration. Norman Thomas, socialist leader, is one example of the kind which is taking part in the reward for crime.

There probably is nothing to be said against taking these four negroes and giving them some sort of training which might make good citizens of them as they might have been merely victims of circumstance by being in company with the ones who conceived and committed the crime; but it might be better for them and many other negroes if they were given the "rehabilitation" without the demonstration.

Also we have little defense to offer for girls who will subject themselves to such circumstances by hoboing on freight trains; but we see no point in making heroes of negroes, or any other persons, who might take advantage of them if they are so imprudent.

A society operating under the grand title of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People could do a most commendable work in the field which their cognomen embraces; but if they propose to make heroes of possible rapists and other criminals and offer defense to them against the courts of our land; they are in a class with the Black Legion and should be dealth with as the latter was blotted out.

Some of the societies of which we know, pretending to befriend the colored race in America, and some of the publications which are catering to the negroes, are merely gouging them for money and appealing to them by spreading propaganda among them which tends to fill their minds with race equality ideas. The publications do a great deal to poison the minds of the negroes against the Southern people who really have been and are the negroes' best friends. These northern publications have a word for the South which is remindful of the Civil war name for the Yankees. It has been told jokingly that some southern people were raised to think that damned Yankee was all one word. Some of these papers which are circulated among the negroes speak of the South as "the sordid South" as though it were one word.

Some of the descendants of our former slaves deserve a great deal of credit for having developed as fast as they have in the comparatively short length of time since their forefathers were wild savages; and we believe in encouraging them to become civilized and educated; but any society which, or individual who, holds out social equality to them as a goal is doing them more harm than good and is not a true friend to them. It is not a matter of prejudice because they are black as some would have them believe. None of the races mingles on a social equality basis.

Notes On The Scottsboro Case

VIVID and varied have been the reactions in Alabama to the climactic event in that case which nine negro hoboes and two transient white women dumped into the lap of this state in March, 1931. We have learned long ago that few people, either verbally or on the printed page, can discuss the Scottsboro case calmly or coolly, but just now we would like to make two or three observations, as dispassionately as possible, and ask the whys and wherefores.

First, we would like to know why the press and some officials in high places, after six and a half long years of grim determination to see the case through to the bitter end, so suddenly and completely flopped this summer. Could it have been the weather? We have no better explanation, because surely no revolutionary change in public opinion has come about, and no new evidence has been unearthed in the case. The man-in-the-street, as far as we have been able to learn, felt pretty much about the Scottsboro case on July 6, when the trials were resumed, as he did four years ago when Ruby Bates, dolled up by some newly-found Manhattan friends, dropped out of the sky to repudiate her sworn testimony.

Then, too, we would like to have someone explain to us the sudden emphasis that has been placed upon the alleged discrepancies of Mrs. Victoria Price's testimony. The I. L. D., has been attempting to impeach her testimony for more than six years, but only in recent weeks has the Alabama press joined in the campaign. Even then, only vague, unsupported charges were made, and the few tangible charges were based on the most trivial things. For instance, a stir was made over the fact that in one of her early trials she testified that she counted the negroes one by one as they leaped into the gondola car, while later she testified that she counted them after they were in the car. We might have the thing backwards. At any rate, any lawyer will tell you that such discrepancies are constantly cropping up in the court-room—and a witness is good if she makes no more serious errors than that in six and a half years.

Why, we ask, have these critics of Mrs. Price been so willing to assail her testimony and yet so patiently willing to ignore glaring discrepancies on the part of the negro defendants? Any one who reads the transcripts of the trials will be astounded to see the way they changed their stories. They started out by floundering around, right and left, each denying the crime on his own part, but some accusing the others. Later on, when the International Labor Defense had had time to do a little tutoring in the value of propaganda, the negroes flatly repudiated their earlier stories, and Haywood Patterson sang the new theme song on the witness stand: "I was framed."

no matter what defects she may have in her character.

Ruby Bates admitted that she lied—at one time or the other—and yet The News blandly passes over this confessed perjurer in an effort to impeach almost the only witness who has been consistent in her story. In the minds of a great many people, Victoria Price is at least above bribery, to lengths to tell us how inadequate was the testimony of Victoria Price, but it has neglected to point out that Mrs. Price, almost alone, has failed to make substantial alterations in her story. Ruby Bates and the negroes contradicted themselves flatly, so why does The News neglect Ruby Bates?

The jury did not recommend mercy, the verdict automatically fixing the penalty at death by electrocution. Court-appointed defense attorneys said they probably would appeal the case to the state supreme court.

Sixty-one national guardsmen, armed with shotguns, rifles, tear gas and sidearms, patrolled the courthouse and surrounding sidewalks to prevent any mob violence.

Judge Robert T. Boswell withheld a ruling. He said he expected to review the testimony tonight.

Defense Atty. Pat Whitaker contended the State had failed to give any indication as to the identity of the men who lashed Shoemaker, Eugene F. Poulnot and Sam Rogers, associates in a labor organization, in the woods 15 miles from Tampa the night of Nov. 30, 1935.

In 40-Minute Trial, Negro Is Convicted of Assault

Jury Reaches Verdict in Five Minutes and Death Sentence Is Passed

WAYNESBORO, Ga., May 10 (AP)—Will Hopkins, Negro, was convicted of criminal assault in a 40-minute unannounced trial here today and sentenced by Judge A. L. Franklin to death in the electric chair June 14.

The trial followed an indictment this morning. The Negro was spirited into the court house here by Burke county deputies and the trial opened with the doors to the courtroom heavily guarded.

Hopkins was convicted of criminally attacking a 38-year old farm woman April 26 and was saved from an angry crowd by two Burke county farmers a short time after the crime was committed.

The jury reached a verdict in 5 minutes.

H. C. Hatcher and E. M. Price were appointed defense attorneys and entered a plea of temporary insanity for Hopkins.

The prisoner admitted the crime and said, "I must have been crazy." He pleaded for mercy.

The two men delivered the prisoner into hands of officers who lodged him in the Savannah jail. Immediately after the trial Hopkins was spirited away to an unannounced destination by county officers.

Judge Franklin commended the citizens of the county and the two men who "captured" Hopkins from a road repair crew to save him from an angry mob, saying a "crisis had probably been averted."

"Do you say that your hens 'sit' or 'set'?" asked the precise pedagog of the busy housewife.

"It never matters to me what I say," was the quick reply. "What concerns me is to learn, when I hear the hen cackling, whether she is laying or lying."

DUBLIN, Ga., May 7, — (AP) — Levy Rozier, 35-year-old farmer, was convicted today of criminally assaulting an 11-year-old girl. He was sentenced to serve 20 years in prison. The jury, which recommended mercy, deliberated almost a day after hearing a defense plea of insanity.

MENACED BY THE MOB.

A "surprise 33 minute trial of a Negro accused of attacking a white woman" in Burke County, Georgia, with a resultant sentence to death, brought forth a protest and warning from the Rev. John E. Hines, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church of Augusta.

In the church bulletin, the rector spoke of "an outrageous" condition in his state and continued:

"If the organized forces of prejudice and racial hatred can produce such tremors in our courts, with what shall we combat them?

"Surely this is an indictment which the church, as well as the courts, must face. . . . We need the leaven of intelligent interest in the channels of human relationships."

The Associated Press dispatch, referring to the rector's statements in the bulletin, said he "did not criticize the court for its handling of the case, but the conditions that had caused the unannounced trial. Those conditions are not specified, but they may be readily inferred. The plain inference is that because of the fear or menace of mob action, if the mob were given time to act, the Law, in its majesty, hurriedly and without publicity, staged a trial for criminal assault, completed the trial in 33 minutes and so beat the mob to a death sentence.

But by such proceedings is the law vindicated? Certainly it is not. For the Law should not be overawed by the menace of the Mob. If there is overawing to be done it is the proper part of Law, in any civilized government to overawe the mob.

It is quite probable the accused was guilty and if so he had incurred and merited the extreme penalty. But as neither a sheriff nor his deputies can with honor to themselves nor, regard for their sworn duty, surrender a prisoner to a mob, however heinous the crime or certain his guilt, neither can a court, with obligation to its dignity and majesty, be dominated in its actions by fear of a mob. That is not civilized government.

The accused should have been tried according to law and custom, if a thousand Georgia soldiers had been necessary to protect the majesty of the law and save it from contempt.

NEW HEARING FOR WRIGHT ORDERED

Grant Park Employe Saved From Chair Four Times

FATE IMPENDS

Superior Judge E. Davis, Saturday, ordered a new trial hearing for Will Wright, former Grant Park Zoo employe, who was sentenced to the electric chair for the alleged criminal attack on a white girl May 8, 1936.

Hearing on Wright's motion for a new trial was set for Saturday morning, 9 o'clock, January 22, 1938, in Decatur, Georgia.

Following instructions from the Supreme Court of Georgia, Judge Davis signed the extraordinary motion presented to him Saturday morning by Attorney Frank A. Bowers, legal representative for Wright.

Judge Davis' signature on the papers automatically stays Wright's execution.

The same appeal papers were presented to Judge Davis in June of this year but he refused to grant a new trial and refused to sign the papers which would have meant a further appeal of the case. Wright immediately appealed to the Supreme Court of Georgia for a stay of execution, which was granted, and he asked that Judge Davis be forced to sign the appeal application. November 11, 1937, the Supreme Court of Georgia handed down a decision in which Judge Davis was ordered to sign the application of Wright for a new trial.

According to Frank A. Bowers, attorney for Wright, no one appeared for the Solicitor General's office at the hearing Saturday morning and Judge Davis read a letter from Assistant Solicitor General J. Walter LeCraw who stated that, after a careful study of the Supreme Court's decision in the matter, he felt that any further resistance of the new trial application was "nugatory." Mr. LeCraw suggested that the matter be set for a hearing at which time the State might "consent to a new trial for Wright without further appeals."

Br. Bowers stated that he was confident that a new trial would be granted his client "by consent" on January 22nd and that he was now preparing for the retrial of Wright probably in February. He pointed out that, should a new trial not be granted at the next hearing, the Supreme Court, in the decision of November 11, unqualifiedly concedes Wright a new trial in event the case comes back before that Court.

Lack of Negroes As Jurors Basis Of Plea for Life

A parallel of the famous Scottsboro case developed in Fulton superior court yesterday afternoon when defense attorneys for Will Wright under death sentence for a statutory offense, filed a habeas corpus attacking the Georgia jury system.

Conviction of Wright has been sustained by the state supreme court and he was resentenced to the electric chair yesterday afternoon by Judge James C. Davis. Date for the electrocution was set for April 16 at Milledgeville.

The habeas corpus hearing was scheduled for April 10 in Judge Davis' chambers in Decatur.

Defense Attorneys Frank A. Bowers and J. B. Simmons, in the petition, attack the jury system that allows the names of white jurors to be placed in the jury box on white slips of paper and the names of negroes on yellow slips, alleging this is for discriminatory purposes.

"Petitioner shows that on the 15th day of May, 1936, he was allegedly indicted by the alleged grand jury of Fulton county, Georgia, for the alleged offense of rape."

It is contended this was not a true grand jury in that negroes were not accorded a fair chance at being drawn on the jury. The petitioner further charges a violation of the 14th amendment of the United States constitution.

MELTON AND NEGRO PAY DEATH PENALTY

Both Calm at Execution in Milledgeville; Lacey Admits Murders.

5-22-37

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., May 21. (AP)—Leaving behind oral and written protestations of innocence, Eli Melton was electrocuted here today on a charge of criminally assaulting a young woman in February, 1936.

The 29-year-old Columbus man, who was convicted of attacking the girl while covering her masculine escort with a pistol, was fearful he might be unnerved in the death chamber and left a note with prison Chaplain Carl W. Minor.

"I, Eli Melton," the note read, "I myself am dying innocent and leave heart aches and pains behind me. May God bless all that accuse me of the crime, for I hold no ill will against anyone."

His last frantic appeals to the state supreme court and Governor Rivers were fruitless.

"You are killing an innocent man," he told attendants just before they slipped a white death mask over his face.

A few minutes later—at 10:07 a. m. (Atlanta time), 1,400 volts of electricity surged through his body. He was pronounced dead at 10:14 a. m.

A Cook county negro, Will Lacey, convicted of the murder of two negro women, followed Melton to the chair, and was pronounced dead at 10:29 a. m.

Unusually composed, he said, "I ask all of you to meet me in heaven."

Lacey, in his last statement, said, "I am guilty, but I did it to try to save my life."

Melton, who spent his last two hours of life talking with his father, E. E. Melton, appeared calm when he entered the death chamber.

The first white man sent to the electric chair from Muscogee county, Melton recived the sentence of death four times during his legal fight against the assault charge. His father asserted Melton was home the night the crime was committed. The body was taken to Columbus for burial.

THE LAWS DELAY

Three years ago Eli Melton, of Columbus, was arrested as the perpetrator of a series of particularly atrocious crimes. Yesterday he paid his delayed debt to justice in the electric chair at Milledgeville.

The history of the Melton case provides startling evidence of the delays of American court procedure. Not in its final outcome, to be sure, but in the unnecessary delays which serve no good purpose and which levy a heavy burden upon the taxpayers.

Melton was accused, not of one crime, but of a series. He was twice tried, twice convicted and twice sentenced to death. His appeals were carried, repeatedly, to the supreme court and the former Governor of the state granted several respites on the plea of "new evidence," made by Melton's attorneys. That "new evidence," was insufficient to persuade the court to grant a third trial.

For three years Melton lived at the expense of the state. How much his first and second trials and the series of appeals cost the state can never be computed. Defenders of the present court system will find it difficult to condone the long delay and needless expense in the Melton case.

It is such juggling with the technicalities of the law which causes the frequent "traffic jams" on the court dockets. It is because of repeated hearings in individual cases that makes it necessary for Fulton county, for instance, to maintain a whole group of courts, with their multiple judges, officials, attendants and expense.

The ends of justice could have been served just as well, in the Melton case, had the final chapter been written three months after the arrest, instead of three years. Greater speed and less legal red tape would result, also, in a salutary increase in respect for the courts by criminals.

NEGRO IS DENIED NEW TRIAL HERE

Davis Turns Down Plea for Wright.

Will Wright, under death sentence for a capital offense against a minor white girl at Grant Park zoo, yesterday afternoon was denied an extraordinary motion for a new trial. The hearing was before Judge James C. Davis.

Defense counsel said they will ask the supreme court for a mandamus order compelling Judge Davis to review what they claim is newly-discovered evidence. They claimed yesterday their client's constitutional rights had been abridged in that a trial juror had been sentenced for a felony offense, thus disqualifying him to serve.

The solicitor general's office contended that was insufficient evidence for a new trial and Judge Davis sustained the argument.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT ORDERS JUDGE DAVIS TO SIGN NECESSARY PAPERS

Attorney Frank Bowers Wins Point For A New Trial Of Ex-Grant Park Worker Under Death Sentence For 'Attack'

CASE VOID ON DISQUALIFICATION

The Supreme Court of Georgia Friday virtually conceded that Will Wright, ex-Grant Park zoo worker under death sentence, will be granted a new trial.

In a lengthy decision written by Mr. Justice Bell and concurred in by the five other justices, the high court held that the trial judge, Hon. James C. Davis, had erred in refusing to sign such papers as would have allowed Wright a second appeal of his case. They ordered the trial judge to now sign all necessary papers to bring the case back to the Supreme Court for another review.

Frank A. Bowers, attorney for Wright, told a representative of The WORLD Friday that there was now not doubt in his mind that Wright will be granted a new trial. He have just returned from the Supreme Court chambers where I read the entire decision. The court very plainly ruled that we had presented sufficient grounds to demand a new trial for Wright. It is just a matter of time now to get the record of the case back before the high court.

The attorney further pointed out that the decision settles the question of whether an ex-convict white juror is qualified to sit on the jury in the trial of a person of color. This being the first time the point has ever been raised in the State of Georgia, the State Supreme Court Friday ruled that such a juror was disqualified and any verdict participated in by him was void.

The Wright case has been one of the hardest fought legal battles waged in Atlanta in years. A World War Veteran and employee of the Grant Park zoo for 18 years, Wright was arrested May 8, 1936 and charged with criminal assault upon a young white girl. He has steadfastly maintained his innocence and after a two-day trial in Fulton Superior Court in June 1936, he was found guilty and sentenced to electrocution.

An appeal to the Supreme Court blocked the execution and in December 1936 the Supreme Court denied a new trial. Wright was again sentenced to the chair in March 1937. A 30-day respite by Governor Rivers stayed the death penalty and in the meantime, the State Prison Commission and Governor Rivers declined to interfere with the execution.

Brought back before Judge Davis again in May 1937 Wright heard the death sentence for the third time for June 1937. On the morning set for the execution Attorney Bowers presented evidence to Judge Davis that one of the trial jurors convicting Wright had served two terms for larcenies of automobiles and the attorney demanded that Judge Davis grant a new trial. The judge declined to grant a new trial but did order the execution held up until he could investigate the charges. The order of a stay of execution reached the warden at Milledgeville just eight minutes before Wright was to die and after his head had been shaved in preparation for the death march.

The prisoner was returned to Fulton Tower from the death cell, this being his second trip to Milledgeville.

Within about two weeks and after a further hearing, Judge Davis announced that he would not grant Wright a new trial nor would he sign any papers necessary for a further appeal of the case. He ordered Wright brought back before him and imposed the extreme penalty for the fourth time.

Early in July, 1937, and a few days before the last scheduled execution date Attorney Bowers appeared before the Supreme Court of Georgia with a 132 page writ of mandamus in which he asked the high court to order Judge Davis sign such papers as would grant his client another review of his case.

On July 6 1937 the Supreme Court ordered the execution stayed until further notice and, at the same time, ordered Judge Davis to appear before them and explain why he refused Wright another review. On the appointed day the judge appeared with forces from the Solicitor General's office and filed written explanations of his actions.

The decision of the Supreme Court Friday held that Judge Davis should have granted the application for an appeal and ordered him to sign such papers as are necessary to send the case back to them on appeal. They also ordered any further execution sentences stayed until a final decision was rendered by them.

Wright has remained in Fulton Tower during more than eighteen months of legal maneuverings. During his long incarceration several colored churches ad organizations have assisted in his fight by voluntary donations.

ATTACK CASE HEARD IN COURT

Ice Man Accused Of High Crime; Jury Locked In Talk

CLAIM LYNCHING

A Fulton County jury Monday night debated the fate of Theodore Taylor, 32-year-old ice man of a Lee street address, accused of making criminal assault on a white woman, November 2, in Colonial Hills.

The jury retired at 5:30 p. m. following a trial that lasted all day. At 6:30 oclock Monday night, the jurors were reported in a deadlock.

Taylor was indicted by a Fulton County grand jury November 12 on three charges: robbery, criminal assault, and attempted criminal assault.

The defendant was accused of robbing and having carnal knowledge with a white woman on the night of November 2. The third indictment charged him with attempting criminal assault on another white woman on the night of November 7.

Taylor was tried only for the criminal assault charge, but the other two charges were reviewed as means of attempting to establish identity of the alleged attacker.

The state contended that both crimes were staged at the same spot in Colonial Hills. Assistant Solicitor E. E. Andrews prosecuted, and Attorney Russell Turner represented the defendant.

NEGROES KEPT OUT

Presiding Judge Lee B. Wyatt would not allow, colored people to hear testimony presented during the trial. All colored persons in the courtroom at beginning of the trial were ordered out.

Both of the white women victims identified Taylor as their attacker. Taylor was arrested shortly after the last Colonial Hills attack when police jailed a man wearing a "a light cap and brown coat." Both of the women had said that their attacker was wearing this type of apparel.

The defense attempted to prove that the state had made a mistake in identity. Witnesses and Taylor himself, testified that on the night of Nov. 2 he attended a birthday party, and one the night of Nov. 7, he was at the home of a friend.

Testimony showed that Taylor was arrested on Lee street near his home. He is married and the father of two children.

LYNCHING REPORT

Although not repeated on the stand, witnesses and other interested parties added strength to a recent lynching rumor.

The parties who spoke of the lynching said they had heard a man was lynched was in connection with the attack case tried Monday in Superior Criminal court.

First report of a lynching near Ben Hill and East Point was received by the Atlanta Daily World on November 10. Effort was made to confirm the report, but it could not be made authentic.

CHAIR IS ASKED

The prosecution asked the electric chair for Taylor. The presiding judge explained that should the jury find Taylor guilty and recommend mercy, a sentence of one to 20 years could be given.

District and Montgomery County Police Flayed for "So-Called" Confessions of Officers

VERDICT RETURNED IN LESS THAN 10 MINUTES

Testimony Proves That Man is Mentally Deficient, Rated as 10-Year-Old

By GARLAND MACKEY

ROCKVILLE, Md.—Playing on so-called confession obtained by Washington police, Judge Harmond Urner, presiding over the court here last Tuesday, dismissed a charge of criminal assault against Rencher Lee Gill who was on trial for allegedly raping two white women last March in Chevy Chase, Md.

The verdict of the three judges was reached in less than ten minutes. The spectators in the Montgomery Courthouse were warned against making any demonstration regardless of what the outcome might be.

There was hardly a sound as Judge Urner read the opinion of the three judges. His associates were Judge Charles Woodward and Judge Arthur Willard. Robert Pugh, State's Attorney, represented the county.

Women's Testimony Secret

The trial began Monday behind closed doors. The public and press were excluded. The first testimony was that of Bertrig Wolter, white Chevy Chase woman, who claimed that she was attacked November 7 by a light-skinned man with a handkerchief over his face.

The testimony of Lillian Riley, the second victim, was taken on Tuesday in the chambers. Her statement was that she was attacked on March 4 by a light-complexioned man who apologized after the alleged attack. Neither woman postively identified Gill as the man who assaulted them.

Judge Urner in his opinion said the prosecution was based entirely on the "so-called confessions obtained by District and Montgomery County police and the court doubted the credulity of the statements secured by the officers. The court also stated that the officers themselves doubted the truth of the confessions.

Mentally Deficient

A dozen or more defense witnesses testified that Gill was mentally deficient and the court said the man had the mental rating of a boy 10 years of age.

The court stressed the fact that the confession was more of a broad general statement and did not go into details as to how he reached the scene of the crime. When faced with the women Gill denied he attacked them and said he was sorry if he did.

Gill established a "perfect" alibi for the March 4 attack when several witnesses stated that they saw him the night of the assault at his home during the hours in which the alleged assault took place. The second case against him was nolle prossed.

"Perfect" Alibi

Lester Pearson, 1154 Nineteenth Street, Northwest, testified that Gill was at his home about 9 p.m. March 4 and left there a few minutes later. Mrs. Francis Tucker who lives at the Gill home, 2148 L Street, Northwest, said that Rencher came home about 9:30 and after doing certain work around the house he went to his room on the third floor where he retired. She said it would have been impossible for him to have left without her knowledge.

Mrs. Tucker said she remembered the incident because she asked Rencher about viewing the body of a friend, Reginald Bushrod, whose body was at the undertaking establishment of L. E. Murray and Sons, 2105 Twelfth Street Northwest. Rencher said he was unable to go, she said, as it was too far to walk and he did not have carefare.

Milton Harper, 1908 Eighth Street, testified that he met Rencher on the night of March 4 at Twenty-first and L Street and received a note from him directing Harper to do some work for Mrs. Rebecca Lewis in the 1400 block of R Street.

Placed in District

Samuel Smith, 57 O Street, stated that Gill worked for him at times, washing windows and on the day of the assault was working at a house at Forty-sixth and Yuma Streets.

A number of witnesses testified to the mental deficiency of Gill. The first was a former teacher, Miss Helen Z. Alexander who taught Gill in 1917. She said that as a youth of 16 he had the mental capacity of a boy of 6. She said she also gave him private lessons, but he was mentally backward. He never progressed further than the third grad, she said. He was taught by the power of suggestion and by constant repetition, the witness said.

Dr. Arthur Kiger Savoy, first assistant superintendent of schools, produced the school record of Gill showing that he had difficulty in mastering the most simple subjects although his deportment, was good as a student.

Character Witnesses

A number of character witnesses testified as to the man's reputation in his community.

Among these were Dr. Walter H. Brooks, pastor of Nineteenth Street Baptist Church of which Gill and his family are members; Mrs. Lillian Fitzhugh, a teacher; Dr. Samuel M. Pierre, a neighbor and friend of the family; the Rev. George A. Parker, assistant pastor of the Nineteenth Street Baptist Church, and Mrs. Millie Butler, grandmother of the man. Mrs. Butler testified that at one time she was employed by Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt and former President Theodore Roosevelt.

Gill who is the son of Dr. Lee A. Gill, prominent Georgetown physician, was represented by Austin Canfield. The defense congratulated the court for the fair and impartial trial during the two days.

Little Interest Shown

Despite the fact that there was some talk of mob violence when Gill was first taken to Rockville, the natives of this small town showed little interest in the trial. Less than 25 white persons were in the court room the second day when the verdict was rendered. A number of colored persons from Washington were present, but few from Rockville.

The first and only incident to cause a ripple among the few spectators was when this reporter entered the courtroom and sat on a front seat in front of several white men. One white man told him to move to the colored section to the left, but was told that he was quite satisfied where he was. Several balifs began to whisper and one came over and directed the reporter to the Negro section. This officer of the court was also told that the seat was quite satisfactory.

Satisfied With Seat

A buzz ran through the room and the reporter was invited outside in the corridor. Here it was explained that where he was sitting was reserved for whites despite the fact that the bailif was told that the reporter did not object sitting with white persons and was contented to remain, unless some press accomodations could be arranged.

A compromise was reached when the reporter was directed to a seat in front of the colored section near the bench.

Gill was congratulated by friends and acquaintances following his acquittal and his attorney, Canfield also received the plaudits of the man's family and many persons present.

White Woman Says She May Be Mistaken

Asks Court To Spare Alleged Assailant From Gas Chamber

4-17-37

RALEIGH, N. C.— (ANP) — Because Mrs. Sarah Lyles, white, has since decided she is not positive that he is the right man, Charles Smith will not die in the lethal gas chamber April 30 but instead must spend his life in prison.

Smith, charged with breaking into her room and trying to attack her, was convicted on the testimony of Mrs. Lyles and her 14-year-old son, Clarence. His conviction and sentence of death was appealed to the state supreme court and upheld. Immediately the woman signed a statement saying:

"I hereby respectfully request that you do not allow Charles Smith to die in the lethal gas chamber. . . This request is made because, since the trial, I have considered the matter seriously and I believe he should not be put to death. There is a possibility that there was a mistake made in the identification of my assailant."

The change in sentence was ordered by Governor Hoey.

NEGRO, 37, IS DOOMED FOR ATTACK ON WOMAN

STATESVILLE, N. C., Aug. 3.—(AP)—A superior court jury convicted [illegible] Caldwell, 37-year-old negro, of rape at his trial late today on a charge of criminally assaulting the wife of a white Iredell county farmer.

The verdict was brought in after about 30 minutes deliberation.

Judge J. A. Rousseau, of North Wilkesboro, sentenced Caldwell to death in the gas chamber at Raleigh, September 10. Counsel for the defendant gave notice of intention to appeal.

RAPIST TO FORFEIT LIFE

The quick arrest and trial of Walter Caldwell, negro rapist, was handled in such a manner that mob violence on the part of Iredell citizens was at no time in evidence except perhaps Saturday afternoon when the entire countryside was searching every conceivable hiding place for the culprit. The negro was already in the hands of competent authorities who took the precaution to hide him in safety until his case could be brought up for speedy trial. A jury of twelve men tried and true, found him guilty upon the evidence submitted to the court, and Judge Rousseau pronounced the sentence of death. The deed was committed Saturday afternoon and Tuesday the negro was sent to death row in Raleigh to await the forfeiting of his life for a deed most repulsive, which brought humiliation to a splendid woman and sorrow to the family of her loved ones. It has been a rule in North Carolina that rapists get what's coming to them, either by common law route or through the established courts, whichever happens to get the perpetrator first. In the case of "Preacher" Caldwell, the rightful and due process of trial by jury prevailed.

B-U-L-L-E-T-I-N-!

MARION, N. C., Sept. 16 —(Special)—When Mann Smith is for the second time, placed on trial here Monday, National Guard troops or a detail from the State Highway Patrol will be one hand to prevent a repetition of the attack on the prisoner which occurred Tuesday shortly after his first trial opened.

MARION, N. C., Sept. 16—(By Albert Jones for ANP) —Apparently unable to get to the youth elsewhere, Frank Anderson, white plumber walked into McDowell superior court Tuesday and used an iron pipe to vent his lynch spirit upon the head of Mann Smith, charged with raping a 12 year old white girl.

Anderson was arrested immediately and lodged in court on charges of assault with a deadly weapon, interfering with the administration of justice, and contempt of court. Judge Felix E. Alley called upon Governor Clyde R. Hoey to send either the national guard or the stath eighway patrol in order to see that Smith "gets a fair trial" and dismissed the venire of 100 men from whom a jury was about to be drawn when the attack took place.

Six jurors had been selected when Anderson walked into the courtroom, strolled down the center aisle with an iron pipe, about 15 inches long and one and a half inches in diameter, concealed behind his back. The prisoner was seated beside his attorney just inside the bar, near the aisle.

The white man walked to a point behind the youth, raised his weapon and struck three blows. Smith was hit once, a glancing lick not hard enough to shatter the skin on the back of his head.

"Get that man — protect the prisoner," shouted Judge Alley from the bench as Sheriff Grady Nichols lunged for the assailant. Smith was knocked under the table in the melee which resulted in Anderson's arrest.

Judge Allen delivered a scathing attack on the attacker, terming the incident "the greatest disgrace that could befall McDowell county. Tomorrow morning every paper north of the Mason and Dixon line will have box car letters that 'Mob Rule Reigns in North Carolina.'

Highway patrolmen stood guard in this lynch-minded community to see that Smith got a "fair trial." However, proceedings were orderly and in perfect contrast with the earlier arrangement when Frank Anderson, white plumber, attacked the boy with an iron pipe.

A mistrial was declared, Judge Alley asked for troops and Anderson was arrested and lodged in jail where he faces charges of contempt of court and assault with intent to murder.

As the trial began Monday, John Anderson of Old Fort was among those summoned for jury duty. He was the first Negro called in this county since Reconstruction. But Solicitor Ridings preemptorily dismissed him without cause and 12 white men were chosen to hear the case.

An Example

In his speech while pronouncing sentence, Judge Alley told the boy, "You are a colored man belonging to a different race. You are a human being. Your days are numbered and soon for you the mysteries of life will be merged into the mysteries of death. May God grant that your punishment will be an example for all races and especially the young men of your race."

White reporters who interviewed textile workers and laborers before the second trial began found lynch sentiment was rife and Anderson, the plumber was praised. D. A. Fox, white mill hand, said, "Anderson was trying to kill him, all right, and he waould have if he had got in a good lick. I hope he gets out of it light."

Shuford Clonce, another mill worker, said, "Forty men joined up to 'get' that Negro, but backed out all except Anderson. They would all chip in a dollar now to help him get out."

VIOLENCE IN COURT

A negro on trial in Marion on charges of assaulting a white school girl was struck on the head with an iron pipe by a spectator in McDowell county court Tuesday morning, which resulted in temporarily stopping the wheels of justice, and necessitating a court recess and a new trial.

While the zeal of the spectator who attempted to take the administration of justice in his own hands is understandable, it is not so easy to follow the working of his mind as to the success of his procedure.

It was deemed advisable by the presiding judge to have the prisoner on trial removed to Asheville for safe-keeping until the trial should be resumed, and to petition the Governor for national guardsmen to insure order when the trial is resumed on Monday.

The News-Enterprise has consistently asserted that any form of violence that attempts to judge and punish any suspected criminal is a gross miscarriage of justice, and those responsible for such acts should be punished accordingly. The presiding judge in this instance is to be commended for his actions which should avert any other outbreak in a situation that must have been tense, and could have led to more serious consequences. One distressing feature of mob rule is that the minds of those participating apparently cease to function and the group is led on in a frenzy of excitement, and an occurence such as that in this particular trial might easily have led to a situation difficult to control.

Sept-9-1937

PIPE 'EM DOWN.

The Daily News' catch-as-catch-can legal department hastens to affirm without equivocation Judge Felix Alley's citation of Plumber Frank Anderson, who invaded Judge Alley's courtroom and hit a negro defendant over the head with an iron pipe, for contempt of court. We think, however, that charges of assault with intent to kill, or even secret assault, might also be preferred and even sentences might be imposed on Anderson to compensate in some part the outraged decency of the entire citizenship as well as salving the dignity of the court.

Too, we are not averse to fetching some national guardsmen to insure a fair trial of the negro when he is re-arraigned. Indeed, we should not have objected to the use of the militia at the outset. Marion is no worse than many another North Carolina community, but it has shown aforetime that it is no better as regards a willingness to take the law into its own hands.

Ordinarily we should have said that a sheriff might easily have insured the safety of his prisoner; but the present circumstances incline us to sympathy with Sheriff Grady Nichols. How was he to know that the plumber was carrying a piece of iron pipe for purpose of deadly assault? It might have been that Plumber Anderson had called to see something about rest-room appurtenances and appliances in need of repair.

But, more seriously, we do think that prisoners at the bar in cases charging rape should be so safeguarded as to make piecemeal execution of them by private parties impossible.

A fine time to provide against contempt in a crowded courtroom is before the court is declared open for business. We somehow doubt if God exercises Himself to save an honorable court which permits spectators to mass themselves in the midst of the assemblage. Well do we realize that it is the people's court, but while freemen not under indictment should be permitted to approach even the bench without fear and trembling, no pushing, scrouging or jamming should be tolerated.

In such a mannerly courtroom a case of secret assault would be unthinkable.

DEATH WILL BE ASKED FOR NEGRO ATTACKERS

Pair Transferred From Marion Jail To Tucker Farm Pending Trial

Two Memphis negroes charged with criminally assaulting Miss Maple Wilson, 18, of 477 Richmond on Christmas night were transferred yesterday by Crittenden County, Ark., officials to Tucker Prison Farm.

District Attorney Bruce Ivy of Osceola said last night that the negroes "will be given speedy justice and the state will ask the death penalty." Thursday or Friday of next week is set as the date of the trial at Marion.

"I have filed a criminal information charge of criminal assault against the two negroes and the bench warrant has been issued. Since they have admitted their guilt, it will not be served on them until the day of the trial. The negroes will be given an opportunity to employ defense counsel. If they do not retain an attorney, the state will furnish one," he said.

Special Court Planned

The trial will be held at a special session of the Circuit Court at Marion next week with Judge Neil Killough of Wynne, Ark., on the bench.

District Attorney Ivy explained that the criminal information charge takes the place of a grand jury indictment. A special jury venire may be called.

A conference of Crittenden County officers was held at Marion yesterday afternoon to complete plans for handling the trial.

Miss Wilson's condition was improved yesterday, her physician said. However, she will be unable to leave St. Joseph's Hospital for the next week or 10 days, he said.

The negroes, Theo Thomas, 25, and Frank Carter, alias Buster, 26, both of 168 California, are in the Marion jail. Both negroes confessed the attack, Sheriff Curlin announced Sunday following their arrest.

Were In Parked Car

Miss Wilson and her companion, F. E. Brading, 21, of Jonesboro, Ark., were parked in his car on the road leading off Harahan Viaduct to the United States Engineers depot about 9:30 o'clock Saturday night, they told officers. The negroes with drawn knives forced their way into the car and drove it off the road into the bottom lands north of the viaduct.

Young Brading escaped to summon aid at the Engineers depot. The negroes attacked Miss Wilson who was found almost five hours later northwest of Briark Junction. Thomas was arrested early Sunday morning walking along the viaduct. Carter was arrested later by Memphis deteotives.

2 Negroes Held For Assault On Memphis Girl

Escort Flees For Aid After Fighting With Pair

12-27-37

MEMPHIS, TENN., Dec. 26.—(AP)—Sheriff Howard Curlin of Crittenden County, Arkansas, announced at noon today the arrest of two young negroes who, he said, confessed they criminally assaulted [illegible] last night after holding up her and her escort on an Arkansas highway.

"We arrested Theo Thomas, alias 'Tender,' at Memphis today," Sheriff Curlin said. "Frank Carter, alias 'Buster' was turned over to us last night by a State police officer after he was caught by a citizen.

"Both are held in jail at Marion, Ark. They will be charged with criminal assault.

Because of the time of the attacks and the quick arrests, officers said there was no hint of violence. A quick prosecution, with a death penalty demand, was promised by prosecuting officials.

Sheriff Curlin said the victim said both negroes had been drinking. He quoted the negroes as saying they stopped the automobile intent on robbery. He said the victim, an 18-year-old Memphis girl, now in a hospital identified both the negroes.

The girl was dragged from the automobile of her companion, F. E. Brading, 21, Jonesboro, Ark., at 9:30 p.m. She was found at 2:20 a.m., by officers and a posse of 50 men.

The couple was parked on an Arkansas highway when the negroes accosted them. Brading fought the negroes and escaped to summon aid at the nearby U. S. engineers' depot across the Mississippi River from Memphis.

The girl kicked off her shoes, dropped her wrist watch and tore shreds from her clothing to leave a trail for searchers to follow.

She was under treatment for bruises, abrasions, shock and fright. She told officers one of the negroes had a gun and threatened her with death unless she submitted.

SCENE OF SPEEDY JUSTICE

The Middlesex County courthouse and jail (left background) at Saluda, Va., where John Dykes was first held and later sentenced last week for an alleged attempted criminal assault upon a 20-year-old white girl. Only five days elapsed between his arrest and his sentence to life's imprisonment. Doubt as to his sanity and the girl's plea for mercy because she was doubtful of his actual intentions when he accosted and beat her saved Dykes from the electric chair. He was attached to a transient camp near Saluda and said he came from Alabama. He was rushed to Richmond immediately after his arrest and again after sentence was pronounced to forestall threatened violence. (Journal and Guide Photo)

Alabaman Is Given Life In Saluda Trial

Saved From Chair By Mercy Plea Of His Victim

2-6-37

By ALBERT L. HINTON

SALUDA, Va.—Five days after his arrest for attempted criminal assault upon a pretty 20-year-old relative of a former Virginia governor, John Dykes began serving a life sentence this week instead of awaiting an electirc chair death because the victim, uncertain of his actual intentions and his sanity, pleaded that mercy be shown him.

Dykes had been rushed to Richmond to avoid possible mob violence immediately after his arrest and again after sentence had been pronounced Wednesday.

Sheriff R. B. Segar, who carried the prisoner to Richmond, said a crowd had gathered around the Saluda lockup. Although he had no trouble in getting the accused man away, he feared mob violence and moved the prisoner to Richmond.

Following a conference between defense and prosecution counsel, Dykes entered a plea of guilty. A sanity commission Tuesday night pronounced him legally sane, but Commonwealth's Attorney Louis Jones told Journal and Guide reporters Wednesday that he was "undoubtedly of unbalanced mind."

This circumstance and his victim's mercy plea were largely responsible for his escape from the electric chair.

Dykes, who was arrested here late Saturday afternoon, was a 32-year-old worker at the Middlesex County transient camp.

Sentence was pronounced by Judge J. Boyd Sears in Middlesex County Circuit Court after the plea agreement reached between Commonwealth's Attorney Jones, T. H. Kenningham, white court-appointed defense counsel of West Point, and J. Byron Hopkins, Jr., attorney representing the Richmond branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The young woman involved requested that the death penalty be withheld because she would "never get over it." A similar request was also made by the girl's family, Mr. Jones said.

Dykes approached her with a bouquet of flowers in his hand, the complaining witness related. In the semi-darkness she thought it was someone who was bringing flowers out of sympathy for the death of a prominent relative, she explained.

Dykes, a native of Alabama, was formerly at the transient camp at Fort Eustis, Va. According to Commonwealth's Attorney Jones, the accused man hailed the young woman as she was driving along Route 17, just outside the town limits of Saluda. When she halted for a stop sign, according to the commonwealth's attorney, Dykes jumped on the machine and asked why she didn't stop the first time he called her.

RUSHED TO RICHMOND

The girl's screams as Dykes choked her and grabbed her by the hair, brought three men in a nearby filling station to her rescue, according to the story. Dykes was placed under arrest but soon afterwards rushed to Henrico County jail in Richmond for "safe keeping" when threats were made against his life.

Speaking of the "friendly relations" existing between the races in Middlesex County, Mr. Jones said that no such attempt had ever been made by a native of the county.

An almost similar incident occurred twelve years ago, he said, in which a nine-year-old colored girl employed as a companion for his three-year-old daughter was the victim.

The man involved, who was also a transient, was subsequently sentenced to life imprisonment. In this case the little girl was actually attacked after being enticed into a nearby woods.

Member Of Race On Jury Which Convicted Riddick

Jurors Questioned Regarding Their Racial Feelings Deny Any Prejudice

Questions concerning their opposition to capital punishment, together with other queries as to their possible blood relationship to the prosecuting witness or defendant, and their stand on racial feeling, were asked members of the panel from which the jury was chosen to try Lewis Napoleon Riddick in Princess Anne County Circuit Court Monday.

The questions were asked by Judge B. D. White who presided at the trial of the 21-year-old youth accused of attempted criminal assault upon Mrs. Evelyn White, young white Princess Anne County married woman, and Q. C. Davis, defense counsel.

The Negro citizens of the county were on the panel of 33 summoned for the trial, but only one, Richard Kemp, farmer of the Kempsville District, actually sat on the trial jury which found Riddick guilty after an all-day trial and fixed his punishment at life imprisonment.

Mr. Kemp was described by Judge White as the son of a man who "was a body servant to Judge J. M. Keeling during the War Between the States," Isaac Wilson and Grady Bell, both county farmers, were the other two colored citizens on the panel.

It marked the first time for at least 30 years that Negroes have been summoned for jury service in the county.

Mr. Wilson was excused when he expressed opposition to capital punishment after being questioned by Judge White. Mr. Bell was excused until the next term of court on March 10.

In challenging the jurors Mr. Davis asked each of the colored men if they were related to the defendant "either by blood or marriage." The defense counsel also asked each of the white prospective jurors if they could give" this colored boy" a fair and impartial trial according to the law and evidence.

"Would the fact that he's a colored boy accused of this kind of crime, prejudice you in the trial of his case?" was another question asked by the defense. The question was answered affirmatively in each case.

QUESTIONS ASKED BY COURT

The following questions were asked by Judge White:

Are any of you related by blood or marriage to Mrs. Evelyn White, or her husband?

Do any of you reside within two miles of Pungo? (Scene of the alleged crime).

Have any of you formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused?

Do you feel that you can give the defendant a fair and impartial trial according to the law and evidence as you hear it in this courtroom?

Are you opposed to infliction of capital punishment in the proper case?

IMPEACHING A SHERIFF.

Governor Graves' announcement that an effort will be made to bring about impeachment of an Alabama Sheriff from whose custody a Negro was taken and lynched will be heartening to those who hope that in spite of many failures the South will yet prove that it can deal effectively with problems growing out of mob violence. Following the lynching about three months ago, both Governor Graves and Attorney-General Albert A. Carmichael conducted investigations. Particularly interesting is the fact that impeachment proceedings will be instituted despite the refusal of a County Grand Jury to return indictments or to recommend that the Sheriff be impeached.

Attorney-General Carmichael has asserted that his own inquiry causes him to believe that Sheriff J. L. Corbitt was guilty of "cowardice and negligence" in discharging his duty. A mob of about 100 men took a Negro from the County Jail, hanged him to a tree and riddled his body with bullets. Concerning the charge that the Negro had been arrested on the complaint that he had attacked a white woman, the Attorney-General asserts: "To say that lynching has anything to do with protecting womanhood in Alabama is pure poppycock. The answer to this is that a petit grand jury would require about thirty seconds to reach an electrocution verdict for the perpetrator of such a crime as this."

That view has been taken by thousands of leaders throughout the South. Indeed, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, numbering among its membership some of the finest and most prominent women in the South, has repeatedly asserted that if officers of the law will enforce the law, the women will protect their virtue. Mobs which lynch Negroes are not concerned with enforcing any law except the law of the jungle.

Corbitt Ouster Opening Today In High Court

Montgomery, Ala.

Henry County Sheriff's Impeachment Aim Of Attorney General

Trial of Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, on impeachment proceedings charging him with neglect, connivance and cowardice in connection with the lynching some three months ago of Wesley Johnson, negro, will open at 10 o'clock this morning before the Alabama Supreme Court, at the Capitol.

More than 100 witnesses have been subpoenaed to testify — between 50 and 60 each for both the prosecution and the defense. Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael and Asst. Atty. Gen. Silas C. Garrett, will prosecute the case. W. L. Lee, of Columbia, counsel for the Sheriff, will conduct the defense.

The negro, Johnson, held on charge of criminally assaulting a white woman, was removed from the county jail at Abbeville by a mob on the night of Monday night, Feb. 1, and taken to a point near the scene of the alleged attack where he was hanged and shot.

Impeachment action was filed against the Sheriff by the Attorney General at the direction of Gov. Graves, following an ordered investigation of the lynching. At the time of the lynching, Sheriff Corbitt told newspapermen he recognized some of the members of the armed mob composed of from 50 to 100 men, and that he would "gladly name them before a Grand Jury or in court."

Two Grand Juries called him but no indictments were returned. After a re-investigation of the lynching, the second Grand Jury recently recommended that the pending impeachment proceedings against the Sheriff be withdrawn. Gov. Graves declined to act on the recommendation, stating the matter was up to the courts. Atty. Gen. Carmichael declared the Grand Jury's action would not have the slightest effect on the proceedings which he intended to prosecute vigorously.

Arrested Jan. 31, Johnson was taken from the Henry County jail the following night, and his lifeless body was found on Feb. 2, hanging from the limb of a tree in the Tumbleton community. According to the Sheriff, the mob surprised him and his late father, then acting as jailer, and held them prisoner while Johnson's cell was forced open and he was taken away.

It is charged by the State in the impeachment proceedngs, among other things, that the crime with which the negro was charged was of such a nature as to "provoke popular indignation," and that the Sheriff did not take "necessary" precautionary steps.

Reaches Verdict Of 'Not Guilty' In 35 Minutes After Three-Day Trial

Without Comment

Refusal To Oust Sheriff Backs 2 Henry County Grand Jury Expressions

Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, the second sheriff to come before the Alabama Supreme Court for impeachment this year, yesterday was acquitted of the charges preferred against him as a result of the lynching of the negro, Wes Jordan, the night of Feb. 1.

Thirty-five minutes after the court took Corbitt's case under advisement the verdict of acquittal was sent out with two Associate justices, Joel B. Brown and Lucien D. Gardner, dissenting. For acquittal were Chief Justice John C. Anderson and Associates W. H. Thomas, A. B. Foster, and Virgil Bouldin. Associate Justice Thomas E. Knight did not act because he was ill.

The acquittal was made public without comment from the court, setting a matter-of-fact period to a three-day trial that furnished some excitement. Corbitt was accused of negligence and cowardice because the negro was taken from his custody and lynched.

An offer by the State to "prove beyond all doubt" with "evidence and testimony unimpeachable in all southeast Alabama" that the mob got "the wrong negro," was held incompetent in the trial and attempts to present it were blocked.

The State contended pressure by citizens caused arrest of the wrong man. Three witnesses said the assault victim identified him.

Other developments tending toward the sensational were a fist-fight between Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael and W. L. Lee, defense counsel, and an assertion by Carmichael yesterday that "if the State doesn't enforce constitutional clauses on lynching Congress is going to do something about it by passing an anti-lynching bill."

Asked whether the State would attempt prosecution of men named by Corbitt as having been seen in jail, the Attorney General declined to comment. Two grand juries have investigated the lynching without returning indictments and the second recommended that impeachment proceedings against Corbitt be dropped.

Four charges, all denied, were specifically made against Corbitt in the impeachment proceedings, ordered filed by Gov. Graves. They were: "negligence, grave fault, connivance and cowardice."

The State argued the front door to living quarters of the jail was not locked, giving the mob access to the structure, where they pryed open a steel door and then found keys to the cells.

Corbitt said he had no reason to fear mob violence and presented a series of witnesses to swear "popular indignation" was not such as contemplated to cause a lynching.

The sheriff said he was surprised at midnight, and "covered with shotguns" when he awakened. The State charged he "went back to bed and to sleep," while the sheriff said he got his chief deputy and rode the remainder of the night in search of the mob.

"I put him in jail and locked him up, just like anybody else," Corbitt testified.

Henry County Citizens Brought To Stand In Corbitt Ouster Trial

Fist Fight Quelled

Carmichael And Defense Attorney Lee Battle But Shake Hands Later On

Naming of 10 alleged members of the mob that on the night of Feb. 1 took Wes Johnson, negro, from the jail at Abbeville where he was held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman—calling five of the 10 to the stand to testify—and an exchange of fisticuffs between Atty Gen. Carmichael, prosecutor, and Defense Counsel W. L. Lee, of Columbia, immediately after recess was taken at 1 p.m., featured the opening day of trial before the Alabama Supreme Court of Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, on charges contained in impeachment action brought against him following the lynching.

All five of the alleged mob members placed on the witness stand late in the day, denied that they were among those who took the negro from the jail and later hanged and shot him, declaring they had no part in it whatever and were not connected with or involved in it in any way. Sheriff Corbitt, who is charged with neglect of duty, grave fault, connivance and cowardice, was present in the courtroom with his counsel throughout the day but did not take the stand.

Court convened at 10 a.m. when the more than a hundred witnesses summoned, were placed under oath. After the proceedings had gotten well underway, a series of verbal clashes over the admissibility of evidence offered by the State, occurred between the Attorney General and Mr. Lee, reaching their peak concerning a map offered by the former of the locality in Henry County where all events connected with the lynching took place. Mr. Lee claimed the map was correct except for a detail showing a certain road was under construction on Feb. 1. Mr. Carmichael insisted the road was not under construction at that time.

Then Shook Hands

A few minutes after court recessed, the two lawyers met in the Supreme Court library and the argument as to whether the road was or was not under construction on the date stated, was renewed. The discussion grew more heated and suddenly there was an exchange of blows between the two. Both were seised by friends and separated before the difficulty could proceed further. When court reconvened at 3 p.m. Mr. Carmichael offered to shake hands with Mr. Lee. The offer was accepted, and throughout the afternoon verbal exchanges between them on points of difference were thoroughly amicable.

Shortly before the trading of punches by the Attorney General and counsel for the defense took place, a photographer incurred the anger of Chief Justice John C. Anderson by letting go a flash bulb within a few feet of his head while in the act of taking a picture of Sheriff Corbitt who was approaching the camera from another direction. The matter was satisfactorily adjusted, however, when it was explained to the chief justice that the incident was an accident and the photographer was not aware he was near him.

The 10 men alleged to have been members of the mob were named by Sergt. J. W. McClung, special investigator of the State Highway Patrol, who investigated the lynching and who said Sheriff Corbitt told him he recognized them as among those who entered the jail on the night of Feb. 1, overpowered him and his late father who served as jailer, and took the prisoner away with them. The names of these 10 men, testified to by Sergt. McClung as being those the sheriff told him he recognized, and placed in the official court record in the case, were as follows: Tom McCoy, Rupert Bond (husband of the woman alleged to have been assaulted), Cratas Whitten, Grant Whitten, Eck Wood, Bob Kirkland, Ove Wright, John White, Mose Bond and Hes Bond.

McClung's Story

Sergt. McClung first told of going to Abbeville; arriving there on the morning of Feb. 3, following the lynching on the night of Feb. 1, and meeting Capt. Potter Smith and Sergt. Carlisle, of the Highway Patrol, who were already there. They had a conference with Sheriff Corbitt, he said, and he made notes on the conference a few minutes after it was concluded. The witness stated the sheriff said that on the Saturday preceding the lynching, at about 2:30 p.m., Rupert Bond and another man came to Abbeville where they reported that Bond's wife had been criminally assaulted by a negro; that he went to the Bond home and obtained a description of the attacker from the alleged victim, who said he was tall and slender, of a chocolate color, with protruding teeth, and that he wore a shirt made of a guano sack.

The next day, Sunday, at 2 p.m., the sheriff said, according to the witness, he arrested Wes Johnson near Tumbleton and took him to the Bond home for identification, being careful to take along only a deputy and one other man. He said Mrs. Bond looked at the prisoner and said "that looks like the man," then asked that he be required to remove his coat, and when he did so stated "that's the man." The sheriff, it was testified, said he placed the negro in jail Sunday at about 3 p.m., continuing his investigation, and believing he had the "right man."

Sergt. McClung said the Sheriff stated he talked to Circuit Solicitor Hubert Farmer at Dothan by telephone; that the solicitor told him in his opinion the negro was safe, and that he also talked with County Solicitor Carl Farmer and Probate Judge J. P. Mitchell and others, who expressed the same opinion. The sheriff then stated, according to the witness, that some two hours after he had talked to the Circuit Solicitor, or about midnight, Monday night he awakened in his room in the county jail to find the room full of men with shotguns and pistols; that they told him "we've come after the negro. Give us your keys," to which he replied, "you can kill me, but I'll never give you my keys"; then someone in the crowd said "we won't do that. Bring on the tools boys," and a crowbar was brought with which a locked door leading into a furnace room was pried open, his keys taken from a box in the room, the doors to the inner position of the jail were unlocked, and the negro Johnson, taken from his cell. Later, the sheriff was quoted as saying, the prisoner was brought through the room where he, the sheriff, and his father were being held, two men having hold of Johnson's arms and one behind him pushing him along, and the negro was taken outside. He and the elder Corbitt followed the last departing members of the mob to the door, the sheriff said, according to the witness and saw between 30 and 40 men and ten or 12 automobiles also several trucks; and then saw men, cars and trucks move away with Johnson. The sheriff said, it was stated, that he immediately called the circuit solicitor on the telephone and told him what had happened; that "they had gotten the negro," and that after calling the solicitor he went to bed. Sheriff Corbitt was further quoted as saying the lock on the front door of the jail had been broken and for that reason the door had not been locked for several years.

Pictures in Court

At this point, the Attorney General introduced in evidence, a number of enlarged photographs mounted on board, showing details of both the interior and exterior of the Henry County jail. Indicating a photograph of the sheriff's bed room in the jail building, Mr. Carmichael asked: "Is this the room where he (the sheriff) said he found himself surrounded?" and when Sergt. McClung answered the question in the affirmative, the prosecutor inquired: "He said he recognized ten of them." "Yes," replied the witness, "he gave me their names." Mr. Carmichael said he would ask him about that later.

Testifying further as to what the sheriff said, Sergt. McClung related the sheriff stated the crowd was between him and his shotgun which stood in a corner; that his father started in from an adjoining room but was "held up." Mr. Carmichael then introduced the map that was to be the basis of the controversy culminating in the fisticuffs between himself and Mr. Lee later on. Following cross examination by Mr. Lee the witness, at the request of the Attorney General, gave his testimony as to the names of the ten members of the mob who he stated the sheriff said he recognized.

Coroner Heard Later

During the afternoon J. M. Herring coroner, testified regarding the holding of the inquest and said he knew nothing about the lynching until the sheriff came by to get him the morning following. Floyd Hall, another negro prisoner in the jail at the night of the lynching, testified to being awakened by a "bumping" sound on the first floor about midnight, and then seeing a group of men unlocking the inner doors and taking Johnson away. He said Johnson asked the men if they were going to kill him and when they said "no" that he asked to be allowed to get his hat and shoes, and was told he wouldn't need them. Charlie Lee Cummings and Bud Bingham, two other negro prisoners in the jail at the time, gave substantially the same testimony the former stating the jailer came up after Johnson was removed, that he was barefooted; that he asked them "did you all get very scared?" told them to get back in their cells; took the keys and went away.

Mr. Carmichael next called to the witness stand five of the ten men it had been testified Sheriff Corbitt said he had recognized in the mob. They were Tom McCoy, Cratas Whitten, John White, Ove (or Obie) Wright, and Robert Kirkland, all of Newville, located a few miles from the scene of the alleged attack. All said they did not know the Sheriff had stated he recognized them as members of the mob, denied that they were in the mob or had anything to do with the lynching; said they heard no discussion of the attack and noted no indignation or excitement in the community prior to the lynching. All said they were at home on the lynching night except one, Tom McCoy, who stated he was in Florida. All testified to the good character and efficiency as an officer of Sheriff Corbitt.

Court Is Writing History In This Lynching Episode

Here In The Deep South It Is Happening—Justices Strive For Indictment Where Grand Juries Failed In Abbeville Mob Action

By Hilton Butler
Post Staff Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, June 4.—It can happen here.

In the "Deep South."

In Alabama.

It is happening today: The surging crowd, sharp words, angry moods, fists ready to fly again as they did yesterday.

But the locale has changed.

It is not happening in Henry County woods at night, by flashlight and torch, with a rope at hand and a three limb strong enough on which to drop a man to his death.

It is taking place in marbled halls, under electric fans and high-ceiling lights, thick carpets on the floor and a microphone to broadcast the story.

Unexpected Chapter

It's a lynching story—the second and unexpected chapter.

A bewildered law enforcement officer—Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Abbeville—walked back into the Supreme Court chambers today.

His badge was not in sight.

It may never be again. Justices of the court will decide if he is to be drummed out of law enforcement service in Alabama for "neglect, grave fault, connivance and cowardice" in the lynching of Wesley Johnson, Henry County Negro.

Capitol corridors are jammed as the unprecedented action proceeds. Ten nervous men from Henry County—identified by a state officer not facing impeachment for dereliction of duty as alleged members of the mob—move about in the crowd, witnesses, but as yet free men otherwise. Twro grand juries in Henry County have been able to produce nothing so far but a bucket of whitewash in their own investigations.

Trial Is Tense

There's nothing lukewarm or whitewashy in the current trial.

Justices lean over, asking sharp questions, demanding non-evasive answers. Opposing lawyers are as alert as tigers. Their tense nerves blew up momentarily yesterday.

"You can't insult me!" shouted Defense Counsel W. L. Lee of Abbeville. Henry County people gathered quickly. Fists flew.

"You struck first," retorted Atty.-Gen. Albert Carmichael as bystanders parted them.

Eastern newspapermen — belated in arrival but convinced that "it can happen here"—reported voluminously on Alabama's high court action against a sheriff whose prisoner fell into the hands of a mob.

Cry Of 'Politics'

As is customary when two or more are gathered in Capitol corridors, up went the cry of "politics." Attorney-General Carmichael, some observers murmured, is capitalizing on the trial of Sheriff Corbitt for use next year in a race for governor.

It may be true. The young man hasn't said.

But this is a matter of side-line comment as the Corbitt trial proceeds before a corridor-jamming crowd:

A rigid anti-lynching issue in "the Deep South" as a major campaign cry in a race for governor is as novel as it is courageous; and the chapter being written in Montgomery today is definite indication—these side-line observers insist—that it also is, from the practical viewpoint, "good politics."

Further Inquiry Needed Into The Henry County Lynching

After the lynching in Henry County last week, Sheriff Corbitt said he had recognized some members of the mob which took his prisoner from him, and that he would identify them. The special Grand Jury called to investigate the case returned no indictments. Presumably, Sheriff Corbitt did not identify any members of the mob in his appearance before the Grand Jury, else the jury could not have failed to return indictments.

Perhaps Sheriff Corbitt withheld the identifications he said he could make in order to present them in his own defense against the the impeachment proceedings ordered filed by Gov. Graves. In that case, the impeachment proceedings will provide the next inquiry into the lynching.

At any rate, further investigation into this crime is needed. The state cannot afford to let the effort to apprehend members of the mob drop with the uneventful report of the Grand Jury. Gov. Graves, who has said that so long as he is governor mob rule will not be tolerated in Alabama, may be counted on, we trust, to continue inquiries into the lynching until the state gets to the bottom of the affair, if it is humanly possible to do so.

Henry County Gent Condones the Mob But Objects to News of It

Editor of The Eagle:

Since the usual post-lynching ballahoo, so agreeably furnished by The Eagle and others of its kind, is on the wane, I find it incumbent to myself to defend, in some manner, the name, reputation and divine duty of the morally-right citizenry of Henry County from the unwarranted attacks of news hounds seeking to gain favor with factions utterly out of sympathy with southern traditions. We all know that a Negro was lynched in Henry county and we know, too, the reason why. We know that should another Negro rape another white woman in Henry county the same penalty given Wes Johnson would again be administered, the opinions of The Dothan Eagle notwithstanding.

I am not condoning the actions of the lynch mob, neither am I condemning them. After all, the law of our land is the people and it was a group of sober and mature white men, knowing the accountability of their deeds to their God, that tried, convicted and punished Wes Johnson for his savage attack upon a white woman. They were cool, deliberate and well balanced in the execution of their duty, traditional in our Southland.

The outside world would have known little of our rules and practices had it not been for your snooping reporters with cameras, fabricating false news, picturing the scene entirely different from the one left by the mob, needlessly multiplying the horrors of a well planned and well executed duty. It was your reporter, Mr. Brown, who witnessed, if not aided, the stringing tures of the Negro after he was strung up. It was Mr. Brown, your commentator, that described for news purposes the finding of the bullet-riddled Negro hanging from a tree. It was your paper that reproduced the horrible scene, minus of course, the body. It was your reporter, Mr. Brown, who was apprehended by the Abbeville police for selling the pictures without license. These are a few facts that may be supported by proof, should you so desire. Your snooping and blatant reporters have given false and faked publicity to a crime far less notorious than they have circularized it.

Our Honorable Governor became furious when notified of the crime. He tried to indict members of the mob. He failed. And Mr. Editor, he will fail the next time and the next. It might interest you to read the February 13th issue of the Chicago World, a Negro newspaper. The editorial in that issue decrying and denouncing the justice given Negroes in Henry county, and more particularly the injustice of the Tumbleton lynching is a fair sample of the false and erroneous stories given the public by your paper and its kindred organizations. Why not change your menu of human conduct and print something bordering on the truth.

No, Mr. Editor, not during this generation or the next few succeeding generations will the white men of Henry county and the Tumbleton community tolerate the debauchery of its white women by savage Negroes. The grand jury failed to indict and public opinion has condoned the action of the members of the mob. I was not a member of the mob, and, had I been, I don't think I would have to stultify my conscience in order to justify my conduct in the eyes of my fellowman and my God.

You have my kind and solicitous permission to quote this letter verbatim in your forum.

Yours very truly,
TULL McKNIGHT.

The Henry County Lynching

Nearly three weeks ago Wes Johnson, a Negro who had not been proved guilty of the crime charged against him, was stolen from the sheriff of Henry County and lynched. The lynching occurred just a short time after the introduction in Congress of the latest federal anti-lynching bill. Naturally the sponsors of the measure immediately pointed to the Henry County case as evidence of the need for such a federal law. They argued with considerable force that the states were unable, and possibly in some instances unwilling, to prosecute lynchers, and that, therefore, it was the duty of the federal government to intervene.

A great many persons, while not dogmatically or arbitrarily opposed to the federal bill, do believe that the states of their own accord should and eventually will stamp out lynching. They do not believe that a bill is wise that would take from the states such police powers as this bill would. They admit, of course, that a drastic federal anti-lynching law might go a long way toward stamping out this scourge that exists chiefly in the South. But they believe, and the record sustains their belief—that the several Southern states have made noteworthy progress, and that it will not be long before lynchings will be eradicated almost completely. In the entire country there were nine lynchings last year. There has been only one in 1937, and that in Henry County, Alabama.

Immediately after Wes Johnson was lynched, Gov. Graves ordered a special Grand Jury to investigate and called upon Atty. Gen. Carmichael to bring impeachment charges against the sheriff if the facts warranted. The Grand Jury investigated. but returned no indictments. However, the attorney general is pushing a vigorous investigation of the whole matter.

If the state is successful in its efforts to get at the truth of the trouble in Henry County and to take the proper action, it will have justified to a considerable extent the belief in many minds that the state and local governments, rather than the federal government, are the ones to deal with lynchers. Moreover, that would go far toward restoring the good name of Alabama.

Lynching Probed

Special Grand Jury Is Investigating Negro's Death

Abbeville Ala.—A coroner's jury and a special agent of Governor Bibb Graves appeared before a special grand jury which is investigating the lynchings of a 19-year-old negro accused of the assault of a white woman.

Fact of the lynching was established by the grand jury from the coroner's jury, it was learned. Then the body summoned Captain Potter Smith of the state highway patrol. Smith investigated the lynching at the order of Governor Bibb Graves.

Following Smith's investigation the Governor ordered the impeachment of Sheriff J. L. Corbett on charges of neglect of duty. The negro, Wes Johnson, was taken from Corbett's jail early Tuesday by an armed mob of about 50 men. Johnson's bullet-riddled body was found hanging from a tree.

Negro Lynched in Henry; Jury Fails to Indict

Wes Johnson, a 19 year-old negro in jail charged with criminal attack on a white woman in Henry County was taken out of jail at Abbeville and shot to death and then hanged last Monday night A special grand jury inquired into the affair but returned no bill. Gov. Graves has asked impeachment proceedings be started against Sheriff J. L. Corgett, hence the jury refused to probe the Sheriff's action in not fighting a mob of 50 men.

Corbitt Faces Ouster Suit In Lynching

Removal Action Against Henry County Sheriff Started In High Court

Negligence Alleged

Petition Avers Officer Did Not Afford Negro Due Protection Against Mob

Formal impeachment action seeking the removal from office of Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry County, was filed in the Alabama Supreme Court yesterday.

The proceeding, brought at the request of Gov. Graves and bearing the signatures of Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael and Asst. Atty. Gen. Silas C. Garrett III, has been set for hearing on May 3.

It charges the Sheriff with neglect, as a result of which a prisoner was unlawfully taken from the Henry County Jail and put to death; with grave fault in the conduct of his office, owing to which the prisoner was taken from the county jail unlawfully and put to death—and with willful neglect of duty.

Request that the impeachment action be brought against Sheriff Corbitt was made by Gov. Graves, following the lynching on the night of Feb. 1, of Wesley Johnson, negro farm hand, after he had been taken by a mob from the jail at Abbeville where he was being held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman. The negro's body was found the following morning hanging to a tree and riddled with bullets, near the Tumbleton community.

Word of the lynching reached the Governor through the press, during the forenoon of Feb. 2. He immediately had special investigators from the State Highway Patrol detailed to make a complete investigation of the occurrence.

On Feb. 4, after receiving the report of the investigators, Gov. Graves directed the Attorney General, in writing, to institute impeachment proceedings against Sheriff Corbitt and prosecute them as provided by law.

In his letter containing this direction, the Governor said it appeared to him from information he had received from the investigation of the lynching of Johnson, that Sheriff Corbitt was guilty of neglect as the result of which the prisoner was taken from the county jail and put to death; or was guilty of grave fault in the conduct of his office as a result of which the lynching occurred; or was guilty of willful neglect of duty in the matter; or that his acts in connection with the occurrence showed he is incompetent to discharge the duties of the office of sheriff.

A few days after the Governor's letter was written, the Henry County Grand Jury met in special session to investigate the lynching. No indictment was returned, and the grand jury reported they had not gone into the matter of the Sheriff's conduct in view of the fact that impeachment action had already been ordered brought against him by Gov. Graves. Immediately following the lynching the Sheriff had stated he had done all in his power to protect the prisoner. This statement was corroborated by the Sheriff's late father, one of his son's deputies at the time, who declared they were overpowered by the mob and held prisoner until Johnson had been removed from his cell and taken away.

The impeachment proceeding filed yesterday contains three charges and 18 specifications—six specifications appearing under each charge.

The first charge is that the Sheriff has been guilty of impeachable conduct in that he has been guilty of neglect of the duties of the office of Sheriff, owing to which or as a result of which, a prisoner was unlawfully taken from the Henry Copnty Jail and put to death. Specifications under this charge allege that Wesley Johnson, the prisoner, had been arrested on a charge of criminal assault on Jan. 31, and committed to the jail; that the circumstances under which the crime was committed were such as were likely to and did provoke popular indignation, which fact was well known to the Sheriff. The Sheriff, it is alleged, notwithstanding these facts, did not take such steps as were necessary and proper to resist or prevent an effort to take the prisoner from the jail; but was guilty of neglect in the care of the prisoner and jail, as a result of which the prisoner was unlawfully taken from the jail and put to death.

Substantially the same allegations are made in specifications appearing under the other two separate charges in the proceedings, which in conclusion requests that on final hearing, the Supreme Court enter a decree removing Sheriff Corbitt from office, and disqualifying him from holding any other office under authority of the State during the term for which he was elected as sheriff.

AFTER A SHERIFF.

Recently an Alabama grand jury refused to indict a sheriff who was charged with neglect of duty when a mob lynched a Negro.

Attorney General Carmichael says the grand jury's failure to act will not influence the attitude of the State of Alabama. He will hale the accused sheriff before the Supreme Court for impeachment, and prosecute him vigorously.

The Attorney General declares he is acting for those in his state who respect the law. In the course of his recent statement, he said:

To say that lynching has anything to do with protecting womanhood in Alabama is pure poppycock. The answer to this is that a petit jury would require about 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict for the perpetrator of such a crime as this. Those unlawful hoodlums who imagine themselves heroes when taking part in lynchings have a distorted idea of patriotism. Only lawless hoodlums and the enemies of government take part in mob law. As the chief law enforcement officer of this state I condemn it and make known that as long as I am the attorney general of this state, those persons who think they are more important and powerful than the law and who take the law into their own hands, will be prosecuted promptly and most vigorously, and in this I want to say that I will have the entire resources of this great state at my command.

We do not know all the circumstances of the Alabama lynching. We do not know whether or not the sheriff is guilty of neglect of duty, but if the charge is true, it will be to the lasting credit of Alabama if the Attorney General's action before the Supreme Court results in the officer's removal. Lynchings are indefensible, but equally bad, and as menacing to law and order, is the failure of a sheriff or other law-enforcement officer to do everything in his power to prevent such an outrage.

PROBERS BACK HENRY SHERIFF

Grand Jury Urges Dismissal of Charges Against Corbitt in Lynching Case

ABBEVILLE, Ala., May 20.—(AP)—Recommendations for dismissal of impeachment proceedings against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, charged with negligence in the lynching of Wes Johnson, negro, had been made today by a Henry county grand jury.

The proceedings were brought against the official before the state supreme court by Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael upon instructions from Gov. Bibb Graves. Sheriff Corbitt was charged with "cowardice and negligence" when a mob of approximately 100 armed men lynched the negro accused of attacking a white woman.

Grand Jury Reports

The grand jury investigating the three-months old lynching yesterday in making its report to Circuit Judge D. C. Halstead, reported it had considered all available evidence in the case and returned a "no bill."

"We do not find any evidence of what, in our opinion, would be any wrong-doing on the part of the sheriff of our county," the jury report said. "We respectfully recommend and urge that the impeachment proceedings filed in the supreme court of this state and now pending therein be dismissed."

Other Report Recalled

A special grand jury session, called on orders of Governor Graves a few days after the lynching, failed to return any indictments and the jurors reported they did not look into whether Sheriff Corbitt was at fault with a view of impeachment proceedings.

Sheriff Corbitt said the day following the lynching he did "all in my power" to protect the negro, and expressed his willingness to name members of the lynching mob some of whom he said he recognized.

Sheriff on Trial as Result of Lynching Denies Negligence or Cowardice

NINE OF MOB ARE NAMED

Alabama Prosecutor Charges Innocent Man Was Jailed to Stop Criticism

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 4 (AP)—Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry county, denied before the Alabama supreme court any negligent or cowardly conduct in connection with the lynching of Wesley Johnson, whom the state charged earlier was "the wrong Negro."

Corbitt's assertion was made from the witness stand as defendant in an impeachment trial. Charges were ordered filed by Governor Bibb Graves.

The sheriff named nine men, all of whom he had been listed earlier in courts records as having been seen in the Henry county jail at Abbeville the night of Feb. 1, when Johnson, charged with assaulting a white woman, was taken by an armed mob and shot and hanged.

A sensational turn was given the trial when Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael charged the mob "lynched the wrong Negro" and offered to prove it with "evidence and testimony unimpeachable in all southeast Alabama."

"We will be able to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that popular indignation was so great that the sheriff was forced to arrest the wrong Negro," Carmichael said.

Sheriff Tells of Search

Chief Justice John C. Anderson however, cut off presentation of Carmichael's testimony with a ruling:

"The evidence is not competent; we don't want to try him (Johnson), we're trying the sheriff; and, the sheriff is just as responsible to protect an innocent man as he is a guilty one."

The sheriff, stockily-built and blunt-spoken, denied he "went back to bed" after the mob had taken the Negro. He testified that, instead he got his chief deputy and drove the rest of the night "hunting the crowd."

Two grand juries have investigated the lynching. No indictments were returned, and the second jury recommended to Governor Graves that the impeachment proceedings against Corbitt be dropped.

The state will begin presentation of rebuttal testimony tomorrow at 9 a.m.

Means Business

Gov. Bibb Graves, of Alabama, who says he intends to "put an end to lynching in this state," is setting about it in a business-like way. Directing the attorney general to institute impeachment proceedings against the sheriff of a county in which a lynching occurred, the governor issues a pronouncement that suggests he has enlisted for the duration of the war.

Striking out at the customary excuse for resort to mob violence—namely, to protect womanhood—the governor denounces it as "pure poppycock." He says it would not take a petit jury "more than 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict" for that sort of crime. He declares "only lawless hoodlums and enemies of government" take part in lynchings. That is the truth. The very dregs of society are permitted in some states to override the law and to resort of shocking mutilation and murder of people on mere suspicion of crime. And they are permitted to go unpunished on the theory, apparently, that they are actuated by desire to "protect womanhood." The composition of mobs makes the contention ridiculous.

Gov. Graves' outspokenness on the subject, accompanied as it is by direct action, is another indication that the South is becoming aroused over the discredit mob law brings.—Baltimore Sun.

FARMER READY TO END LYNCH PROBE

'Further Agitation' Will Do No Good, He declares

With the second grand jury investigation of the lynching of Wess Johnson, Henry county Negro, behind him and in each instance the juries finding no indictments, Circuit Solicitor J. Hubert Farmer yesterday issued a statement in which he said, "as far as I am personally concerned the book can be closed on the whole unfortunate affair," and added that it appeared to him "further agitation of this matter will not result in any good."

His complete statement follows:

"I have been with two different grand juries in this matter, each composed of as high class gentlemen as are to be found anywhere I know that a painstaking investigation has been conducted both times. No indictments have been returned. And now, as far as I am personally concerned, the book can be closed on the whole unfortunate affair.

"When a grand jury fails to indict there may be a number of reasons. In the Henry county case, perhaps, it is the viewpoint that is born of the desire to protect Southern womanhood from crimes of this nature at all odds and to shield the victims from the embarrassment and humiliation of going through the ordeal of a trial with its many unpleasant details. At least, I am convinced that such a desire, or determination, is deeply imbedded in the minds and hearts of our people.

"I do not believe in mob law, but it appears to me that further agitation of this matter will not result in any good."

ON SCARING SHERIFFS

Mob action in the South is an abomination. It is indefensible from any point of view. It has done a great deal to injure the South before the world. Mob action not only is vicious and unwise, but it is unnecessary. There is always a better way.

One Alabama sheriff recently was brought up for impeachment trial before the Supreme Court of Alabama. He was charged with negligence in the protection of a prisoner. In the end the justices of the Supreme Court, with two dissenting votes, declared him innocent of negligence, after two grand juries in his county had white-washed him. The sheriff had the satisfaction of hearing large numbers of his fellow citizens, representative of the best opinion in his county, testify to his good character. Indeed, he had the satisfaction of hearing the Attorney-General of Alabama concede that he was a man of good repute. This should be gratifying and heartening to the young man who was brought to trial before the highest tribunal of Alabama, especially in view of his final acquittal.

Certainly after this successful defense of his good name, no newspaper is privileged to question the good deportment of the accused sheriff. The Advertiser would be the last to raise such a question.

But The Advertiser is as quick to say that in its opinion State officials were right in bringing this man to trial. Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael acted upon reasonable information in demanding an impeachment trial It was their duty to sift this matter to the bottom, and this they did.

The State will benefit by the trial. It is renewed proof that the Governor of Alabama and the Attorney-General will not condone mob violence and that they are prepared to punish any official who is under suspicion of negligence. This, we think, will impress other officials. It is notice to them that their oath of office is binding. Such a trial will go far to discourage lynching in Alabama.

An incident of the recent trial should go far to impress citizens with the unwisdom of undisciplined mob action. Mr. Carmichael offered to prove to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court that the Henry county mob lynched the wrong man. Naturally the court ruled such evidence to be incompetent, which plainly it was. But as a matter of public policy Carmichael was right in making his declaration, and so getting it into the record. As matters stand the State will never know whether the wrong man was lynched or not, but Carmichael passionately insisted that he had the evidence to prove this. No doubt he had such evidence. If he did he had the best of all possible arguments against mob action—the mob is unselective, undiscriminating, unjust, otherwise it would not have constituted itself a mob.

Nothing can be done about the Carmichael theory that the wrong man was killed, and there is no appeal from the verdict of the Supreme Court that the sheriff at trial was not negligent. The public, we think, will be satisfied that the sheriff is innocent, however the public may regard the action of the mob in killing the wrong man.

But of this there can be no doubt: It is worth while to scare sheriffs in the Deep South, and so make them more diligent and more dutiful in the discharge of their obligations.

It is the duty of sheriffs to see that juries, not undisciplined mobs, decide who among us must die for high crimes and misdemeanors.

The Advertiser is glad that Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael made their grand effort to get at the truth of the Henry county lynching. Do it again, when occasion demands!

Alabama Moves Against Lynchers

247

The Montgomery Advertiser

THERE are two "schools of thought" in Alabama regarding lynch mobs. One believes in the summary execution of offenders against certain laws, particularly the law against assault. This school often controls the grand juries that are summoned to investigate the faithlessness of peace officers in the face of revolting crimes. It is a shallow and irresponsible school.

It is a school that is scorned by Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael—to the glory of Alabama.

Regarding the white-washing of an Alabama sheriff who is charged with negligence in the face of a mob that lynched a Negro accused of attacking a white woman, Mr. Carmichael published a statement in the Advertiser Friday morning in which he, on behalf of the Governor as well as himself, took high ground for that "school of thought" that scorns mob violence. Announcing that the State of Alabama would ignore the recent action of a grand jury in white-washing the accused sheriff, he said he would proceed to bring the sheriff before the Supreme Court for impeachment.

The Governor and the attorney-general investigated the facts in this case carefully and are convinced that impeachment proceedings are justified.

In the course of his statement Mr. Carmichael wisely and forcefully says:

"The recent report of the Grand Jury will not have the slightest effect on the impeachment proceedings now pending in the Supreme Court of Alabama. The impeachment proceedings will proceed and will be prosecuted with as much vigor as the office of the attorney-general is capable of putting forth.

"The framers of our Constitution did not accidentally provide that a sheriff should be impeached by the Supreme Court.

"I want to take this occasion to say that the Governor of Alabama and the Attorney-General of Alabama feel very keenly about this matter; that we are most anxious that the outside world know that the Alabama State officials who are responsible in law for prosecuting cases of this character are doing their duty and will continue to do it.

"To say that lynching has anything to do with protecting womanhood in Alabama is pure poppycock. The answer to this is that a petit jury would require about 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict for the perpetrator of such a crime as this. Those unlawful hoodlums who imagine themselves heroes when taking part in lynchings have a distorted idea of patriotism. Only lawless hoodlums and the enemies of government take part in mob law. As the chief law enforcement officer of this State I condemn it and make known that as long as I am the attorney-general of this State, those persons who think they are more important and powerful than the law and who take the law in their own hands, will be prosecuted promptly and most rigorously, and in this I want to say that I will have the entire resources of this great State at my command."

Without prejudice to the sheriff now under fire the Advertiser nevertheless commends the foregoing statement as representative of the best thought in Alabama, the only thought on the subject that in the long run can be trusted.

Let us stop lynching human beings in this otherwise civilized State! The only way to stop it is to strike at the officials who permit it.

State Courts and Lynching

A twenty-year old Alabama farm hand was taken from a county jail and lynched under circumstances which moved Governor Graves and Attorney General Carmichael to institute impeachment proceedings against the sheriff in the State Supreme Court. 6-12-37

In the course of the investigation conducted by the governor and the attorney general it developed that evidence was found to substantiate the claim that the man lynched had no connection with the crime with which he was charged.

Mr. Carmichael told the court "we will be able to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the public indignation was so great that the sheriff was forced to arrest the wrong Negro."

The idea was not to press impeachment charges against the sheriff because the wrong man was lynched, however, but to show that in addition to unlawfully putting a man to death this particular mob had put to death the wrong man. That the sheriff had not only permitted a mob to lynch a man, but an entirely innocent man, making his position all the more untenable.

In the face of this situation what did the Supreme Court of Alabama do? It prevented the state from presenting the evidence, holding that "it was incompetent in the trial." The state contended, further, that the front door to the living quarters in the jail was left unlocked on the night of the lynching, giving the mob easy access to the prisoner.

In the face of all this, which the state argued it could prove "beyond a reasonable doubt," the Alabama Supreme Court acquitted the sheriff. That is fairly representative of all actions taken against all law officers that have permitted lynchings to occur in their jurisdictions.

It proves, again, the impotency of the judicial machinery of some of the states to punish any one for lynching.

A federal anti-lynching law could do no worse, and almost surely would bring about an improvement in the situation.

ONLY THIRTY-FIVE MINUTES FOR DECISION

Chicago Defender

South Is Angered Over The Success Of The Anti-Lynch Bill

6-12-37

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 11—No crime has been committed when a mob lynches a member of the Race in the state of Alabama even if it is a case of mistaken identity and the innocent victim is the wrong man." Such was the opinion of the Alabama Supreme court in acquitting Sheriff W. L. Corbitt of Henry county Friday.

Corbitt was impeached on charges of negligence, and cowardice in the lynching of Wesley Johnson, who was accused of having attacked a white woman.

Decision in 25 Minutes

It took just 25 minutes to free the Dixie lynch sheriff. The decision of the court came in a four-to-two vote and the role opinion was announced without comment. Friday marked the third time that Corbitt had been absolved of blame.

The complete vindication of Sheriff Corbitt affords one more specific instance of the opposition of the deep South against the Gavagan anti-lynch bill now up for passage before the United States Senate.

The court went so far as to ignore the warning of Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael that Congress would pass the anti-lyncing bill if Alabama doesn't enforce the constitutional clause on lynching.

Innocent Man Victim

The state in demanding the prosecution of the sheriff contended that he had failed to do his duty in saving the life of an innocent man. Wesley Johnson it was revealed, was not the man who committed the assault. A white man, former sweetheart of the woman, attacked her and fled. Her cries attracted attention and Johnson, trying to play the part of a Good Samaritan, came to her rescue. Two white men, who saw Johnson near the woman, seized him as the rapist.

Johnson was taken from the county jail at Abbeville, Ala., last February 1, by an armed mob. The following morning his body was found hanging from a tree not far from the scene of the rape. The body was torn by dozens of bullets.

Sheriff Corbitt denied all of the charges in the impeachment proceeding. The court was informed that the sheriff took all possible precaution for the protection of the prisoner, but with his deputies was powerless to prevent the removal by a superior force. He said several hundred men were in the mob.

Corbitt said he was asleep in the living quarters at the jail when the night riders entered and that before he could arise he was surrounded by men armed with shotguns. Denying a charge that he returned to bed and went to sleep after the men took the prisoner from the jail, he said he and a deputy hunted throughout the night for the men.

Court Spikes Charges Of Lynch Error

Negro's Innocence Held No Part Of Trial As Sheriff Takes Stand

Corbitt Is Heard

Sensational Developments Mark Impeachment Bid Against Henry Official

Denial of any negligence, cowardly conduct or connivance on his part in connection with the taking from the jail at Abbeville and lynching on the night of Feb 1 of Wes Johnson, was made yesterday by Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County before the Alabama Supreme Court.

The Sheriff's denial was made from the witness stand during testimony in his own defense against charges contained in impeachment proceedings filed against him following the lynching. Wes Johnson was being held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman. The State charged earlier in the day he was "the wrong negro."

In his testimony Sheriff Corbitt named nine men whose names had previously been submitted to the court and placed in the official record as having been seen in the county jail on the night Johnson was taken from there by the mob and lynched. Ovie Wright, another man whose name had also been submitted as one of those in the mob that entered the jail on the lynching night, was "not there," the Sheriff declared, and he never gave Wright's name to anybody.

"The Wrong Negro"

Early in the forenoon yesterday Atty. Gen. Carmichael sprung a sensation during the trial when he charged that the mob lynched "the wrong negro" and stated he was prepared to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence and testimony "unimpeachable anywhere throughout southeast Alabama." Mr. Carmichael declared he could show that because of the tenseness of popular indignation and feeling that the Sheriff was "forced," the pressure brought to bear on him being so great because of the existing situation, to arrest "the wrong negro."

He stated further he would be able to show that the victim of the alleged assault placed the time of the attack at between 11:15 and 11:30 a.m., on Jan. 30, and that Johnson at 11:30 was four miles away. Defense Counsel W. L. Lee insisted that the guilt or innocence of Johnson was not before the court for determination, and that whether Johnson was the "wrong negro" or not had no bearing on hearing before the court of impeachment action against the Sheriff.

Chief Justice John C. Anderson ruling on the point presented, held that the testimony offered by the Attorney General was "incompetent and inadmissible" regarding the question of the guilt or innocence of the Sheriff, of charges of negligence, grave fault, connivance and cowardice in protecting a prisoner in the county jail. The responsibility of a Sheriff, he ruled, is just as great in protecting an innocent prisoner as a guilty one.

Arrest 'Forced'

"We will be able to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that popular indignation was so great that the Sheriff was forced to arrest the wrong negro," Carmichael said.

Chief Justice Anderson, however, cut off presentation of Carmichael's testimony with a ruling:

"The evidence is not competent; we don't want to try him (Johnson), we're trying the Sheriff; and, the Sheriff is just as responsible to protect an innocent man as he is a guilty one."

The Sheriff, stockily built and blunt-spoken, denied he told Capt. Potter Smith or Investigator J. W. McClung, of the State Highway Patrol, that he "went back to bed" after the mob had taken the negro, and testified that, instead, he got his chief deputy and drove the rest of the night "hunting the crowd."

Asked on cross-examination if he took "any particular precautions" following Johnson's arrest, Sheriff Corbitt said, "nothing out of the ordinary. x x x I put him in jail and locked him up, just like anyone else."

He followed a long line of defense witnesses who swore there were no apparent signs that Tumbleton community, where the alleged attack occurred, or Henry County in general "were unduly excited" or that there any indication of "mob violence."

"Everything Seemed Okeh"

Corbitt testified likewise, repeating a telephone conversation in which he said Circuit Solicitor J. Hubert Farmer told him "everything seemed to be all right" after a visit to Tumbleton a few hours before the lynching.

Asked if he later arrested any of the nine men he recognized in the jail while he and his father were being covered by guns, and the negro taken, Corbitt said he had not. To a defense question, he answered: "The Grand Jury was to meet ni a few days."

Two Grand Juries have investigated the lynching. No indictments were returend, and the second jury recommended to Gov. Graves that the impeachment proceedings against Corbitt be dropped.

Corbitt testified he told the mob "I'd die before they got my keys," but they forced a steel door with a crowbar and found his cell keys in a box in another room.

The sheriff said on cross-examination he did not ask anyone for an order to transfer Johnson to another jail, "because I thought everything was all right." At another point he said Solicitor Farmer might have told him "to be cautious in handling the negro."

Sent Father To Bed

The Sheriff testified that he told his father, 71-year-old jailer, to "go to bed" after he had locked prisoners, liberaetd by the mob, back in their cells.

"Then I went and got my deputy, Mr. (Chief Deputy Alf) Roney, and told him: "Let's ride out and see if we can find them," Corbitt said.

He and Roney, Corbitt said, went in the direction of the last car in the mob crowd. Corbitt said he and his father lived "downstairs in living quarters of the jail." and that the mob entered through a front door which was not locked."

"I got to the front door just in time to see the last car," he said. "It turned on a street that leads toward Fort Gaines, Ga."

Roney and Corbitt, the latter said, went to Fort Gaines, came back by Shorterville, Ala., went down the Columbia, Ala., road and elsewhere. It was while he was eating breakfast, Corbitt said, that he heard where the mob had taken the negro.

Roney substantiated major portions of Corbitt's testimony. He estimated they did not get closer than seven miles to the scene of the lynching during their night ride.

Sheriff "Crucified"

Mrs. C. H. Thrasher, State Jail inspector, read a report of her inspection of the Abbeville jail, in which she said it was "sanitary, and as to safety I would say that it is one of the best in the State of Alabama."

Carmichael asked her only one question: "Aren't you the daughter of Sheriff W. C. Daniel, of Macon County, impeached by this court a short time ago?"

"I am the daughter of a sheriff I believe was crucified," she answered.

Sheriff Daniel died of a gunshot wound after his car was wrecked a few weeks ago. A verdict of suicide was returned.

When adjournme was taken last night, Carmichael said the State would begin presentation of rebuttal testimony today at 9 a.m.

While being cut-off from directly bringing out his reputed "unimpeachable testimony and evidence" the wrong negro was lynched, Carmichael finally called Mrs. Rupert Bond, whom Johnson was accused by warrant as assaulting, to show that the alleged incident occurred "at 11:15 a.m."

Time of Assault

Then John H. Oates, Henry County road supervisor and former employer of Johnson, testified he saw the negro on the day of the alleged assault "about noon—a little before noon."

Again the Chief Justice interrupted saying:

"We don't want to try him (Johnson); we are trying the sheriff."

After the State closed its case Defense Counsel W. L. Lee called several witnesses from the Newville and Tumbleton communities, where the assault was alleged to have occurred, to testify they heard no talk of mob violence after Johnson's arrest.

The State contends Corbitt was at fault for not "protecting" the negro whose bullet riddled body was found hanging to a tree the morning after he was removed from jail by the crowd.

Corroboration Testimony

Chief Deputy Sheriff Alf Roney, who followed the Sheriff on the witness stand, corroborated, substantially, the testimony given by the latter as to what occurred after the negro had been taken from the jail and the mob had left. He told of going to see Mr. Oates on the Saturday night following the alleged attack and telling him the description given by the alleged victim of her assailant fitted Wes Johnson who worked on the Oates farm; of going back the next day to the Oates farm and endeavoring to trace some tracks found there. He said some 12 or 15 men assisted him, but none was armed.

The witness related then how he, the Sheriff and Oates, took Johnson to the home of the alleged victim for identification; said he observed no indication of popular indignation or evidence that the people of the neighborhood were aroused; that he observed no excitement the day following when, he said, Oates told him he believed he had "the right man," and said he did not believe there was any danger of attempted violence.

The Chief Deputy then corroborated what the Sheriff had testified concerning his attempts to locate the mob for the remainder of the night following the taking of Johnson from the jail, and said he accompanied the Sheriff. On cross examination by the Attorney General, the witness stated they did not go to the community where the alleged attack occurred. He stated they drove east, then south. Asked if east was not in the opposite direction from the crime scene, he replied in the affirmative.

Awakened at 2 A.M.

Sheriff Corbett awakened him at about 2 a.m., following the visit of the mob to the jail, and told him "a mob has taken the prisoner. Let's see what we can do about it," he said. Questioned as to where he and the Sheriff drove and asked if six or seven miles was not the closest they got to the home of the woman alleged to have been assaulted, he replied it was.

He attended the inquest, he said, but did not tell the coroner's jury how the negro met his death "because he didn't know. He denied telling Oates "it looks like the crowd's not going to be satisfied unless I arrest that negro." He denied Oates told him in Abbeville, Monday afternoon, prior to the lynching, that the situation existing at Tumbleton at that time was tense.

At the conclusion a few minutes before 6 p.m. of the testimony of the Chief Deputy, court recessed until 9 a.m. today, when rebuttal testimony will be presented by the State. It was expected that the case will be finally submitted to the Supreme Court early in the forenoon.

Sheriff Helpless

The supreme court of Alabama yesterday acquitted Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, Henry county of charges of impeachment growing out of the lynching of a negro in that state.

That is not nearly so important a bit of news as would have been a conviction; but the court must be assumed to have administered justice according to the best of its ability, and the seal of the law's majesty rests upon the decision exonerating the officer of all blame in the case where an armed mob forced him to surrender the negro who was subsequently killed in violence.

We of the South may take some encouragement from the fact that impeachment charges were brought. Only in recent years has public opinion become so strongly against mob violence in the South as to make possible definite legal action in effort to place criminal responsibility for lynchings upon individuals.

But we are not yet in a position fairly to resent critical comment from other sections of the United States. Recent predictions in the eastern press to the effect that the sheriff would be acquitted have been justified.

No doubt he should have been acquitted. It is easily credible that the sheriff's story of being the helpless victim of superior force is wholly true. The point is that the rest of this country regards any and all Southern anti-lynching activity with the greatest suspicion, and it will continue to do so until some absolute proof has been offered and repeated that southern law enforcemen agencies are capable of and willing to enforce southern statutes against mob violence.

Any case of the nature of this one in Alabama is going to bring predictions of whitewashing for all concerned and those claims of whitewashings will continue to influence opinion of the South in other areas far more than the cold and non-sensational statistics which our region can offer of a gradually improving intolerance for mob violence, and of more frequent cases where agencies of law enforcement have taken positive and efficiently successful initiative in guarding prisoners threatened by mob violence from harm.

In prosecuting Sheriff Corbitt, Alabama's attorney general warned: "If we don't enforce the constitutional clause on lynching, Congress will pass an anti-lynching bill."

We hate to put any plea for abolition of lynching on that basis even more than we dislike indicting it on the grounds of the unfavorable regard for us which it creates in other parts of the United States.

But the ideal of mob-law abolition will justify almost any reasonable means which may be employed to bring it about. If a basis of provincial pride, or a basis of fear of further inroads upon our state sovereignties by federal agents from Washington will prove truly effective in ridding the south of lynch-law, then by all means let us adopt such bases.

And in the meanwhile, by whatever method, let us hope that Southern lynchings will decrease to the vanishing point coincidentally with the coming of a day when public opinion will demand the apprehension of mob leaders and members and our courts, high and low, may be counted on to punish the motley degenerates who perpetuate the bestial bench of Judge Lynch to the full extent of exacting statutes.

Up to the better Element

After a recent lynching in Henry county Alabama, a grand jury inquiry resulted in a recommendation that the case be dropped. The grand jury was unwilling to sponsor a charge that the sheriff of Henry County had been negligent in failing to protect a prisoner against a mob. Governor Bibb Graves has denounced this grand jury white-washing of a local official more effective in politics than in the conduct of his office, and has directed Attorney General Carmichael to bring ouster proceedings against the negligent sheriff.

Governor Graves says the stock argument in defense of lynching that it is intended to "protect womanhood" is "pure poppycock," for it would not take an Alabama jury long to return a verdict of death where crimes involving women are concerned. The only result accomplished by taking this Negro away from the sheriff and lynching him was to disgrace the State, cause disrespect for law, and demonstrate the unfitness of the sheriff for office.

Governor Graves points out that "only lawless hoodlums and enemies of government" participate in lynchings, and sees no reason why grand juries should be so solicitous to protect members of such mobs.

A Richmond News Leader summary shows that there had been no lynching in Virginia prior to 1918 for sixteen years. Between 1918 and 1926, there were six lynchings, in Culpeper, Wise, Orange, King and Queen, Sussex and Wythe counties. Governor Byrd's vigorous message to the Legislature on the subject of lynching resulted in the passage of the Virginia anti-lynching statute of 1926, since which there has been no lynching in this State.

In the six Virginia instances it was probably true, as Governor Graves has said of Alabama, that "only lawless hoodlums and enemies of government" participated in lynching. No one suspects or charges that the better elements of Culpeper, Wise, Orange, King and Queen, Sussex and Wythe counties took part in or even sanctioned the lynchings which stain the names of those counties. But that same better element has not insisted, even after a decade, that the "lawless hoodlums and enemies of government" be brought into court and punished for their participation in mob murders of unarmed and defenseless prisoners.

The "better element" theory advanced by Governor Graves would be more convincing if the so-called "better element" insisted on ousting sheriffs who hand over those in their custody to lynching parties. It would be more convincing if the Alabama grand jury had done its duty, and returned indictments against known ringleaders of the lynching party, instead of recommending that the inquiry be dropped. Lynchings will end in any State whenever the so-called "better element" which has no part in lynchings demands the punishment of those who take the law into their hands.

A jury hearing the impeachment trial of an Alabama sheriff charged with failure to protect a negro from a mob was told the other day that the mob "lynched the wrong negro." Attorney General A. A. Carmichael told the court, "We will be able to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that popular indignation was so great that the sheriff was forced to arrest the wrong negro." And then the sheriff did not protect him.

Lynch Law

If more State officials would use the authority vested in them, as Governor Graves of Alabama, has done recently, the crime of lynching in our Southland, that has been such a reflection on our inability to do justice to all who live among us, would cease. Lynching is one of our worst crimes. Whenever a mob takes the law into its own hands and undertakes to administer justice as it sees fit and supercedes our courts, it commits a crime of far more reaching importance than whatever crime it is trying to correct.

An anti-lynching bill passed the House of Representatives some months ago and unless the officials of our Southern states use every means they have to prevent these mobs from running rough shod over the law of the land this infamous anti-lynching bill, which is aimed at the South, will become law. The rank and file of our people oppose lynch law but we are too timid about it. We need more Governors like Graves of Alabama, who had impeachment proceedings started against a sheriff in that state for his negligence and cowardice as a peace officer in permitting a mob to lynch a negro. Governor Graves failed to have the Sheriff ousted but the Supreme Court that passed on the proceedings stood 4 to 2.

An editorial in The Daily States in commenting on the trial said:

"The fact that the court divided probably means that the governor will not relax his efforts if other lynchings occur. At least, there is some reason to feel that the fact that two of the justices evidently took the governor's view may have a deterrent influence on mob violence on the one hand and, on the other, more vigilance and efficiency on the part of police authorities in repressing lynchings."

Alabama Justice At Work

For one of the relatively few times in history a state is taking determined steps to discover in orderly court the truth about a lynching. Too often in the past investigations into mob activities have come to naught, and not infrequently the public was left with the impression that little serious effort was made to discover the truth and punish the guilty.

Today we have a different story to tell. Alabama is without any doubt making a serious and intelligent effort to get at the facts concerning the lynching last February in Henry County of Wes Johnson. The governor and the attorney general have been unrelenting in their determination to discover the truth and obtain justice in this now famous case. They deserve the highest praise and support.

Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, from whom the Negro was taken and lynched, is facing impeachment charges before the State Supreme Court. Sheriff Corbitt said at the time of the outrage that he could identify some of the members of the mob, and Thursday in open court 10 persons were charged with having participated in the lynching party.

The evidence presented yesterday to the effect that the wrong Negro may have been lynched makes this crime even more horrible. At the time of the murder there were many persons who pointed out that under the circumstances it was impossible to be sure that Wes Johnson, the dead Negro, had been guilty of the alleged crime. That is true in nearly all such cases. Arrests are made in hot haste, and mobs gather and act blindly and stupidly. The Henry County mob is no exception.

The Supreme Court of Alabama today is hearing one of the most important cases ever brought before it. If under its direction the truth of this whole ghastly affair can be brought out and appropriate action taken a blow of untold magnitude will be dealt lynching and mob violence. Let the attorney general continue whatever prosecution the evidence warrants to the end that complete justice shall obtain in Alabama. Not only should the guilty be punished, but if Sheriff Corbitt is innocent of neglect of duty, he is entitled to the vindication of the law's formal word for it.

Oust Corbitt, State Urges Withdrawal

Unprecedented Demand For Henry Rehearing Filed By Carmichael

Perjury Charged

Montgomery Grand Jury Will Be Asked To Indict Alleged Mob Members

By JOSEPH R. M'COY

Application for rehearing in the case representing impeachment action against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, in which the Alabama Supreme Court rendered a 4 to 2 verdict of not guilty on June 6, was filed yesterday in the Alabama Supreme Court by Atty. Gen. Carmichael.

The application and the brief and argument that accompanied it bore the signature of the Attorney General and Asst. Atty. Gen. Silas C. Garrett III, who has from the first been associated with him in the case. Impeachment action against Sheriff Corbitt followed the taking from the Henry County Jail at Abbeville, on the night of Feb. 1 and lynching by a mob of Wesley Johnson, negro, who was being held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman.

Following the filing of the application in the impeachment case, Atty. Gen. Carmichael announced that it is his intention to take the necessary legal steps in Henry County to indict and bring to trial the members of the mob whom Sheriff Corbitt swore before the Supreme Court he recognized; and that it is also his intention to take the necessary legal steps in Montgomery County to indict and bring to trial on charges of perjury those members of the mob whom the Sheriff testified he recognized from the witness stand that they were not members of the mob. The Sheriff said in his testimony he recognized nine members of the mob.

After the lynching of Johnson, two special Grand Juries in Henry County returned no indictments against any alleged member or members of the mob that lynched him. The second Grand Jury recommended to Gov. Graves that the pending impeachment proceedings against the Sheriff, which the Governor had directed be brought, be withdrawn. The recommendation was disregarded by the chief executive.

The rehearing application filed with the Supreme Court yesterday is believed to be the first ever submitted by the State in an impeachment case, though any party to a case decided adversely to them by the Supreme Court has a right under the law, it is understood, to apply for a rehearing within the statutory period of 15 days.

During hearing of the impeachment proceedings against Sheriff Corbitt the entire personnel of the Supreme Court was not sitting, Justice Thomas E. Knight being absent on account of illness. He has since recovered, however, and is now back on the bench. In the 4 to 2 decision of the Supreme Court, Justices Lucien D. Gardner and Joel B. Brown dissented from the verdict of the majority.

The brief and argument filed with the rehearing application, respectfully requests that in the event the application is denied, that the court point out in an opinion setting out wherein the State failed to make out its case against the Sheriff. No opinion was written by the court in connection with its verdict of "not guilty."

Review of the law under which the proceeding was brought and prosecuted against Sheriff Corbitt, is presented in the brief, setting out Sections 138, 173 and 174 of the Alabama Constitution. Section 138 is the special section providing for removal of a Sheriff from office when a prisoner is taken from his custody or a deputy's custody, and put to death or subjected to bodily harm owing to the neglect, cowardice, connivance or other dereliction of duty by the Sheriff. Section 173 provides for the removal of officers generally, including Sheriffs, for willful neglect of duty. Section 174 provides the manner and method of the impeachment of officers.

Two "Parallels" Cited

A review is also presented of the decisions of the Alabama Supreme Court in the Cazalas case in Mobile County in 1909, and the Jinwright case in Bullock County in 1911, in both of which the Sheriff was removed from office for neglect of duty as set out in Section 138 of the Constitution, for allowing a mob to take a prisoner from the county jail and put him to death.

The brief then proceeds to set out the provisions of the [illegible] and the authorities construing them, relating to the rights, powers and duties of a sheriff in protecting his prisoners from mob violence — including the provision that the sheriff has the power and duty when there is danger of mob violence to his prisoner, to get a court order for commitment of the prisoner to a jail in another county, or if the prisoner is already committed to the jail in his county, for his removal to another jail in some other county. Attention is also called to the fact that the Sheriff has legal authority to deputize as many special deputies as it

...ssary to protect a prisoner; that he has the right to request the Governor for military aid; that it is his duty to recapture a prisoner who has escaped from or has been taken from his custody; and that it is his duty to apprehend or arrest criminals.

Reviewing the evidence in the case, it is argued by the State that this evidence shows the Sheriff had had several notices of the probability of mob violence and several warnings that mob violence was probable, though it is contended by the State, under decisions by the court in the Cazalas and Jinwright cases that no such warnings are necessary.

In Cazalas Case

In the Cazalas case, it is cited, the court said: "The Sheriff cannot presume that those who desire t- invade the premises will inform him of the fact, or make such a demonstration on the streets as to advertise their intentions." It is further cited the court said that when a crime of "peculiar enormity" is committed it always excites public indignation, and that "it is known that such crimes always bring about suggestions that the prisoner be taken out and lynched."

The State contends that the evidence shows, in spite of notices of probable mob violence and warnings of such violence, the Sheriff took no precautions whatever to protect his prisoners, pointing out that both the front and side doors to the living quarters of the jail, where the Sheriff and his late father, then jailer, were asleep, were neither locked, bolted nor barred.

It shows, it is claimed, that there were no obstructions whatever to keep the mob from coming in and surrounding the Sheriff and the jailer; that the only firearms they had was an unloaded shotgun; that the keys to the part of the jail where prisoners were kept, were in their accustomed place which was known to everyone; that the key to the door which the mob forced open in order to obtain the keys to all other doors leading to the place where prisoners were confined, was in the Sheriff's pants pocket on a chair by his bed.

That the Sheriff and his jailer offered no resistance to the mob and made no effort to remonstrate with any of its members; that they did not follow the mob or otherwise attempt to recapture the prisoner who had been taken from their custody, but within a few minutes went back to bed.

As to conflicts between the testimony of the Sheriff and that of Capt. Potter Smith and Sergt. J. W. McClung of the State Highway Patrol, and investigators of the State, as to what the Sheriff told them, which are cited, the State argues in its brief that the Sheriff's testimony in these instances of variance referred to shows he "either had an unprecedented, unparalleled and unheard of lapse of memory as to what occurred and as to what he did or that he departed in his testimony on the witness stand from the straight and narrow pathway of truth and veracity." It is also argued that the Sheriff's testimony in these cited instances, when considered in the light of his interest in the case and the fact that the testimony presented by the State's witnesses was by disinterested parties

...f good character and reputation, who could not be and were not impeached, is "so absurd and fantastic as to be utterly unworthy of belief."

The State argues that if the Sheriffs of Alabama are to continue to be put on notice by the Supreme Court, as they have been in the past, that if they do not protect their prisoners from mob violence they will be removed from office in the manner provided by the State constitution, that Sheriff Corbitt must be adjudged guilty of the charges made against him and removed from office.

Pointing out that the court in its decision holding the Sheriff not guilty, wrote no opinion, the brief respectfully calls on the court, if it refuses to grant the application for rehearing and remove the Sheriff from office, to point out in an opinion, wherein the State failed to make out its case against the Sheriff, and to state therein whether or not it has overruled or modified the former holdings of the court as announced in the Cazalas and Jinwright cases.

The brief cites there is a mandatory duty on the Attorney General's office to prosecute all impeachment cases instituted in the State, and states it is believed that if the court will point out whether or not it has overruled these former holdings it will give aid and enlightenment to that office, that will probably result in the saving of much time and money to that office and the State, and likewise save the court from being needlessly and unnecessarily burdened with the trial of proceedings such as the one against the Sheriff.

Corbitt Parries State Move To Reopen Ouster

Insists No Grounds Are Shown For Disturbing High Court's Verdict

Motion to quash the application of the State for rehearing of the case of Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, recently acquitted following hearing of impeachment charges brought against him, by a 4 to 2 decision of the Alabama Supreme Court was filed with the high court yesterday by W. L. Lee of Columbia, counsel for the Sheriff.

The motion was accompanied by demurrers to the brief submitted in support of the rehearing application by Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael and Asst. Atty. Gen. Silas C. Garrett III. A brief will also be filed by Mr. Lee, it is understood, supporting his motion to quash and the demurrers.

In the State's application for rehearing, request was made that all seven justices of the Supreme Court pass on the application, and in the event it is denied, that the court set out in an opinion wherein the State ...raued to prove its case against Sheriff Corbitt. At hearing of the impeachment charges one justice was not sitting. Justice Thomas E. Knight, absent on account of illness, but he has since recovered.

Sheriff's Contentions

The motion by the Sheriff's counsel is to strike or quash the application for rehearing which requested the Supreme Court to set aside and annul the judgment of "not guilty" rendered after hearing of the impeachment proceeding brought against him following the taking from the Henry County jail by a mob and lynching, on the night of Feb. 1, of Wesley Johnson, negro, held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman.

This motion is based on eight separate grounds that are assigned by counsel for the sheriff, namely:

That the proceeding was one for impeachment before the Supreme Court, sitting as judges and as jurors and that a motion to set aside their finding does not lie.

That in causes for impeachment before the Supreme Court, the court sits as both judges and jurors; that their verdict is final, and that there is no law or rules of procedure in jurisprudence that authorizes the final arbiters, when their capacity is that of jurors to set aside their verdict and grant a rehearing in the cause.

That the motion is to the entire court consisting of seven "justices and jurors," and the case has been adjudicated by six justices, "who were six jurors," and the effect of the action is for a seventh "judge and juror" to sit in the rehearing which he was not a [illegible] of the court at the hearing and determination of the case.

That the impeachment proceedings required evidence to convince the court "sitting as jurors" beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the sheriff; and the court, by a vote of 4 to 2, "sitting as jurors," rendered a verdict of not guilty; also that the court, "in its dual capacity as judges and jurors" was without authority under the law, to set aside the verdict in the case.

Same Thing Over

That the legal effect of the motion is "to have the six justices and jurors to reassemble and reconsider their verdict rendered as jurors, and to call in a seventh justice and juror and have him enter into the deliberation, which is unauthorized in law, which is unprecedented in thought, and which is contrary to all reason and sound justice."

That the court, sitting in a dual capacity in hearing of the case and hearing it in that capacity is without authority to set aside the verdict rendered by the court upon the facts as "justices and jurors" in the case

That the legal effect of the motion is to have six justices, after the rendition of their verdict, to reassemble, call in a seventh justice or juror who was not present at the original hearing to see and observe the actions, manner and expression of witnesses on their examination—to enter into the deliberations with the "other six jurors" and have their verdict set aside and annulled and a different verdict rendered when the measure of proof for conviction is beyond a reasonable doubt; and that such a course would not only be unprecedented but beyond all the reason and analogy of trial by jury."

That the motion for rehearing and to set aside the verdict rendered, sets up and states no grounds other than the error of the majority and of the court and jury in rendering the verdict or judgment as rendered in the case.

Demurrers interposed set out substantially the same contentions, except it is claimed in addition that for aught that appears in the State's application for rehearing, the court sitting as a court, committed no error in the hearing; and that no grounds were shown wherein the verdict of the court should be disturbed.

Supreme Court Won't Reopen Corbitt Ouster

Refuses Application For Rehearing As Well As Request For Opinion

The Supreme Court of Alabama yesterday overruled application for rehearing filed by Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael and Asst. Atty. Gen. Silas C. Garrett III, on behalf of the State, in the case representing impeachment action against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry County who was held "not guilty" in a 4 to 2 decision rendered by the high court some time ago.

In other decisions announced yesterday, the Supreme Court upheld ruling of the Montgomery Circuit Court that counties are not liable for payment of State sales tax, but reversed rulings of the same circuit court that commercial printing, lithographing, engraving and book-binding establishments, also optometrists, are not liable for the 2 per cent levy. Both are liable for payment of the tax, it was held.

The Attorney General in his application for rehearing in the Corbitt case, which resulted from the taking from the Henry County jail by a mob and lynching on the night of Feb. 1, of Wesley Johnson, negro held there on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman, had requested that in the event the application was overruled, the Supreme Court write an opinion setting out wherein the State had failed to prove its case against the sheriff. No opinion was written in connection with denial of the application yesterday.

Ruling that commercial printers, lithographers, engravers and bookbinders are liable for the sales tax, was contained in opinion in the appealed case of Henry S. Long as president of the State Tax Commission vs. Roberts and Son, in which the question of whether counties are liable for payment of the same tax, was raised. All justices agreed in affirmance of the Circuit Court's ruling that counties are exempt from this levy, but a majority overruled the Circuit Court's holding that Roberts and Son was not liable for it. Justice Lucien D. Gardner dissented from the majority as to this latter ruling, and wrote a dissenting opinion setting out his opposing views.

In reversal of the Circuit Court's decree that optometrists were not liable for the sales tax, opinion of the Supreme Court was by Justice William H. Thomas, the question being presented in the appealed case of the State Tax Commission vs. T. D. Hopkins. After citing it was shown that the value of the material employed in the manufacture of glasses for and fitting them to customers, is 20 per cent of the total price charged for the manufacture and service when the glasses are completed and delivered, the opinion said:

"The test as to the application and validity of the tax in such cases is not the relative value of the material and services, but the nature and character of the process, activities and manufacture required or employed."

Five Named In Lynching Issue Denials

Henry County Citizens Brought To Stand In Corbitt Ouster Trial

Fist Fight Quelled

Carmichael And Defense Attorney Lee Battle But Shake Hands Later On

Naming of 10 alleged members of the mob that on the night of Feb. 1 took Wes Johnson, negro, from the jail at Abbeville where he was held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman—calling five of the 10 to the stand to testify—and an exchange of fisticuffs between Atty. Gen. Carmichael, prosecutor, and Defense Counsel W. L. Lee, of Columbia, immediately after recess was taken at 1 p.m., featured the opening day of trial before the Alabama Supreme Court of Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, on charges contained in impeachment action brought against him following the lynching.

All five of the alleged mob members placed on the witness stand late in the day, denied that they were among those who took the negro from the jail and later hanged and shot him, declaring they had no part in it whatever and were not connected with or involved in it in any way. Sheriff Corbitt, who is charged with neglect of duty, grave fault, connivance and cowardice, was present in the courtroom with his counsel throughout the day but did not take the stand.

Court convened at 10 a.m., when the more than a hundred witnesses summoned, were placed under oath. After the proceedings had gotten well underway, a series of verbal clashes over the admissibility of evidence offered by the State, occurred between the Attorney General and Mr. Lee, reaching their peak concerning a map offered by the former of the locality in Henry County where all events connected with the lynching took place. Mr. Lee claimed the map was correct except for a detail showing a certain road was under construction on Feb. 1. Mr. Carmichael insisted the road was not under construction at that time.

Then Shook Hands

A few minutes after court recessed, the two lawyers met in the Supreme Court library and the argument as to whether the road was or was not under construction on the date stated, was renewed. The discussion grew more heated and suddenly there was an exchange of blows between the two. Both were seized by friends and separated before the difficulty could proceed further. When court reconvened at 3 p.m. Mr. Carmichael offered to shake hands with Mr. Lee. The offer was accepted, and throughout the afternoon verbal exchanges between them on points of difference were thoroughly amicable.

Shortly before the trading of punches by the Attorney General and counsel for the defense took place, a photographer incurred the anger of Chief Justice John C. Anderson by letting go a flash bulb within a few feet of his head while in the act of taking a picture of Sheriff Corbitt who was approaching the camera from another direction. The matter was satisfactorily adjusted, however, when it was explained to the chief justice that the incident was an accident and the photographer was not aware he was near him.

The 10 men alleged to have been members of the mob were named by Sergt. J. W. McClung, special investigator of the State Highway Patrol, who investigated the lynching and who said Sheriff Corbitt told him he recognized them as among those who entered the jail on the night of Feb. 1, overpowered him and his late father who served as jailer, and took the prisoner away with them. The names of these 10 men, testified to by Sergt. McClung as being those the sheriff told him he recognized, and placed in the official court record in the case, were as follows: Tom McCoy, Rupert Bond (husband of the woman alleged to have been assaulted), Cratas Whitten, Grant Whitten, Eck Wood, Bob Kirkland, Ove Wright, John White, Mose Bond and Hes Bond.

McClung's Story

Sergt. McClung first told of going to Abbeville; arriving there on the morning of Feb. 3, following the lynching on the night of Feb. 1, and meeting Capt. Potter Smith and Sergt. Carlisle, of the Highway Patrol, who were already there. They had a conference with Sheriff Corbitt, he said, and he made notes on the conference a few minutes after it was concluded. The witness stated the sheriff said that on the Saturday preceding the lynching, at about 2:30 p.m., Rupert Bond and another man came to Abbeville where they reported that Bond's wife had been criminally assaulted by a negro; that he went to the Bond home and obtained a description of the attacker from the alleged victim, who said he was tall and slender, of a chocolate color, with protruding teeth, and that he wore a shirt made of a guano sack.

The next day, Sunday, at 2 p.m., the sheriff said, according to the witness, he arrested Wes Johnson near Tumbleton and took him to the Bond home for identification, being careful to take along only a deputy and one other man. He said Mrs. Bond looked at the prisoner and said "that looks like the man," then asked that he be required to remove his coat, and when he did so stated "that's the man." The sheriff, it was testified, said he placed the negro in jail Sunday at about 3 p.m., continuing his investigation, and believing he had the "right man."

Sergt. McClung said the Sheriff stated he talked to Circuit Solicitor Hubert Farmer at Dothan by telephone; that the solicitor told him in his opinion the negro was safe, and that he also talked with County Solicitor Carl Farmer and Probate Judge J. P. Mitchell and others, who expressed the same opinion. The sheriff then stated, according to the witness, that some two hours after he had talked to the Circuit Solicitor, or about midnight, Monday night he awakened in his room in the county jail to find the room full of men with shotguns and pistols; that they told him "we've come after the negro. Give us your keys," to which he replied, "you can kill me, but I'll never give you my keys"; then someone in the crowd said "we won't do that. Bring on the tools boys," and a crowbar was brought with which a locked door leading into a furnace room was pried open, his keys taken from a box in the room, the doors to the inner position of the jail were unlocked, and the negro Johnson, taken from his cell. Later, the sheriff was quoted as saying, the prisoner was brought through the room where he, the sheriff, and his father were being held, two men having hold of Johnson's arms and one behind him pushing him along, and the negro was taken outside. He and the elder Corbitt followed the last departing members of the mob to the door, the sheriff said, according to the witness and saw between 30 and 40 men and ten or 12 automobiles also several trucks; and then saw men, cars and trucks move away with Johnson. The sheriff said, it was stated, that he immediately called the circuit solicitor on the telephone and told him what had happened; that "they had gotten the negro," and that after calling the solicitor he went to bed. Sheriff Corbitt was further quoted as saying the lock on the front door of the jail had been broken and for that reason the door had not been locked for several years.

Pictures in Court

At this point, the Attorney General introduced in evidence, a number of enlarged photographs mounted on board, showing details of both the interior and exterior of the Henry County jail. Indicating a photograph of the sheriff's bed room in the jail building, Mr. Carmichael asked: "Is this the room where he (the sheriff) said he found himself surrounded?" and when Sergt. McClung answered the question in the affirmative, the prosecutor inquired: "He said he recognized ten of them." "Yes," replied the witness, "he gave me their names." Mr. Carmichael said he would ask him about that later.

Testifying further as to what the sheriff said, Sergt. McClung related the sheriff stated the crowd was between him and his shotgun which stood in a corner; that his father started in from an adjoining room but was "held up." Mr. Carmichael then introduced the map that was to be the basis of the controversy culminating in the fisticuffs between himself and Mr. Lee later on. Following cross examination by Mr. Lee the witness, at the request of the Attorney General, gave his testimony as to the names of the ten members of the mob who he stated the sheriff said he recognized.

Coroner Heard Later

During the afternoon J. M. Herring, coroner, testified regarding the holding of the inquest and said he knew nothing about the lynching until the sheriff came by to get him the morning following. Floyd Hall, another negro prisoner in the jail at the night of the lynching, testified to being awakened by a "bumping" sound on the first floor about midnight, and then seeing a group of men unlocking the inner doors and taking Johnson away. He said Johnson asked the men if they were going to kill him and when they said "no" that he asked to be allowed to get his hat and shoes, and was told he wouldn't need them. Charlie Lee Cummings and Bud Bingham, two other negro prisoners in the jail at the time, gave substantially the same testimony the former stating the jailer came up after Johnson was removed, that he was barefooted; that he asked them "did you all get very scared?" told them to get back in their cells; took the keys and went away.

Mr. Carmichael next called to the witness stand five of the ten men it had been testified Sheriff Corbitt said he had recognized in the mob. They were Tom McCoy, Cratas Whitten, John White, Ove (or Obie) Wright, and Robert Kirkland, all of Newville, located a few miles from the scene of the alleged attack. All said they did not know the Sheriff had stated he recognized them as members of the mob, denied that they were in the mob or had anything to do with the lynching; said they heard no discussion of the attack and noted no indignation or excitement in the community prior to the lynching. All said they were at home on the lynching night except one, Tom McCoy, who stated he was in Florida. All testified to the good character and efficiency as an officer, of Sheriff Corbitt.

Robert Kirkland admitted talking with Solicitor Farmer who came to Newville from Dothan, on the evening preceding the lynching, at a conference at which the father-in-law of the woman alleged to have been attacked, and the alleged victim herself, also several other persons were present, but said he could not remember clearly what had been said. Questioned by Justice Virgil Bouldin he said the talk had to do with court matters as well as he could remember. He was then asked by Justice Joel B. Brown if he had not previously stated he knew nothing of the reported attack by a negro on a white woman until the day after the lynching. After waiting a reasonable time for the witness to reply to the question, Justice Brown stated "that's all." Prior to that inquiry the witness upon being asked by the Attorney General if he did not know the conference held on the Monday evening preceding the lynching by the Solicitor was for the purpose of trying to persuade the father-in-law of the alleged victim and she herself, to go to Newville and endeavor to prevent a mob formed or forming there, from going to Abbeville and lynching the negro, replied in the negative.

At the conclusion of testimony by the witness Kirkland, the court recessed until 9 a.m. today. All Justices of the Supreme Court were sitting throughout the proceedings yesterday, with the exception of Justice Thomas E. Knight, absent on account of illness.

High Court Votes 4-2 To Free Corbitt

Reaches Verdict Of 'Not Guilty' In 35 Minutes After Three-Day Trial

Without Comment

Refusal To Oust Sheriff Backs 2 Henry County

Grand Jury Expressions

Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County, the second sheriff to come before the Alabama Supreme Court for impeachment this year, yesterday was acquitted of the charges preferred against him as a result of the lynching of the negro, Wes Jordan, the night of Feb. 1.

Thirty-five minutes after the court took Corbitt's case under advisement the verdict of acquittal was sent out with two associate justices, Joel B. Brown and Lucien D. Gardner, dissenting. For acquittal were Chief Justice John C. Anderson and Associates W. H. Thomas, A. B. Foster, and Virgil Bouldin. Associate Justice Thomas E. Knight did not act because he was ill.

The acquittal was made public without comment from the court, setting a matter-of-fact period to a three-day trial that furnished some excitement. Corbitt was accused of negligence and cowardice because the negro was taken from his custody and lynched.

An offer by the State to "prove beyond all doubt" with "evidence and testimony unimpeachable in all southeast Alabama" that the mob got "the wrong negro," was held incompetent in the trial and attempts to present it were blocked.

The State contended pressure by citizens caused arrest of the wrong man. Three witnesses said the assault victim identified him.

Other developments tending toward the sensational were a fist-fight between Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael and W. L. Lee, defense counsel, and an assertion by Carmichael yesterday that "if the State doesn't enforce constitutional clauses on lynching Congress is going to do something about it by passing an anti-lynching bill."

Asked whether the State would attempt prosecution of men named by Corbitt as having been seen in jail, the Attorney General declined to comment. Two grand juries have investigated the lynching without returning indictments and the second recommended that impeachment proceedings against Corbitt be dropped.

Four charges, all denied, were specifically made against Corbitt in the impeachment proceedings, ordered filed by Gov. Graves. They were: "negligence, grave fault, connivance and cowardice."

The State argued the front door to living quarters of the jail was not locked, giving the mob access to the structure, where they pryed open a steel door and then found keys to the cells.

Corbitt said he had no reason to fear mob violence and presented a series of witnesses to swear "popular indignation" was not such as contemplated to cause a lynching.

The sheriff said he was surprised at midnight, and "covered with shotguns" when he awakened. The State charged he "went back to bed and to sleep," while the sheriff said he got his chief deputy and rode the remainder of the night in search of the mob.

"I put him in jail and locked him up, just like anybody else," Corbitt testified.

...TATE CHARGES MISTAKE MADE BY HENRY MOB

Wrong Negro Lynched By Irate Citizens, Claims Attorney General

EVIDENCE BARRED

Alibi For Victim Offered As Proof Of Contention Made At Hearing

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 4—(AP)—An offer to "prove beyond all reasonable doubt" that a Henry County mob "lynched the wrong negro" on the night of February 1 was made to the Alabama Supreme Court today by Attorney General A. A. Carmichael in the impeachment trial of Sheriff J. L. Corbitt.

Chief Justice John C. Anderson finally ruled "that testimony is incompetent" in showing whether the sheriff was guilty of charges of "negligence, grave fault, connivance and cowardice" in protecting a prisoner.

"We will be able to show, if the court pleases," Carmichael said, "that the popular indignation was so great that the sheriff was forced to arrest the wrong negro."

Carmichael said the woman allegedly assaulted by a negro, which incident culminated in the lynching of Wesley Johnson, 20-year-old farmhand, placed the time of the assault between 11:15 and 11:30 a. m. January 30.

Alibi Offered

"We can show that Wesley Johnson, the negro arrested, was four miles away at 11:30, and we can show it by testimony unimpeachable in all southeast Alabama," he said.

Here Chief Justice Anderson broke in to say:

"The sheriff is just as responsible to protect an innocent man as he is a guilty one."

Defense Counsel W. L. Lee argued the guilt or innocence of the negro was not to be determined in the trial of the sheriff and argued "whether or not they got the wrong man can have no bearing here."

Both the state and defense agreed today not to question any more of 10 men named yesterday as having been seen in the Henry County jail the night of the lynching regarding whether they were members of the mob. Counsel agreed all would "answer negatively".

ON SCARING SHERIFFS

Mob action in the South is an abomination. It is indefensible from any point of view. It has done a great deal to injure the South before the world. Mob action not only is vicious and unwise, but it is unnecessary. There is always a better way.

One Alabama sheriff recently was brought up for impeachment trial before the Supreme Court of Alabama. He was charged with negligence in the protection of a prisoner. In the end the justices of the Supreme Court, with two dissenting votes, declared him innocent of negligence, after two grand juries in his county had white-washed him. The sheriff had the satisfaction of hearing large numbers of his fellow citizens, representative of the best opinion in his county, testify to his good character. Indeed, he had the satisfaction of hearing the Attorney-General of Alabama concede that he was a man of good repute. This should be gratifying and heartening to the young man who was brought to trial before the highest tribunal of Alabama, especially in view of his final acquittal.

Certainly after this successful defense of his good name, no newspaper is privileged to question the good deportment of the accused sheriff. The Advertiser would be the last to raise such a question.

But The Advertiser is as quick to say that in its opinion State officials were right in bringing this man to trial. Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael acted upon reasonable information in demanding an impeachment trial. It was their duty to sift this matter to the bottom, and this they did.

The State will benefit by the trial. It is renewed proof that the Governor of Alabama and the Attorney-General will not condone mob violence and that they are prepared to punish any official who is under suspicion of negligence. This, we think, will impress other officials. It is notice to them that their oath of office is binding. Such a trial will go far to discourage lynching in Alabama.

An incident of the recent trial should go far to impress citizens with the unwisdom of undisciplined mob action. Mr. Carmichael offered to prove to the satisfaction of the Supreme Court that the Henry county mob lynched the wrong man. Naturally the court ruled such evidence to be incompetent, which plainly it was. But as a matter of public policy Carmichael was right in making his declaration, and so getting it into the record. As matters stand the State will never know whether the wrong man was lynched or not, but Carmichael passionately insisted that he had the evidence to prove this. No doubt he had such evidence. If he did he had the best of all possible arguments against mob action—the mob is unselective, undiscriminating, unjust, otherwise it would not have constituted itself a mob.

Nothing can be done about the Carmichael theory that the wrong man was killed, and there is no appeal from the verdict of the Supreme Court that the sheriff at trial was not negligent. The public, we think, will be satisfied that the sheriff is innocent, however the public may regard the action of the mob in killing the wrong man.

But of this there can be no doubt: It is worth while to scare sheriffs in the Deep South, and so make them more diligent and more dutiful in the discharge of their obligations.

It is the duty of sheriffs to see that juries, not undisciplined mobs, decide who among us must die for high crimes and misdemeanors.

The Advertiser is glad that Governor Graves and Attorney-General Carmichael made their grand effort to get at the truth of the Henry county lynching. Do it again, when occasion demands!

'PURITY ANGLE' IS POPPYCOCK, SAYS ALA. PROSECUTOR

Effort to Halt Impeachment Action Against Lynch-Sheriff Fails—Calls Mob Members "Hoodlums"

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 27—The Henry County Grand Jury, it was learned last week, recommended that impeachment proceedings against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, from whose custody Wesley Johnson was taken several months ago and lynched by a mob of white persons here, be dismissed.

When informed of the action of the jury, Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael, declared that he will prosecute promptly and vigorously any person who takes part in lynching.

"Those unlawful hoodlums who imagine themselves heroes when taking part in lynchings, have a distorted idea of patriotism. As the chief law enforcement officer of this State, I condemn mob law and make known that as long as I am the attorney general of this State those [illegible] are more [illegible]nt and powerful than the law and who take the law in their own hands, will be prosecuted promptly and most vigorously and in this I will have the entire resources of this great State at my command."

Prosecutor Carmichael further stated publicly that "to say lynching has anything to do with protecting 'Womanhood' in Alabama is pure poppycock."

After a lengthy conference last Thursday with Governor Bibb Graves, at whose request the impeachment proceeding was held, the Attorney General issued the following statement: "I have conferred with Governor Graves about the recent report of the Grand Jury in Henry County. The governor knew about the grand jury report at the time of our conversation and directed me to pursue and prosecute the impeachment proceedings in the Supreme Court vigorously. To say that I will do this is putting it mildly."

Continuing the attorney general said: "The framers of our constitution did not accidentally provide that a sheriff should be impeached by the Supreme Court.

"I want to take this occasion to say that the Governor of Alabama and the Attorney General of Alabama feel very keenly about this matter. That we are most anxious that the outside wreld know that the Alabama state officials who are responsible in law for prosecuting cases of this character, are doing their duty and will continue to do it."

THE WANDERER

BY LEWIS FOLLETT

"These brave men were actuated by the highest motive that can animate mankind—simple duty. . . ."

IN VIEW of the current efforts on the part of the state of Alabama to punish parties responsible for a lynching in Henry County, the following letter from DePew Meredith, of Eutaw, with its story of an Alabama lynching that did not take place, is interesting:

"It has always seemed to me that the Wanderer could find a column tucked away in the yellow pages of my grandmother's scrapbook. To her, everything was interesting; and as the daughter of the editor of the old Eutaw Whig and Observer, nothing that would shed glory on the name of Greene County was overlooked.

"The scrapbook itself could not escape notice. It is simply a catalog bound in denim, and from its yellowed pages, between clippings from long dead publications, peep pictures of forgotten wearing apparel—corset covers, detachable cuffs and collars and stockings with fancy designs that extended only half way up the leg (or would the word limb be more fitting?).

"A picture and article of Mrs. Elizabeth W. Bellamy, creator of 'Old Man Gilbert,' finds space in the scrapbook because she, for a few years, lived in Eutaw. Peter Brannon's column finds a place because he dug deeply into the past and gave a good account of the early history of the county.

"But most of the clippings relate to actions of my grandmother's hero—the hero with whom she lived for 45 years, and the one whose children she bore. To her, time never dimmed the luster of those clippings she so tenderly pasted on the ragged pages of her book. . . .

"For several years, during the turbulent days of the Reconstruction, the clippings follow the ups and downs of a people who feel the yoke binding them to a soil that has, through sudden change, become alien. During these days my grandmother's hero was constantly under pressure—as a newspaper man he was, following his work on The Evergreen Observer, The Selma Times and The Eutaw Whig—at night he donned the regalia of the original K. K. K., in an effort to maintain order among the suddenly freed blacks, who were brought under control more quickly in Greene County than in other sections.

"Then begins that long period which was to add height to the stature of the man. The period during which his epitaph was written: 'Never has he been known to turn his face from a friend, or his back upon a foe.' The 40 years he served as a peace officer 'without shooting a prisoner or being shot by one, and without being resisted by the many he arrested in all those years.'

"In The Age-Herald of May 16, 1892, we find these headlines:

"'A BRAVE RESCUE

By a Posse of Brave Greene County Men

A Negro Taken from a Pickens County Mob at the Gun's Mouth'

"And from The Age-Herald of May 19, 1892, we take the following editorial:

"'MEREDITH AND HIS MEN

"'The rescue of the prisoner from the Pickens County mob by the sheriff's posse of Greene County is one of the most notable and praiseworthy incidents in Alabama's mob history. Indeed, we question whether a rescue equal to it has been attempted and successfully carried out in any state. A small posse in the midst of a large mob stand with finger on trigger with the declared purpose of dying in their tracks, selling their lives to the best advantage or having their prisoner back. When we read of such incidents in the history of wars, our pulses beat faster and we write somebody's name on the tablets of fame.

"'These brave men of Greene were actuated by the highest motive that can animate mankind—simple duty. The prisoner was a Negro, probably a very desperate criminal, against whom no doubt the proof was clear. The mob was composed of white men from a sister county, personally known to and liked, no doubt, by their fellow citizens who made up the posse. The law was being violated and the sheriff and his posse were sworn to uphold it, and they did. More such deputy sheriffs as Meredith, and more such single-minded devotion to the day star of duty, would check this mob spirit that is growing fiercer every day in Alabama. It has already reached the point where many of our best newspapers join in the cry that lynchings for rape are the thing. Only Sunday last we quoted from a contemporary that judges are not clothed with the ermine, grand juries not paneled or sheriffs elected to deal with rapists. In this view of the case, Meredith and his men were the banditti and the mob sprouting wings.

"'That won't do. This is a land of law. The law must be upheld. It is severe on the rapist as any mob can be, for does it not prescribe the supreme penalty? To proceed to vengeance outside the law is wrong in itself and is wrong in the demoralization it works. Lynching for rape means lynching for arson and murder and burglary and on down the list till law disappears and the regulator resumes his function.

"'All honor to Meredith and his men.'

"Other clippings tell of the rescue. The Chattanooga Times printed a bold editorial commending the effect of the rescue. Letters came in promising support to Meredith on down through the third generation. And each clipping shows that even at this early time public opinion was crystallizing against mob rule.

"On down through the years we follow the trail of yellow clippings, until at last we come to the end where other hands carried on the book. Clippings telling of the children, the grandchildren and the great-grandchildren of the one whose hand first wielded the scissors and the pot of paste."

Supreme Court Gets Scottsboro Appeal Today

Begin New Effort to Get 4 Sick Boys From Kilby Prison

A petition and brief on the application for a writ of certiorari in the case of Haywood Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro boys, will be filed today in the United States Supreme Court, it was announced yesterday by the Scottsboro Defense Committee which is defending the five Negro youths still imprisoned.

The papers will be filed by Osmond K. Fraenkel, noted constitutional lawyer, who prepared two previously successful Scottsboro appeals to the United States Supreme Court.

Simultaneously Moyers Shapiro, secretary of the committee, announced also that steps were being taken to have four of the boys removed from Kilby prison in Montgomery, Ala., where all are ill.

SEEK NEW TRIAL

Patterson, four times sentenced to death in the Alabama courts and twice saved from the electric chair by reversals in the United States Supreme Court, received a 75-year sentence in the Decatur, Ala., court in January, 1936. That sentence was upheld by the Alabama Supreme Court last spring, and the committee is now seeking a reversal and a new trial for Patterson.

"Despite all rumors of compromise and deals in the cases of the remaining five Scottsboro boys," said Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers, chairman of the Scottsboro Defense Committee, "rumors which we most emphatically deny, we are pressing forward for the release of the five remaining boys.

"Appeals are being taken in the case of Clarence Norris, sentenced to death in Decatur, Ala., in July of this year, Andy Wright, sentenced to 99 years, and Charlie Weems sentenced to 75 years. Osmond K. Fraenkel has been retained to direct these appeals and the committee is bending every effort to arouse public opinion for their complete freedom. Our duty to these defendants and our efforts in their behalf must be extended until all of them are free."

PLAN HARLEM BODY

The committee, which met yesterday at its offices, 112 E. 19th St. announced plans to build an "active and representative" Scottsboro Defense Committee in Harlem which is to be a branch of the national body.

Among the Harlem organizations and leaders who will be urged to participate in the formation of the Committee are Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop; Dr. William Lloyd Imes; Dr. P. M. H. Savory; Dr. C. B. Powell; the North Harlem Community Council; the Newspaper Guild of the Amsterdam News; and Harlem branches of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the International Labor Defense, all three of which are already members of the parent committee.

Mrs. Ada Wright, mother of Roy and Andy, said yesterday that she would remain in New York for two weeks to appear at several meetings now being organized under the auspices of the Scottsboro Defense Committee.

TWO BOYS IN HOSPITAL

Mrs. Wright, who early this week returned from a quick trip to Kilby where Andy was operated on, found two of the boys in the prison hospital. They were Charlie Weems and Haywood Patterson.

Patterson is suffering from a dangerous infection in the leg. Ozie Powell, Mrs. Wright learned, has wasted away to mere "skin and bones."

Information reaching the Scottsboro Defense Committee a few days ago indicated that Patterson's life was in danger in Kilby because he regularly resented the anti-Negro insults and abuse heaped upon him.

The prison officials have put up a virtually airtight system around the boys which prevents all friends except relatives, from visiting them. Mrs. Wright declared that she was not permitted to see Patterson although he and his family had been next door neighbors to her in Chattanooga, Tenn., ever since he was a baby.

SCOTTSBORO RULING GOES TO HIGH COURT

Petition for Patterson Contends Trial Was Not a Fair One.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—(AP) Alabama's famous Scottsboro case today made its third trip to the supreme court.

Haywood Patterson, who twice escaped the death penalty by intervention of the high tribunal, filed a petition asking it to save him this time from a 75-year prison sentence.

He was one of the nine negroes accused of attacking two white women on a moving freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., March, 1931.

The court will announce in October whether it will review the conviction or permit the sentence of Alabama courts to stand.

Patterson's petition, prepared by Samuel S. Leibowitz, a New York attorney, and others, contended the Morgan county, Alabama, court should have transferred his latest trial to the northern Alabama federal district court.

"The record shows the utter impossibility of petitioner obtaining a fair trial in Morgan county," the court was told.

SHERIF IS FREED OF LETTING MOB LYNCH CAPTIVE

Montgomery, Ala., June 5.—[Special.]—Warned by Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael that congress would pass the anti-lynching bill if Alabama doesn't enforce the constitutional clause on lynching. The state supreme court today acquitted Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry county, of negligence, connivance, and cowardice in the lynching of Wesley Johnson, colored, charged with having raped a white woman.

The decision of the court came in a four to two vote and the oral opinion was announced without comment. The decision was reached 35 minutes after the court took the case under advisement.

Johnson was taken from the county jail at Abbeville, Ala., last Feb. 1 by an armed mob. The following morning his body was found hanging from a tree not far from the scene of the rape. The body was torn by dozens of bullets.

Sherif Corbitt denied all of the charges in the impeachment proceeding. The court was informed that the sherif took all possible precaution for the protection of the prisoner, but with his deputies was powerless to prevent the removal by a superior force. He said several hundred men were in the mob.

The attorney general's reference to a congressional threat to pass the anti-lynching bill, the subject of controversy for many years, reflected the general attitude of southern states against the measure. Aside from the single statement, he did not expand his remarks.

Negro's Innocence Held No Part Of Trial As Sheriff Takes Stand

Corbitt Is Heard

Sensational Developments Mark Impeachment Bid Against Henry Official

Denial of any negligence, cowardly conduct or connivance on his part in connection with the taking from the jail at Abbeville and lynching on the night of Feb 1 of Wes Johnson, was made yesterday by Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry County before the Alabama Supreme Court.

The Sheriff's denial was made from the witness stand during testimony in his own defense against charges contained in impeachment proceedings filed against him following the lynching. Wes Johnson was being held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman. The State charged earlier in the day he was "the wrong negro."

In his testimony Sheriff Corbitt named nine men whose names had previously been submitted to the court and placed in the official record as having been seen in the county jail on the night Johnson was taken from there by the mob and lynched. Ovie Wright, another man whose name had also been submitted as one of those in the mob that entered the jail on the lynching night, was "not there," the Sheriff declared, and he never gave Wright's name to anybody.

"The Wrong Negro"

Early in the forenoon yesterday Atty. Gen. Carmichael sprung a sensation during the trial when he charged that the mob lynched "the wrong negro" and stated he was prepared to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence and testimony "unimpeachable anywhere throughout southeast Alabama." Mr. Carmichael declared he could show that because of the tenseness of popular indignation and feeling that the Sheriff was "forced," the pressure brought to bear on him being so great because of the existing situation, to arrest "the wrong negro."

He stated further he would be able to show that the victim of the alleged assault placed the time of the attack at between 11:15 and 11:30 a.m., on Jan. 30, and that Johnson at 11:30 was four miles away. Defense Counsel W. L. Lee insisted that the guilt or innocence of Johnson was not before the court for determination, and that whether Johnson was the "wrong negro" or not had no bearing on hearing before the court of impeachment action against the Sheriff.

Chief Justice John C. Anderson ruling on the point presented, held that the testimony offered by the Attorney General was "incompetent and inadmissible" regarding the question of the guilt or innocence of the Sheriff, of charges of negligence, grave fault, connivance and cowardice in protecting a prisoner in the county jail. The responsibility of a Sheriff, he ruled, is just as great in protecting an innocent prisoner as a guilty one.

Arrest 'Forced'

"We will be able to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that popular indignation was so great that the Sheriff was forced to arrest the wrong negro," Carmichael said.

Chief Justice Anderson, however, cut off presentation of Carmichael's testimony with a ruling:

"The evidence is not competent; we don't want to try him (Johnson), we're trying the Sheriff; and, the Sheriff is just as responsible to protect an innocent man as he is a guilty one."

The Sheriff, stockily-built and blunt-spoken, denied he told Capt. Potter Smith or Investigator J. W. McClung, of the State Highway Patrol, that he "went back to bed" after the mob had taken the negro, and testified that, instead, he got his chief deputy and drove the rest of the night "hunting the crowd."

Asked on cross-examination if he took "any particular precautions" following Johnson's arrest, Sheriff Corbitt said "nothing out of the ordinary. We put him in jail and locked him up, just like anyone else."

He followed a long line of defense witnesses who swore there were no apparent signs that Tumbleton community, where the alleged attack occurred, on Henry County [illegible] were unduly excited or that there any indication of "mob violence."

"Everything Seemed Okeh"

Corbitt testified likewise, repeating a telephone conversation in which he said Circuit Solicitor J. Hubert Farmer told him "everything seemed to be all right" after a visit to Tumbleton a few hours before the lynching.

Asked if he later suggested any of the nine men he [illegible] in the jail while he and his father were being "covered by guns, and the negro taken," Corbitt said he had not. To a defense question, he answered: "The Grand Jury was to meet in a few days."

Two Grand Juries have investigated the lynching. No indictments were returend, and the second jury recommended to Gov. Graves that the impeachment proceedings against Corbitt be dropped.

Corbitt testified he told the mob, "I'd die before they got my keys," but they forced a steel door with a crowbar and found his cell keys in a box in another room.

The sheriff said on cross-examination he did not ask anyone for an order to transfer Johnson to another jail, "because I thought everything was all right." At another point he said Solicitor Farmer might have told him "to be cautious in handling the negro."

Sent Father To Bed

The Sheriff testified that he told his father, 71-year-old jailer, to "go to bed" after he had locked prisoners, liberaetd by the mob, back in their cells.

"Then I went and got my deputy, Mr. (Chief Deputy Alf) Roney, and told him: "Let's ride out and see if we can find them," Corbitt said.

He and Roney, Corbitt said, went in the direction of the last car in the mob crowd. Corbitt said he and his father lived "downstairs in living quarters of the jail," and that the mob entered through a front door which was not locked."

"I got to the front door just in time to see the last car," he said. "It turned on a street that leads toward Fort Gaines, Ga."

Roney and Corbitt, the latter said, went to Fort Gaines, came back by Shorterville, Ala., went down the Columbia, Ala., road and elsewhere. It was while he was eating breakfast, Corbitt said, that he heard where the mob had taken the negro.

Roney substantiated major portions of Corbitt's testimony. He estimated they did not get closer than seven miles to the scene of the lynching during their night ride.

Sheriff "Crucified"

Mrs. C. H. Thrasher, State Jail inspector, read a report of her inspection of the Abbeville jail, in which she said it was "sanitary, and as to safety, would say that it is one of the best in the State of Alabama."

Carmichael asked her only one question: "Aren't you the daughter of Sheriff W. C. Daniel, of Macon County, impeached by this court a short time ago?"

"I am the daughter of a sheriff I believe was crucified," she answered.

Sheriff Daniel died of a gunshot wound after his car was wrecked a few weeks ago. A verdict of suicide was returned.

When adjournment was taken last night, Carmichael said the State would begin presentation of rebuttal testimony today at 9 a.m.

While being cut-off from directly bringing out his reputed "unimpeachable testimony and evidence" the wrong negro was lynched, Carmichael finally called Mrs. Rupert Bond, whom Johnson was accused by warrant as assaulting, to show that the alleged incident occurred "at 11:15 a.m."

Time of Assault

Then John H. Oates, Henry County road supervisor and former employer of Johnson, testified he saw the negro on the day of the alleged assault "about noon—a little before noon."

Again the Chief Justice interrupted, saying:

"We don't want to try him (Johnson); we are trying the sheriff."

After the State closed its case Defense Counsel W. L. Lee called several witnesses from the Newville and Tumbleton communities, where the assault was alleged to have occurred, to testify they heard no talk of mob violence after Johnson's arrest.

The State contends Corbitt was at fault for not "protecting" the negro whose bullet riddled body was found hanging to a tree the morning after he was removed from jail by the crowd.

Corroboration Testimony

Chief Deputy Sheriff Alf Roney who followed the Sheriff on the witness stand, corroborated, substantially, the testimony given by the latter as to what occurred after the negro had been taken from the jail and the mob had left. He told of going to see Mr. Oates on the Saturday night following the alleged attack and telling him the description given by the alleged victim of her assailant fitted Wes Johnson who worked on the Oates farm; of going back the next day to the Oates farm and endeavoring to trace some tracks found there. He said some 12 or 15 men assisted him, but none was armed.

The witness related then how he, the Sheriff and Oates, took Johnson to the home of the alleged victim for identification; said he observed no indication of popular indignation or evidence that the people of the neighborhood were aroused; that he observed no excitement the day following when, he said, Oates told him he believed he had "the right man," and said he did not believe there was any danger of attempted violence.

The Chief Deputy then corroborated what the Sheriff had testified concerning his attempts to locate the mob for the remainder of the night following the taking of Johnson from the jail, and said he accompanied the Sheriff. On cross examination by the Attorney General, the witness stated they did not go to the community where the alleged attack occurred. He stated they drove east, then south. Asked if east was not in the opposite direction from the crime scene, he replied in the affirmative.

Awakened at 2 A.M.

Sheriff Corbett awakened him at about 2 a.m., following the visit of the mob to the jail, and told him "a mob has taken the prisoner. Let's see what we can do about it," he said. Questioned as to where he and the Sheriff drove and asked if six or seven miles was not the closest they got to the home of the woman alleged to have been assaulted, he replied it was.

He attended the inquest, he said, but did not tell the coroner's jury how the negro met his death "because he didn't know. He denied telling Oates "it looks like the crowd's not going to be satisfied unless I arrest that negro." He denied Oates told him in Abbeville, Monday afternoon, prior to the lynching, that the situation existing at Tumbleton at that time was tense.

At the conclusion a few minutes before 6 p.m. of the testimony of the Chief Deputy, court recessed until 9 a.m. today, when rebuttal testimony will be presented by the State. It was expected that the case will be finally submitted to the Supreme Court early in the forenoon.

Ala. Lawyers Fight During Lynch Trial

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(ANP) —Although the six justices of the state supreme court were told that Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry county had plenty of warnings about mob violence yet refused to take any precautions which would protect the life of his prisoner, by a four to two decision Saturday they acquitted Corbitt on charges of "negligence, grave fault, connivance and cowardice," filed by Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael at the request of Governor Graves.

This action of the supreme court, which has upheld every Scottsboro conviction brought before it only to be reversed by the U. S. supreme court, is interpreted by keen observers as added proof that the Southern states will not themselves wipe out the lynching evil despite statements by their congressmen when federal anti-lynching legislation is introduced.

Johnson Lynching

The impeachment trial was the outgrowth of the lynching of Wes Johnson, charged with assaulting a white farmwoman, last February. It is the first intensive effort in the Deep South to punish the evil. Recently two special grand juries refused to indict members of the mob, although Sheriff Corbitt appeared before them and positively identified nine members.

The trial began Thursday, with Carmichael on hand to personally prosecute the charge. Corbett was defended by W. L. Lee, lawyer from Dothan.

Arrested Wrong Man

As the trial began, Carmichael told the court that Corbitt knew Johnson was innocent but had to arrest somebody to appease mob hysteria in that section of Henry county after the attack on the woman. He declared the mob lynched "the wrong Negro" and tried to introduce evidence to sustain this point. But Chief Justice John C. Anderson objected, declaring that under the law the sheriff was due to protect all prisoners and "their guilt or innocence has no bearing on this case." But Carmichael did succeed in letting J. H. Oates, white employer of John son, testify. Oates said the victim was "working my car" four miles away at the time of the assault.

The state's first witness was J. W. McClung, investigator of the Highway Patrol, who named 10 men he said Corbitt declared were members of the mob of 50 that stormed the jail on the night of February 1 and took Wes Johnson. He said the sheriff "knew them well" and identified them as they crowded into his bedroom in the jail. They were the same men whom Corbitt identified before the grand jury.

Lynchers Called

Five of the 10 men were called as state witnesses Friday. In response to direct questions from the attorney general, each flatly denied he was in the lynch mob and said he knew nothing of the crime until the day after it was committed. Each also declared the community was "quiet" with no hint of "public indignation" or excitement on the eve of the atrocity.

Three said they were "at home" and Corbitt could not have seen them at the jail, one testified he was in Florida during the hours of the lynching and the fifth, Robert Kirkland, denied he heard of the attempted assault until "the day after the lynching."

Witness Trapped

But a few minutes later Kirkland was trapped on questions asked by Justice Joel B. Brown. The alleged mobbist admitted he went with a lawyer to see Rupert Bond, husband of the woman Johnson was accused of assaulting, "the night before the lynching, and Mrs. Bond was there."

"How do you reconcile that with your earlier statement you did not know of the reported attack until the day after the lynching" Justice Brown asked.

Kirkland did not answer, but nervously twisted his hands in his lap. After a tense moment the justice said, "That's all."

Later Rupert Bond, also identified by the sheriff as a member of the mob, testified. He denied he was one of the lynchers, stated he had "wanted the law to take its course" and "had no knowledge of the intended lynching."

Carmichael then asked him, "Didn't your wife get down on her knees and beg that mob not to lynch Johnson?"

Defense counsel objected before Bond could answer, and the court sustained the objection.

Lawyers Fight

Later the same day, during the luncheon recess, Carmichael and Defense Attorney Lee staged a fist fight in the supreme court library. Lee hit Carmichael on the chest and the latter swung at Lee, missing him only a few inches. Friends separated the two, and later they shook hands.

Corbitt himself testified Friday, declaring he had no warning of the mob, and identified nine of those who entered the jail and "took" the prisoner. He said that as soon as the lynchers left, he called his chief deputy and the two rode over county roads until daybreak looking for the mob. Under questioning, the sheriff admitted they missed only the road going to the spot where Johnson was actually lynched.

When Silas Garrett, assistant attorney general, summed up the state's case, he said Corbitt was warned on three separate occasions of impending mob violence.

"The sheriff gave Johnson no more protection than he would have given a Negro charged with stealing a cow," Garrett added.

Gives Warning

Before the court rendered its verdict, Carmichael warned that an acquittal would be an invitation to congress to enact anti-lynching legislation. Whereupon Lee said the state recently has made appreciable progress in educating its citizens to "let the law take its course" and pointed to the Scottsboro case as "a notable example."

The six justices took 35 minutes to render a verdict. Associate Justices Brown and Lucien D. Gardner favored ousting the sheriff, dissenting from the majority opinion of Chief Justice Anderson and Associate Justices Virgil Bouldin W. H. Thomas and A. B. Foster. Associate Justice Thomas E. Knight, father of the late attorney general, and Scottsboro prosecutor, did not sit because of illness.

Furthermore, the attorney-general asserted, the prosecution in the impeachment trial of Henry County Sheriff J. L. Corbitt will show that Corbitt knew Johnson was innocent.

"Public indignation forced Corbitt to arrest the wrong Negro," Mr. Carmichael declared.

'Wasn't In Mob'

The attorney-general, heading the prosecution, made his sensational charges before the Alabama Supreme Court as Corbitt's hearing swung into its second day. Corbitt himself is expected to take the stand later this afternoon.

Previously, Ruper Bond, husband of the woman Johnson was accused as attacking, had denied from the witness chair that he had had any part in the Negro's lynching.

The husband of the victim told the court he had "wanted the law to take its course and would accept judgment of a jury in the case." He said he "had no knowledge of the intended lynching and took no part in it."

Bond was one of 10 men named by a state investigator as having been identified by Sheriff Corbitt as members of the lynch mob.

The defense objected when Atty.-Gen. A. A. Carmichael asked Bond: "Didn't your wife get down on her knees and beg that mob not to lynch the Negro?"

The objection was sustained.

Bond's testimony was but part of the sensational developments in the trial that overshadowed the fact that Sheriff Corbitt, law officer of Henry County for more than 10 years, was facing impeachment on charges of "neglect, grave fault, connivance and cowardice" as a result of the lynching of the Negro.

Names 10 Men

The state's first witness as the trial opened yesterday was J. W. McClung, investigator of the Highway Patrol. He immediately named 10 men—and read their names into the record—whom he said Sheriff Corbitt had declared were members of the mob that stormed the Abbeville Jail the night of Feb. 1. He said the sheriff "knew them well" and identified them as they crowded into his bedroom in the jail.

Five of the 10 were called as state witnesses yesterday. In response to direct question from Attorney-General Carmichael, each flatly denied he was in the lynch mob, each said he knew nothing of the crime until the day after it occurred, and each testified the community was "quiet" with no hint of "public indignation" or excitement on the eve of the lynching.

They were Tom McCoy of Mogul, Ala.; Cratas Whitten, John White, Ovie Wright and Robert Kirkland all of Newville. Hes Bond and Grant Whitten, likewise accused, did not answer when called to testify by the court. Rupert Bond, Eck Wood and Mose Bond, the last three of the 10, were to testify this morning.

Attorneys Battle

The second development was a fist fight between Atty.-Gen. Carmichael and W. L. Lee, of Columbiana, chief defense counsel. It took place in the Supreme Court library just after luncheon recess. Lee claimed the road leading to the spot where the Negro was shot and hanged was closed for repairs and Carmichael said it was passable.

One word led to another and Lee struck Carmichael in the chest. Carmichael swung at Lee, missed him by inches, and friends pulled them apart.

The third development came just as Chief Justice John C. Anderson came out of the courtroom. As the chief justice stepped through a door, a photographer standing close to it snapped a picture of a group of waiting witnesses. The flash bulb exploded almost in the ear of the chief justice, who jumped and slashed at the photographer with his cane. The photographer ducked and the incident was closed.

Of the five accused men, McCoy testified he was "in Florida" during the hours of the lynching, while Wright, Whitten and White said they were "at home."

Stories Differ

A final flurry occurred in the courtroom as Robert Kirkland, last of the five, testified.

Under a barrage of questioning from the attorney-general, he denied he had heard of the attempted assault until "the day after the lynching." A few minutes later after several questions by Justice Joel B. Brown from the bench, he admitted he "went with Circuit Solicitor Farmer to see Bond the night before the lynching, and Mrs Bond was there."

"How do you reconcile that with your earlier statement you did not know of the reported attack until the day after the lynching?" Justice Brown asked.

His hands twisting in his lap Kirkland did not answer. After a tense moment the justice said "That's all."

Two Henry County Grand Juries before which Sheriff Corbitt testified have failed to return indictments against mob leaders and the last one recommended impeachment proceedings against the sheriff be dropped.

Sheriff Exonerated, But Lynching Still Unsettled

Tight-Lipped Corbitt Goes Back To Abbeville After Supreme Court Trial—But Was Wrong Negro Killed? What About Members Of Mob?

By Hilton Butler
Post Staff Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, June 7.—Back to Abbeville has gone tight-lipped Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry County—an unimpeached man; but two questions went along with him:

Was the wrong Negro lynched?

What action will be taken against the nine men the sheriff named as members of the mob?

There is a persistent report here today that "in about 10 days" there will be another action arising from America's No. 1 lynching victim of 1937, Wesley Johnson, 20, of Newville, accused of criminal assault.

Action Undetermined

Whether it would be a further effort on the part of the state, or special grand jury action in Henry County, no one in authority seemed ready to say.

But a cautious eye will be kept on Henry County for the next few days by state officials. They discount, however, the whisperings that personal reprisals might be attempted against the young sheriff by men named by him in the Supreme Court impeachment trial last week as members of the mob.

They also discount the probability of another Henry County Grand Jury bringing any indictments. Two previous juries failed to take action.

The next move, it was believed here, will have a state angle to it, although there is no appeal from the four-two decision of the Supreme Court declaring Sheriff Corbitt innocent of charges of "gross neglect, cowardice and connivance" on the night of Feb. 1, when a mob of 50 broke in the jail, found the proper cell keys, took Wes Johnson to the scene of the alleged attack and shot him to death, later hanging him to a tree for photographic purposes.

Wrong Negro

Was he innocent?

Had an excited sheriff, to satisfy the cry of a growing mob, arrested the wrong man?

"Yes!" shouted Atty.-Gen. Albert Carmichael. "The state offers to prove that the wrong Negro was lynched!"

On the ground that the guilt or innocence of a prisoner did not affect the duty of the sheriff to protect him, the Supreme Court declined to hear the evidence or to see the exhibits.

Among those exhibits is a shoe. It belonged to Wes Johnson. The Negro involved in the alleged attack left tracks. But the sheriff failed to take the simple step of measuring the shoe in the track, the state was ready to show. A few hours later it was too late. A heavy rain had washed all tracks away.

Time Element

Then there was the time element. The victim testified that the reported attack occurred between 11:15 and 11:30 a. m. The state had witnesses ready to prove that Wes Johnson was four miles away "washing an automobile" between 11:30 and noon.

In proof that "the right Negro was lynched," the defense was ready to offer the testimony of the alleged victim that the shirt worn by the Negro at the time of the reported attack was the same shirt Wes Johnson was wearing when she faced him a short time later in the sheriff's office.

It was also learned today that the defense had a "surprise witness" in reserve who would have testified, had the issue come up, that Wes Johnson confessed to the attack shortly after he was apprehended and that he also confessed to two previous similar crimes.

Carmichael Silent

As to whether any of this testimony will ever get a legal airing depends upon the nature of the action reported to be shaping up for launching "within the next 10 days."

Attorney-General Carmichael declined today to release the evidence he had assembled that "the wrong Negro was lynched," or to comment upon the refusal of the Supreme Court to admit it to the records. All exhibits and papers in the case remain, however, in the "pending" file in his office.

Return of Gov. Bibb Graves, who ordered the impeachment trial of Sheriff Corbitt is expected to expedite whatever action the state has under consideration as its next move in the case.

SHERIFF GIVEN MOB WARNING, LAWYER SAYS

State Contends Corbitt Knew Feeling Was At 'High Tension'

'TOOK NO PRECAUTION'

Prosecution Concludes Its Arguments In Trial Of County Official

By William Bennett
United Press Staff Correspondent

MONTGOMERY, June 5—Silas Garrett, assistant attorney-general, charged before the Alabama Supreme Court today that Sheriff J. L. Corbitt "had plenty of warning of public indignation" before the lynching of Wesley Johnson, accused Negro attacker, last February.

Summing up the evidence for the state in the impeachment trial of Corbitt, charged with negligence in protecting Johnson from a lynch mob, Garrett said testimony showed that the sheriff was warned on three separate occasions of mob feeling.

"The sheriff gave Johnson no more protection that he would have given a Negro charged with stealing a cow, despite the warnings of hatred and mob feeling," Garrett said.

Cites Records

Citing the reasons for holding public officials responsible for lynchings, Garrett said that in the 11 years prior to 1901, when such a provision was put into the State Constitution, Alabama had 179 lynchings.

In the 11 years following, the state had only 67 such crimes, and in the past 25 years only 47, Garrett said.

Testifying in his own defense, the heavy-set 40-year-old sheriff yesterday flatly denied the state's charges. He said he had no warning of the mob that stormed his jail at midnight on Feb. 1 and took the Negro, who was held on charges of assaulting a white woman.

"I was in my pajamas, standing by my bed and was covered by shotguns from all sides," he said. "I didn't have a chance to stop them."

Searched Roads

Under cross-examination by Atty.-Gen. A. A. Carmichael, he said he had followed the mob to the door of his living quarters in the jail and watched the last of "10 or 12" cars disappear down the street. His father, the jailer, went back to bed, he said, while he dressed and telephoned the circuit solicitor, Hubert Farmer, that "they got that Negro."

He said he called his chief deputy and the two rode 44 miles over county roads until daybreak looking for the mob. He admitted they had not gone over the road to the Tumbleton community where the alleged attack occurred and the Negro was lynched.

He said he had recognized nine members of the mob in the jail and named them as follows:

"Robert Kirkland, Tom McCoy, Hes Bond, Mose Bond, Rupert Bond (husband of the assaulted woman), John White, Cratas Whitten, Grant Whitten and Eck Wood." He denied identifying Ocie Wright as a mob member.

Five of the nine denied from the witness stand in the impeachment trial that they were present or knew of the lynching until later.

Wrong Negro Hinted

What action may be taken against them was not made known by state officials. Two Henry County Grand Juries have investigated the lynching and failed to return indictments against them although the sheriff testified before both juries.

Attorney-General Carmichael yesterday offered to prove "beyond a shadow of a doubt" that the mob "lynched the wrong Negro." When the defense objected, Chief Justice John C. Anderson declined to permit introduction of such evidence on the ground the sheriff was charged, under the law, with the protection of all prisoners, and "their guilt or innocence has no bearing on this case."

Later, however, the attorney-general succeeded in writing into the record testimony of the Negro's victim that the attack occurred at 11:15 a. m. J. H. Oates, employer of Johnson, testified he saw the slain Negro "washing my car" four miles from the scene of the crime "a little before 12."

What Next?

Two grand juries in Henry County failed to find a single true bill in connection with the lynching of a Negro last February despite testimony of the sheriff accusing several citizens as members of the mob who took the prisoner from the County Jail.

Saturday the Alabama Supreme Court by a vote of four to two absolved Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of charges of neglect of duty.

So what next?

Our senators and congressmen inject a sectional angle into the crime of lynching by saying to the Federal Government: "Hands off. We will handle this problem in our own way."

But what way? By closing our eyes to murder and mob violence and refusing to bring to justice a single guilty person?

We recognize the weaknesses and imperfections of the anti-lynching bill now pending in Washington but we can find no defense for the member of Congress who merely harps on its flaws and makes no attempt to arrive at a more advantageous substitute.

The lyncher is a murderer, a menace to orderly society, and should be treated as such.

Seeking Justice

In one of the relatively few times in history a state is taking determined steps to discover in orderly court the truth about a lynching, says The Birmingham Age-Herald. Too often in the past investigations into mob activities have come to naught, and not infrequently the public was left with the impression that little serious effort was made to discover the truth and punish the guilty.

The Age-Herald continues: "Today we have a different story to tell. Alabama is without any doubt making a serious and intelligent effort to get at the facts concerning the lynching last February in Henry County of Wes Johnson. The Governor and the attorney general have been unrelenting in their determination to discover the truth and obtain justice in this now famous case. They deserve the highest praise and support.

"Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, from whom the Negro was taken and lynched, is facing impeachment charges before the State Supreme Court. Sheriff Corbitt said at the time of the outrage that he could identify some of the members of the mob and Thursday in open court 10 persons were charged with having participated in the lynching party.

"The evidence presented yesterday to the effect that the wrong Negro may have been lynched makes this crime even more horrible. At the time of the murder there were many persons who pointed out that under the circumstances it was impossible to be sure that Wes Johnson, the dead Negro, had been guilty of the alleged crime. That is true in nearly all such cases. Arrests are made in hot haste, and mobs gather and act blindly and stupidly. The Henry County mob is no exception.

"The Supreme Court of Alabama today is hearing one of the most important cases ever brought before it. If under its direction the truth of this whole ghastly affair can be brought out and appropriate action taken a blow of untold magnitude will be dealt lynching and mob violence. Let the attorney general continue whatever prosecution the evidence warrants to the end that complete justice shall obtain in Alabama. Not only should the guilty be punished, but if Sheriff Corbitt is innocent of neglect of duty, he is entitled to the vindication of the law's formal word for it."

Kinston, N. C., Free Press
June 7, 1937

A sheriff in Alabama is on trial under impeachment proceedings charged with failure to protect a Negro from a mob. The attorney-general of the State stated that not only did the sheriff fail to protect the prisoner, who was dispatched by a mob, but that an innocent man had been taken by the sheriff because of hostile public sentiment and that the real culprit was still at large, four months after the mob outrage. Such is the way of mobs.

The Alabama sheriff was probably not guilty of negligence and cowardice as charged in the lynching of that negro prisoner; but if we are slow in his territory and accused of anything, we are going to surrender to the constable or chief of police.

The Case Is Not Closed

Last Saturday, with two justices dissenting, the Supreme Court of Alabama declared Sheriff J. L. Corbitt innocent of charges filed against him in the impeachment proceedings brought after the lynching of his prisoner, Wes Johnson. This decision by the Supreme Court exonerates the sheriff, but, of course, should not close the Henry County lynching case. No such case should ever be closed until justice is done. A number of men were named by the sheriff as having participated in the mob. It is one of the first times in history that a sheriff has accused persons in court of having been members of a lynching party.

Sheriff Corbitt and Attorney General Carmichael should now cooperate to obtain another Grand Jury investigation. Indictments are in order if it can be shown that the sheriff's allegations are well founded. With public naming of alleged mob members having now occurred it is unthinkable that the matter should be dropped. What so far has been done to bring justice has acted, in the view of many, to stay the federal anti-lynching legislation, but this advantage now might be lost if the case should be permitted to die without further action.

A great lesson has already been given law enforcement officers by the action of Gov. Graves and Attorney General Carmichael. They have performed a high public duty in their handling of this case, and the people of Alabama who support law and order are indebted to them. The attorney general did not get a conviction of impeachment against the sheriff, but he showed that the state will not tolerate mob violence and will go to any extreme to stamp it out.

It is up to the Henry County officials now to act with the same statesmanship and courage as have the governor and attorney general.

SHERIFF'S EXONERATION HELPS HENRY COUNTY

Sheriff J. L. Corbitt of Henry county has been exonerated of negligence in the lynching of a Negro who was taken from the jail at Abbeville four months ago and riddled with bullets for having attacked a white woman.

Acquittal of the sheriff by the Supreme Court climaxed zealous efforts on the part of the state to fix the blame for the nation's first lynching in 1936 and more or less fell in line with the reports of two Henry county grand juries which found no indictments.

Exonerated by the highest court in the state, Sheriff Corbitt has the additional satisfaction of having conducted himself in an admirable manner throughout the entire proceedings and no one doubts, since this fact is supported by testimony, that he did all within his power to live up to the duties demanded of him as sheriff.

To be guilty of disregarding the sworn duties of his office by voluntarily turning his prisoner over to a mob, such as was charged to the Henry sheriff, is a grave indictment against law and order, and Henry county can well be proud that its sheriff has been exonerated of this accusation.

OUR SOLICITOR AND OUR ATTORNEY GENERAL

The Henry County lynching case is now dead, and Solicitor J. Hubert Farmer buries it with the following funeral oration:

I have been with two different grand juries in this matter, each composed of as high-class gentlemen as are to be found anywhere. I know that a painstaking investigation has been conducted both times. No indictments have been returned. And now, so far as I am personally concerned, the book can be closed on the whole unfortunate affair.

When a grand jury fails to indict there may be a number of reasons. In the Henry County Case, perhaps, it is the viewpoint that is born in the desire to protect Southern womanhood from crimes of this nature at all odds, and to shield the victims from the embarrassment and humiliation of going through the ordeal of a trial with its many unpleasant details. At least, I am convinced that such a desire, or determination, is deeply inbedded in the minds and hearts of our people.

I do not believe in mob law, but it appears to me that further agitation of this matter will not result in any good.

These carefully-chosen words belong in the class with all the old-fashioned, bombastic, orations of the windy professional politicians who have distinguished the South for generations.

They are buxom and voluputous words, and though they leave an intelligent man cold, doubtless they will entice and enthrall many a One Hundred Percenter who thinks with his appetites and emotions and who is a member of the "I Am Against Mob Law But" club.

This being so, The Eagle hastens to be the first to publicly congratulate the Solicitor.

The rumor has risen and will not down that the Solicitor's cosuming ambition is to defeat Henry Seeagall for his congressional seat. Can it be, then, that he has fired the perfect opening shot in the campaign?

Not being an astute politician, we wouldn't know.

But it is conceivable that the Solicitor's honey-dripping words may ultimately sour in his mouth—or is The Eagle too naive when it suggests that there may be more voters in the Third Congressional District who prize statesmanship rather than politics?

One likes to believe that the majority of our people cling to the contrasting view as expressed by Attorney General Albert A. Carmichael:

"To say that lynching has anything to do with protecting womanhood in Alabama is pure poppycock. The answer to this is that a petit jury would require about 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict for the perpetrator of such a crime as this.

"Those unlawful hoodlums who imagine themselves heroes when taking part in lynchings have a distorted idea of patriotism. Only lawless hoodlums and the enemies of government take part in mob law.

"As the chief law enforcement officer of this State I condemn it and make known that as long as I am the Aattorney General of this State those persons who think they are more important and powerful than the law and who take the law in their own hands will be prosecuted promptly and most vigorously.

"The impeachment proceedings will proceed and be prosecuted with as much vigor as the office of the Attorney General is capable of putting forth. The framers of our Constitution did not accidently provide that a sheriff should be impeached by the Supreme Court."

Sheriff Corbitt has repeatedly stated that he recognized some of the members of the mob. The public is left wondering why he did not name them before the grand jury—and will he name them when he goes on trial before the Supreme Court?

STATE TO PUSH IMPEACHMENT

Carmichael Declares Determination to Oust Corbitt in Lynching Case

The state of Alabama will use every resource at its command in prosecuting impeachment proceedings against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of Henry county, charged with negligence in the lynching of a negro, Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael declared Friday. Carmichael said a personal investigation into circumstances connected with the lynching of the negro accused of attacking a white woman had convinced him "beyond doubt impeachment proceedings should be instituted."

The case, now set for hearing before the state supreme court June 3, was instigated by Carmichael at the request of Gov. Bibb Graves who said he was going to "put an end to lynching in this state." The negro, Wes Johnson, was lynched and his body riddled with bullets by a mob of nearly 100 armed men who took him from the Henry county jail soon after the alleged attack on the white woman.

Grand Jury Upholds Corbitt

Carmichael's statement that impeachment proceedings would be prosecuted vigorously came after a Henry county grand jury Wednesday at Abbeville returned a "no bill" in its investigation and recommended charges against the sheriff be dropped.

"We are most anxious that the outside world know that the Alabama state officials who are responsible in law for prosecuting cases of this character are doing their duty and will continue to do it," Carmichael said soon after conferring with Governor Graves Thursday night. "The recent report of the grand jury will not have the slightest effect on the impeachment proceedings now pending in the supreme court of Alabama."

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
May 21, 1937

Proceed!

For the second time a Henry County Grand Jury returns a no bill in the Wes Johnson lynching case. The Grand Jury also recommends to the governor that impeachment charges against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt be dropped.

Three months ago Wes Johnson, suspected of having attacked a white woman, was arrested and held prisoner by Sheriff Corbitt and his father, the jailer. A mob demanded and obtained the release of Johnson, hanged him to a tree and riddled his body with bullets. It was the first lynching in 1937, and the whole nation was shocked. Gov. Graves immediately went on record as saying that he would push an investigation to the end that those guilty be punished.

Sheriff Corbitt declared that he had done everything in his power to protect the prisoner from the mob. Furthermore, he said that he could identify, and would identify, some members of the mob. Has Sheriff Corbitt named a single member of the mob? And what has he done to bring about the apprehension of any persons in the mob?

In his own interest it would seem better for the impeachment proceedings to be completed with a Supreme Court verdict. The public generally desires more knowledge of this case than a closed Grand Jury hearing has revealed.

While the entire disgrace of a lynching can never be removed, at least the state can do all in its power to punish those who have flagrantly violated its laws. Alabama, and the public officials responsible for upholding Alabama's laws, continue on trial before the bar of public opinion. Let the governor and the attorney general press this matter to an early and satisfactory conclusion.

State To Ignore Grand Jury In Henry County

Attorney General Says Sheriff's Ouster Will Be Pushed Vigorously

Recommendation contained in the recent report of the Henry County grand jury, that impeachment proceedings against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt, of that county, be dismissed, will have no effect whatever upon the pending action which is set for hearing before the Alabama Supreme Court on June 3.

After a conference last night with Gov. Graves, Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael announced the Governor at whose request the impeachment proceedings was filed, had directed him to pursue and prosecute the proceedings vigorously, and that he will do so.

The action was brought following removal from the county jail at Abbeville and lynching by a mob, of Wesley Johnson, negro farm hand, held on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman.

As to the grand jury's recommendation, Gov. Graves said yesterday: "Nothing that a grand jury can say, in my opinion, can affect jurisdiction of the State Supreme Court, before which the impeachment proceedings already have been filed. It appears up to the courts now, in my opinion."

Following his conference with the Governor, the attorney general issued the following statement:

His Statement

"I have conferred with Gov. Graves about the recent report of the Grand Jury in Henry County. Gov. Graves knew about the Grand Jury report at the time of our conversation. The Gov. directs me to pursue and prosecute the impeachment proceedings in the Supreme Court vigorously. To say that I will do this is putting it mildly.

"Just here, let me say this: Immediately after the lynching, Gov. Graves conducted a most careful investigation of the lynching. While

Mobile would be opened but thought it probable that next week would see at least one and perhaps two stores opened with more to follow as leases are signed and local conditions are met.

While Chairman Baldwin did not say so directly, the writer learned Thursday that there was a disposition on the part of store site owners in the smaller cities of the State to "hold up" the State on the matter of rents. It can be said definitely that the State will not be held up on rents and wherever such hold-ups are attempted, there will be a delay in the opening of stores.

Filling Stations Hit

There are scores and scores of filling stations in Alabama which have a temporary permit to sell beer. Under section 28 of the act no beer can be sold by these filling stations to persons seated in automobiles. All persons desiring to buy beer at a filling station are required under the act to leave their automobile and seat themselves at a table before or while being served beer. Very few of these filling stations have tables for serving beer but it appears that they will have to provide the tables before they can do business without a chance to lose their license. If they serve beer in violation of the law they are liable to have their license revoked without notice.

The writer's advice to those who have beer licenses in Montgomery is to require customers to leave their cars, enter the licensee's place of business, seat themselves at tables and have the beer served there. Beer cannot be served at a counter under the law and it is probable that the attorney general of Alabama will make a ruling some time today regarding the serving of beer by licensees.

In addition to filling stations over the State, there are scores of places which have a temporary beer license the Governor was conducting an investigation I was also conducting an investigation. After a most exhaustive and painstaking investigation, we were both convinced that the sheriff ought to be impeached. If Gov. Graves had not been thoroughly convinced that the sheriff ought to be impeached, the Governor would never have directed me to institute impeachment proceedings. The Governor does not carelessly, and without much investigating, direct the impeachment of an officer. My personal investigation of the circumstances and conditions under which the lynching took place convinced me beyond doubt that impeachment proceedings should be instituted. The recent report of the Grand Jury will not have the slightest effect on the impeachment proceedings now pending in the Supreme Court of Alabama. The impeachment proceedings will proceed and will be prosecuted with as much vigor as the office of the attorney general is capable of putting forth.

"The framers of our Constitution did not accidentally provide that a sheriff should be impeached by the Supreme Court.

Feels Keenly

"I want to take this occasion to say that the Governor of Alabama and the attorney general of Alabama feel very keenly about this matter; that we are most anxious that the outside world know that the Alabama State officials who are responsible in law for prosecuting cases of this character are doing their duty and will continue to do it.

"To say that lynching has anything to do with protecting womanhood in Alabama is pure poppycock. The answer to this is that a petit jury would require about 30 seconds to reach an electrocution verdict for the perpetrator of such a crime as this. Those unlawful hoodlums who imagine themselves heroes when taking part in lynchings have a distorted idea of patriotism. Only lawless hoodlums and the enemies of government take part in mob law. As the chief law enforcement officer of this State I condemn it and make known that as long as I am the attorney general of this State, those persons who think they are more important and powerful than the law and who take the law in their own hands, will be prosecuted promptly and most vigorously, and in this I want to say that I will have the entire resources of this great State at my command."

Second Body Is Recessed After Lynching Probe

Widening the scope of their investigation of the lynching of Wes Johnson, eighteen-year-old Negro farmhand, to the extent of recommending and urging that impeachment proceedings against Sheriff J. L. Corbitt on charges of negligence be dismissed, the second Henry County grand jury to probe the case was in recess today after returning the second no-bill in the case

Although in his charge yesterday Judge D. C. Halstead had told the jurors the only matter before them was "the identity of the persons comprising the mob", resolutions signed by each member of the inquisitorial body, had been sent to Gov. Bibb Graves and Atty.-Gen. A. A. Carmichael asking that proceeding against Sheriff Corbitt be dropped. Judge Halstead had not mentioned the proceedings or any official in his charge.

Meanwhile, Solicitor J. Hubert Farmer, when asked if a third investigation is likely, said "so far as I personally am concerned, the book can be closed on the whole unfortunate affir."

"I have been with two different grand juries in this matter, each composed of as high-class gentleman as are to be found anywhere," said the solicitor. "I know that a painstaking investigation has been conducted both times. No indictments have been returned. And now so far as I am personally concerned, the book can be closed on the whole unfortunate affair.

"When a grand jury fails to indict there may be a number of reasons," he said. "In the Henry County case, perhaps, it is the viewpoint that is born in the desire to protect Southern womanhood from crimes of this nature at all odds, and to shield the victims from the embarrassment and humiliation of going through the ordeal of a trial with its many unpleasant details. At least, I am convinced that such a desire, or determination, is deeply imbedded in the minds and hearts of our people.

"I do not believe in mob law, but it appears to me that further agitation of this matter will not result in any good," said the solicitor.

The jury reported to Judge Halstead that "we have investigated and considered all of the available evidence in this matter and herewith return a no-bill."

"In our further investigation of the circumstances surrounding the taking of the prisoner from the County jail," the jury reported further, "we do not find any evidence of what in our opinion would be any wrong doing on the part of the sheriff our County . . ." The jury then set forth a resolution which it asked be sent Gov. Graves and Atty.-Gen. Carmichael.

The report was signed by W. S. Sconyers, Headland farmer, as foreman, while the resolution, mailed to the State officials shortly after the body had reported, bore the signature of each member of the jury.

The first jury probe of the lynching was made at a special grand jury session, called on orders of Gov. Bibb Graves, resulted in no indictments, and the report said the body did not look into whether Sheriff Corbitt was at fault with a view of impeachment proceedings.

Johnson was taken from the Henry County jail by a mob of about 100 men the night of Feb. 2 and later found slain in the Tumbleton community, about 50 yards from where he is accused of criminally attacking a white matron. Officers said Johnson had confessed to the attack.

STATE TO PROBE USE OF LYNCH LAW IN HENRY

Death By Mob Violence Is First With Graves As Alabama Governor

By United Press.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 3.—The state today launched a probe of facts surrounding the lynching of Wes Johnson, Henry County Negro, charged with attacking a young white woman. The Negro was taken from the Abbeville Jail, hanged, and his body riddled with bullets early yesterday.

Gov. Bibb Graves instructed Atty.-Gen. A. A. Carmichael to "make a thorough and complete investigation" to determine whether impeachment proceedings should be brought against any of the officers involved for neglect of duty. He placed the State Highway Patrol at the disposal of the attorney-General to complete the investigation.

In a telephone conversation with Sheriff J. Louis Corbett of Henry County, Governor Graves yesterday questioned the officer as to why he had not informed the executive office of the lynching until 12 hours after it happened.

Sheriff Corbett told the governor a mob of approximately 40 men stormed the Abbeville Jail, in which he lived, held him and his father, J. N. Corbett, prisoners, forced open the Negro's cell with a crowbar, and took him back to the scene of the attack on a plantation near Tumbleton. There he was hanged and shot.

The sheriff said he was threatened by a mob for refusing to turn over the Negro to them, and was held captive until after they had left Abbeville with the prisoner.

The lynching was the first to occur in Alabama while Bibb Graves was governor. He had none during the four years of his first term, and had now served two years of his second term without a lynching.

Lynching Inquiry Proves Fruitless

ABBEVILLE, Ala., Feb. 4 (AP) — A Henry county grand jury failed today to return any indictments in its investigation of the lynching last Monday of a Negro accused of assaulting a white woman.

The jurors also reported they were of the opinion no officials had been negligent in performance of their duties.

OUSTER SOUGHT AFTER LYNCHING

Impeachment Papers To Be Filed Against Sheriff In Henry County

By United Press.

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 4. — Impeachment proceedings will be instituted immediately against Sheriff J. L. Corbett of Henry County whose 18-year-old Negro prisoner was lynched Monday night, Atty.-Gen. A. A. Carmichael announced today.

Papers will be filed with the Alabama Supreme Court charging Corbett "with neglect of duty" as soon as they can be prepared, Carmichael said.

Wes Johnson, the Negro who was lynched, was held in the jail at Abbeville charged with the assault of a white woman. Corbett's keys were taken from a locked room by force while he stood by, covered by the guns of the mob, he reported.

Johnson was riddled with shot by the 30 or 40 men who took him from the jail. It was the first lynching in Alabama in more than two years and the first in the nation this year.

Carmichael announced that Gov. Bibb Graves was addressing a letter to Judge D. C. Halstead of Henry County Circuit asking him to call a special session of the grand jury to investigate the lynching.

Melvin Hutson of Decatur, solicitor in Morgan and Cullman Counties, will be dispatched to Abbeville immediately to take charge of the investigation of the lynching, Carmichael said.

The impeachment proceedings, ordered by the governor, will be handled by the attorney-general's office. Sate highway patrolmen who investigated the lynching reported their findings to the governor last night.

SHERIFF BLAMED AFTER LYNCHING

Impeachment of Officer Is Demanded by Alabama Attorney General

ABBEVILLE, Ala., Feb. 4 (AP)—Impeachment proceedings against a sheriff and a special grand jury investigation were ordered today as Alabama moved to "bring to justice" members of a mob which Monday night lynched a 19-year-old Henry county Negro accused of attacking a white woman.

Circuit Judge D. C. Halstead summoned a special grand jury session for Friday, and Attorney General A. A. Carmichael said at Montgomery he would file impeachment proceedings against Sheriff Louis Corbett, of Henry county "at once."

Governor Bibb Graves at Montgomery directed Carmichael to file the impeachment proceedings and dispatched an order to Judge Halstead to call a special grand jury investigation, after Captain Potter Smith of the Alabama highway patrol had reported on a private investigation conducted for the governor and attorney general.

Judge Halstead said at Dothan the special grand jury call was placed in the hands of Henry county officials today before he heard unofficially Governor Graves had mailed him instructions.

Sheriff Corbett, who previously said he recognized several members of the mob, reiterated today his willingness to "identify them" before a grand jury or court.

Sheriff Faces Ouster Move At Abbeville

Impeachment Started By State; Special Grand Jury Also Summoned

ABBEVILLE, ALA., Feb. 4.—(AP)—Impeachment proceedings against a sheriff and a special grand jury investigation were ordered today as Alabama moved to "bring to justice" members of a mob which Monday night lynched a 19-year-old Henry County negro accused of attacking a white woman.

Circuit Judge D. C. Halstead summoned a special grand jury session for Friday, and Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael said at Montgomery he would file impeachment proceedings against Sheriff Louis Corbett, of Henry County "at once."

Sheriff's Comment

"I did everything in my power," Sheriff Corbett commented when he learned of the impeachment proceedings order, which Carmichael said would be based upon charges of "neglect of duty" in allowing an armed mob of approximately 50 men to take the negro, Wes Johnson, from jail here.

Gov. Graves at Montgomery directed Carmichael to file the impeachment proceedings and dispatched an order to Judge Halstead to call a special grand jury investigation, after Captain Potter Smith of the Alabama Highway Patrol had reported on a private investigation conducted for the governor and attorney general.

Judge Halstead said at Dothan the special grand jury call was placed in the hands of Henry County officials today before he heard unofficially Gov. Graves had mailed him instructions.

Sheriff Corbett, who previously said he recognized several members of the mob, reiterated today his willingness to "identify them" before a grand jury or court.

Negro's Body Found

Johnson, the negro, was taken from Henry County Jail Monday night, and his bullet-riddled body was found early Tuesday hanging from a tree in Tumbleton community, where the white woman allegedly was assaulted in her home last Saturday. Johnson was arrested Sunday night.

Sheriff Corbett said he and his father Jailor J. N. Corbett, were held prisoners by the mob while members forced open the negro's cell with a crow-bar. He said they also were threatened by the group of men who traveled in about 25 automobiles.

Governor Says Sheriff Guilty Of Neglect

Gov. Graves yesterday called on Atty. Gen. Albert A. Carmichael to file impeachment proceedings against Sheriff J. L. Corbett of Henry County. Following receipt of the communication from the Governor containing the request, the Attorney General said it will be complied with and the action brought. Text of the Governor's letter to Mr. Carmichael follows:

"Hon. A. A. Carmichael, Attorney General for State of Alabama, Montgomery, Ala. Dear Sir:

"During the night of Monday, the first day of February, 1937, or thereabouts, one Wesley Johnson, a prisoner, was taken from the Henry County Jail by unauthorized persons and was put to death.

"It appears from information received by me and from an examination which I caused to be made of this occurrence that J. L. Corbett, as Sheriff of Henry County, was guilty of neglect, as sheriff, as a result of which said prisoner was unlawfully taken from the jail of Henry County and put to death; or was guilty of a grave fault in the conduct of his office as sheriff, as a result of which said prisoner was taken from the Henry County Jail and put to death; or was guilty of wilful neglect of duty in this matter; or that his acts in this connection show that he is incompetent to discharge the duties of his office, as sheriff.

Order To Begin

"I, therefore, as Governor of the State of Alabama, under the authority conferred upon me by Section 4520 of the Code of Alabama of 1923, now direct, in writing, you, as Attorney General of the State of Alabama, to commence impeachment proceedings against J. L. Corbett, as Sheriff of Henry County, and prosecute the same as provided by law in such cases. I suggest that such proceedings be instituted in the Supreme Court of Alabama. Yours very truly, (Signed) Bibb Graves, Governor."

Stating he had just received this letter from the Governor, Atty. Gen. Carmichael said: "The law authorizes the Governor to instruct the Attorney General to institute impeachment proceedings against a sheriff, when, in the judgment of the Governor it should be done. In accordance with the instructions given me by the Governor, impeachment proceedings will be instituted against the sheriff as by law provided."

Smith's Report

The Governor's letter was written after he and the Attorney General had received a verbal report late Wednesday, from Capt. Potter Smith of the State Highway Patrol, one of three officers of that Department detailed by Chief Walter K. McAdory at Gov. Graves's direction to go to Henry County and make a complete investigation of the lynching of Johnson, a negro farm hand.

Arrested on a charge of criminally assaulting a white woman, Johnson was placed in a cell in the Henry County Jail at Abbeville, Monday afternoon. Late that night a band of some 50 men, overpowered the sheriff, entered the jail, seized the negro and took him away with them. Early next morning Johnson's bullet riddled body was found hanging from a tree near Headland.

Formal inquiry into the lynching will be made by the Henry County Grand Jury, called into special session by Circuit Judge D. C. Halstead of announced that impeachment charges would be filed against the Henry County sheriff. So far nothing has been done. The state still does not know who killed Wes Johnson, despite the fact that the sheriff said he could identify several in the mob. Why this delay?

Headland. The grand jury will convene at Abbeville at 10 a.m. today and will be in charge of Circuit Solicitor Hubert Farmer, of Dothan. Capt. Smith, and Sergeants J. W. McClung and T. J. Carlisle of the Highway Patrol, who assisted him in his recent inquiry, will testify before the inquisitorial body today. Capt. Smith and Sergt. Carlisle left for Abbeville last night. Sergt. McClung was already there.

Who Killed Wes Johnson?

A week and a half have passed since the lynching of Wes Johnson, but the state has made no headway in its feeble efforts to apprehend his slayers. A Henry County Grand Jury investigating the matter returned no indictments. Atty. Gen. Carmichael, at the suggestion of the governor, an-

Further Inquiry Needed Into The Henry County Lynching

After the lynching in Henry County last week, Sheriff Corbitt said he had recognized some members of the mob which took his prisoner from him, and that he would identify them. The special Grand Jury called to investigate the case returned no indictments. Presumably, Sheriff Corbitt did not identify any members of the mob in his appearance before the Grand Jury, else the jury could not have failed to return indictments.

Perhaps Sheriff Corbitt withheld the identifications he said he could make in order to present them in his own defense against the the impeachment proceedings ordered filed by Gov. Graves. In that case, the impeachment proceedings will provide the next inquiry into the lynching.

At any rate, further investigation into this crime is needed. The state cannot afford to let the effort to apprehend members of the mob drop with the uneventful report of the Grand Jury. Gov. Graves, who has said that so long as he is governor mob rule will not be tolerated in Alabama, may be counted on, we trust, to continue inquiries into the lynching until the state gets to the bottom of the affair, if it is humanly possible to do so.

A Fine Record Broken

Impeachment proceedings ordered by Governor Graves against Sheriff J. L. Corbett of Henry County and then rescinded pending further investigation will be watched with interest by every Alabamian—citizen and law enforcement officer alike—who deplores mob violence and has contributed anything toward keeping the state's record for no lynchings unbroken for more than two years.

We do not condemn Sheriff Corbett without fair hearing. It is possible a trial would develop that he is an innocent victim of circumstances over which he had no control. Confronted by an unreasoning mob of armed men no one can be sure just what he might do. In this particular instance the mob was not masked. Since the sheriff has stated he recognized a number of its members it is not unreasonable that a reminder of his oath to arrest and prosecute every one of them would have halted their mad determination to murder.

Lynchings can be stopped where officers of the law are determined to stop them. But they will not stop as long as citizens and officials wink at mob violence.

Gov. Graves is peeved about the Henry county lynching because it spoiled his record of two terms as governor, during which time no lynchings took place in Alabama. His feelings were hurt— but what about the Negro?

Proceed, Governor Graves

On the day before the Henry County special grand jury gave a report of its deliberations on the Abbeville lynching, The Montgomery Advertiser carried this penetrating observation in its editorial columns: "It is all very well for Governor Graves to demand a grand jury investigation of the recent lynching in Henry County. That means that the grand jurors, some of whom may have been in the mob, will return a no-bill. They nearly always do."

As we know, the Henry County Grand Jury did return a no-bill, serving notice that legally delegated citizens would do nothing about the unlawful slaying of a human being. The jury "passed the buck" by inferring that, since Governor Graves had ordered impeachment proceedings against Sheriff Louis Corbett, from whom the Negro was taken, it would do nothing.

The situation now clearly is up to Governor Graves and Attorney General Albert Carmichael. The promptness and dispatch with which they moved immediately after learning of the heinous crime is heartening to those who wish to eradicate from this nation the ruthless mob spirit that, acting stealthily in the darkness of the night, assumes a life and death power that is an ugly blot on Christian civilization.

It is more to be regretted that practically all lynchings in the South have Negroes as the victims of such mob frenzy and injustice. This day, February 12, the birthday anniversary of the great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, would be a significant day on which to establish a new milestone in America. It should mark the beginning of an era in which lynchings are a thing unknown, an act so despicable that no citizen will countenance it.

Proceed, Governor Graves, quickly with the impeachment. The fear of God and fear of the Law can drench a frenzied mob spirit more quickly than anything else.

HENRY LYNCH...

PROBED BY STATE

Woman's Attacker Is Taken From Jail By Armed Mob

A Henry county mob Thursday had levied on the life of a Negro for an attack on a white woman and as a sequel to the first outbreak of mob violence in the Wiregrass in more than ten years, state highway patrolmen were pushing an investigation at the orders of Gov. Bibb Graves.

Victim of the lynching was Wes Johnson, 22-year-old tenant on the John Harper Oates plantation near Tumbleton. He was seized at the Henry county jail at Abbeville shortly after midnight Monday by a squad of armed men who overpowered Sheriff Louie Corbett and his father, J. N. Corbett.

From the jail, he was rushed to a spot near where he supposedly attacked a young farm matron last Saturday. There he was strung to a tree and his body pumped full of bullets and left for morbid crowds to gaze at until cut down later in the day by county authorities.

The elder Corbett, who is jailer, said the first he or his son, who sleeps in another room, knew of the mob's presence was when a group of armed men came into the sheriff's bed room and ordered him to lie still in bed "or we will kill you."

"Then," said the jailor, "I walked into the room and met two shotguns in my face. They told me to stand there and not move." While he and his son were held at bay, Corbett declared, several of the mob who had a crowbar pried open a tool box and removed the jail keys.

With the keys they went to the Negro's cell and removed him. The Negro was led from the jail between two men and never said a word, the jailer said, adding that 'as far as I know he never said a word while he was in jail.' Johnson was arrested Sunday.

Unofficial, but reliable, reports were that the attacked woman had positively identified Johnson as her assailant and that she picked him out of four Negroes brought to her home for identification.

JURY IS TOLD TO FIND LYNCHERS

Judge Issues Instructions For Thorough Probe In Abbeville Case

By United Press.

ABBEVILLE, Feb. 5.—A coroner's jury and a special agent of Gov. Bibb Graves appeared before a special Henry County Grand Jury which is investigating the lynching of a 19-year-old Negro accused of the assault of a white woman.

Fact of the lynching was established by the grand jury from the coroner's jury, it was learned. Then the body summoned Capt. Potter Smith of the State Highway Patrol. Smith investigated the lynching at the orders of Governor Graves.

Following Smith's investigation, the governor ordered the impeachment of Sheriff J. L. Corbett on charges of neglect of duty. The Negro, Wes Johnson, was taken from Corbett's jail Monday night by an armed mob of about 50 men. Johnson's bullet-riddled body was found hanging from a tree.

To Finish Today

The grand jury was expected to finish its investigation some time today. Corbett was present while the investigation progressed, but there was no indication as to whether he would be called.

Solicitor Hubert Farmer of Dothan was in charge of the investigation. It was understood the attorney-general had canceled an order delegating Melvin Hutson, Decatur solicitor, to conduct the investigation after Farmer protested.

Circuit Judge D. C. Halstead charged the jury to get to the bottom of the lynching, regardless of who may be affected.

"Let your investigation cover not only the ascertainment of those who committed the crime, but also the possible dereliction of any officer of the law whose duty it was to prevent its commission, including the judge of this court," he charged the grand jurors.

"The good name of the state is at stake and you are to leave no stone unturned to bring the guilty parties to justice," Judge Halstead said.

The 18 grand jurors are principally farmers and merchants of Abbeville and the vicinity.

The Lynching In Henry County

Alabama, which for years now has had one of the best records among the Southern states in the matter of lynchings, is the scene of the nation's first lynching in 1937. An 18-year-old Negro, accused of assaulting a young white woman, was lynched Monday night in Henry County. It is a great pity that a group of some 50 men should have outraged the law in this way, taken a human life without due trial and marred Alabama's relatively good record.

Let no one think that the crime of lynching is any longer condoned by the people of Alabama, or of any other state. It has been obvious for years that public sentiment did not uphold lynchings, as some have pretended to believe. There can no longer be any doubt on this score since the publication of the American Institute of Public Opinion's poll last Sunday on sentiment with regard to making lynching a federal crime. In the South 65 per cent of the people were shown to be in favor of a federal law against lynching, and in the nation 70 per cent. Since even among those who condemn lynching there is in the South some opposition to a federal statute on the subject, Southern sentiment against lynching is certainly much stronger than the 65 per cent favoring a federal anti-lynching law.

The reaction to this Henry County lynching in official circles is most gratifying. Gov. Graves, saying that so long as he is governor Alabama will not tolerate mob rule, has ordered a thorough investigation into the crime. Let the investigation proceed at once. If any of the lynchers can be brought to justice, Alabama will have done much to atone for the crime.

LYNCHING PROBE IS BEING PUSHED

Graves Orders Impeachment If Facts Warrant In

Abbeville Affair

The Birmingham News 2-3-37

ABBEVILLE, Ala.—(AP)—State and county authorities, admonished by Gov. Graves that "mob rule shall not prevail in Alabama," pushed investigation today of the lynching of an 18-year-old Negro, accused of assaulting a white woman.

The Negro, Wes Johnson, was taken from Henry County Jail here Monday night by an armed mob. His bullet-riddled body was found swinging from a limb in a woodland not far from nearby Headland early yesterday.

At Montgomery, Gov. Graves ordered Atty. Gen. Carmichael to make a thorough investigation and to "bring impeachments proceedings against any official if found warranted."

The governor also ordered highway patrol investigators into the case, and told Chief Walter K. McAdory to cooperate fully with the attorney general.

Sheriff Louie Corbett, who said he recognized several persons among the 50-odd armed men who made up the lynch mob, was conducting a private investigation and had sought advice from Circuit Judge D. C. Halstead and Solicitor J. Hubert Farmer at Dothan.

Judge Halstead, who conferred with Sheriff Corbett regarding a special Grand Jury investigation, said at Dothan today his actions would await a report from the Henry County coroner.

The sheriff said the armed mob arrived unexpectedly Monday night and held him and his father, Jailer J. N. Corbett, prisoners while they forced open the Negro's cell with a crowbar. They drove off in about 25 cars after threatening him, the sheriff said.

The Negro, arrested Sunday night, was being held for alleged attack upon a white woman, alone in her home Saturday in rural Tumbleton community.

Probate Judge J. P. Mitchell said it was reported the woman was under care of a physician.

Johnson was the nation's first reported lynching victim in 1937.

Mississippi Is Proud Of Year Without Lynching

JACKSON, Miss. —(AP)— Viewing Mississippi's spotless lynching record for 1936, the first year without a lynching since "the turn of the century," Gov. Hugh White today congratulated sheriffs and peace officers.
